3 1430 02937395 0

a31430029373950b
UNIV. OF MD. COLLEGE PARK

LSC

3·36·17·1

PRESENTED BY
Colorado W. C. T. U.

From the library of

Mrs Ursula D. Herrick

Presented by the executor of her Estate

U. OF IND.

U. OF MD.

PRESENTED BY
Colorado W. C. T. U.

Tirsla D Hertick
1029 15th St
63693

Mck
HV
5285
.U71
vol. 21
Folio

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S ... RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXI.—No. 1.] CHICAGO, JANUARY 3, 1895. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

THE POLYGLOT PETITION.

For the Polyglot Petition see page 14.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The Indian National Congress met at Madras last week, with 1,150 delegates and 3,000 visitors present.

Ex-Secretary of State John W. Foster has gone to Japan to aid the Chinese representatives to bring about peace.

Indiana college presidents, at their meeting in Indianapolis Thursday, decided against inter-collegiate football games.

The Turkish misrule in Armenia was eloquently denounced by Mr. Gladstone in a speech on his eighty-fifth birthday.

Christina Georgina Rossetti, poetess and daughter of an exiled Italian patriot, died at London, December 30, aged sixty-four years.

A national initiative and referendum league has been organized within the Populist party, with James H. Lathrop, of Topeka, Kansas, as president.

The National committee of the Populist party assembled at St. Louis, Friday, to decide upon a plan for an educational campaign in '96 and the place of their annual meeting.

Ex-police Captain Stephenson, the first conviction for bribery under the Lexow investigation, has been sentenced to three years and nine months' imprisonment in Sing Sing and a fine of $1,000.

The annual meetings of the Associated Historians of America, the American Folk-lore Society, the American Society of Church History and the Jewish Historical Society were held in Washington.

The municipal reform wave has rolled upon Chicago; the Civic Federation has decided to investigate the Cook county board of commissioners and the grand jury has passed a resolution to investigate gambling.

A large number of representative women were invited to meet in the New Mexican capital, Monday, at the time of the opening of the state legislature, for the purpose of organizing the New Mexican Equal Suffrage League.

State Teachers' Associations of Wisconsin, Iowa, Michigan, Indiana, Nebraska, South Dakota and Kansas have held their annual meetings. The Michigan teachers in session at Lansing declared in favor of free text-books and against teachers using tobacco.

A meeting of the immigration commissioners for the various ports of the United States was called Friday at Ellis Island, N. Y., by Secretary Carlisle. The chief object was to agree upon rules governing the scrutiny of immigrants with a view to keeping out the undesirable.

The Turkish government has refused to accept United States Consul Jewett as a member of the Armenian investigating commission with instructions to make a special report. Foreign members of the commission, however, are to be permitted to personally summon and interrogate witnesses.

THE destitution prevailing in western Nebraska is terrible even in contemplation. For three successive years droughts have ruined the corn crops and the small accumulation of food and clothing is now exhausted. In one county alone (Perkins) three thousand people are actually starving. According to County Clerk Wilcox, who lives at Grant, unless outside assistance is speedily received, the horrors of death by cold and starvation will result. The people are industrious and worthy in the best sense. They have carefully planted and tilled their crops but no rain descended to water and mature them, consequently all their faithful labor is lost to them and they are without the simplest necessities of existence.

MRS. MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT desires us to say that she has not intended to go to South America for the winter, but that she is at Vera Cruz, Mexico, and will return home to commence work at the beginning of May, 1895. Mrs. Leavitt's address remains unchanged, care of Kidder, Peabody & Co., Boston. Should any one wish the speedier communication, however, address Mrs. Leavitt, care United States Consul, Vera Cruz, Mexico.

THAT the Christmas tide does not bring peace and happiness to all is proven by a glance at the newspapers of December 26 each year. A few headlines in the Chicago dailies told the story. They ran in this wise: "Killed on Christmas," "Day of Many Crimes," "Patrol Wagons in Great Demand," "Station Cells Full," "Serious Fray from Christmas Drink," "Tragic end of a Christmas Dinner," etc. And yet this traffic is licensed and legalized by followers of the Christ whose birthday they celebrate, and such results are inevitable. It is the nature of the drink to dethrone reason and mercy and enthrone the demon of madness and cruelty. Cause and effect were never more indissolubly linked than a glass of liquor and a wanton act.

AN epidemic of falsehood concerning the situation in Portland, and other cities of Maine, is now flooding the metropolitan press, especially in New England. One reads ponderous statements peppered with statistics showing what a deadly failure is the prohibitory law and clamoring for its repeal, but the worst of it is that a large majority of those who read are not aware of what there is every reason to believe is the fact, namely: that these articles are paid advertisements. It is perfectly well known that during the constitutional Prohibition amendment campaign in Pennsylvania many of the Philadelphia daily papers gave whole broadsides of "facts" against Prohibition which had all the appearance of being well-considered statements on the subject, and yet were known to be paid for, line by line, by the liquor dealers' association. In these days every person of common sense will suspect every statement that he sees in favor of the liquor system, which is in itself "a covenant with hell and a compound with damnation."

MISS WILLARD wishes to have it impressed upon the minds of our white-ribboners that the round trip to the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in June (14–21) at which time the B. W. T. A. will also hold its annual meeting, requires special thought and planning throughout our constituency. She hopes that in many states the requisite two hundred dollars will be raised to send those whom the executive committee may select, and that a large number of good men and women may make this the occasion of a trip abroad. To go so far, to see so much, and to have the trip, including hotel bills, for two hundred dollars, is an opportunity without a parallel. All men and women friendly to our work are entitled to these special rates, and will please send their applications for information, etc., to Dr. Albert Shaw, editor Review of Reviews, Astor Place, New York city, marking the letters on the left hand top corner, "Pilgrimage Bureau." There is no time to be lost in planning for this great white ribbon journey from which we all expect so much good to come. We hope our members will use their utmost influence to secure the insertion of the statement made in this paragraph in the local press of their own towns, also in the denominational press of their own churches, and generally so far as possible to mix printer's ink with the enthusiasm and noble purposes of the expedition. Do not let it be forgotten that the Polyglot Petition and the principles which it embodies form the nucleus around which will be grouped the dramatis personæ of this movement which is but a prelude to the journey around the world.

THE New York W. C. T. U., led by the state president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, is arrayed in active opposition against the reopening of bar rooms on Sunday. This campaign is occasioned by a bill now before the legislature for the legalizing of Sunday saloons. Among others prominent in this movement are Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, Mrs. Louise Demorest, Mrs. Clinton B. Fisk, Mrs. Jane Fowler Willing. Surely such women with their eloquent appeals for the protection of the home will touch the hearts of the Empire statesmen.

IT is interesting to analyze the vote by which justice was refused to women in Kansas at the last election through the defeat of the Constitutional Amendment, granting them full enfranchisement; it is well known that they have for years enjoyed the municipal ballot by legislative enactment. In the first place nearly seventy-four thousand men who voted for governor failed to vote on this issue either pro or con. That is, a large per cent of the voting population in Kansas lack the sense of justice; the power to put themselves in the place of another; the consciousness that the Golden Rule is the only law of noble living. As to the men who voted, it appears that thirty thousand more Republicans voted against the women than for them, while eighteen thousand more Populists voted for than against. Ninety per cent of the Prohibition vote was for the women; fifty-seven per cent of the Populist vote, thirty-three per cent of the Republican vote and twenty per cent of the Democratic vote were in our favor. It is well for women to know these percentages in making up their minds as to what they have to expect from old parties versus new ones. "He that hath ears to hear let him hear."

THE heavenly powers that as we believe are guiding this world to a happier future have not left themselves without a witness to their purpose of helping us improve the government through the ingenious devices of the inventor. The Myers voting machine is declared by competent authorities to be a means of electoral reform. It has advantages over any ballot system as yet devised. Indeed, where it is used there is practically no chance of fraud and at the same time there will be a speedy return of the results of the voting. It has already been tried in many local elections with entire success and the voters of all parties in the towns and cities where it has been used are unanimous in its favor. It is stated that the Myers machine will permit five hundred voters to register their preferences between six o'clock in the morning and four in the afternoon with perfect ease, and when the voting is over and the polls are closed the election inspectors will find the exact number of votes given to each candidate already tallied and registered so that they have only to describe the result and send it to headquarters. Watchers and canvassers may be continued for precautionary reasons but they will be useless under the Myers plan. In any city where it is put into operation the total vote for every candidate ought to be known within an hour after the polls have closed. It is declared by Mr. C. S. Smith, chairman of the New York executive committee of seventy which has just "cleared up" the Tammany ring, to be "as perfect a piece of human mechanism as can be constructed." It would do away with ballots and "pasters"; ballot clerks and canvassers would be of no more use. This, of course, would be an immense saving in the election expenses. It now looks as if the Myers ballot box and the Australian system of registration would so humanize the polls that the coming in of women as voters would be relieved of all the features with which conservatives have surrounded it in their thought and imagination and would be as simple a matter as the sending of a telephonic message. How true it is that "all things work together for good" and "we cannot tell which shall prosper, this or that."

THE NEW YEAR.

"The acceptable year of the Lord."

BY W. EVANS DARBY, LL. D.

O year of God, that prophet eyes foresaw,
Paling earth's glories with its milder sheen,
Whose pulsing tides obey His spirit's law,
Whose nearing is by heavenly watchers seen;
Come quickly, and this weary earth restore
With love's blest reign of peace for evermore!

Too long have greed and guile the nations cursed,
Debasing nature from its primal aim;
Too long have men their brutal instincts nursed,
Till cruelty has felt no touch of shame,
And selfishness grew strong beyond control,
"And froze the genial current of the soul."

The years of man have been the years of Cain,
Long years of hatred and unbrotherhood,
The race pursued by fratricidal pain,
Till God's new time shall bring the promised good,
And from the past a grander epoch rise,
Whose joy shall spring from mutual sacrifice.

The years of men have been the years of sin,
Moulded by human passions from their birth,
O year of God, with newer life begin,
And shed thy bounties o'er this hate cursed earth!
May slavery, war and kindred evils flee,
And a new manhood all thy glories see!

New Year of hope and blessing for mankind,
Come with good tidings of a glorious spring!
Freedom for slaves whom social hatreds bind,
And joy for broken-hearted mourners bring.
So shall thy dawn be sung by souls forlorn,
And all earth's joy-bells greet thy natal morn.

London, Eng.

PIERRE AND JEAN, TWINS.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

(Concluded.)

Never before in all his life had Dr. Bassett had such a wonderful pupil as Peter, and as the months slid away into years and the boy became a tall fellow, the old minister doctor would come to the shoe-shop and talk about the child's future. "With education he will be a man of consideration. He has it in him to become a scholar, a minister if he wills, or a doctor of medicine. And he is such a worker he will find a way if only you are willing."

Jean, for his part was all for the river. He wanted to be an engineer, and he began by learning to use the paddle and oar, and by working in old Sylvester Blondel's mill. He did not want to go too far from home. Montreal was far enough, Quebec at the end of the world. The joy of his life in summer was the bit of garden behind the shoe-shop, where there were currants and a rhubarb bed and a bed of pinks and balm. As for books, they made his head ache, especially his arithmetic. As for geography, he never would have learned any of it had not Father Gabriel tried teaching it to him in rhyme.

When Peter was sixteen he was quite ready for college, and Dr. Bassett, who had no children of his own, agreed to lend him money for the first year. "When one's eyes are open and one is willing to do anything that offers that is honest, there is always work," he said encouragingly.

"Maria," said old Peter to his wife as they sat in the privacy of the back veranda looking at the pinks and the rhubarb bed, "our Peter is going to be a credit to us."

"And so is Jean," said the mother. "Jean has a heart of gold."

"So has Peter," said the father stoutly. "Peter's head makes him slow to speak. But you will see he, too, has a heart when it is necessary."

"Jean's head is quite as good only it is of a different kind. I never saw an old man wiser than he about planting potatoes, and as for cabbages, he knows how to keep off the club root, and he is as clever as a fish on the river and strong as an ox. We're lucky it is he who is to stay at home and Peter who is to go off into the States."

"It's a great thing going to college," said the father, thoughtfully.

"Yes," assented the mother. "I worry about nothing save his religion. If only he will remain a good lad."

"Eh, now, I am surprised at you," said old Peter reproachfully. "You from the states to say that, and about our boy—our own boy."

Five years ran by, then six, seven, and Peter remained in the states, working at all sorts of things; now in a shop, now on a farm, now in a counting-room, and then going on with his college work. Once a month he wrote to his father. That seemed often enough, and naturally as the time lengthened the home-folk seemed more and more shadowy. It had been a struggle and taken all there was in him to gain what he had, but now the hardest was over and he would take his degree in a few months. So much for the history which brings us to the beginning of the story.

It was into this feeling of relief and security that a letter from Father Gabriel brought the news that his father had had a stroke of paralysis, and that his brother, Jean, who, in all his life had never been ill, was in the agonies of inflammatory rheumatism.

All night, back and forth like a caged lion, Peter walked in his narrow bedroom, not to disturb Lummy Yates in the room just beyond. With a vision of his home and the love that had been lavished upon him in it, came a picture of the river always going, going, and the great bridge hanging above it like a web. The narrow, dusty, sleepy street, the talk about trifles, the petty economies, the lack of space save out under the sky, how it all came up. Then he would tell himself that his father must have grown old in those seven years. Yes, seventy-five, and the mother, never strong, was far toward fifty.

"Dr. Bassett fears that your brother is going to be left helpless," Father Gabriel had written. "It is an awful stroke for the lad."

It was cold. The fire had long since gone out in the little parlor he shared with Lummy Yates, but sweat stood on Peter's forehead. It was hard for him, too, for never once had he two opinions as to what he must do. He must make an explanation of some sort to the faculty, pay his bits of debts and go, which he did.

. . . . . .

Five years later Lummy Yates stopped off at the little village opposite Lachine. There was some land there that had come to him by inheritance, and Lummy, always practical, wanted to know what it was like. It was June and the tall white lilies were open in Father Gabriel's garden. As Lummy walked up the street he saw a familiar figure coming out of the priest's gate. It was Peter La Mell. Yes; there was no mistake. Lummy forgot Peter's reserve. Now that he was out in the world, the men he had known at college were almost like relatives. He hurried up, and Peter after one look also hurried. They shook hands long and hard. "You must come with me," said Peter. "I am the village doctor. I went down to Montreal two winters, and I studied there. Oh, but it will do Jean good to see you."

Jean, strangely twisted up and prematurely old from suffering, lay in a wheeled chair on the sunny veranda. The old shoemaker's shop had been drawn away from the street back among the pinks and balm, and a porch had been built along its front, and there were daisies and polyanthus and pansies for Jean to look at. Father La Mell was out too. He had suffered a second shock and could no longer speak, only babble. But Peter brought his old chum straight up to him. "He knows, father does," he explained. "It is only the power of control that is lost."

Mother La Mell wanted Peter within for simple household task. Lummy Yates sat down between the old man and Jean and fanned himself with his hat. Jean's eyes shone. "Oh," said he, "I'm glad you've come. Perhaps you thought you knew my brother in college. You did in a way, but it is in his home a man shows. He hovers us all as a mother bird does her young. He gave up—things—" Jean felt far more than he could phrase, "to come back to us. But he says it was nothing, only a New Year's resolve he had. He might have been a great man if he had not thought so much of us. When he first came he supported us making shoes."

Prosperous Lummy Yates felt a bunch in his throat. "My dear fellow," said he putting his plump hand caressingly upon Jean's thin one, "no man ever began to be great by neglecting his own. And," he coughed, it was really embarrassing that lump, but it would come when he recollected just what prospects Peter relinquished, "after all it is not necessary to be great. It is only necessary to be true."

Belvidere, Ill.

THE ENGLISH CRADLE OF THE TEMPERANCE REFORM.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

I wonder how many intelligent American temperance workers could answer this question: What town in England is as well known as "the cradle of the British temperance movement" as Hillsboro, O., is as the cradle of the women's temperance crusade?

Probably in England no temperance worker of fair intelligence would fail to give this prompt reply: The good old town of Preston, where Joseph Livesey lived and died.

Mr. Livesey is looked upon as the father of the total abstinence movement, he having founded a temperance society in his adult Sunday-school, January 1, 1832, which merged into the present famous temperance society of Preston, March 22, of the same year. Having organized, they held their first meeting in the Cock-pit, where the "sporting aristocracy" had been wont to fight their mains with cocks and make their bets on the result. The building is a hundred years old or more, and the abomination of these fights used to go on in the week when the Preston horse races were run. The Cock-pit was so near the parish church that on a hot day when the windows were open many a good temperance man has distinctly heard the yells, oaths and curses that issued therefrom while he was standing at the altar of God. But the evil spirit was driven out at last, and the old Cock-pit became a center of reform work.

The fact that the first teetotal society originated in a Sunday-school class is of special interest to Christian people. If each class in every Sunday-school in the wide world were to-day the center of total abstinence example and influence the temperance reform would take a forward stride longer than it has ever yet achieved.

It seems that Joseph Livesey, who was a tradesman, philanthropist, public speaker and writer, and a temperance man, was one of those who fought his way through difficult conditions to success. He says that the cellar was his college and the breast-beam his reading desk. He studied by the dim flicker of the fire, being unable to procure the luxury of a candle, for he was a weaver lad, who at the age of seven was left fatherless, motherless, sisterless and brotherless to make his way.

It required no small strength of character to take the position, in 1833, that the nutritious and strengthening properties of beer and porter were a delusion, but he studied for himself and found this to be true, and having found it he went forth to village, town and city, with his blackboard, chalk, barley scales and weights, and demonstrated to the people that there was more nutrition in a penny loaf than in a gallon of beer. More than a hundred thousand copies of this lecture, entitled "The Grand Delusion," were circulated in the United Kingdom and in America. He not only organized the first teetotal society in this country but founded the Temperance Advocate, the first exclusively teetotal paper, and afterward founded The Struggle, a weekly paper which advocated the abolition of corn laws, for Mr. Livesey was an all-round reformer, and finally established The Preston Guardian, in 1844, which still lives in the enjoyment of a well won eminence.

When he was seventy-six years old, in a severe illness, and all hope of recovery was said to be gone unless he would drink brandy, although unable to move hand or foot, he whispered to his son, "Raise me up and let me tell them that whether I die or not I will not drink the stuff." He did not drink it but lived on fifteen years longer.

It is not professed that Preston stands preëminent in the temperance reform, but that it is the first town in which the teetotal pledge was signed. It is also told that the first moderation society was organized in Preston in 1829. The expression, "the seven men of Preston," is a household word in England, for the pledge was first taken by that golden number. This is the pledge they signed:

We agree to abstain from all liquors of an intoxicating atunre, whether ale, beer, wine or ardent spirits, except as medicine.

Around these so-called "seven men of Preston," gathered in the course of time a legendary halo. Six months after this teetotal pledge was signed the moderation society adopted it but it was not without great searchings of heart resulting in long continued discussion and strong disagreement that this vantage ground was gained. No effort was spared to crush out the temperance men; they were treated with obloquy, satirized as Utopian dreamers, and the bitterest opposition of all was visited upon them by the members of the church and the medical profession. The movement owed everything to the genial personality of its founder, Mr. Livesey; he was not content with speaking in public but had a regular system of visiting from house to house, especially on Sundays. When he entered a home he would say in his pleasant, smiling manner, "Good-morning, will you please have a temperance tract?" or "Have you any teetotalers living here?"

He never sought the society of the rich, but toiled on amongst the poor and working classes, and he was wont to invite teetotalers from their ranks to take tea with him. His constant injunction to temperance workers was, "We must do more visiting. Without frequent visitation, my private opinion is, no temperance society can be in a prosperous condition."

It should be carefully remembered that his hand wrote the first pledge, his head planned the first arrangements, his heart inspired the visiting department which was the life-blood of the society; he was its great organizer, its life, spirit, its presiding genius, its guiding, directing, controlling intelligence.

Not only is Preston the birthplace of teetotalism, but there was formed what was in reality the first Band of Hope, though it did not then take that name.

On the 18th of April, 1834, the pledge of total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors was agreed to and signed by one hundred and one youths, who, following in the wake of Joseph Livesey and his comrades, were anxious to be the first to establish an entire abstinence society.

Facts such as these should be familiar to all who are devoting themselves to temperance reform, and for this reason I have collated them from documents placed in my hands when I visited Preston, Feb. 1 and 2, 1894.

Those brave women of Preston have recognized the fact that there is no historic monument in their beautiful town in honor of the greatest reform of the age, and have decided to ask their sisters to help them erect such a monument in the form of a memorial building which shall do honor to the cause and from whose rentals they can derive a fund for the promotion of the work.

So much for Preston and our pleasant visit, with a parting injunction to every temperance worker who goes to the mother country to attend the World's Convention next June to go and do likewise.

THE MOTHER-SPIRIT.

BY REV. W. HOWATT GARDNER.

It was not by accident that the history of the human race began with the history of the family life. It was the family, with human authority invested in married manhood and womanhood, that was to subdue the earth and have dominion over it. The Bible does not represent the male portion of the family as acting solely alone in government, but associates with him the female portion as an equal participant in all affairs that vitally concern them both. The male and the female, representing in the family life fatherhood and motherhood, were both made in the image of God. "So God created man (Humanity) in His own image, in the image of God created He him; male and female created He them." Both were equally endowed with those qualities of mind and heart, which, through intelligent coöperation, were to provide right and just government for the race.

The most highly developed family life as the unit and ideal of society is, to a considerable degree, emphasized by the fact that the Godhead is revealed to men through the family idea. As the family on earth, naturally begotten, involves fatherhood, motherhood and childhood, so the "family of heaven," spiritually existent, is presented to us as involving Fatherhood, Childhood, or Sonship, and, we would say, Motherhood. One of the earliest and distinctive revelations made by Christ at His coming was that of God as the Father, while Christ took His place with us as one of us, a Son, our "Elder brother," as Paul speaks of Him, of "the household of God."

While much is thus declared concerning Fatherhood and Sonship, little is clearly discerned in the Scriptures concerning the Motherhood of the Godhead. But may not this be discovered in the offices of the Holy Spirit, the third person of the Godhead?

The Holy Spirit is represented as active both in generation and regeneration; as the giver and sustainer of life. In the creation of our world we read that "the spirit of God moved (or brooded) upon the face of the waters"; when the "earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep." It is the Holy Spirit who gives the new, spiritual life. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

The characteristics of the Holy Spirit are more largely those that belong to motherhood, qualities of the heart. The very name by which the Spirit is best known, "the Comforter," or Paraclete, expresses those qualities of person that persuade, entreat, win. In the spiritual realm the Holy Spirit is represented as teaching, leading, guiding into truth, purifying, sanctifying "the household of God." The Father sends forth His commands, His word, but they are no more His than they are the Holy Spirit's. Both God the Father, and the Holy Spirit, representing motherhood in the Godhead, are seen to be mutually engaged in the work of redeeming the world. The fulness of life is not given by the Father alone, but by the Father and the Spirit.

It is true that men are accustomed to speak of the Spirit as "He," but as a fact the Greek word translated "spirit" is a neuter word and expresses nothing as to sex. The Spirit might more appropriately be designated by the feminine personal pronoun "she."

Human nature in its best aspects exists complete in the family life. But no family life is complete when one only, and that one the father, holds supreme authority. Only as both mutually hold authority and intelligently coöperate will the highest ends of the family life be served, and the well-being of society secured. In the most highly developed and best regulated family circles we find that which society ought to be.

In such families we find in full exercise the finest social instincts and spiritual qualities of human nature, courtesy, love for one another, deference to the wishes of each other, and yet the highest liberty for all. Action is governed with reference to others, and is not prompted by selfish impulse; the concern of one becomes the concern of all. But such family existence can never be where one is a master and the other a menial. It was never intended that the male half of the human race should monopolize all powers of government in the family and in the nation. The past has missed much in excluding the female half of the race from direct participation in the discussion and regulation of all those questions that pertain to the protection of the home. The salvation of the home means the salvation of the nation. The life of the nation will be purer only as motherhood is accorded equally with fatherhood her rightful place in national representation.

The social world is practically "without form and void," or chaotic. Social regeneration will not become the fact until motherhood receives her God-given right to legislate on all questions that threaten the integrity of the home. The Holy Spirit, the motherhood of the Godhead cooperates with God, the Father, in the common work of spiritually redeeming humanity. But the divine powers work through human means. As rapidly as motherhood is more and more directly employed with fatherhood in the common work of rescuing the home will society become the purer. The questions of the "age of consent," divorce, increasing social vice, intemperance, are quite as much, if not more, the concern of women as of men.

The ballot in the hands of women is the most potent means by which the power of womanhood may "make for righteousness." As long as the right of petition only is given to woman she receives little consideration from legislators; the ballot is the power that commands respect.

The Biblical picture of the first family life is still largely an ideal. Both father and mother received equal responsibilities and duties with respect to government; one was the counterpart of the other, rather than the inferior of the other; of both God said, "Let us make man (humanity) in our image, after our likeness," fatherhood and motherhood, and to them both, without restriction, God gave "dominion . . over all the earth."

The condition that actually prevails to-day differs much from this picture. The male feature of the human family assumes to be of superior origin, knowing positively his rights, and as positively ignoring, or suppressing the exercise of the rights of her who was made his counterpart. But this supposed superior origin of masculinity is an assumption based on his greater physical strength, whereas the likeness of God, or the Godhead, wherein men and women were made, consists of the powers of mind and heart, and in these alone is the guarantee of righteous government invested.

It is often said that woman is so much more spiritual than man, that her virtues are of such a higher order, she should therefore abstain from the ballot lest the higher qualities of her nature be contaminated. But it is an infusion of just these higher qualities of womanhood that are needed to purify the political life of the nation. The spiritual forces, the qualities of the heart as well as those of the mind should find their expression at the ballot box.

In the public expression of opinion in the casting of the ballot the husband is supposed to represent correctly the desires of his wife for a better protection for the home, when as a fact very few husbands think of the home at all as an important institution for which to legislate. He is moved more by partisan considerations than by family conditions. He would prefer to vote for further naval defences than to vote for the defence of his fireside. With the exception of a few communities the wife is positively denied the right of citizenship and to the exercise of that personal responsibility that the Bible represents as hers in the beginning.

When the mothers of the nation are allowed to participate equally with the fathers in government we will approach very closely to the position marked out at the beginning, for the government of a nation is, after all, but the government of families.

Newton Centre, Mass.

"WHEN DOCTORS DISAGREE."

I.

BY KATE C. BUSHNELL, M. D.

The various interpretations put upon that portion of Scripture which relates to women "praying or prophesying uncovered," afford interesting reading. The passage will be found in I. Cor. 11: 1–16, and I urge that those women who are interested in the matter will open their Bibles and study the lesson with me.

There are few passages of Scripture concerning which greater diversity of opinion has been expressed. Let us, for instance, contrast the comments of Dean Stanley and Bishop Lightfoot. As to the very object of the apostle in bringing up the topic for consideration, they contradict each other in the following language:*

| SAYS DEAN STANLEY: | SAYS BISHOP LIGHTFOOT: |
|---|---|
| "The practice [of men veiling] is attacked, not because it existed at Corinth, but for the sake of illustrating the practice of women." | "It certainly may be inquired whether he so much urgeth the veiling of women as reproves the veiling of men. However, by this fit argument he will chastise that contrary custom [veiling] and foolishness of man." |

One commentator declares the object to be an attack on the practice of women unveiling, the other, an attack on the practice of men veiling.

As to verse 4, "Every man praying or prophesying having his head covered dishonoreth his head," they differ again as to the reason why the act is dishonoring to Christ.

| STANLEY. | LIGHTFOOT. |
|---|---|
| "Dishonors his head by an unseemly, effeminate practice, and thereby Christ." | "A man praying covered, as ashamed of his face before God, disgraceth his head, Christ, who himself carried the like face of a man." |

One says the dishonor lies in doing an "effeminate" thing, the other in "being ashamed of his face."

As to the phrase, "dishonoreth her head":

| STANLEY. | LIGHTFOOT. |
|---|---|
| "Man is the reflex of the glory of God; woman is a reflex of the glory, not of God, but of man." | "A woman praying not veiled, as if she were not ashamed of her face, disgraceth man, her head, while she would seem so beautiful beyond him, when she is only the glory of the man; but man is the glory of God." |

Herein both these learned men agree that those of their sex are "the glory of God," while those of the other sex only get their glory from men. It is a little puzzling to understand how the woman could seem, in Bishop Lightfoot's words, "so beautiful beyond" man when she is merely the reflex of his glory. The moon is the reflex of the glory of the sun; does it need to cover itself lest it shine beyond the glory of the sun, and thus reflect dishonor on the sun? Perhaps woman should be "ashamed of her face," because, if unveiled, it shines forth to the detriment of the theological theory of its having only a glory reflected from man's face, and it is a shame that nature should thus be allowed to contradict dogma. Bishop Lightfoot should have explained, moreover, most carefully, which head it is the woman's duty to be ashamed of. She has two, one on her body and her husband, and the Bishop would not like women veiling under a mistaken notion that being "so beautiful beyond him," she must, when praying or prophesying, wear a token of her shame at the plain looks of her spouse.

The two differ, indeed, as to the very meaning of a veil. Dean Stanley pronounces it "the mark of man's dominion over her." Bishop Lightfoot calls the veil "a sign, indeed, of shame, but not of subjection" — "of shame that woman first brought sin into the world." Further,

| SAYS STANLEY: | SAYS LIGHTFOOT: |
|---|---|
| "The woman is to appear with her head, the symbol of her husband, not defrauded of that seemly covering which nature suggests by the long tresses which it has given her." | "The apostle, therefore, does not at all chide this making bare the face [by women] absolutely considered." |

There is a startling divergency in opinion here, Dean Stanley taking the ground that women are not to appear unveiled; Bishop Lightfoot, that the apostle "does not chide making bare the face." It is remarkable how it is agreed upon by many commentators that "long tresses" are given by nature to women only, while the world is peopled mostly with long-haired men as well as women. How does a Chinaman become possessed of long hair excepting by the same method—nature—that an American woman does? Those who are familiar with the sort of veiling common in Egypt and the Holy Land—when seen in the latter place—cannot but recall it as a grotesque parody on a full-bearded face. The veil does not cover the eyes and forehead, but hangs (a piece of black cloth) from the cheek-bones downward. "Nature suggests" this sort of veil not by hair hanging from a woman's head backward one-half so much as by whiskers on a man's face.

Again:

| STANLEY. | LIGHTFOOT. |
|---|---|
| "As all his outward manifestations have reference to God, so all hers have reference to man." | "Regard is had [in veiling] to something that belongs to the woman in respect to God, rather than in respect to her husband." |

One refers the custom of veiling to a matter of woman's relation to man, the other to woman's relation to God. It is difficult to understand how woman could ever get the blessing promised to those of "single" eye (Matt. 6:22), if even in times of prayer she is to see to it that "all her outward manifestations 'have reference to man.'" Does duty bind women then (like the hypocrites, Matt. 6: 5) to pray "that they may be seen of men" when they do pray in public places? Again: are women to be in subjection only at prayer-time and in preaching? If not, why ought they not to go perpetually veiled as a sign of continual subjection?

The most difficult verse to deal with, according to com-

*It will be necessary in some of these extracts to slightly condense from the original, but by reference to Dean Stanley's "Notes on the Epistles to the Corinthians," and Lightfoot's "Hebrew and Talmudic Exercitations," it will be seen that no injustice has been done them thereby.

mentators, is the tenth. Literally translated it reads: "For this cause ought the woman to have authority over her head," etc. Of this

| DEAN STANLEY SAYS: | BISHOP LIGHTFOOT ANSWERS. |
|---|---|
| "The general sense of this text, as gathered from the context, can be nothing more or less than an assertion of the subordination of the woman to the man." "The woman ought to bear upon her head the mark of man's dominion over her." | [The veil is] "a sign indeed of shame, but not of subjection." "If it were so argued by him [Paul], then 'Let not a man pray but with his head covered, because he is subject to Christ.'" |

The claim, on the part of Dean Stanley and many others, is that somehow the tenth verse must be a command for women to veil as a sign of subordination, although the verse does not at all say so. He draws his proof from the "context," that is, from the statements that "the head of the woman is the man," "the woman is the glory of the man," and "the woman," was created "for the man." It is curious to note that these varieties of expression, "head of," "glory of," "created for," come but to one thought in the eyes of male commentators; that is, "subordinate to."

It is possible to conceive that "head" means "leader," not "driver", that "glory of" means that man ought to glory in the public career of women; and even that the reason that the woman was "created for" the man is because the only help meet for him is some one to usurp authority and drive him into the path of righteousness. I do not declare this to be the meaning of these expressions, but only as not contradictory to their meaning; which shows that they all cannot be summed up in the single thought of "subordination."

Dean Stanley and Bishop Lightfoot do not at all agree as to the meaning of this tenth verse; they each give a version of their own in the following words:

| STANLEY. | LIGHTFOOT. |
|---|---|
| "The woman ought to bear upon her head the mark of man's dominion over her." | "Let her bare her face if she will" . . . "let her veil it if she will." |

The last phrase of the tenth verse, "because of the angels," has also received at the hands of commentators the widest possible differences in interpretation. Bishop Lightfoot believes "angels" in this expression means "messengers of espousals" sent to the places of Christian worship to find wives for young men, and declares the meaning of the verse to be, she "hath such a power of uncovering her face before these angels [or messengers] who come to espouse her, when otherwise by the custom of the nation it were not lawful."

Dean Stanley, on the other hand, propounds the remarkable theory, which originated with Tertullian, that to women is to be attributed not only the fall of men, but the fall of angels, and that hence women cannot be trusted to come in contact with them. Bishop Lightfoot applies the passage more especially to the conduct of unmarried maidens, Dean Stanley to married women:

| STANLEY. | LIGHTFOOT. |
|---|---|
| "The authority of the husband is, as it were, enthroned visibly upon her head in token that she belongs to him alone, and that she knows no allegiance to any one besides, not even to the angels who stand before the throne of God." | "Let her bare her face, if she will, that she may appear beautiful; let her veil it, if she will, that she may appear modest. She hath full power in her own hands to promote her own espousals." |

To those conscientious women who put confidence in the commentary as they do in the very Word itself, it will be a matter of real regret to be forced to believe that women are at the bottom of all the mischief done, not only among men, but among angels also.

In spite of Dean Stanley's teaching that women are to obey men only, and to know "no allegiance to any one besides, not even to the angels," I fear that woman, whatever her training and preconceptions, no matter how obedient by nature and inured to subjection, might, like the ass that belonged to Balaam, even if under the master's lash, balk at the apparition of an angel in the pathway, and the teaching turn out to be of no account after all in an emergency!

But does such teaching of insubordination to angels accord with the Word of God? Supposing Sarah and Hagar and the wife of Manoah and the Virgin Mary and Mary Magdalene, had acted according to such instruction? In the latter case, at any rate, had Mary Magdalene been disobedient to the word of the angel at the sepulchre, what would have become of the very gospel itself?

London, Eng.

THIRD BIENNIAL CONVENTION OF THE WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

The Call To Prayer.

The third biennial Convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held, in connection with the annual meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association, in Queen's Hall and Exeter Hall, London, June 14 to 21, 1895.

In view of the custom to hold a service of prayer previous to such conventions, and as superintendent of the evangelistic department of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, I hereby call upon the white-ribboners of the world to set apart Saturday and Sunday, May 18 and 19, as days of praise and prayer.

Although but twenty-one years have passed since upon the women of the Crusade fell the divine fire, yet this heaven born enthusiasm has spread from America to Canada and Great Britain, thence to Australia, South Africa, Japan, India, China, the Hawaiian Republic and round the world. It is fitting, therefore, that we offer united praise to God for the way in which He has led us in the past, and the blessing of the present.

Realizing the great possibilities of the future: that our field is the world; that multitudes are still enthralled by alcohol, opium and impurity; realizing also, our profound helplessness and dependence upon the God of nations, let us draw near to Him for a fresh anointing of the Spirit, confess our failures and mistakes, and consecrate ourselves anew to His service.

PROGRAM FOR LOCAL UNIONS.

SATURDAY, MAY 18, 1895, FROM 2 TO 5 P. M.

FIRST DIVISION FROM 2 TO 3:30.

SUBJECT: PRAISE.

SCRIPTURE LESSON—Ezekiel 47: 1 to 10.

HYMNS—"Coronation," "How Firm a Foundation," "Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

Praise for the blessings upon our work. For its wondrous growth, as pictured in this vision of Ezekiel—"A river of influence which has spread, until the world is refreshed by the life-giving waters, and its trees are for the healing of the nations." Praise for the increased recognition of woman's place and power. For the practical beauty in the religious teachings of the day; the creeds and traditions are giving way to the simplicity of the Christ-life of love and self-sacrifice. Praise for the growing sense of individual responsibility, and the strengthening of the tie which binds all men in a sacred brotherhood.

SECOND DIVISION FROM 3:30 TO 5.

SUBJECT: THE PREPARATION OF HEART.

SCRIPTURE LESSON—Psalm 24.

HYMNS—"Gently, Lord, Oh, Gently Lead Us." "Nearer to Thee." "If we had but a day."

Earnest prayer for the coming conventions in London. For the president and officers of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the president and officers of the British Women's Temperance Association. For superintendents of departments, evangelists, our round-the-world missionaries, all delegates and the city of London in which we gather. Prayer for wisdom and harmony. For the removal of all friction, selfishness, pride and misunderstanding, and a baptism of love which shall unite our hearts and renew our zeal and courage. Prayer for the home, the church, the nations of the world. For the overthrow of intemperance, impurity, war, oppression, and the reign of purity and peace. Prayer for the homeless, the weary and broken-hearted. For those who struggle amid poverty and temptation, and for the rich and prosperous, that they may see the golden opportunity for personal ministry. Prayer for the youth and children and for ourselves, that we may have a fresh vision of His face and a baptism of power from on high.

MASS MEETING, SATURDAY, MAY 18, 7:30 P. M.

PROGRAM.

HYMN—"Give to the Winds Thy Fears."
SCRIPTURE LESSON—Psalm 146, Crusade Psalm.
PRAYER.
HYMN—"Christ for the World we Sing."
ADDRESS—Sketch of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union.
ADDRESS—Twenty-one Years of Temperance Work.
HYMN—"While the Days are Going by."
ADDRESS—The Outlook.
DOXOLOGY AND BENEDICTION.

SUNDAY, MAY 19, 1895.

Arrangements for Sunday services are left with the local unions. Where possible let a union church service be held, or urge each pastor to preach on that day a sermon upon the evils of intemperance and the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The hymns used are numbers 149, 117, 123, 92, 127, 79, 108, 7, 133, from the White Ribbon Hymnal.

Will all presidents of unions, evangelistic superintendents, and members of the press give this call to prayer the widest publicity, that with one heart and voice we may turn to God?

ELIZABETH W. GREENWOOD,
Superintendent Evangelistic Dept.

CORRESPONDENCE

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—To women working in lines of missionary effort the first two days of the triennial of the National Council of Women at Washington, D. C., will be of great interest.

On the evening of the 18th of February the time will be divided between the Woman's Foreign Missionary Union of Friends and the National Free Baptist Woman's Missionary Society. This latter organization is one of the very oldest of women's societies, having been organized in 1843. It will be represented upon this occasion by two of its ablest workers and speakers, Mrs. Frances Stewart Mosher, upon "The Ethical Adjustment of Woman's Home and Sociological Duties," and Mrs. Emeline Burlingame Cheney, upon "Practical Christian Living."

Mrs. Eliza C. Armstrong, who will speak upon "The Relation of Religion to Public Duties," is known among the Friends as one of their very best speakers.

Tuesday evening, February 19, will be occupied by the Woman's Centenary Association of the Universalist church and by the National Council of Jewish Women. The Centenary is many years old,—the Council of Jewish Women is an outgrowth of the World's Congress of Representative Women of the Exposition year.

Rev. Lorenza Haynes (Universalist) will give an address on "The Relation of Religion to Public Duties," and "The Exact Attitude of each of the Leading Religious Denominations toward Woman's Growing Service in the Church" will be treated by a speaker not yet decided upon.

Some fine subjects are upon that part of the program occupied by the Jewish Council, namely, "Social Obligations of Religion," by Miss Sadie, American corresponding secretary of the Council of Jewish Women; "The Function of Women in Religious Life," and "Greek and Hebrew Genius-Influence on Christianity and Civilization" by speakers whose names are not yet announced.

The morning sessions of these two days will be equally interesting, the first being given to the formal opening of the National Council triennial, presentation of delegates, and greetings of fraternal delegates from associations not in membership in the Council. Tuesday morning will begin the sessions in which the time will be largely given to free discussion by the members of the triennial, each subject for discussion being presented formally in half hour address by a specially invited speaker. The topics of Tuesday are, "The Influence of Women in Bringing Religious Conviction to Bear upon Daily Life," presented by Mrs. Minnie D. Louis, who spoke so acceptably at the World's Congress of Representative Women, and "Woman's Mission to the Church as Minister and Missionary," by Mrs. Eliza C. Armstrong. Each of these topics will be discussed for one hour, exclusive of the time occupied by the main addresses mentioned.

RACHEL FOSTER AVERY.

Philadelphia, Pa.

BLOWING UP HELLGATE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Seeing an article in your paper speaking of names of liquor saloons, it reminded me of some I have seen in the past. I can only mention two. One was called "The Shades," and it was appropriate, as the shadow always falls on all who enter there. But to be brief, I would call your attention to a brewery in upper New York, called "Hellgate Brewery," because it is built along the narrow stream that was so full of rocks before the government blew it up with dynamite some years ago. When the bed of the river was undermined for a great distance and loaded with dynamite all was connected by wires and then went to a battery on shore. It was advertised to be blown on a certain day and hour; the writer was on the New York side to see the explosion, with thousands more all over the hills and buildings. A little child touched the button, the little daughter of the principal engineer, and the bed of the river went up apparently one hundred feet for a long distance and fell with a fearful roar. This hurl gate is by the vulgar called Hellgate. The great brewery thought it would be cute to adopt that name, therefore all their great wagons were labeled in gilt letters, "Hellgate Brewery."

We thought it the best name we had ever heard for a distillery of any kind, as nothing could be more appropriate. But the question is, how can temperance people undermine the whole field of whisky and beer manufacture, and so place the dynamite as to destroy the root of the great upas tree at one blow? We are chopping off branches here and there, but it should be undermined, and every root blown so high in the air that it will die for want of soil to grow in. Hell gate needs to be blown up by the power of God and the united power of Christian women. You are working the mine, and are preparing it, and may God give you abundant success in the future blast.

Philadelphia, Pa. T. S. SCOVILLE.

A PRACTICAL TEMPERANCE WORK.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Last July the Y. W. C. T. U. of Providence, R. I., opened to the public their newly completed ice-water fountain in one of the most central parts of the city, and maintained it until the middle of October. It was a modest looking affair, yet 80,250 pounds of ice were used during the season, and it was estimated that an average of over one thousand four hundred persons per hour partook of the refreshment it offered. One of the patrons exclaimed, "I'd be a rich man if I could have a soda fountain patronized like that!" and another, "Shure, that's good, and the saloon niver got five cents for that drink!"

Mr. H. F. Jenks, of Pawtucket, R. I., constructed the fountain, and Mrs. J. H. Kendrick was the able chairman of this committee. The cost of erection and maintenance was nearly six hundred dollars. All summer the flag of our country and a white ribbon floated over this most practical temperance work. The Y's are hoping to erect another ice-water fountain the coming summer. The committee found it very difficult to obtain any definite information concerning such fountains, and will be most happy to impart the results of its research and experience to any other union desiring to engage in a similar work.

As one saw the thirsty crowds constantly surrounding the fountain one realized as never before the desire of the people to obtain easily a refreshing drink. Shall we not have the pleasure of helping other societies to enter upon this line of work and thus secure for themselves the blessing promised to those who offer a cup of cold water in the Master's name?

E. C. HODGE.

Providence, R. I.

DEAR COMRADES:—It is hard to tell when W. C. T. U. laborers are the more inspired to zealous endeavor—at the waning of the old year or the beginning of the new. Methinks it is an activity that never really diminishes, and therein lies our greatest assurance of victory.

A great many unions are planning to push as never before. With the italicized form found on page 14 of this issue or by means of the printed blanks furnished from the National Headquarters, The Temple, Chicago, there is no reason that the great list of names be not rolled up countlessly. One worker has set herself to secure one new name a month, at least, during 1895, trying, in addition, to interest the twelve new petitioners to the extent of each circulating a petition themselves.

THE POLYGLOT PETITION

---

We doubt if another society can match the record made by ours in issuing its covering five hundred and thirty pages, just one month to a day from the date of the adjournment of the Convention, and giving a full account of the same. The volume is the best kind of a hand-book for local unions, for it covers the entire ground of our methods and gives a comparative view of their success in different sections of the country. If extracts in the form of paragraphs and longer articles were made from this collection, which embodies the wisdom and experience of twenty-one years of the woman's crusade for the protection of the home, were transferred to the columns of the local denominational press through the influence of our local workers, this unique and varied volume would accomplish that whereunto it is sent. Nothing strikes us more in glancing over its fair pages than the growing correlation of our work with all the great current movements of the time. The list of telegrams and letters received and of fraternal delegates, with the branchings out of the reports of our general officers and superintendents, marks a movement wider than has ever yet been included under the forms of organization of any single association. We are glad that the resolutions show forth much of this progress, especially those that were added by the Convention, and we think that while our loyalty to the Prohibition party is unquestioned, it was a stroke of wisdom to adopt the resolution of thanks on page 51, which is as follows:

ANNUAL MINUTES,

Resolved, That we render our thanks to the Federated unions of Cleveland for their complete arrangements for the success of the Convention, to the people of the city for their gracious hospitality, to the pastors of the churches who have welcomed us to their pulpits, to the pages for their effective services, to the railroad superintendent for her painstaking and successful efforts to secure reduced rates, to the press and to all who have in any way contributed to the success of the Convention.

A copy of the Minutes costs but fifteen cents, and orders should be sent to Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson. It is perhaps just to add that the picture of our president, not a very good one, by the way, which accompanies the picture of the original Crusade church on the title page, was placed there without her knowledge or consent.

---

SPECIAL DIFFICULTIES.

QUERY.—Has a woman a right to wear the white ribbon who has belonged to the union in time past but has dropped out, does not pay dues or come to the meetings except at long intervals? Can we appoint such an one as superintendent of Loyal Temperance Legion work?

ANSWER.—It seems strange that any woman who cares for the white ribbon would insist on wearing it if she does not pay her dues to the society, and any local union has a perfect right to adopt such a by-law regulating this or any other condition of membership that it chooses. Our local unions forget that they have power to do whatever they think best so far as allowing a woman to be superintendent of a Loyal Temperance Legion when she does not pay her dues. It is inconceivable to my mind that any woman would undertake any work with us who had not interest enough in the cause to pay fifty cents a year. I should certainly give her very little rest until she had paid it. When these local difficulties arise let the union make just such rules by which to control them as seems good in its own sight, always remembering the law of love as supreme.

Q.—Will you please state what the Single Tax is?

A.—I gladly do this in the language of some of its chief advocates: "The Single Tax involves the abolition of all taxes upon industry and the products of industry and upon exchange through tariff taxation and the taking by taxation upon land values, irrespective of improvements, of the annual rental value of all those various forms of natural improvements embraced under the general term, land. With this reform many of its advocates desire to unite the abolition of all special privileged legislation, the adoption of local option in taxation and the adoption of proportional representation."

Miss Margaret Macdonald, of Allston, Mass., has sent us this suggestive story of

THE BEGINNING OF AN L. T. L.

"Alice Dow and I were invited to spend the evening with a friend and make ourselves useful in helping entertain a number of young people, who had gathered there to celebrate little Edith Enwood's birthday. Of course we went.

"I had just started a lively game for the little ones, when I happened to spy in the corner a boy and girl who looked as if they had come to an end of their conversational powers, so I crossed the room to see why they were not playing with the other children. Annie said Harry did not like the game and she would not play unless he did. It was the rule of the house for no one to be overlooked or neglected, so I cast about in my mind for something to talk to them about. Suddenly like an inspiration came the thought,—temperance. Holding up my watch chain on which was tied a bit of white ribbon, I asked, 'Who knows what this little ribbon means?' No answer. 'Did either of you ever hear mamma or papa speak of the brave men and women who are fighting the rum-shops and saloons?' At this their faces brightened, and they seemed to have an idea of what I was talking about, but were afraid to talk so I told them how, in other places boys and girls, as well as men and women, were working to drive wickedness out of the land, what a lot of good they were doing, and how much we could do too, if we would only try. They grew so interested that when the time came for them to say good-bye and go home, they were really sorry to leave. I took courage and said, 'Come and bring some little friends to my house after school Friday, and we will see if we cannot all join together to work for right.' When I went home I prayed for strength to carry on the undertaking begun in such an unexpected way. I waited anxiously for Friday. At last the wished-for day arrived, and with it twenty-eight children. When I had made them all feel at home with me and we had sung some pretty hymns, I explained to them just why they were there, read to them the pledge and tried to make everything perfectly clear. When I questioned them they seemed to have a correct idea as to what their duty was, and how they were to fulfill their pledges. Out of that twenty-eight we formed a Loyal Temperance Legion. That little L. T. L. has increased to eighty-five. With God's help we hope to go on in this good work."

---

Mrs. L. S. Weightman, of Washington, D. C., sends a program which, interspersed with music, basket-lunch, etc., might serve as a suggestive model for meetings during the new year. It was called a and though not strictly a W. C. T. U. meeting, leaned strongly that way. Following are the leading features of the program:

CONFERENCE MEETING OF REFORM FORCES,

SONG AND PRAYER SERVICE.

BIBLE READING. (Conducted by W. C. T. U. evangelistic superintendent.)

What Measure of Time and Labor Should a Busy Woman Give the W. C. T. U.? (Answered to the effect that since W. C. T. U. principles enter into every relation of life, all busy women can at all times be in some way furthering W. C. T. U. interests.)

The Next Step in Anti-Saloon Warfare, or How Shall we Conquer the Liquor Traffic? (Discussed by pastors, citizens and white-ribboners.)

Treasury Notes. (Financial aspect of W. C. T. U. work.)

Difficulties in Winning New Members and How to Meet Them.

Incentives to Workers.

Apathy in the Local Union; Its Cause and Remedy.

Teaching Prohibition in Church and Sabbath-school. (Handled by pastor or Sunday-school superintendent.)

A Paying Investment. (Of time and money in W. C. T. U. work.)

What the W. C. T. U. has Done for me. (Discussion open to all.)

A Nation's Suicide; the Sacrifice of Our Girls. What Shall we do About it?

Twenty-one Years' Trial; the "Coming of Age" of the W. C. T. U. Is She Worthy of Citizenship? (Answered by a pastor.)

---

With hearty acknowledgment of the pleasant and practical communications I have already received from the hive-workers and awaiting your further advances,

Yours in all fellowship,

MOTHER EXPERIENCE.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Lord, increase our faith.—Luke 17:5.

Let this be our daily prayer during 1895. If we do we shall grow strong in the Lord and in the power of His might—going on from strength to strength, we shall conquer every foe, and difficulties will vanish like mist before the morning sun. Our new year will then be a happy one. We shall step fearlessly into its untried days. Not death itself shall appall us, for faith conquers even that, too.

***

The following letter from a noble Prohibitionist, one of our Temple Trust bondholders, Mr. John R. Madison, Irving Park, a suburb of Chicago, was received a few days ago. It brought cheer and comfort at a time when darkness seemed to reign. And the writer felt like joining with David as he expresses himself in the sixty-fourth Psalm: "Hear my voice, O God, in my prayer; preserve my life from fear of the enemy. Hide me from the secret counsel of the wicked; from the insurrection of the workers of iniquity: who whet their tongues like a sword and bend their bows to shoot their arrows, even bitter words. They encourage themselves in an evil matter; they commune of laying snares privily; they say, who shall see them?" Mr. Madison writes: "I am just recovering from a serious railroad accident where my life was in great peril, and I desire to make a thankoffering. No cause interests me more than temperance, and I therefore enclose herewith my check for fifty dollars, payable to your order to be used for the Temple. I will take this opportunity to assure you of my implicit confidence in your integrity and honor, notwithstanding the malignant aspersions that have been cast upon you." Mr. Madison refers in the above to a most venomous attack which has been made during the past week or two upon the founder of the Temple through a Chicago newspaper instigated by hers and the Temple's most inveterate enemy.

***

How thoughtful and considerate some of our dear white-ribboners are. They think of the burden that rests upon the shoulders of some of us as the day approaches for paying the interest on our bonds. Such consideration is conspicuously shown in the following letter received from Mrs. Lizzie E. Tilton, superintendent of Temple work for Vineyard Haven, Mass., W. C. T. U. She writes: "Enclosed you will find check for $25, our second payment on a hundred dollar pledge. We will send the rest the first week in January, when our mite-boxes are called in. I thought we had better send this amount now, rather than wait for the balance, so you could have it to use the first of January." Mrs. H. P. Cummings writes: "Enclosed find check for $25 for Temple fund, from the Ware, Mass., W. C. T. U. This, with the $25 sent before, makes $50 we have paid on our pledge. We will send the balance as soon as we can raise it. We have great satisfaction in knowing we have a part in the beautiful Temple."

The Seekonk and East Providence, R. I., W. C. T. U., are a brave little band of women. The union only numbers thirteen, but in spite of that unlucky (?) number, they have just sent through Mrs. C. C. Balch, $25 as a thanksgiving offering, making $59 this little union has paid on a hundred dollar pledge. Mrs. Balch writes that only a very little of the above amount was raised outside of the union. This proves that it only takes a willing mind and a determined purpose for almost any union, no matter how small it is, to raise $100.

***

The Temple superintendent of the Richmond and Hopkinton, R. I., W. C. T. U., Mrs. Mattie A. L. Greene, sends $66 which completes the hundred dollar pledge of the union. A check for $45 has been received from Mrs. E. A. Whitford for the Westerly, R. I., W. C. T. U.; this completes the hundred dollar pledge by this union. Mrs. Whitford writes: "I am so glad we have been able to pay it within the first year. Our union made the pledge last January. All hail to our House Beautiful. May it be a monument of righteousness and temperance and soon be the property of the National W. C. T. U." Mrs. L. Melbourne, Covington, Kentucky, sends $25 for the Covington W. C. T. U.; this makes $75 that union has paid on their hundred dollar pledge. Mrs. Mary E. Watson sends $15 for the Syracuse, N. Y., W. C. T. U. on their pledge. The Fredonia, N. Y., W. C. T. U., through its president, Mrs. E. McNeill, sends $11 on their hundred dollar pledge. This makes $51 the union has paid. Mrs. C. S. Sheldon, a member of the Kirksville, Mo., W. C. T. U., although no longer a resident there—she being now in California—sends $100 as a thanksgiving offering, "In memory," she writes, "of my mother, a Crusader." She wants the money credited on the Missouri tablet.

***

Little Nettie King brought her mite-box to the Temple to-day and exchanged its contents for a souvenir spoon. This is the third time this dear little girl has filled her mite-box and she is starting right out to fill it again for another year. There are still two or three thousand mite-boxes out in the hands of persons who desire to get a Temple spoon by January 1, 1895. We will allow a few days' grace but must insist on our friends sending in the contents of their mite-boxes without delay to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, the Temple, Chicago, if they expect to get their spoons. Let our friends remember how much it will help us if they will send promptly at this time when we need money so badly

THE PAST.

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

A tyrant that bindeth with cords of pain,
And guardeth a prison door?
Nay—but an angel who breaks a chain,
And leads the way to a summit plain,
Where grasses blossom in summer rain,
And singing birds can soar.

A poisoned chalice whose hotdrops bring
A pang to each pulsing vein?
Nay—but a draught from a healing spring,
Cooling the fever and soothing the sting,
Till the dimming eye and the drooping wing
Are lifted to light again.

A pitiless blackness of dreary sea
Hiding our good ship's grave?
Nay—but a beacon, flashing free
Over the track where the breakers be,
When winds are striving in frenzied glee
Shrouding the rocks in the waves.

A spectre, ever with iron hand
Holding the spirit fast?
Nay—but a prophet, in silence grand,
Lifting the veil from a far-off land,
Where, in the scorching of desert sand,
Water shall gush at last.

The angel, who rolls from the closed door
The sealing stone aside;
The healer, for hearts that are rent and sore;
The light that flashes the black seas o'er;
The prophet that points to the other shore—
They are here to-night by my side.

And it matters little if New Year bells
Sadly or gladly ring,
An undertone in their clamor tells,
Of a soft south wind that dies and swells
In fragrant arches of pine-wood dells,
Where some day the birds will sing.

—The Silver Cross.

THE SECRET OF HER DEVOTION.

BY EDITH GRAY.

My grandfather, Captain Lowell, was a sturdy branch of the old Puritan stock, a pillar in the church, captain in the war of 1812 and a leader in his home country. He chose for his wife a dainty maiden from a family noted both in this country and in Europe for their intellectual power. She was herself a writer of widening reputation when she married my grandfather. Within the year she laid aside her pen to take into her arms that sweetest of all burdens, a baby.

The young mother did not gain strength as rapidly as did the sturdy baby boy and then came the serpent into their home that has left its poisonous trail through three generations.

The family physician ordered pure New England rum for the frail young mother to "build her up." She used it as directed and as other children came to her she learned to depend more and more upon the stimulating contents of the rum jug until her own strength was gone, her constitution broken down, and the last three babies came only to open their sweet eyes for a brief moment in this world of sorrow.

The eldest child had not come under the ban and grew to manhood much like his father.

My father was the second child, and throughout his character and life the effects of that doctor's prescription can be traced,—a highly nervous organization, great intellectual power coupled with extreme prostration after effort. He became a Christian in early manhood, and I verily believe that the heavenly Father ofttimes sent a legion of angels to deliver him in his hours of temptation.

He was a consistent Christian, dearly loved by all his friends, and "Uncle John" to every child in our neighborhood. He was singularly pure in all his habits, and was ever just, yet tender. I love to dwell upon this side of his sunny character, but my heart aches when I remember how desperately he fought the adversary for every inch he gained in the upward journey. His story came to me in fragments; he could not speak of it himself, and my mother locked his life-secrets in her heart so that no one but herself and God, the two who ever stood close to him, and who ever bore him up, knew all he suffered. He came into the world cursed with an appetite for strong drink, and a mania to take his own life.

He who directed Christian work; he who was ceaselessly engaged in a struggle against all evil; he who was called a fanatic because of his uncompromising warfare against the rum-power, knew the horrors of a life broken and fettered by this prince of devils. Never, in passing a saloon upon the street but the demon appetite clamored to be appeased with fiery draughts, and then, in the fight that always followed, would come the consuming desire to end his life.

Through his influence unfermented wine was used at the communion table of his church, and many of the brethren wondered a little at his energy in pushing the question. Others thought it decidedly uncalled for and a piece of fanaticism, but yielded more out of love and respect to him than because they thought the use of fermented wine wrong.

My wise mother well knew the influence of children, and without seeming to be watchful she guarded him from many a pitfall. When he went from home, she nearly always accompanied him, by his express wish, and well he appreciated the strong tower God had given him. Yea, "He will not allow us to be tempted more than we are able to bear, but will make for us a way of escape."

As he must needs go to his daily labor, she sent one of his children with the admonition, "Be a cheery helper to papa." And we were instructed in her wise, gentle way, not to take our childish troubles to him, but to reserve our pleasant experiences for his hearing; thus, without knowing why, but implicitly trusting mother, we learned to be ever cheerful and helpful. How tender was the love between father and children, and, in helping him bear his burden, it helped us to develop self-reliance and to be self-sacrificing.

But I, being the baby, was oftenest his companion, and felt a great responsibility resting upon me. In a vague way I could feel the pressure of the trouble of which I was ignorant.

Years passed in this way and my father, worn and weary with life's battle, looked longingly into the bright beyond. Though racked with disease and pain, he ever came off victor and when God said to his soul, "It is enough, come up higher," he could say with Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." As the light of earth grew dim a great peace fell upon his dear face, and he said softly, "Come, Jesus, oh, come quickly." As we watched the light fading from his eyes once more his lips moved and we caught the words faintly uttered with his dying breath, "Jesus, my Jesus," and the suffering, struggling frame was free.

. . . . . .

When I remember how my beautiful, talented grandmother fell beneath the rum curse—the demon alcohol so taking possession of her mind, body and soul that she sacrificed her own life, her husband's happiness, her home and her children upon its unholy altar, I am roused to every effort to banish the cause of all the misery.

When I think of her living children deprived of their birthright, the right of every child to be well-born,—when I remember the little lifeless frames laid in the old cemetery and know they were murdered, yes, murdered by the same rum fiend; when I think of my noble father, hating with intense hatred the demon that wrought such havoc in his childhood's home, and himself cursed with its consuming appetite; when I think of these things that have been burned into my memory, is it to be wondered at that I urge an aggressive warfare as well as a defensive one? Is it surprising that I glory in every department of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in its work of prevention, uplift and reform? I may well be "instant in season and out of season." I long and work and pray for that day when the people shall be awakened and put away this greatest of all evils from their midst that future generations may not be cursed.

IT is a part of my religion to look well after the cheerfulness of life, and let the dismals shift for themselves, believing with good Sir Thomas More that it is wise to be "merrie in God."—Louisa M. Alcott.

SWEETER than any grace of tint or form; nobler than the keen look of intellect, or the massive breadth of power; noblest when it is added on to these—is the beauty with which holiness of soul lights up the face. It makes the plainest features pleasant to look upon; it lights up the sunken eyes of sickness, smooths the worn brow of care, wreathes the drawn lips of suffering into smiles, and gives to age a glory which is like a foreshadowing of the very "crown of life." Some one has said that a woman cannot choose whether she shall be beautiful at twenty, but that it is her own fault if she is not beautiful by the time she is sixty. True—and for men as well as for women. As life goes on our faces become what we make them—the silent outgrowth of the character within.—Brooke Herford, D. D., in "Sermons of Courage and Cheer."

ANOTHER PAGE WRITTEN IN BLOOD.

BY HON. A. B. RICHMOND.

He that is drunken
Is outlawed by himself; all kind of ill
Did with his liquor slide into his veins.
—GEORGE HERBERT.

I have recently finished my eighty-eighth homicide case in our court of Oyer and Terminer. Four young men were riding together along a lonely road in our county. They had with them a bottle of diluted alcohol, of which in a spirit of friendship they drank freely. The poison had been purchased at a licensed drug store under the guise of a medical prescription. A slight admixture of some other drug had been added to it by the pharmacist, to cheat the law and avoid its penalties.

The young men had left the little village where they procured the murderous compound in apparently the most friendly feeling. One of them was a married man. A few miles from the place of the murder his young wife with her babe waited for the return of the affectionate husband and father.

It was a very cold night in March; at a late hour a storm of sleet, snow and wind had set in, and as it beat upon the window panes of the cottage the young mother hoped and prayed that her husband would soon return or that he had stopped at the village for the night. But at that very moment her husband, wounded and bleeding, was freezing to death by the roadside. In a drunken fight he had been knocked from his wagon, and left in a helpless condition by his drunken companions to die.

In the early morning he was discovered by a neighbor who was passing by, and taken to his home. He lived several days after the shock from amputation of his frozen lower limbs. He made a statement in articulis mortis which was read in evidence in the trial of his companions for "involuntary manslaughter." It was the old, old story: First, a drink taken in fellowship; another, and yet another. The licensed demon that lurks in every intoxicating cup gained the ascendency. A thoughtless word uttered in maudlin drunkenness aroused the anger of one of the young men; it was followed by a blow. When the trouble ended one of the number lay stunned and bleeding upon the frozen ground by the roadside. Partially sobered and alarmed at what had been done, the other three young men fled from the place, leaving their companion to freeze and die. Had they moved the unfortunate man to the nearest house, his wounds were not of so aggravated a character as to have produced death; but a consciousness of guilt, with the unreasoning influence of strong drink made cowards of them all.

They were arraigned for trial before the court that had granted the license to the druggist to sell alcohol under the guise and protection of a medical prescription. After a lengthy trial, which cost the county more than it received for a score of licenses, the young men were convicted with a recommendation to the mercy of the court. And very proper it is that the court should heed the recommendation, for it was accessory to the crime the defendants committed through its licensed influence. Yes, the sentence of the court should be tempered with mercy for it placed the primordial cause of the murder within easy reach of three young men, who without its influence would have been as guiltless of crime as the judge who pronounced the sentence of the law.

In the dying declarations of the deceased his last words were, "Whisky was at the bottom of it." Oh, oft told tale of crime and woe! How repeatedly have I heard it in our so-called "courts of justice" (?) and how often for the same reason have I heard "recommendations to mercy" by the jury, but never that the court should refuse to license the sale of the infernal spirit that prompts the commission of all the crimes defined in criminal code.

WHAT IS THE REMEDY FOR THE EVIL?

Experience of nearly half a century in our courts and the arena of politics has satisfied me that there is but one remedy for the great evil of licensed rum and its certain effects, that is to put the ballot into the hands of woman. Turn into the turgid pool of politics the pure stream of woman's influence and the cleansing of the nation from the curse of the liquor traffic would be as thorough as was that of the "Augean stables" by Hercules. The history of the world has shown that the courage of women in all contests for human rights and morality far exceeds that of men in their contests for human depravity and immunity for crime. It is too late in the light of the nineteenth century to attempt to deny the intellectual power of woman and her moral influence on the destinies of the people. Put the ballot in her hands and it will do more to destroy the social evil than a century of mission efforts without it. Let women vote and maudlin sentimentality will give way to a desire for the welfare of husbands, sons and fathers. The drinking saloon and license law will never survive one election, when their right to remain on our streets or in our statute books shall be submitted to the votes of the whole people.

Meadville, Pa.

"SIGN THE PLEDGE!"

BY FREDERICK SHERLOCK.

Sign the pledge! we now entreat you;
Come with us and take your stand,
Many friends with joy will greet you,
Give you welcome to our band!
Sign the pledge! our country calls you,
Bids you help us in the fight;
Ere the tempting cup enthralls you
Sign the pledge! oh, sign to-night!

Sign the pledge! The promise given
In the name of God Most High,
Will encourage some who've striven
From the dangerous path to fly!
Your example thus to others
Shall be as a guiding light;
For the sake of weaker brothers,
Sign the pledge! oh, sign to-night!

Sign the pledge! The children's voices
Rise to heaven—oh, heed their cry!
Many a fresh young heart rejoices,
Many a cheer supplants a sigh,
When fond parents help their dear ones
In the battle of the right,
For the sake of precious near ones,
Sign the pledge then! Sign to-night!

—From the Church Monthly.

GYPSIE LINNETT.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

Gypsie came to our house in the middle of winter, when the snow was piled up away above our fence. It was so cold that it drove the tears to one's eyes, and then froze them on one's cheeks.

I guess I was the only one who was glad to see the little fellow. All mother said was that there were too many mouths to fill already without another, and father muttered a curse, and told us to "keep that thing out of his sight." That made Tim cry,—he was only seven years old, and I was ten,—but I just made up my mind that poor little Gypsie should not be without one friend in the house. I wanted to take him up to the little loft where Tim and I slept, but it was too cold up there, and besides we did not know how to take care of him.

(Mother came and peeked over my shoulder right after the period there, and says people won't know but what I am talking about a baby. But Gypsie is a bird.)

Now I'll begin over again, only, first, I want you to know why I am writing this story. The editor of THE UNION SIGNAL wrote to Miss Jennis, the captain of our Loyal Temperance Legion, and asked her for something real true and interesting for the paper. Now what did Miss Jennis do but set the Legion to work. We are to each write something that we think will help someone, or interest them. I could think of nothing but about Gypsie Linnett, and I only hope Miss Jennis will think it good enough to send to THE UNION SIGNAL.

Now I'll start again.

There was a little girl who used to live next door to us. She was the only girl in the whole street. Her folks were poor, but they were nice people, and mother let me go over there real often to play. Reenie,—that was the little girl's name,—had a bird given to her for a birthday present. One day she and I were out playing, when a runaway team came flying round the corner. I tried to get Reenie and me out of the way, but we were knocked down. She was hurt so badly she never got well. I felt someway as if it was all my fault, but her mother said Reenie would have been killed at once instead of living four months after she was hurt, if I hadn't been there. She was the only playmate I ever had, and I could hardly bear it when she died.

Her mother wanted to give me something, and the only thing she had of Reenie's that she thought I would like was her bird; so she brought him over that cold day I started to tell you about, all cuddled up in her hand and the cage in her other hand.

We weren't real happy just about then, and we were ever and ever so poor. Mother had been sick all summer, then father lost his work, and learned to drink. By and by he forgot how to be kind, and sometimes we were afraid of him.

We hung Gypsie Linnett up in the kitchen window,—I mean we hung up his cage. His cage was the only really nice thing in the room, and he was the nicest looking person. (Oh, dear! a bird isn't a person. But you see we have all come to love him so, he seems like one of the family.)

I must tell you how Gyp looked. He wasn't just like the canaries you see in the windows for sale. He was yellow and brown, and some parts of him almost black. His head was dark, then came a pretty, yellow collar, and his wings were like his head. His tail was yellow, and his breast a real pale yellow. He had funny little ruffles on his shoulders, a row of tiny feathers curling up like a girl's bangs when they're combed right.

(Now I'm coming to the interesting part.)

A few minutes after Gypsie came into the house, father took the last good chair and the only looking-glass we had and went out to sell them for whisky. Mother threw herself face down on the bed. It was awful cold. Tim and I took Gyp's cage and set it down between us by the stove. There was a bit of cold potato and a scrap of stale bread, not enough for a meal, so we gave them to our bird. He seemed to think they were pretty nice. We wanted him to sing, but either it was too cold or he felt strange.

By and by we called mother to get dinner, but there wasn't anything to cook. Mother said she didn't want any and that we could go and beg if we wanted some. She wouldn't ever let us beg before. We found a part of a cabbage and a couple of frozen turnips near the market. Then we went to the wood-market and the men let us pick up a basket of chips.

We lived on the cabbage and turnips that day and the next. Father kept away and mother didn't want anything but water. Her cheeks were red but she didn't look right and I was scared. Tim was too little to understand. All he wanted, poor little chap, was a "drink of milk and a piece of bread and butter."

Gypsie was fed all right, because Reenie's mother gave us a whole lot of seed, and we could get water easy enough when it wasn't frozen. But Tim and I were so dreadful hungry we could hardly keep from crying.

Chicago, Ill.

(Concluded next week.)

FOR TIRED LITTLE FOLK.

"Auntie, please tell me something nice to do. I'm tired of Sunday. It's too late to go out, its too early for the lamp, and the wrong time for everything."

"Well, let me see," said auntie. "Can you tell me any one in the Bible whose name begins with A?"

"Yes; Adam."

"I'll tell you a B," said auntie. "Benjamin. Now a C."

"Cain."

"Right," said Aunt Sarah.

"Let me tell D," said Joe, hearing our talk. "Daniel."

And so we went through all the letters of the alphabet, and before we thought of it we were called to supper, the house was lighted, and we had a fine time. Try it.—Mayflower.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

371.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of fourteen letters.
My 1, 6, 5, 7, 3 is an article of furniture.
My 2, 10, 11 is a covering for the head.
My 9, 13, 14 is a cry made by a cat.
My 12, 4, 8 is a bricklayer's tray for mortar.
My whole was once a prominent temperance leader, who led many to sign the pledge. CECILLE WADE.

372.

CROSSWORD ENIGMA.

In one, not in two.
In me, not in you.
In wild, not in tame.
In you, not in same.
In pork, not in lean.
In dirt, not in clean.
In ask, not in tell.
My whole a city you know well.

OLIVER K. EVANS.

373.

BEHEADINGS AND CURTAILINGS.

1. Behead a girl's name and leave a plague.
Behead it again and leave something that is very cold.
2. Curtail a fowl and leave a pronoun.
3. Behead and curtail a part of the body and leave a part of the body.
4. Behead and curtail a part of the body and add a tail and leave something that lives in the water.
5. Behead and curtail a farm utensil and leave an interjection. ALICE THAYER.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED DECEMBER 13.

363. 1, D-rink. 2, E-vent. 3, C-heat. 4, E-very. 5, M-arch. 6, B-last. 7, E-late. 8, R-ally. DECEMBER.

364. 1, Genesis 23:9. 2, Esther. 3, Psalm 3:9.

365. Holmes.

Correct answers: Fanny H. Wingert; Isa Olla Boyle; Mary Sidwell.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Come up close as you can, for these are cold winter days, and our Corner, too, is a very crowded place just now.

How many of the school boys and girls (and I expect that includes nearly all of you) find geography a very hard study? Yes, boundaries are not easy to remember, the capitals of the various countries and other hard facts. For this reason, many scholars, and especially those whose memories are not strong, find geography "poky" and not easy to learn.

A certain boy of whom I have heard, however, thought differently. To him this study was play; he had the highest marks of any in his class, and his teacher was very proud of him. He could answer every question perfectly, and give in addition many facts of interest about people and countries. The other boys and girls all wondered how he did it, for he was not any smarter than the others.

The secret was that he had a wise mother. She had been a teacher, and had read a great many books of travel. When her boys were little she bought a nice globe, and when their father was away from home this globe was put in the center of the table at meal time, and all their talk was on a certain locality or country, which had been previously chosen.

When a book of travel was read the boys would repeat the story from memory, pointing out the places upon the globe, and thus geography was thoroughly and correctly learned. It was better far than any game, and you can see how this home practice helped to make both the boys the best scholars in their classes.

Of course, the mother did a good deal of study herself for this. As a teacher, she had been used to hearing her scholars' answers without referring to the atlas. Now, for the sake of her boys, she looked up every question beforehand in the gazetteer and geography.

Why not suggest this plan to father or mother and try it in your own homes, dear Cozy Cornerers? I'd like to see a globe on every temperance table. When you have learned enough of general geography you can follow on your globe the progress of the ribbon white "around the world."

Yours for solid information,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

Will you please accept me as one of your Cozy Cornerers? I am a temperance boy of ten. This is the first time I have written. Here is a puzzle I just composed to-night. OLIVER K. EVANS.

Yorkville, Ill.

You are one of us, Oliver. Your puzzle is a good crossword, and is among our Soft-Shelled Nuts this week. Many thanks.

---

I would like to join the Cozy Corner, and become one of the nieces. We used to have an L. T. L. here, but have not had one for a long time. I like the Cozy Corner very much. MADGE BAKER.

Summerside, P. E. I.

We are glad you like us, and we know we'll like you, for of course, you're a temperance girl, Madge.

---

I was interested in hearing my uncle tell about the W. C. T. U. Convention. My uncle and two of my aunts attended the Convention. I would have liked very much to have been there and seen Frances E. Willard and "Aunt Jane." MARY SIDWELL.

Flushing, O.

And Aunt Jane would have dearly loved to have seen you, little niece.

---

There are many saloons here, but I hope that they will soon be overcome. There are so few temperance people here that Satan got ahead of us this election.

Galveston, Tex. CLARA DETERING.

You will help to sound our war-cry, "Saloons Must Go," won't you, Clara?

---

We have a Sunday-school in the public schoolhouse, but no L. T. L. or W. C. T. U. out here, but may be will have some day. I hope so. Please may I join the Cozy Corner if there is room? GEORGIA I. T. E. FERRIS.

Highland Park, Wayne Co., Mich.

When you get a little bigger, Georgia, you can start an L. T. L. by yourself.

---

I like to read the Cozy Corner very much. I take a little temperance paper called the Midget. It is edited by a little girl twelve years old.

Newark, Del. FLORENCE P. BUTLER.

And are you a temperance girl, too?

THE UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President. MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, London, Eng.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. MARY T. LATHRAP, Jackson, Mich.
MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Chicago.
MME. LOUISE DEMOREST, New York City.
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MRS. E. B. INGALLS, St. Louis, Mo.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, The New Year. By W. Evans Darby, LL. D.... 2
Pierre and Jean, Twins. By Elizabeth Cumings..... 2
The English Cradle of the Temperance Reform. By Frances E. Willard..... 2
The Mother-Spirit. By Rev. W. Howatt Gardner..... 3
"When Doctors Disagree." I. By Kate C. Bushnell, M. D..... 3
Third Biennial Convention of the World's W. C. T. U. 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
LOCAL UNION..... 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS..... 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, The Past. By Mary Lowe Dickinson..... 6
The Secret of Her Devotion. By Edith Gray..... 6
Another Page Written in Blood. By Hon. A. B. Richmond..... 6
R CHILDREN:
Poem, "Sign the Pledge." By Frederick Sherlock..... 7
Gypsie Linnett. By Ada M. Melville..... 7
Soft-Shelled Nuts..... 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER..... 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
"Faithful are the Wounds of a Friend"..... 8
Report of the Government Commission on the Railway Strike..... 8
Give Us the Facts..... 9
Self-seekers in Politics..... 9
THE WATCH TOWER..... 9
State Reporters..... 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Wisconsin—Pennsylvania—Alabama—New Mexico—New Hampshire..... 10, 12
News in a Nutshell..... 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES..... 12
ORGANIZERS' CORNER:..... 13
TREASURER'S CORNER..... 13
National Temperance Hospital..... 13
TEMPLE RECEIPTS..... 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT..... 14
OUR LIBRARY TABLE..... 16
SIGNAL NOTES..... 16

Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.—Luke 12:13.

"FAITHFUL ARE THE WOUNDS OF A FRIEND."

Perhaps no foreigner has condensed into a sentence so much keen observation and good sense as the great labor leader, John Burns, in answer to the inevitable newspaper question, What do you think of this country? He says:

Schools splendid, libraries excellent, jails too good, roads bad, streets worse, drainage the same, art museums good for the age of the country, corporations exacting, tyrannical and extravagant; railway traveling palatial for the rich and better than any I have ever seen for the poor; cut off the headlines of your newspapers and you have a good carcass left, but still too much of a journalistic slaughter-house; municipal life considerably below that of any in Europe.

"Oh wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursel's as ithers see us!"

This petition is being answered by varied and competent witnesses in these later times. As a stranger recognizes the family likeness in its various members, so the eye of an intelligent observer from a distance brings out the typical traits of a nation in the composite word-photograph of John Burns. Many dislike him for his plainness of speech, but we must not forget that he is just as straightforward with his own people. When he talks to the slums in London he says, "Nobody can help you out while you continue to be sots." As for ourselves we know that municipal misrule is the price paid by the Republic for permitting the illiterate foreign vote to weigh as much as the best balanced vote of a Christian patriot who is "to the manor born."

The man who sawed off the bough between himself and the tree trunk was not more fatuous than the men of this country who persist in carrying out this plan. Women could by no means have made a madder muddle. If lunatics had done it, they would have acted according to their reputation. It is thought to be a great gain that in the new constitution of New York a man must have been in this country ninety days instead of ten before he votes. The "one man" power has much to justify it in the decency of European cities. "Slums" are an Anglo-Saxon product, and follow in the wake of so-called "representative government." But this is because the government is one of halfness rather than wholeness. The object lesson of the world's cities indicates to-day that the "one man" power is better calculated to keep those cities clean, and to lift the submerged tenth out of the gutter, than the government by half the population expressing their party idolatry and personal cupidity at the ballot-box; for the management of a city is but a larger form of housekeeping, and men working at it alone have introduced the same untidy, unsystematic, spendthrift ways that they do into their own habitation when they keep bachelor's hall. It is not good for man to be alone anywhere, and least of all when he sets up housekeeping individually or by municipal organization. When the women of New York city band together it is first of all to clean the streets, to improve the drainage, to send a breath of fresh air through the foul tenement districts; to scour out the filthy sweating dens. Their gospel is first of all a gospel of soapsuds, using the wholesome emblem in a sense symbolic as well as practical.

John Burns is right; the plague spots of the land are its municipal corporations as men have organized them. Whatever may be said of women voting generally, nothing but good has come of their participation in municipal affairs. But for the liquor system and the baser elements of the foreign vote, we have every confidence that the men of this country would call us to the rescue by enacting statutes in the legislatures this winter that should give to the housekeeping element of the nation full power to "housekeep" in its untidy towns and cities that they might become wholesome and sane, "clothed and in their right mind."

But the way to bring this about in the face of organized and brutal opposition is for all women with heads on their shoulders and hearts in their breasts to organize municipal leagues and set about doing with the left hand what they have not yet been empowered to do with the right. It is better to work that way to clean up the towns and cities in which they are obliged to live and rear their children than to let them go unclean.

The women who have endeared themselves to the people in their respective communities by friendly and helpful work should lead this movement, calling a meeting of women for the express purpose of organizing a municipal league, and all the good men will be glad and gracious and will help them all they can. Let the league begin by improving the condition of the sidewalks and streets, by cleaning off from the bill boards the odious placards and advertisements that extend from Portland to San Antonio and Boston to San Francisco; let them try to induce the good people in the churches to open the basements or at least one room in the basement where hot coffee and sandwiches are offered for sale at a less price than the saloon charges for the "refreshments" that it sets out as a decoy. Let the helpfulness of the life of Christ be manifest in the daily proceedings of those who "profess and call themselves Christians" not only in their individual but corporate capacity as a Woman's League, and we shall soon have a different atmosphere, a turning of the hearts of the less protected to the more protected classes, a sense of community and interdependence, without which no amount of prayer and psalm and sermon can possibly make the people believe that those who go to church really mean what they say.

Go on, John Burns, speak your full mind. The political papers of the old parties are doing their best to discount you with the reputable home folk of the nation. They cannot attack your character and so they will try to build up a wrong estimate of your words. This is the only way in which they can minimize the influence of our reformers in the present seething tide of public opinion. But they treat you no worse than they do their own people who dare to antagonize existing evils. It is but a few days since we saw a picture of the President of our National Woman's Christian Temperance Union hawked about in a metropolitan newspaper with this sentence under it: "Here is the woman who wants to reform the world by having alcohol and living pictures abolished, women to be on the police force and the ships christened with water instead of champagne."

It is not because he is an Englishman that the capitalistic and liquor press assails John Burns, but it is because he is a deadly foe of corporations and of saloons.

REPORT OF THE GOVERNMENT COMMISSION ON THE RAILWAY STRIKE.

National Convention news has necessarily crowded out much important current matter, yet the report of the commission appointed by the government to investigate the great railway strike of last summer is too full of interest to be ignored by us, even though its appearance is tardy.

The importance of this commission is apparent at a glance. To get at the facts is the first step necessary to a solution of the difficulties in the labor problem and the facts in even one case will give the clue to the causes which underlie all strikes. Such a commission affords the only chance of discovering these facts. Newspaper accounts and interviews will be necessarily limited to partial statements by the parties to the controversy and will inevitably be colored, even though unintentionally, with prejudice, and there can be no sifting of the evidence. But a commission appointed as this one was is likely to reach, in the main at least, the truth.

The chief important facts which it presents are these: First, in regard to the self-assumed prerogatives of the famous "General Managers' Association." This association had no corporate existence, could not have legally, yet the powers and functions which it had already arrogated to itself, or was evidently preparing to assume, were of the most far-reaching character. The association was composed of the high railway officials of all railroads centering or terminating in Chicago, twenty-four in number, and while its avowed purpose was simply the consideration of problems arising from the management of these roads, it really undertook very different tasks. At one time when the switchmen of these roads asked for higher pay, the discussion of the subject was carried on entirely by the general managers' association as one party, and its dictum was decisive in the matter. The association also prepared a full schedule of the prices paid the employés of each of the twenty-four roads, and each member was given a copy. No attempt at equalization of wages had yet been made, but the import of such an action is too clear to be disputed. One function of the association was to assist each of the twenty-four roads in any trouble it might have with its employés, and as one means to this end agencies were formed through which to secure men to take the strikers' places. Other actions of similar character established beyond a peradventure the fact that in case of any trouble between any of these roads and its employés, the laborers had to meet the combined power of the twenty-four roads. The report characterizes this unwarranted usurpation of power as "dangerous to the people and their liberties, as well as to employés and their rights."

In its just and discriminating discussion of the association the report makes the further significant comments: "Until the railroads set the example, a general union of railway employés was never attempted. . . . So long as railroads are thus permitted to combine to fix wages and for their joint protection, it would be rank injustice to deny the right of all labor upon railroads to unite for similar purposes. . . . The refusal of the general managers' association to recognize and deal with such a combination of labor as the American railway union seems arrogant and absurd."

In regard to the condition of affairs at Pullman, the following facts are given: The Pullman Company was organized in 1867, with a capital of $1,000,000; it has now, twenty-seven years later, a paid-up capital of $36,000,000; how much of this is new capital invested the report does not say. For over twenty years the company has paid two per cent quarterly dividends, and it has laid up a surplus of nearly $25,000,000. The claim of the Pullman Company that it kept its works running at an actual loss in order to keep its laborers employed takes an altogether different aspect in the light thrown upon it by this investigation. The commission says that the system at Pullman "enables the managers at all times to assert with great vigor its assumed right to fix wages and rents absolutely and to repress that sort of independence which leads to labor organizations and their attempts at mediation, arbitration, strikes, etc." On the other hand, the same conditions made the cessation of work more disastrous to the company than to most companies. "The Pullman Company," says the report, "could hardly shut down for seven and a half months at a cost and loss of less than one per cent upon its capital and surplus. To continue running was for its obvious and unfair advantage so long as it could divide losses equally with labor. . . . The commission thinks that the evidence shows that it (the company) sought to keep running mainly for its own benefit as a manufacturer, that its plant might not rust, that its competitors might not invade its territory, that it might keep its cars in repair, that it might be ready for resumption when business revived with a live plant and competent help, and that its revenue from its tenements might continue." Moreover, the commission indicates that this claim of the company to be doing work at a loss was that most deceptive and misleading of all statements, a half truth, for "the company based its entire contention as to every department upon the facts in reference to car-building. The purpose of the management was obviously to rest the whole matter upon cost, etc., in its most crippled department, excluding from consideration the facts as to wages in its repair department."

The report recommends some system of arbitration and conciliation as temporary expedients, and urges that whatever any one may think of labor organizations they are with us to stay, and asks, "Is it not wise to fully recognize them by law, to admit their necessity as labor guides and protectors, to conserve their usefulness, increase their responsibility, and to prevent their follies and aggressions by conferring upon them the privileges enjoyed by corporations, with like proper restrictions and regulations?"

These facts confirm statements already made in these columns; that there is on the part of capital a widely concerted effort to so combine its forces as to be able to dictate its own terms to laborers; that the success of this attempt would result in a slavery of the laboring classes as abject and hopeless as any which has ever existed in the history of the world; that it was the perception of the dangers which threatened them, even more than present suffering, which goaded the laborers to their desperate struggle of last summer.

The strike has been very generally termed a failure and in a certain sense it was. It did not reach the immediate ends aimed at, but in the face of the report of this commission, we do not regard the strike as having failed of its mission. We would not be misunderstood as approving of strikes. We fully agree with the commission that "strikes, boycotts and lockouts are barbarisms unfit for the intelligence of this age. . . . They are war—internecine war—and call for progress to a higher plane of education and intelligence in adjusting the relations of capital and labor." But if the contest of last summer with all of its disastrous results to the business interests of the nation shall have the effect of bringing the facts clearly before the thinking people of the nation, there is reason to hope that greater and more disastrous conflicts will be averted, and that we have already entered upon the road which shall lead to the final solution of our complicated financial and labor troubles.

"GIVE US THE FACTS."

A committee of fifty men—no women—representing different communities and occupations and presided over by Seth Low, LL. D., president Columbia College, New York city, has decided to take up the study of the liquor question in its personal aspect. There is a sub-committee on the physiological and pathological aspects of the drink problem which sends out the following questions:

1. Is the regular consumption of a moderate quantity of whisky, wine or beer conducive to the maintenance of health and working power in any class of men? If so, in what class, and what is the average quantity thus useful?

2. What is the quantity of whisky, wine or beer which the average man in good health may consume daily without special risk of injuring his health? Does this vary in connection with variations of age, of climate or of occupation, and what are those variations?

It seems to us it would be better to say "what, if any, is the quantity of whisky." The questions are all formulated in the affirmative, whereas to our thinking they should have been perfectly colorless. In a letter which has been prepared by the sub-committee to be circulated all through the country the questions are as follows:

1. Age. 2. Occupation. 3. Are you a total abstainer? 4. If so, have you always been so? 5. Do you drink spirits, wine, or beer occasionally as a social function, but not daily? 6. Do you drink spirits, wine or beer every day as a matter of habit? If so, please state the kind and the amount of liquor thus consumed. (If affirmative answers are given to either of the last two questions please state whether any particular form of alcoholic drink is in your case found to be specially desirable or undesirable.) 7. Are you aware of any chronic disturbance of your health; and if so what is its nature? 8. Give any facts derived from your personal experience which will throw light on the problems under investigation.

The sub-committee is presided over by Dr. John S. Billings, of the Army Medical Museum, Washington, D. C., and so far as we can form an opinion its "leanings" toward total abstinence are not so strong as to render its personal preference formidable to the liquor monopoly. On the larger committee there are many staunch teetotalers, and the treasurer of that committee is William E. Dodge, who certainly ought to be a teetotaler; whether he is or not we do not know. However this may be, we are disposed to accept the movement in good faith and wish it every success. It is a little odd, however, that at this stage in the proceedings women are as much ignored in the investigation as if they were not in the world, for they are neither on the committee nor is there any intimation of sending circulars to them. Probably it is recognized that as a class they are teetotalers.

It seems to us that it would have been a very reasonable scientific movement to have sent an inquiry to all those institutions where strong drink is ruled out—as in jails and penitentiaries—and to have ascertained whether the health of the inmates has suffered from the total disuse of alcoholics. Another point that occurs to us relates to the scientific fact that those who use intoxicating liquors are in direct proportion to the amount used rendered less normal in their judgment, so that what they report as the effect of intoxicants on their "minds, bodies and estates" might be altogether different from what would be reported by those who "take the consequences" in their homes and among their business associates.

In the famous Lexow committee Mr. Goff asked one of the captains of police to "tell us how many Christmas presents he received from liquor dealers."

"None—hold on there, Mr. Goff," said the captain.

"That is right, captain," said Mr. Goff, while a laugh went round the court-room, "just tell us about a few of those presents. We have the evidence right here, and there is no use denying it."

The witness said that he frequently received baskets of wine and fruit. Mr. Goff then asked:

"There were collections made for the presents for you, were there not?"

"Not to my knowledge; I didn't know of any such thing, Mr. Goff," answered the captain.

"Well, captain, what were you doing all those years that you had no knowledge of what was going on right around you?"

"Oh, I was busy."

It is refreshing to think that men like these are still to report concerning the violations of the excise law by the saloon-keeper and to settle for the home people, who have no voice whatever in settling the question of purity or impurity, living pictures, theatrical exhibitions, Sunday concerts, etc. In fact, we live in a country beautiful by reason of its justice and startling on account of its rapid progress toward decent standards of public life, public amusement and public conduct generally.

"SELF-SEEKERS" IN POLITICS.

In a recent editorial note on Joseph Cook's words, "no sex, no shirks, no simpletons in suffrage," The Christian Advocate of New York says: "It seems to us that Mr. Cook has omitted two very important s's; 'no self-seekers' and 'no swindlers.'"

Now will any one tell us why Mr. Cook should have mentioned these two classes in connection with woman's suffrage? There is no possible reason unless women are more generally self-seekers and swindlers than are men. Is this what The Advocate means to insinuate? It is quite possible. Fortunately, however, the facts are overwhelmingly against this chivalric (?) position. Women as a rule have not sought the ballot for their own selfish advancement, but from the most disinterested motives. Does any one question this statement?

At the woman's congress in Chicago a year ago, Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton gave her testimony as to women seeking the ballot. She said: "It is a surprising fact that we have never been able to enlist women in any considerable numbers to labor for their own emancipation. They will work with the greatest enthusiasm for the church, for missions, for temperance, for anything and everything but their own emancipation." Mrs. Stanton ought to be authority on the subject and the opposers of woman's suffrage cannot deny her statement with very good grace since it has, until very recently, been their stock-in-trade argument that women did not want the ballot.

But if it has been proved that women could not be induced to demand the ballot for their own interests, they are surely acquitted of the charge of being generally self-seekers. However, something within the last twenty years has been making suffragists of the women with great rapidity. It is impossible to explain away satisfactorily to any candid mind the significance of the New York petitions for and against woman's suffrage. Six hundred and fifty thousand women asking for the suffrage, fifteen thousand asking that it be withheld, mean to the ordinary, unsophisticated mind, that among intelligent women about forty to one want the ballot. Besides this, the Advocate has long ago characterized the Woman's Christian Temperance Union as "little more than a suffrage association."

It is difficult to decide whether the ignorance which this statement evinces of a great world movement should be denominated as lamentable or laughable. When the great paper which claims to be the oldest paper of American Methodism has time to spare for the consideration of such a small matter as an organization which Joseph Cook declares to be "the most powerful and the most useful ever formed by women," of which Bishop Vincent says, "As to the work of the organization as a whole, it is beyond praise," and which the Ohio liquor dealers, in convention assembled, honored as being their "only enemy," we will gladly furnish said paper some enlightening literature.

It has been well said that three women, his mother, sister and the daughter of Pharaoh, gave Moses to Egypt, and the babe hid in the bulrushes had more power than the rushing river that threatened to bear him away, though it is the most beneficent of all the rivers in the world.

***

A young fellow who is rising above the level to which intoxicants early brought him, and seems likely to join the ranks of useful men ere long, makes a good point in a recent letter to a friend: "I am getting strength, and trying to get where, in a year or two, they will not look on me as a person who is not likely to stay sober, but rather as one whom they can have confidence in. A drunkard has uphill work of it in business. The fact is, no business wants him unless it is the saloon, and the saloon-keeper can make so many to order that I guess he is not particular in catering to a confirmed toper; there is not so much profit in that kind of a man as in a young fellow just starting."

***

It is stated that a notice is posted up in a library at Oxford University, England, forbidding women and dogs to enter the sacred enclosure.

***

Professor William James, of Harvard, in his text-book on psychology, says: "Could the young but realize how soon they will become mere walking bundles of habits, they would give more heed to their conduct while in the plastic state. Every smallest stroke of virtue or of vice leaves its scar. The drunken Rip Van Winkle in Jefferson's play, excuses himself for every fresh dereliction by saying, 'I won't count this time.' Well, he may not count it, and a kind heaven may not count it, but it is being counted none the less. Down among his nerve cells and fibres the molecules are counting it, registering and storing it up, to be used against him when the next temptation comes. Nothing we ever do is, in strict, scientific literalness, wiped out. Of course, this has its good side as well as its bad one. As we become permanent drunkards by so many separate drinks, so we become saints in the moral, and authorities and experts in the practical and scientific spheres by so many separate acts and hours of work."

***

The trouble with many women is they live in a teacup instead of a world. Their unselfishness is a kind of expanded self-love for those to whom they sacrifice, those who are their own nearest kindred and life-long associates. The most of them have by no means learned that the possession of a true mother-heart involves the giving of sympathy and help to those who need it most; their misery being their mortgage on the affections and help of the real mother-hearted woman. The reason that women take such narrow views is that their mental horizon is narrow; their minds are not like a great landscape stretching away illimitably with every variety of scene, with heights, with mountains and plains, forest and prairie, country and town, and over all the great unfathomable moonlight heavens. Instead, they see the four walls of their home and do not look beyond its roof.

***

There are a thousand students in the Chicago University this year, of whom three hundred and eighteen are girls, and of these ninety-two are college graduates.

***

A young man who was run over by the cars and taken to a hospital was told that both legs must be amputated, and when he asked what was likely to be the result the surgeons were obliged to admit that his recovery was improbable and if he had anything in particular that he wished to say this was the time to say it. He was lying on the operating table, and it was just before he was put under the influence of chloroform. The scene was one of infinite pathos. The surgeons stood around him, most of them men who had embraced a materialistic view of human destiny. The young man's face was contracted under the pain he suffered; his manly form was mutilated beyond remedy. Nerving himself for the announcement, he said in a deep, steady voice: "My mother has begged me to declare myself for Christ; I have never done so. I regret it beyond what I can express, and I wish here and now to declare myself a soldier of the cross and to express my faith in Christ and what He has wrought for us, lifting up my heart to Him that He may prepare me for that which is preparing for me." It is needless to say that among all those men of science and the world there was not one whose eyes did not fill with tears at the young man's loyalty to the greatest principles and powers of which we know,—God and his mother. ON DUTY.

STATE REPORTERS.

Alabama—Mrs. Julia H. McBryde, 308 St. Louis St., Mobile.
Arizona—Mrs. L. C. Hughes, Tucson.
Arkansas—Mrs. H. P. Edmonson, Little Rock.
California—Mrs. Dorcas J. Spencer, 826 Waller St., San Francisco.
California (S.)—Miss G. T. Stickney, Temperance Temple, Los Angeles.
Carolina (N.)—Mrs. S. V. Tomlinson, Greensboro.
Carolina (S.)—
Colorado—Mrs. Dinnie McDoyle Hayes, Denver.
Connecticut—Miss M. Belle Smith, Rockfall.
Dakota (North)—Mrs. D. W. Shinn, Casselton.
Dakota (South)—Mrs. Chestina S. Thorp, Britton.
Delaware—Mrs. Mary L. Cox, Middletown.
District of Columbia—Mrs. Clinton Smith, 720 19th street, N. W. Washington.
Florida—Sallie J. Glenn, Tampa.
Georgia—Mrs. Isabella Webb Parks, South Atlanta.
Idaho—Mrs. Mary E. McGee, Nampa.
Illinois—Mrs. G. H. Read, 412 E. North street, Bloomington.
Indiana—Mrs. Cornelia Meadows, 114 Line St., Evansville.
Indian Territory—Mrs. Sarah Ford Crosby, Muscogee.
Iowa—Mrs. Clara P. White, Volga.
Kansas—Mrs. S. S. Weatherby, Le Roy.
Kentucky—Miss Mary Rogers, 128 E. Maxwell street, Lexington.
Louisiana—Mrs. S. A. Knapp, Lake Charles.
Maine—Miss Mary French, Auburn.
Maryland—Mrs. Margaret A. Lake, 2231 St. Paul St., Baltimore.
Massachusetts—Dr. Louise Purington, 23 Allston St., Dorchester.
Michigan—Mrs. C. H. Johnson, Flint.
Minnesota—Mrs. Amy A. Green, 2208 Oakland avenue, Minneapolis
Mississippi—Mrs. Annie E. Harper, Fayette.
Missouri—Miss Lilian Wood, Maryville.
Montana—Maggie E. Templeton, Helena.
Nebraska—Mrs. Dora V. Wheelock, Beatrice.
Nevada—Mrs. Lucy M. Vandeventer, Reno.
New Hampshire—Mrs. Mary E. Partridge, Claremont.
New Jersey—Mrs. N. L. Caminade, Trenton.
New Mexico—Mrs. Eva May Tucker, East Las Vegas.
New York—Mrs. Frances Graham, Lockport.
Ohio—Mrs. Antoinette Clevenger, Wilmington.
Oklahoma—Mrs. Sue Brown, Oklahoma City.
Oregon—Mrs. L. A. Nash, Corvallis.
Pennsylvania—Miss Adda Burch, Smethport.
Rhode Island—Miss Miriam Earle, Valley Falls.
Tennessee—Mrs. T. P. Holman, Fayetteville.
Texas—Mrs. Cornelia Keith Carter, West End, San Antonio.
Utah—Miss E. E. Shepard, 826 E. 7th East St., So. Salt Lake City.
Vermont—Mrs. E. S. Farr, Bristol.
Virginia—Mrs. Howard M. Hoge, Lincoln.
Virginia (W.)—Miss Kate Ebert, Fairmont.
Washington (East)—
Washington (West)—Mrs. Etta Jones, Kent.
Wisconsin—Miss Lois Russell, Eau Claire.
Wyoming—Mrs. F. A. Jones, Green River.

Canadian Reporter—Mrs. Margaret G. Ure, 772 Palace St., Montreal.

WISCONSIN.

A DIGEST OF CONVENTIONS.

During the last few months our white-ribboners have been busy with convention work. From every part of the state come cheering reports of helpful conventions, district and county.

We have suffered this year in Wisconsin from terrible forest fires; we keenly feel the "hard times"; we are suffering some confusion and loss through changing our districts to correspond with the congressional districts; there are other hindrances to our work heretofore unknown to Wisconsin workers; but despite all these obstacles, which account for a rather smaller attendance than is usual at our conventions, yet the most encouraging enthusiasm and loyalty are reported, wise and broad plans of work were laid, and are now being prosecuted with self-sacrificing zeal and devotion.

In several cases part of the time of the convention was devoted to a school of methods, which will doubtless result in good to our cause. More and more our women desire to be skilled workers, and they find the school of methods a wonderful help to that end.

There seemed to be a disposition on part of most of the conventions to take up fewer departments of work, and to concentrate the energies on them, thus making a thorough success of the few, rather than accomplishing a little in many lines. Our women are learning the value of reporting their conventions and work. In one convention a reporter was appointed for each organized county and one for all the unorganized counties, their duty being to send a report of the convention, written in a style to be interesting to outsiders, to every newspaper in their respective territories. Thus it was hoped, by means of all the newspapers in the district, to send to all the homes in that district a message of cheer, telling what "the temperance women" have done, and are planning to do.

A feature of several of the conventions was a "young people's evening." Sometimes it was a Demorest contest, sometimes a miscellaneous temperance program, but always one result was that some young people were uplifted and helped by this close contact with earnest workers, and the blessedness of helping so appealed to their hearts that more than one young life was reverently dedicated to our cause.

In one convention the consecration service led by the district president assumed the form of each woman's consecrating herself to some special line of our work for one month. Who can estimate the good that will grow out of the faithful performance of such vows? Here are some of them, "To devote all my spare time for a month to working for subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL." "The same for The Motor, our state paper." "I will work with all loving tact and patience and faithfulness to secure the introduction of proper physiologies in our schools." "I will work to interest people in and raise money for our W. C. T. U. home for unfortunate girls." "I can seldom go away from home, but I will promise that every person who comes into my home during the month shall be spoken to about the temperance work, and if possible enlisted in it." "I will wear my white ribbon constantly, on my work dress so that my children and the grocery boy and meat man shall know I don't wear it for show." "I will devote one month to helping make our L. T. L. more of a success."

Much interest is reported in the Demorest contest work, one union having held nine silver and two gold medal contests.

It is interesting to note the unanimity of sentiment in the resolutions of the various conventions. Almost without exception, though in differing phraseology, they pledge our support to that political party which in its platform and by its ballots declares for the prohibition of the liquor traffic and the enfranchisement of women. The equal suffrage resolutions grow more and more numerous and earnest and meaningful; and the intelligent white-ribboner who is not also an equal suffragist is now a rarity.

At several of our conventions her comrades had great pleasure in again greeting our former state president, Mrs. Amy Kellogg Morse, whose old time ready helpfulness and unselfish, optimistic spirit were hailed with joy by our workers. We are more than glad to welcome back to Wisconsin Mrs. Morse and husband who is also a devoted and tireless Christian worker. The Congregational church at Tomah is to be congratulated on having secured Mr. Morse as its pastor.

We are all grateful for the convalescence of our beloved state treasurer, Mrs. Hetta S. Hastings, of Green Bay, who was long shut in with typhoid fever.

The hearts of our white-ribboners go out in sympathy and prayer to our state president, Mrs. V. H. Campbell, who has recently been bereaved by the death of her father. May the God of all comfort be consciously and helpfully near her in these sad days when she tries to comfort her mother, and in the days when she comes back to begin again the constant journeyings, the wide correspondence, the heavy responsibilities of the office wherein she works so unremittingly for God and Home and Native Land.

LOIS RUSSELL,
State Reporter, Eau Claire.

PENNSYLVANIA PENCILINGS.

The rapid flight of time warns your reporter that she must be "up and doing" if she would begin the new year aright; so with this as an incentive we hasten to make the most of the material now on hand.

The great conventions are over and we have time to plan our work for the coming year. The one special work of our state this year is to be ORGANIZATION, and to aid in the work two good women have been appointed, Mrs. Augusta Goodale Fairchild, of Frutcheys, Monroe county, and Mrs. U. K. Brown, Danville, Montour county.

May their efforts be abundantly blessed and they have the hearty coöperation of all the white-ribboners.

One new name has been added to the lecture bureau this year, that of Miss Lee Anna Starr, of Bellevue, Pa.

The following items of interest from Lehigh county are sent us. The superintendent of L. T. L. work distributed, during the past year, over twenty thousand pages of literature in the temperance school, besides this four thousand pages were distributed by the superintendent.

The press superintendent reports that the Allentown city papers have given nearly four and one-half columns of space for temperance items.

The Girls' Parlor and Reading Room is doing a grand work for the young women of Allentown. This room is under the auspices of the white-ribboners and is the only one of its kind in the city. It has a fine circulating library, together with magazines and papers, and a fine piano is one of its attractions. This county held its sixth convention in September, and has taken up nine departments of work.

Bucks county held its semi-annual convention at Quakertown, with a representation of twenty unions having a membership of 605 members, besides 79 honoraries, 42 Y's and 20 Loyal Temperance Legions; 39 new members were added this past year.

This county shows a remarkable record for good work done as the following items will testify: eighty of the public schools use the indorsed text books, leaving fifty-three yet to be won over. They have contributed to the Temple fund, $194, $17.30 to Temperance Hospital, $25 for convention expenses, and have $132 balance in the county treasury.

Rev. C. H. Mead and the Silver Lake Quartette were the evening attractions at the convention. The Wakefield union has enjoyed the services of Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Whitney, who conducted a series of gospel temperance meetings. Emma D. Eyere, county superintendent of temperance instruction, gave a delightful talk to the Wakefield L. T. L. Yardly L. T. L., under the efficient management of Mrs. Sarah B. Knowles and ten teachers, meets weekly, —one meeting in each month is devoted to Band of Mercy work. This Legion sent one dollar to L. T. L. room in the National Temperance Hospital.

Lawrence county holds a school of methods on the first Friday of each month at the home of the president, 118 East North street, New Castle. Any white-ribboner who should chance to be in the city or could make it convenient to come, is cordially invited to meet with the ladies. The first one this year was conducted by Mrs. Butler, superintendent of temperance instruction, and who hopes to secure a local superintendent for every township in the county as well as to visit personally many of the schools. She urged unions to put Mrs. Hunt's Monthly Advices into every school. Croton union held a pastor social at the home of their president, Mrs. Lide Rhoads. Several delegates from the state convention were present and gave their reports. This union was the banner union for increase of membership. Its president is a recent convert to the white ribbon sisterhood.

Slippery Rock union held a parlor meeting at the home of Mrs. M. Hunt, at which several fine recitations were given, and Mrs. Alford spoke on the duty of the W. C. T. U. toward county fairs.

Lawrence county has elected Mrs. Maggie Speir Gibson to act as special reporter to help the state reporter for THE UNION SIGNAL, an example to other unions to "go and do likewise."

Philadelphia Y's gave a reception to Miss A. E. Thomas at First Y Headquarters on her return from National Convention, to which she was a delegate. A very pleasant social time was enjoyed. Speeches were made by Volney B. Cushing, of Maine, and Dr. Harriet B. French. Miss Thomas presented an excellent report. First Y also held a successful Donation Day on December 10. Fancy articles were sold, and donations came in to gladden the hearts of the workers. First Y leads in good, practical work. Their motto is "United for Victory." A pretty souvenir bearing this inscription was given to every Y present Y night at state convention.

Darby union has erected and presented to the borough a free drinking fountain; the trough is a solid block of granite bearing the following inscription cut in the stone, and the letters gilded so as to be very plain:

"No drink is so good as pure water,
'Tis the one that never makes sad."

On the end is inscribed, "Presented to the Borough by the Darby Women's Christian Temperance Union, September 28, 1894." The L. T. L. and school children took part in the dedicatory exercises.

Clearfield county sends out a very systematic and excellent plan of work, and we wish that space were granted us to specify a few of the many good points. Bradford union held a successful mothers' meeting in December.

Grove City union, Mercer county, is arranging for a franchise contest, to be held in the near future. Millbrook union has been bereaved by the death of their treasurer, Miss Maria Smith. Among the number who have gone to join the great majority in the heavenly kingdom from our state, we name the following: Mrs. Mary McKee, McKees Rocks; Annie Moore, Drumore; Mrs. Asher Enslin, Gravity, and Mr. Stearns, husband of our state superintendent of mercy.

Our state superintendent of L. T. L. being as yet unable to resume her work (though improving), has selected Mrs. Elma Preston as her assistant.

Pennsylvania was represented by thirty-four delegates at the National Convention.

Will not every county do as Lawrence county has done; appoint some one in every county who shall be expected to report to the state reporter? But don't wait for this. If no other way, will the corresponding secretary of each union send postal card reports? Don't wait till the news is stale. During the past year I have been under special obligations to the press reporters of Bucks, Chester, Fayette, and Luzerne counties, for good reports sent PROMPTLY. I hope the year to come may be richly crowned with God's blessing on our work, and wish you all a merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

ADDA BURCH,
State Reporter, Smethport.

ALABAMA.

THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION of the W. C. T. U. is already to be marked as one of our most stirring ones; most probably it will be pronounced in time the most fruitful one yet held.

Miss Belle Kearney, always inspiring, always eloquent, was one of the speakers from a distance. Mrs. Tomlinson, of North Carolina, and Miss Ellen Groenendyke, missionary from South Africa, were also appreciated guests.

The election of officers was especially happy. Mrs. Martha L. Spencer was unanimously elected president. She enters now on the fourth year of her leadership. Every year since the union of the state has been in her hands it has increased its interest, widened its work and deepened its spirituality. Mrs. Spencer, though a Northern woman by birth, is the incarnation of Southern sunshine; she has a great, warm, sunny heart that enables her to see the best of everything and everybody, to smooth over all rough places, to press strongly on to the highest goal. Her sunny face and her bright smile inspire all with trust in her justice, amiability and unfaltering courage. She has that invincible softness that Miss Willard so earnestly recommends. No better officer could be chosen to lead the union.

Mrs. Sallie M. Eskew was elected recording secretary. Since the formation of the union she has, with the exception of one year, ably filled that office. That one year her resignation was accepted with deep regret and only on condition that she resume the office the next year.

Mrs. Annie R. Searcy was reëlected treasurer; Mrs. Searcy is the right woman in the right place.

Miss Julia Tutwiler was reappointed superintendent of prison and jail work. She has long held that position in her native state, Alabama. She is the founder of the convict schools at the camps in the state, and holds from the governor of the state, office of superintendent of convict schools. No one gives to her department more self-sacrificing work than Miss Tutwiler.

The new appointments are of women equally earnest and zealous as are these, the tried and true. Of all the faithful W. C. T. U. workers in our state not one receives, or has ever received, a salary or any money recompense for labor. All is the free and eagerly offered gift of consecrated women.

For the first time a fund is being raised by special call for state workers; an appropriate call and a much needed fund, for there should be in each state one or more women who give their whole time to the work; this cannot be

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N.Y.

done by any one without some sort of "living wage." A new and important appointment is to be made by the executive committee: A woman, able and consecrated to the work, is to be sent by the union to the state capitol to remain all during the session of the legislature in the interest of temperance legislation. Delegates appointed to the next National are Mrs. Spencer and Miss Tutwiler. MARTHA YOUNG,
Greensborough.

NEW MEXICO.

GOOD WORK OF THE CATSKILL UNION.

November 14, 1893, Mrs. M. J. Borden, territorial president of New Mexico, organized a Woman's Christian Temperance Union of seven members at Catskill. At the second meeting twelve members were enrolled and growth in strength has been the watchword since that time.

At their third meeting they discussed the question of building a church as their year's work. Committees were appointed to direct and assist in raising the necessary amount of funds. Entertainments were given, mill owners waited upon for donations of lumber, Mr. Pels interviewed concerning lots on which to build, and citizens allowed to give as much money as they wished.

The profits from entertainments were vastly more than the women expected in so small a place as Catskill. Men responded generously to this call for aid from the W. C. T. U. and seem to have left nothing undone which would help to accomplish the task undertaken. Some donated their services, thus lessening the cost of the building very materially. Step at a time the carpenter's, plasterer's and painter's work was completed. The W. C. T. U. ladies themselves, with some volunteer assistance, painted the inside woodwork.

The church is comfortably furnished with chairs, stoves, lights—indeed, it has all that is required to make it a very neat, pleasant house in which to worship.

On Easter Sunday, 1894, Deaconess Martin, then of Raton, laid the corner-stone. September 9, Mrs. Borden, assisted by Rev. J. M. Whitlock, dedicated the church to the Master and His cause. (It is interesting to note that the men of Catskill thought a woman should dedicate the church, as the women were the instruments in having it built.)

So far, ministers from neighboring Presbyterian, Methodist and Christian churches have held services the first, second and third Sundays in the month. A Sunday-school flourishes and the good men and women of Catskill are rejoiced to have a knowledge of the Saviour taught each Lord's day.

This prodigy of a union, just one year old, impresses one with the belief that even a small number of earnest women can do much in the name of Him who said, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

October 15, Mrs. Borden preached at Catskill; in the afternoon addressed the L. T. L. (at which meeting many mothers were present) and in the evening lectured on her favorite theme—temperance. Her listeners were deeply interested and at the close of her address five ladies and five gentlemen signed the pledge and donned the white ribbon.

This union understands how to secure new members—its president solicits names and always gets them.

There is no union at Cerrillos, but Mrs. N. A. Jackson is the leader of an L. T. L., and is doing all in her power to make it interesting and profitable to the little ones. She has them meet every two weeks to study temperance literature. Temperance leaflets are distributed where they will do most good. In various ways she is trying to teach the children that the only safe, useful, beautiful life is that of the total abstainer, and 'tis the Little drops of whisky,

Little grains of opium,
Makes the mighty army
That yearly goes to ruin.

EVA MAY TUCKER,
Territorial Reporter, E. Las Vegas.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

With the coming of December's frost and snow the needs of the department of work among lumbermen comes into greater prominence. This department is under the efficient charge of Mrs. W. A. Loyne, of Jefferson, N. H., and in her third annual report, which lies before me, I find these items of interest. To reach the men and their families in these northern forests it has been found needful to have a camp missionary. In the past year this faithful worker, Mr. A. H. Drury, has traveled 5,042 miles, many of them on foot, visiting 263 camps and mill boarding houses, distributing 350 large bundles of reading matter, 425 Bibles and Testaments, and 400 comfort bags, besides conducting 115 services. In addition to this the superintendent, Mrs. Loyne, has distributed a large amount of reading matter and library cases among such of the lumbermen as she could reach. This is a grand field for Christian work, as many of these people have no religious privileges at all, until brought to them in this way.

The W. C. T. U. of New Hampshire is much indebted to friends in sister states for their kind interest and liberal donations to this cause, for only by earnest individual thought and labor can this valuable work go on. Many of the lumbermen and their families are leading Christian lives, being first awakened to their needs by this work of the W. C. T. U.

STATE JOTTINGS.

Hampton Falls union, comprising only eighteen members, reports excellent work the past year, parlor meetings, Demorest medal contests and good growth and interest in the L. T. L.

Meriden union has added sixty-six names to its pledge book the past year, having aroused interest by parlor meetings and lectures, sending literature to the lumbermen and aiding their local poor.

The union at Derry, saddened and disheartened by the death of their beloved president, Mrs. Haskins, are bravely rousing themselves to carry on the work she so faithfully aided with her counsels; they have sent ten dollars to Mercy Home as a memorial of Mrs. Haskins.

The Newport union reports sixteen dollars and a barrel of literature sent the lumbermen.

Every saloon is at present closed in the city of Nashua, by the efforts of the Law and Order League.

The reports of the annual county conventions of Strafford and Merrimack counties are full of encouragement and interest; lunches and hot coffee served at state fairs, money and supplies sent to Mercy Home, literature and funds sent Mrs. Loyne for work among lumbermen, medal contests and L. T. L. entertainments; surely no work is more valuable for the cause than that which interests and educates our children rightly.

New Hampshire women rejoice with all their hearts over the grand and successful National Convention, and from the many wise and earnest plans there counseled we shall gain fresh impetus for our work the coming year.

M. ELIZABETH PARTRIDGE,
State Reporter, Claremont.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

EXPECTING COMPANY.

The World's W. C. T. U. expects to hold a series of meetings in Washington about the middle of February next, when the Polyglot Petition will be presented to our government. Mrs. La Fetra who was for many years our District president, and Mrs. Griffith, our present District president, have been appointed to prepare for it. They think it is none too early to begin. The time set is just previous to the two weeks' meeting of the national council of women, when many distinguished visitors will be here and a multiplicity of good things may be expected. Those ladies were requested by Miss Willard to confer together and prepare for the coming of the World's officials. They selected a few helpers from the executive board of the District union and have gone to work in earnest. The local unions will assist in a reception at the home of the District president. They have the refusal of the largest hall in the city for the evening of February 15, the time selected for the presentation speeches to be made.

The W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia has the advantage of state unions in one thing. Its territory is so compact that the members can be brought together quickly and inexpensively. Our annual meeting is usually held in some large church in the central part of Washington. The noon luncheon is like a basket picnic, the entertaining union furnishing tea and coffee. The delegates pass the night in their own homes. The various lines of street cars make accessible distant points, such as Anacostia and Brookland; while Washington and Georgetown are virtually one city. In all these places there are auxiliary unions.

The general officers and presidents of local unions, together with the superintendents of departments, form an "executive board" which meets at least once a month to supervise the work, plan and discuss methods and review the departments. Mrs. Griffith, the president of the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia, can call the board together very quickly when necessities arise. We are blessed above many state unions in being able to hold "quarterly meetings," where reports from secretary, treasurer and all departments are submitted. A large amount of interesting matter is always coming up at these meetings, which helps keep the rank and file interested. The quarterly meeting, like the annual meeting, is a delegated body, but members of local unions have all the privileges except to vote.

Mrs. M. B. Platt, our able superintendent of literature and president of North Capitol auxiliary, has instituted a new departure which resulted in something very fine. She invited the District W. C. T. U. to hold in North Capitol M. E. church a meeting similar to a quarterly meeting but not delegated, so every one could have full privileges. Her program was interesting and well carried out. The whole day was spent pleasantly and profitably in discussing questions vital to our work without any of the fatigue or routine of business.

A law prevails in the District of Columbia that no policeman on duty or wearing a uniform can drink intoxicants on pain of being discharged. The unusual spectacle is presented of policemen seeking membership in temperance societies. Many of those aspiring to positions on the police force seek the influence of Mrs. Griffith and other temperance women to recommend them to the commissioners. This influence is not given without a personal knowledge of the character of the applicant.

MRS. CLINTON SMITH,
District Reporter.

720 19th St., N. W,

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

ALBANY COUNTY

met at Delmar, thirteen unions being represented. Plans were matured for establishing a coffee house in Albany. Excellent papers were read, strong resolutions adopted and a most profitable session in every respect was held. Many good points were brought out by the free discussions on the several lines of department work. This county has six hundred paying members and has taken up twenty-seven departments.

COLUMBIA COUNTY

held its tenth annual at Chatham Centre. Mrs. Mary J. Weaver was present and gave one of her beautiful Bible readings and an evening address. Reports, papers and discussions filled the time most profitably, a paper on "Non-alcoholics in Medicine" being especially fine and instructive. Many helpful suggestions were contained in the annual address of the president.

CLINTON COUNTY

met at West Chazy, and judging from the report sent me, this was a most profitable convention. The devotional exercises were especially helpful. Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, of Elmira, gave a forceful and eloquent address at the evening meeting, and at the close several new names were added to the membership roll. Interesting papers were read. Mrs. Frances D. Hall has been president of this county ever since its organization, eight years ago, and Mrs. O. K. Smith, vice-president. Mrs. Bullock conducted a parliamentary drill the morning of the second day. This county has a beautiful new silk banner which will henceforth appear at all conventions.

SULLIVAN COUNTY

although long silent has not been inactive. Her eighth annual convention was held at Roscoe, nine unions being represented and all the county officers being present. Reports showed that the women there are working systematically. Five new departments were adopted. L. T. L. work has been made prominent during the past year, and a report of the state L. T. L. meeting at Cortland was given by one of the boys and was especially interesting, and the future hope lies in these boys and girls. My correspondent says, "even for a cider-tippling, rum-steeped county like Sullivan, there is hope in the thought that hundreds of her boys and girls are being taught in temperance schools, that cider contains a deadly poison."

Many amusing incidents were related in the franchise report, and at the close a strong suffrage resolution was adopted, expressing faith in the ultimate triumph of the cause. The president's address was exceedingly helpful, and the parliamentary drill, Bible reading and lecture by Mrs. Boole added greatly to the interest of the convention.

DUTCHESS COUNTY

convention was held at Madalin, in the De Peyster Memorial church. A steady downpour of rain made the attendance smaller than usual, but the lack of numbers was made up in enthusiasm, and a most profitable meeting held. The regular business was carried forward with promptness and the welcome and response were both well received. Mrs. Nelson, the president, gave a brief summary of the work done through the county and spoke tender words in memory of those who have laid down the work here forever. She referred to the new workers coming on to take their places, of

NEW EDITION

(Revised and Enlarged.)

RICHARDSON'S NEW METHOD FOR THE PIANOFORTE

"The most notable publication in its field of this generation."

This famous classic in Piano Instruction embodies the very latest and most progressive ideas in Teaching. For half a century it has held the first rank among books of its class.

500,000 Copies of the old edition have been sold.

The new enlarged edition, now issued, has undergone a critical revision by the eminent authority, Mr. W. S. B. MATTHEWS, and contains the following additions to the old book:—

New Amusements.
New Annotations.
Dr. Mason's Celebrated System of Touch and Technics.

EVERY TEACHER SHOULD OWN A COPY.

Price (American or Foreign Fingering), by mail, postpaid } $3.

LYON & HEALY,
Chicago, Ill.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, BOSTON.

Give Silver.

For Christmas presents there is nothing more suitable. Articles in silver plate are especially adapted for gifts, as the quality is so well known. In design and finish, this celebrated plate equals the best solid silver. And it wears.

Meriden Britannia Co's

On spoons, forks, etc., our trade mark is "1847 Rogers Bros."

If you cannot procure these goods of your dealer, write us and we will give necessary information.
Meriden Britannia Co., Meriden, Conn.
New York, Chicago, San Francisco.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE WAISTS

Are made in A VARIETY OF SHAPES—to fit SHORT, MEDIUM, and LONG Waists.

HOME STUDY. Success in Business Life is within the reach of all who take a thorough Business College course at Home, by Mail. It will pay to investigate. Cat. free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 77 College Bldg., Buffalo, N.Y.

MILLER'S HOTEL. New York City, 39 West 26th Street. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

SALESMEN WANTED to sell our goods by samples to the wholesale and retail trade, sell on sight to every business man or firm; liberal salary, money advanced for advertising and expenses. Permanent position. Address with stamp, KING MFG. CO., A 55 Chicago, Ill.

A $1 Magazine for 30c.

Send 30 cents and names of 6 people who might subscribe, and we will send you THE ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE a full year. The price of the magazine is $1 a year. A sample copy for 6 cents. Address

ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE 2819 OLIVE ST. LOUIS, MO.

FITS CURED

(From U. S. Journal of Medicine.)

Prof. W. H. Peeke, who makes a specialty of Epilepsy, has without doubt treated and cured more cases than any living Physician; his success is astonishing. We have heard of cases of 20 years' standing cured by him. He publishes a valuable work on this disease which he sends with a large bottle of his absolute cure, free to any sufferer who may send their P. O. and Express address. We advise anyone wishing a cure to address, Prof. W. H. PEEKE, F. D., 4 Cedar St., New York.

new unions organized. Reports were heard, a question box conducted by Mrs. Massoneau, and resolutions adopted. The resolutions committee referred very feelingly to Mrs. E. V. Seaman, who for years has served faithfully as corresponding secretary, but who has been obliged to resign owing to ill health. The evening address was delivered by Rev. Fields Hermance, of Poughkeepsie, who drove through the rain a distance of fifty-two miles to keep his engagement. All honor to our brother!

JEFFERSON COUNTY

held its convention at Adams Centre, and every union but one sent delegates and visitors. A fine program was carried out to the letter. The address of the first evening was given by the county president, Rev. Ella Gurney, and a gold medal contest occupied the second evening. Each contestant was presented with a book, and Miss Viola Davis was the winner of the medal. Ten departments of work were taken up for the coming year, the finances are in good condition and the women enthusiastic and persistent. There are twelve unions in the county, and each one is alive to the importance of our work. Interesting papers were read during the session. At the election of officers everything remained the same with the exception of president, Mrs. Gurney not wishing to continue. Mrs. T. B. Knowles, of Watertown, was elected. The next convention goes to La Fargeville.

KINGS COUNTY

held an exceedingly interesting quarterly meeting in Calvary Baptist church, Brooklyn, which opened with a Bible reading by Mrs. E. Patterson, of Rescue union. Mrs. Braman read a paper on the work of the evangelistic department, which was followed by a discussion on the need of immediate action in the department of purity in literature and art. An interesting hour was given to the work of the Y's, under the direction of the county organizer. The program consisted of singing, an essay on King Alcohol and a lecture on the relation of cookery to temperance. Excellent addresses by Rev. A. Cameron and Rev. G. T. Berry closed the meeting.

OSWEGO COUNTY

convention was held at Phœnix and was a wonderfully bright and interesting meeting. After the welcome and response, two minute reports of local unions were heard. Fulton has the largest union, having 118 members. Oswego comes next with seventy-five. The work has been pushed untiringly by the county president, Mrs. S. M. Barker, four new unions having been organized in the county.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole gave a parliamentary drill, and in the evening an address on "Nehemiah and the walls of Jerusalem." Mrs. Mary D. Ferguson, of Syracuse, was present and gave an interesting talk on her department of soldiers and sailors; Miss Vinnie R. Davis, of Orwell, followed with a report on franchise, and she reminded her hearers that in New York state last fall twenty thousand women did actually vote for school commissioner. Excellent resolutions were adopted and the convention adjourned feeling that this had been one of the best of conventions. And this ends the list of conventions.

MRS. FRANCES GRAHAM,
State Reporter, Lockport.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

ALL white-ribboners will be glad to learn that Mother Stewart is recovering from her severe illness, and will join sending her, as does THE UNION SIGNAL, best wishes for the coming year.

THE Reading, Mich., union recently had the pleasure of listening to two very interesting lectures, by Mrs. E. N. Law, state organizer of Michigan. Mrs. Law held the close attention of the audience during both lectures, and closed each with a fine recitation which was appreciated.

SPECIAL prayer was offered for Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap at the prayer-meeting held in the Y. M. C. A. building, Cleveland, on December 23, to mark the twenty-first anniversary of Crusade beginning in Ohio, that she might be sustained to the last and have a joyful entrance into the upper kingdom.

AN unusual proportion of honorary members graces the McComb, Miss., union which has a membership two-thirds honoraries who number 120. They are planning for permanent headquarters. At a recent meeting the president gave a stirring talk addressed principally to the honorary membership.

ONE of our state presidents sends the following plucky declaration: "We are moving slowly, as we have butted our heads against the stone wall of the M. E. Church South this year by indorsing the Prohibition party and woman's suffrage. Just think of it! But we are holding our own with clear Saxon grit and it will be better farther on."

COUGHS AND HOARSENESS. The irritation that induces coughing is immediately relieved by using "Brown's Bronchial Troches."

THE North Nebraska Teachers' Association has three women upon its list of state officers; Mrs. Charlotte M. White, of Wayne, being the president, Mrs. F. Wallis, the secretary, and Mrs. Emily Hornberger, of Norfolk, treasurer. This is the first instance in which a woman has been elected to a state presidency of the Teachers' Association in the West, and probably in the United States.

A LOYAL woman from Virginia writes: "I am the only wearer of the white ribbon in our village. I belong to the Staunton W. C. T. U. which Miss Willard organized fourteen years ago. I pay my dues, wear the white ribbon everywhere I go, subscribe for and read THE UNION SIGNAL and indorse it in almost everything, and wish we had a union here, but there is opposition on account of our progressive views."

DR. AND MRS. WHITNEY contemplate a temperance trip to Jamaica this winter. It is a happy thing that they can make this journey because an urgent request has come from the vice-president on that island, Miss Constantia Maddix, of Kingston, that a worker be sent. Mrs. Whitney will be remembered as Mrs. Woodbury, whose efficient work did so much to place the Demorest medal contest on a firm basis.

REV. DR. AND MRS. BOOLE are well ranked among the able exponents of the temperance reform. There is not in this country another pair equally endowed and devoted who are equally zealous for the white ribbon cause. Last year in the city of Utica Mrs. Boole spoke under the auspices of a union of all the Christian Endeavor societies of the city. Mrs. Boole is young and strong and may be expected to lead the van of much good work in the future, as she has done in the past.

THE attention of Michigan workers is called to the petitions which are being prepared for signatures to be presented to the legislature at its next session asking for a submission to popular vote of a state constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors except for sacramental, medicinal and scientific purposes. All who can aid in this work by circulating petitions are requested to send name and address to J. Benson Hill, M. D., Box 455 Ovid, Clinton county, Mich.

WHITE-RIBBONERS are again warned against the machinations of a Mrs. A. D. Bellah who goes about misrepresenting herself as an accredited W. C. T. U. worker. She thus gains the confidence of workers which she uses to further her dishonest ends. Recently she introduced herself to a Southern leader as a "confidential friend of the late Mrs. Woodbridge" and numerous state presidents. In this way she secured a letter of introduction and other favors, among them the cashing of a check for $125. The check was worthless, and the innocent white-ribboner is the loser in money but richer in experience. Fortunately there are very few such developments in the W. C. T. U. ranks, and when they do occur, THE UNION SIGNAL stands ready to warn its constituency against such wolves in sheep's clothing.

AN earnest correspondent gives the following practical hint: "It is possible to secure a strong ally in the railroads of our land by urging managers to issue orders that no employé can sign applications for license. Let all license states try this promptly. In one town of twelve thousand the order to that effect from one railroad cut off forty-seven names that had figured on that black list for years. Every little helps; we must seize our opportunities great and small. There was never a time in the history of the work when there was so much need of urgent, uncompromising, consecrated, incessant work as now, because our enemy feels the quicksand under his feet giving, as our work exposes it, and he is bringing the skill of all evil to bear against us."

ST. JOHN'S, Newfoundland, is the scene of a work of faith, the Puritan Mission of Love, conducted by G. W. Singer. They are desirous of building a temperance temple and Puritan homes of love for little orphans. Mr. Singer writes: "Already in about twenty villages I have small lending libraries where temperance and other books are on the shelves. Last year four hundred villages received tracts from myself, and over seventy Eskimo settlements were served the same way. I have just got ready parcels for the prisons and the house for the poor and the hospitals. The lonely men in lighthouses are to have a Christmas parcel each and so are the police in every Newfoundland district. I need tracts and books against opium, tobacco, impurity and gambling as well as against the thrice cursed drink cursed by Father, Son and blessed Spirit, aye, and even by the millions of those who touch, taste and handle it. May God quickly banish the drink from this colony—the oldest and most neglected of Britain's possessions."

A W. C. T. U. mass-meeting, composed of four unions, Bromley, St. Anthony, Bevins Grove and Bangor, met at Bangor, Ia., December 15. Owing to the inclemency of the weather many were absent, so subjects for discussion were substituted. The question, "Why am I a white-ribboner?" was responded to by quite an experience meeting. The question, "Why are you not white-ribboners?" was responded to freely. One brother's reason was that he is not a woman. Paper and pencil were passed, and this brother and six other individuals joined the union and are wearing the white ribbon.

EXTRACT from a letter: "I am away down in the mountains of —— speaking and organizing W. C. T. unions. The people in this part of the state are so very poor that even when they are deeply interested and desire to join our society they cannot find the five or ten cents a month with which to pay dues, but the home I am in is an inspiration to me. The people are very poor as everybody here is, but they joined the W. C. T. U. in another state seventeen years ago, and through its influence the power of heredity, of home influence and religion found lodgment in their minds and hearts. They told me that they began to economize in order to purchase books, and one thing after another was given up, beginning with coffee in order that they might subscribe for certain magazines they felt their children needed, and so on until their lives, shaped and moulded by these ideas, have been entirely changed, and a more intelligent and appreciative family it would be hard to find."

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The National Minutes are printed, and the National officers are ready to receive orders for the same. They are also in an extremely self-congratulatory frame of mind, owing to the fact that the somewhat ponderous volume is before the public in a little less than a month from the close of Convention. The fact that the reports were printed before the Convention was a help in certain respects, but as each plate had to be refolioed it was not so great an one as would seem at first thought. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens has been the moving spirit in their publication, but great credit is also due the W. T. P. A. printing force, and especially its superintendent of printing, Mr. D. C. Christophel, both for the quality of the work and the speed with which it has been executed.

Will you kindly note in the aforesaid Minutes what is said under the head of General Officers' meeting, concerning the action requesting speakers who desire to make engagements sending their names and terms to Mrs. M. B. Horning, the Temple? Mrs. Horning has had experience for some time in making her mother's,—Mrs. Barker—engagements, and for the past year has had charge of Mrs. Hoffman's dates. She will attend to the matter on the basis of a percentage and it is hoped that a permanent lecture bureau may be the outgrowth. This is of course purely optional with the speaker and does not in the least affect the fact that the corresponding secretary is expected to arrange, so far as possible, for the routes of the National organizers and lecturers. That arrangement, however, must cover states only, and any individual lecturer preferring to have her dates and route arranged by Mrs. Horning is, of course, at perfect liberty to do so on the basis above mentioned.

There will be of necessity some minor errors in the Minutes. Several corrections of addresses did not arrive until too late for insertion, and among the National evangelists should be inserted the names of Elizabeth S. Tobey, Boston, and Elizabeth P. Gordon, Auburndale, Mass. These corrections will be made in the Annual Leaflet, and if there are any other errors which may be corrected there will you kindly call my attention to them, as the preparation of that leaflet will be my next immediate work.

Even as I write the car-wheels are revolving to the magic rhythm of "Home, Sweet Home," and I am being whirled through Connecticut—Boston-ward—with Long Island Sound, bathed in the glory of the sunset, lying at my left, and the indefinable, but nevertheless unmistakable New England atmosphere all about me. Necessary business carries me home for a few days, and it is a gladness to my soul that business can be so combined with pleasure as to give me that most holy of holidays—a home Christmas. Miss Willard's presence in Boston will make the time spent there, I trust, of especial value to the work as well as of personal interest, and the early New Year will find me again at my desk. Meantime, our dear Mrs. Barker, Mrs. Horning and Miss Grow are holding the fort.

God grant to each member of our brave army a blessed New Year.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Don't neglect your children's teeth. Care for them constantly. The best dentrifice is

RUBIFOAM FOR THE TEETH

It is peerless for children. Its delicious flavor wins them. It keeps the teeth white and strengthens the gums.

25 cents. All Druggists.
Sample vial free. Address
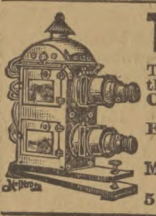
E. W. HOYT & Co., Lowell, Mass.

COLDS PREVENTED

Three quarters of the colds, and all that colds stand for, need not be, if folks would take care and Calisaya La Rilla — not a mysterious compound — 3000 New York physicians prescribe it, and use it, too — for children, old folks, everybody — For malaria you must take it. Sold everywhere. Send your address on a postal card for Book of Sense.

FREE TO EVERYBODY.
Charles Allen Reed, 9 Cliff St., New York

DEAFNESS
and head noises relieved by using WILSON'S COMMON SENSE EAR DRUMS.
Entirely new, scientific invention; different from all other devices; the only safe, simple, comfortable, and invisible ear drum in the world. Hundreds are being benefitted where medical skill has failed. No string or wire attachment to irritate the ear. Write for pamphlet.
THE DRUM IN POSITION
WILSON EAR DRUM CO.
132 Trust Bldg. LOUISVILLE, KY.



The Quickest Way
To the heart and mind is through the EYE—Use a STEREOPTICON to Illustrate your Lecture.
Long list of Slides on TEMPERANCE and kindred subjects.
Write for Catalogue.
McINTOSH BATTERY and OPTICAL COMP'Y.
521 to 531 Wabash-av. Chicago.

High Arm
MY HUSBAND Cant see how you do it.
$60 Kenwood Machine for - $23.00
$50 Arlington Machine for - $19.50
Standard Singers - $8.00, $11.00
$15.00, and 27 other styles. All attachments FREE. We pay freight ship anywhere on 30 days free trial, in any home without asking one cent in advance. Buy from factory. Save agents large profits. Over 100,000 in use. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write at once. Address (in full), CASH BUYERS' UNION,
Warranted Ten Years
158-164 West Van Buren St., B 30, Chicago, Ill.

THE ELEVENTH EDITION.
WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS
Has just been issued. This song book is certainly the most popular collection of Temperance Songs
ever published. The melodies are unusually pleasing and the words are right to the point. It covers a wide range of themes, expressing all the varied emotions from the comic to the pathetic. Get it, and your young people will bless you, and your old people will praise you.
Price 35c.
Order direct of the author,
FLORA H. CASSEL, Hastings, Neb.

PATENTS
Caveats, Trade-marks, Design Patents, Copyrights,
And all Patent business conducted for MODERATE FEES.
Information and advice given to inventors without charge. Address
PRESS CLAIMS CO.,
JOHN WEDDERBURN,
Managing Attorney,
P. O. Box 385. WASHINGTON, D. C.
This Company is managed by a combination of the largest and most influential newspapers in the United States, for the express purpose of protecting their subscribers against unscrupulous and incompetent Patent Agents, and each paper printing this advertisement vouches for the responsibility and high standing of the Press Claims Company.

Treasurer's Corner.

Christmas, with all its joys, is over. All our hearts have been stirred anew by the loving tokens given and received, and I trust we have all felt our hearts uplifted and warmed by the Christ-love that must ever be the inspiration of all true Christmas festivities. After all our friends have been remembered and greeted in the love and memory of Him who hath brought life and immortality to light, and hath made life worth the living, may we not look for a deeper interest in our work, a more faithful performance of its duties and more unselfish sacrifice in behalf of our beloved W. C. T. U.? Some of our good friends, even in the midst of Christmas giving to home friends, have not forgotten the National but have sent their mites that we trust will be so greatly multiplied after the holidays that we shall this year be able to carry on the legitimate expenses of the work without the necessity of paying interest on borrowed money, and if a few thousand of our white-ribboners will follow the example of these good sisters we shall be able to do this.

Self-denial tokens have come from Mattie A. Richards, Natick, Mass., 30 cents. Mrs. M. E. Pease, Radcliffe, Ia., $4 (30 ten cent fund). Mrs. Webb, Plymouth, Conn., $2.50. Port Gibson W. C. T. U., (N. Y.) $1. Miss Eldred, Barneyville, $1. Mrs. Fox, Plainville, Conn, $1.

While a few thoughtful ones have sent in their loving contributions to our birthday fund, don't think that these good friends are one hundred years old because they have found it more convenient to send a good many more pennies than a careful counting of their years would warrant. Margaret T. W. Merrill sends $1 with kindly words of appreciation from Portland, Me. Mrs. Dora Terry, Glasgow, Ky., sends 50 cents, while Emily R. Gorham, Chester, Conn., sends $1.06 as birthday remembrance from herself and a friend. Send for the birthday envelopes and give them out to your friends. Many will be glad to help our work by a small gift if their attention is called to this simple plan.

Just a word about the Minutes. We are now sending them out. They contain 528 pages, giving full account of the Convention doings—all the reports of secretary, treasurer, superintendents, with greetings from many notables as well as Miss Willard's address in full. It is a volume unusually full of excellent matter, and every temperance worker, whether W. C. T. U. or not, should have a copy. They are sent for the nominal price of fifteen cents per copy, which very little more than pays the postage. Send in your orders at once if you wish a copy, or copies. A few more of Miss Willard's addresses at ten cents are left, but will very soon be gone.

Wisconsin follows Ohio in remitting dues, and gets to the front in sending one hundred dollars the first month after Convention. That is a good record. Mrs. Campbell, president, called upon us the day after Christmas en route to her home from Kansas, where she was called from Cleveland by the illness of her father. He died soon after her arrival. She will have the loving sympathy of all white-ribboners in this sorrow.

Happy New Year to every one.

HELEN M. BARKER.

PROHIBITION PARTY'S NATIONAL PLATFORM.

Adopted at Cincinnati, O., June 30, 1892.

The Prohibition Party, in National Convention assembled, acknowledging Almighty God as the source of all true government and His law as the standard to which human enactments must conform to secure the blessings of peace and prosperity, presents the following declaration of principles:

1. The liquor traffic is a foe to civilization, the arch enemy of popular government and a public nuisance. It is the citadel of the forces that corrupt politics, promote poverty and crime, degrade the Nation's home life, thwart the will of the people and deliver our country into the hands of rapacious class interests. All laws that, under the guise of regulation, legalize and protect this traffic, or make the government share in its ill-gotten gains, are "vicious in principle and powerless as a remedy." We declare anew for the entire suppression of the manufacture, sale, importation, exportation and transportation of alcoholic liquors as a beverage by federal and state legislation. The full powers of government should be exerted to secure this result. No party that fails to recognize the dominant nature of this issue in American politics deserves the support of the people.

2. No citizen should be denied the right to vote on account of sex, and equal labor should receive equal wages without regard to sex.

3. The money of the country should consist of gold, silver and paper, and be issued by the general government only, and in sufficient quantity to meet the demands of business and give full opportunity for the employment of labor. To this end an increase in the volume of money is demanded. No individual or corporation should be allowed to make any profit through its issue. It should be made a legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private. Its volume should be fixed at a definite sum per capita, and made to increase with our increase in population.

4. Tariff should be levied only as a defense against foreign governments which levy tariff upon, or bar out our products from their markets, revenue being incidental. The residue of means necessary to an economical administration of the government should be raised by levying the burden on what the people possess instead of upon what they consume.

5. Railroad, telegraph and other public corporations should be controlled by the government in the interest of the people, and no higher charges allowed than necessary to give fair interest on the capital actually invested.

6. Foreign immigration has become a burden upon industry, one of the factors in depressing wages and causing discontent; therefore, our immigration laws should be revised and strictly enforced. The time of residence for naturalization should be extended, and no naturalized person should be allowed to vote until one year after he becomes a citizen.

7. Non-resident aliens should not be allowed to acquire land in this country, and we favor the limitation of individual and corporate ownership of land. All unearned grants of lands to railroad companies or other corporations should be reclaimed.

8. Years of inaction and treachery on the part of the Republican and Democratic parties have resulted in the present reign of mob law, and we demand that every citizen be protected in the right of trial by constitutional tribunals.

9. All men should be protected by law in their right to one day of rest in seven.

10. Arbitration is the wisest and most economical and humane method of settling national differences.

11. Speculations in margins, the cornering of grain, money and products, and the formation of pools, trusts and combinations for the arbitrary advancement of prices should be suppressed.

12. We pledge that the Prohibition party, if elected to power, will ever grant just pensions to disabled veterans of the Union army and navy, their widows and orphans.

13. We stand unequivocally for the American public school and opposed to any appropriation of public moneys for sectarian schools. We declare that only by united support of such common schools, taught in the English language, can we hope to become and remain a homogeneous and harmonious people.

14 We arraign the Republican and Democratic parties as false to the standards reared by their founders; as faithless to the principles of the illustrious leaders of the past to whom they do homage with the lips; as recreant to the higher law, which is as inflexible in political affairs as in personal life; and as no longer embodying the aspirations of the American people, or inviting the confidence of enlightened, progressive patriotism. Their protest against the admission of "moral issues" into politics is a confession of their own moral degeneracy. The declaration of an eminent authority that municipal misrule is "the one conspicuous failure of American politics," follows as a natural consequence of such degeneracy, and is true alike of cities under Republican and Democratic control. Each accuses the other of extravagance in Congressional appropriations, and both are alike guilty. Each protests, when out of power, against infraction of the civil service laws, and each when in power violates those laws in letter and in spirit. Each professes fealty to the interests of the toiling masses, but both covertly truckle to the money power in their administration of public affairs. Even the tariff issue, as represented in the Democratic Mills bill and the Republican McKinley bill, is no longer treated by them as an issue between great and divergent principles of government, but is a mere catering to different sectional and class interests. The attempt in many states to wrest the Australian ballot system from its true purpose, and so to deform it as to render it extremely difficult for new parties to exercise the right of suffrage, is an outrage upon popular government. The competition of both old parties for the vote of the slums, and their assiduous courting of the liquor power and subserviency to the money power, have resulted in placing those powers in the position of practical arbiters of the destinies of the nation. We renew our protest against these perilous tendencies, and invite all citizens to join us in the upbuilding of a party that has shown, in five national campaigns, that it prefers temporary defeat to an abandonment of the claims of justice, sobriety, personal rights and the protection of American homes.

15. Recognizing and declaring that prohibition of the liquor traffic has become the dominant issue in national politics, we invite to full party fellowship all those who, on this one dominant issue, are with us agreed, in the full belief that this party can and will remove sectional differences, promote national unity, and insure the best welfare of our entire land.

---

POPULIST PARTY'S NATIONAL PLATFORM, ADOPTED AT OMAHA NEBRASKA, JULY 4, 1892.

Assembled upon the one hundred and sixteenth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, the People's Party of America, in their first national convention, invoking upon their action the blessing of Almighty God, puts forth, in the name and on behalf of the people of this country, the following preamble and declaration of principles:

The conditions which surround us best justify our co-operation; we meet in the midst of a nation brought to the verge of moral, political and material ruin. Corruption dominates the ballot-box, the legislatures and congress, and touches even the ermine of the bench. The people are demoralized; most of the states have been compelled to isolate the voters at the polling places to prevent universal intimidation or bribery. The newspapers are largely subsidized or muzzled, public opinion silenced, business prostrated, our homes covered with mortgages, labor impoverished, and the land concentrating in the hands of the capitalists.

The urban workmen are denied the right of organization for self-protection; imported pauperized labor beats down their wages; a hireling standing army, unrecognized by our laws, is established to shoot them down, and they are rapidly degenerating into European conditions. The fruits of the toil of millions are boldly stolen to build up colossal fortunes for a few, unprecedented in the history of mankind; and the possessors of these, in turn, despise the republic and endanger liberty. From the same prolific womb of governmental injustice we breed the two great classes—tramps and millionaires.

The national power to create money is appropriated to enrich bondholders. A vast public debt payable in legal-tender currency has been funded into gold-bearing bonds, thereby adding millions to the burdens of the people.

Silver, which has been accepted as coin since the dawn of history, has been demonetized to add to the purchasing power of gold by decreasing the value of all forms of property as well as human labor, and the supply of currency is purposely abridged to fatten usurers, bankrupt enterprise and enslave industry. A vast conspiracy against mankind has been organized on two continents, and it is rapidly taking possession of the world. If not met and overthrown at once it forebodes terrible social convulsions, the destruction of civilization, or the establishment of an absolute despotism. We have witnessed for more than a quarter of a century the struggles of the two great political parties for power and plunder, while grievous wrongs have been inflicted upon a suffering people. We charge that the controlling influences dominating both these parties have permitted the existing dreadful conditions to develop without serious effort to prevent or restrain them.

Neither do they now promise any substantial reform. They have agreed together to ignore, in the coming campaign every issue but one. They propose to drown the outcries of a plundered people with the uproar of a sham battle over the tariff, so that capitalists, corporations, national banks, rings, trusts, watered stock, the demonetization of silver, and the oppressions of the usurers may all be lost sight of. They propose to sacrifice our homes, lives and children on the altar of mammon; to destroy the multitude in order to secure corruption funds from the millionaires.

Assembled on the anniversary of the birthday of the nation, and filled with the spirit of the grand generation who established their independence, we seek to restore the government of the republic to the hands of "the plain people," with whose class it originated. We assert our purposes to be identical with the purposes of the national Constitution, to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty for ourselves and our posterity.

We declare that this republic can only endure as a free government while built upon the love of the whole people for each other and for the nation; that it cannot be pinned together by bayonets; that the civil war is over, and that every passion and resentment which grew out of it must die with it, and that we must be in fact as we are in name one united brotherhood of free men.

Our country finds itself confronted by conditions for which there is no precedent in the history of the world. Our annual agricultural productions amount to billions of dollars in value, which must, within a few weeks or months, be exchanged for billions of dollars worth of commodities consumed in their production; the existing currency supply is wholly inadequate to make this exchange; the results are falling prices, the formation of combines and rings, and the impoverishment of the producing class. We pledge ourselves that, if given power, we will labor to correct these evils by wise and reasonable legislation in accordance with the terms of our platform.

We believe that the powers of government—in other words, of the people—should be expanded (as in the case of the postal service) as rapidly and as far as the good sense of an intelligent people and the teachings of experience shall justify, to the end that oppression, injustice and poverty shall eventually cease in the land.

While our sympathies, as a party of reform, are naturally on the side of every proposition which will tend to make men intelligent, virtuous and temperate, we, nevertheless, regard these questions—important as they are—as secondary to the great issues now pressing for solution, and upon which not only our individual prosperity, but the very existence of free institutions depend; and we ask all men to help us to determine whether we are to have a republic to administer, before we differ as to the conditions upon which it is to be administered; believing that the forces of reform this day organized will never cease to move forward until every wrong is remedied, and equal rights and equal privileges securely established for all the men and women of this country.

We declare, therefore,

That the union of the labor forces of the United States, this day consummated, shall be permanent and perpetual. May its spirit enter into all hearts for the salvation of the republic and the uplifting of mankind!

Wealth belongs to him who creates it, and every dollar taken from industry without an equivalent is robbery. "If any one will not work neither shall they eat." The interests of rural and civic labor are the same; their enemies are identical.

1. We believe that the time has come when the railroad corporations will either own the people or the people must own the railroads, and should the government enter upon the work of owning and managing any or all railroads, we should favor an amendment to the constitution by which all persons engaged in the government service shall be placed under a civil service regulation of the most rigid character, so as to prevent the increase of the power of the national administration by the use of such additional government employes.

2. We demand a national currency, safe, sound and flexible, issued by the general government only, a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, and that without the use of banking corporations; a just, equitable and efficient means of distribution direct to the people, at a tax not to exceed two per cent per annum, be provided as set forth in the sub-treasury plan of the Farmers' Alliance, or some better system; also by payments in discharge of its obligations for public improvements.

3. We demand the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the present legal ratio of 16 to 1.

4. We demand that the amount of circulating medium be speedily increased to not less than $50 per capita.

5. We demand a graduated income tax.

6. We believe that the money of the country should be kept as much as possible in the hands of the people, and hence we demand that all state and national revenues shall be limited to the necessary expenses of the government, economically and honestly administered.

7. We demand that postal savings banks be established by the government for the safe deposit of the earnings of the people, and to facilitate exchange.

8. Transportation being a means of exchange

Quaker OATS

A million a day eat it.
Why? None "just as good as."

TRADE MARK Sold only in 2 lb. Packages. TRADE MARK

The Natural Body Brace

Cures Female Weakness, Restores Health and Vigor.

After wearing your Natural Body Brace for nine months, the most extreme and painful female weakness has vanished.
MRS. JESSIE FISHER.
Spruce Creek, Pa.

I am pleased beyond expression with the Brace. I would not part with it for any money.
MARY F. ADAM,
Neosho Falls, Kan.

I have been afflicted with falling of the womb for 23 years, and have never had anything to help me like the Natural Body Brace has. I could not stand up long enough to wash dishes before wearing it, and now (after wearing it 3 months) I am cooking for a large family. I also help wash and do any kind of work.
MRS. LUCINDA FIELD,
Oscar, Texas.

Money Refunded if Brace is Not Satisfactory.
Send for Full Information.
Natural Body Brace Co.,
SALINA, KANSAS.
Howard C. Rash, Manager.

All About ROSES

How to get the famous D. & C. Roses—the best and sweetest—on their own roots. How to grow and care for them and a thousand other flowers. All this and many valuable flower-growing secrets are contained in our new Guide to Rose Culture. To every flower lover who so requests, we will send free, this book and a sample copy of our floral magazine "SUCCESS WITH FLOWERS."
The Dingee & Conard Co.,
West Grove, Pa.

The No. 6 Remington Typewriter

A DEVELOPMENT, NOT AN EXPERIMENT.

Many Notable Improvements successfully incorporated into this new model, retaining the essential features of simplicity and durability for which the Remington is famous.

WYCKOFF, SEAMANS & BENEDICT,
175 Monroe St., CHICAGO.

SHOEMAKER'S BOOK ON POULTRY

And Family Almanac for 1895. 80 pages, 70 engravings; the finest work of its kind ever published. Gives recipes for making egg food; condition powders; remedies for all diseases of fowls; plans and diagrams for building poultry houses, tells you how to raise chickens profitably, gives full description with illustrations of 45 leading varieties of pure bred fowls. It is an encyclopedia of chicken information, worth many times its cost to anyone interested in poultry. You positively cannot afford to be without it. Sent postpaid on receipt of price 15cts. Address C. C. SHOEMAKER, Box 47, Freeport, Ills., U.S.A.

Some Married Women

yes, many of them have secured Tokology, and quickly and gladly send word how greatly they have been benefited by the information contained.

Dear Dr. Stockham; Words cannot express how much I owe to Tokology, which is truly a book for every woman.
MRS. G. A. SAWIN.

Tokology is my best friend, and has been for years.
MRS. C. E. LAMBERT,

My Dear Mrs. Stockham: Tokology has been one of God's richest blessings to me.
MRS. J. P. EVE.

have a Tokology baby 2½ years old. Tokology certainly did more for me than I had dared to hope.
MRS. R. H. BENNETT.

ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO., 277 Madison-st., Chicago

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO...

We still have on hand a limited supply of these beautiful art portfolios. If you have not seen them, by all means send for Part I, and we are sure you will want Parts II and III. A dainty and appropriate souvenir for white-ribboners to present to their friends at any season of the year,

...SEND FOR A COPY...

PART I

CONTAINS PICTURES OF

Frances E. Willard,
Lady Henry Somerset,
Mother Thompson,
Madam Willard,
Mother Wallace,
Mary Clement Leavitt,
Margaret Bright Lucas,
Mother Stewart,
Hannah Whitall Smith,
Neal Dow,
Clinton B. Fisk,
John B. Gough,
Mary Allen West.

PART II

Matilda B. Carse,
Mary A. Woodbridge,
Helen M. Barker,
L. M. N. Stevens,
Clara C. Hoffman,
Letitia Youmans,
Josephine E. Butler,
George W. Bain,
Ella F. M. Williams,
Kate C. Bushnell,
Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew,
Jessie A. Ackermann,
Alice R. Palmer and General John Bidwell.

PART III

CONTAINS LARGE EVANGELINE PICTURE OF

Frances E. Willard,
Esther Pugh, Caroline B. Buell,
Mary T. Lathrap,
Louise S. Rounds,
Susan S. Fessenden,
Mary T. Burt,
Margaret A. Sudduth,
Katharine Lente Stevenson,
Harriet B. Kells,
Jennie A. Stewart,
Caroline F. Grow,
Ruby I. Gilbert,
John G. Woolley.

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO

...COUPON...

Send this coupon, together with 75c., to this office, and you will receive Parts I, II and III of our White Ribbon Art Portfolio, or with 25c. and this Coupon any one number you may designate.

Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THIS BOOK SINGS GOSPEL TEMPERANCE.

We know no finer collection of temperance songs than "The White Ribbon Hymnal," compiled for the W. C. T. U. by Anna A. Gordon. It is emphatically gospel temperance that this book sings. It will be found very helpful to temperance meetings of every sort. Price 35 cents.—From S. S. Banner.

and a public necessity, the government should own and operate the railroads in the interest of the people.

9. The telegraph and telephone, like the post-office system, being a necessity for the transmission of news, should be owned and operated by the government in the interest of the people.

10. The land, including all the natural sources of wealth, is the heritage of all the people, and should not be monopolized for speculative purposes, and alien ownership of land should be prohibited. All land now held by railroads and other corporations in excess of their actual needs, and all lands now owned by aliens, should be reclaimed by the government and held for actual settlers only.

SUBSIDIARY RESOLUTIONS.

WHEREAS, Other questions have been presented for our consideration, we hereby submit the following, not as a part of the platform of the People's Party, but as resolutions expressive of the sentiment of this convention:

Resolved, That we demand a free ballot and a fair count in all elections, and pledge ourselves to secure it to every legal voter without Federal intervention, through the adoption by the states of the unperverted Australian or secret ballot system.

Resolved, That the revenue derived from a graduated income tax should be applied to the reduction of the burden of taxation now resting upon the domestic industries of this country.

Resolved, That we pledge our support to fair and liberal pensions to ex-Union soldiers and sailors.

Resolved, That we condemn the fallacy of protecting American labor under the present system, which opens our ports to the pauper and criminal classes of the world and crowds out our wage-earners, and we denounce the present ineffective laws against contract labor, and demand the further restriction of undesirable immigration.

Resolved, That we cordially sympathize with the efforts of organized workingmen to shorten the hours of labor, and demand a rigid enforcement of the existing eight-hour law on government work, and ask that a penalty clause be added to the said law.

Resolved, That we regard the maintenance of a large standing army of mercenaries, known as the Pinkerton system, as a menace to our liberties, and we demand its abolition; and we condemn the recent invasion of the territory of Wyoming by the hired assassins of plutocracy, assisted by Federal officials.

Resolved, That we commend to the favorable consideration of the people, and the reform press, the legislative system known as the initiative and referendum.

Resolved, That we favor a constitutional provision limiting the office of President and Vice-President to one term, and providing for the election of senators of the United States by a direct vote of the people.

Resolved, That we oppose any subsidy or national aid to any private corporation for any purpose.

The People's Party at the outset to secure permanent control of the party organization of the people unaffected by the interests of those in public service does hereby, in national convention assembled at Omaha on this 4th day of July, 1892, establish this ordinance as fundamental law of party organization, viz.: No person holding any office or position of profit trust or emolument under the Federal or any state or municipal government, including senators, congressmen and members of the legislature, state and local, shall be eligible to sit or vote in any convention of this party, and a copy of this ordinance shall be annexed to every call for any future convention of the party.

POLYGLOT PETITION.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

Names. | Residences.

ORIGINAL PRAYING BAND.

So many are applying for membership in our Crusade band that we think best to have the notice stand in your columns if you will spare just a little space. No fees or dues required. Object, to pray for the success of temperance work throughout the world. All original Crusaders expected to register with the secretary, Mrs. J. S. Healy, 2716 Broadway, Cleveland, O.

MRS. MARY B. INGHAM,
Leader of Praying Band.

You will find the "White Ribbon Hymnal" a great help in temperance meetings and song services. Price 35c.

DIE NONE SUCH MINCE MEAT

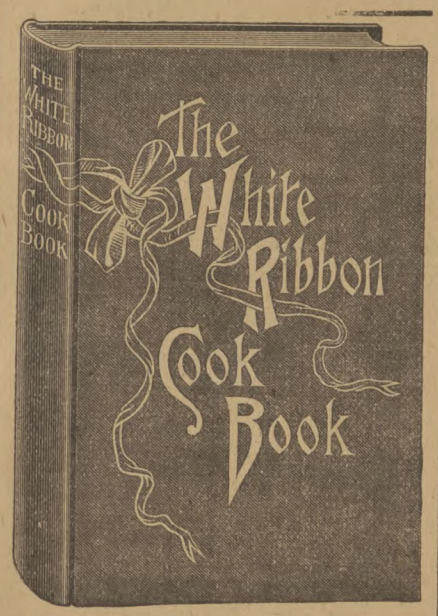
Two large pies are made from each package of None Such Mince Meat. For sale by all Grocers. Be sure you get the None Such—avoid imitations.

MERRELL-SOULE CO., Syracuse, N. Y.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

OUR NEW YEAR'S OFFER

To NEW Subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL.....



Cut out the Coupon given below and send it to us with $1.15, and get THE UNION SIGNAL for 1895, and The White Ribbon Cook Book.

This offer is made to NEW subscribers only.

COUPON

This coupon, if sent to THE UNION SIGNAL together with $1.15, is good for one year's subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and a copy of the White Ribbon Cook Book.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n
...THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

ARE YOU FULLY EQUIPPED FOR WORK?

If Not, Send for a Catalogue of Our Publications.

Send for a catalogue now, and see what supplies we have for your own particular line of work. We will gladly furnish them for distribution in your local union if you will send to us your address. "I have one and could not work intelligently without it," writes an enthusiastic worker. "When I want to know anything about any department, I take the catalogue and know what to send for, so I desire one for every member of our union, as I want them to be familiar with the very good stock of 'weapons' with which to carry on this peaceful war for God and humanity, which the W. T. P. A. can furnish them at rates so cheap."

Send to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ATTENTION BOYS!

FOR SIX NEW SUBSCRIBERS

to THE UNION SIGNAL we will send this watch to your address, postpaid.

FOR FOUR NEW SUBSCRIBERS

and Fifty Cents we will send it to your address, postpaid.

FOR TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS

and Seventy-five Cents we will send it to your address, postpaid.

THIS OFFER IS

FOR BOYS ONLY

Boys who will thank us for this generous offer to own the best pocket time-piece yet made by any Clock Company. Extreme diameter of case 2¼ inches.

As soon as your mind is made up to secure one of these Watches, write to us. Address

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

LETTERS FROM THE PSALM COUNTRY,
By Mary A. Lathbury,

Which was published in THE UNION SIGNAL of August 30, has been issued as a Department Leaflet (Evangelistic) No. 76.

It comes to one's soul like a breath from the hills of God. Buy it for all your friends.

Price, per 100 ..... 15
" 1,000 ..... 1.25

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

THE WHITE RIBBON BIRTHDAY BOOK.

will make a splendid

New Year's Gift

to a W. C. T. U. woman, or to any other woman. It contains a selection for each day from the best writers among women, and on the opposite page spaces for autographs.

Edited by Anna A. Gordon, and Illustrated by Mary A. Lathbury.

This is the first Birthday Book composed, compiled, illustrated and published solely by women.

Bound in appropriate and attractive form, and with gilt edges.

Price $1.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

HAVE YOU SENT FOR COPIES OF LEAFLETS Published in 1894?

They embrace a variety of topics, and every union will find among them something that will meet its own special needs.

In the Evangelistic Series,

DEPARTMENT LEAFLETS

No. 74. The Problem of the Individual.
No. 75. House to House Visitation.
No. 77. Hints for Gospel Temperance Meetings.

Are valuable aids along the lines of gospel temperance work.

For

PRESS WORKERS

No. 111. The Press as an Evangelist.
No. 112. The Associated Press and How to Use It.
No. 113. Coöperation of the Religious Press with Woman's Temperance Work.

Will be found helpful and suggestive.

NATIONAL LEAFLETS.

No. 67. The Public Meeting—Why?
No. 68. The Convention—How?

Should be industriously circulated among white-ribboners everywhere as aids to aggressive and progressive efforts all along the line.

And then there are those

TWO POWERFUL ADDRESSES BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

1. The Inventor of Dimensions in Political Righteousness. Delivered at the Neal Dow Celebration in Willard Hall.
2. Copartnership of Piety and Piracy. Delivered before the Cincinnati M. E. Conference.

If every local union would see to it that a copy of each of these National Leaflets, Nos. 69 and 70, reached every Christian voter in its locality, it would be doing good service toward keeping the prohibition ball a-rolling.

Price of Department Leaflets:
Per 100 ..... $ 15
Per 1,000 ..... 1 25
Price of National Leaflets:
Per 100 ..... $ 90
Per 1,000 ..... 7 50

MONTHLY READINGS.

No live, up-to-date local union can afford to do without our monthly Bible and Responsive Readings. The by our National evangelists are spiritually strengthening and uplifting, and this means, as white-ribboners well know, added momentum to the work in whatever direction effort is put forth.

Bible Readings

The

Responsive Readings

discuss in an instructive manner the aims and needs of various departments, and are arranged by our superintendents and specialists along these lines.

The Bible Reading for January is prepared by Miss Anna Downey, and the topic is "PENTECOSTAL PREPARATION." Just what we need to equip us for the work of the New Year.

In the Responsive Reading, under the title, "PROHIBITION CROSS FIRE," D. D. Tower furnishes a valuable exercise, with a view to "ascertaining our position on the troubled waters of the present political sea."

PRICE OF BIBLE READINGS:

Single copies, per year ..... $ 12
10 copies, to one address .... 1 00

PRICE OF RESPONSIVE READINGS:

Single copies, per year ..... $ 10
13 copies, to one address .... 1 00
Per 100 ..... 25

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Our Library Table.

JANUARY MAGAZINES.

THE PANSY MAGAZINE sets before its friends an attractive bill of fare for 1895, prominent among the best features of which are two serial stories: "Reuben's Hindrances," by Pansy, herself, and "The Old Town Pump," by Margaret Sidney, well known through her charming "Pepper" books.

The second of the series of illustrated articles on "Pleasures of the Telescope," by Garrett P. Serviss, will open THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY for January. Under the delightful guidance of Mr. Serviss, the reader may view the beauties of Orion, of Lepus "crouching at the feet of the mythical giant," of Canis Major, which contains the great Dog Star, of Monoceros, and other constellations.

THE ECONOMIC FUNCTION OF WOMAN is the title of a paper by Dr. Edward T. Devine, staff lecturer of the American society for the Extension of University Teaching. It has been published by the American Academy of Political and Social Science and treats in a fresh manner and from a new point of view one of the most important aspects of the many-sided woman question in modern society.

In MCCLURE'S MAGAZINE for January, Miss Beatrice Harraden, author of the most swiftly and widely popular novel written in recent years, "Ships that Pass in the Night," tells how she came to write that novel; when and where and how she wrote it; how she got it published, and how it won her friends and correspondents in every quarter of the globe and among all conditions and classes of people; a more dramatic and absorbing story than even the novel itself. There is also a portrait of Miss Harraden.

Prof. Henry Drummond furnishes a second paper on D. L. Moody, treating especially of Mr. Moody's genius as a founder and organizer of public institutions.

An article in the January ATLANTIC which will be likely to attract the attention of thoughtful readers is Mr. John H. Denison's "The Survival of the American Type." With a courage and frankness not always found in writers on public affairs he describes the political situation, especially in the larger cities, where the establishment of an ignorant and alien domination compels those who believe in genuine American governmental ideas to fight the battle for liberty over again, while an extreme humanitarianism often obscures the line between justice and generosity. The whole paper is suggestive, and will probably excite comment of various kinds. Fiction is well represented in the number, which contains not only the first installment of "A Singular Life," a serial by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, but the opening portion of "A Village Stradivarius," a characteristic two-part story by Kate Douglas Wiggin, and an amusing and yet somewhat pathetic country story by Alice Brown, "Joint Owners in Spain."

The complete novel in the January issue of LIPPINCOTT'S is "The Waif's of Fighting Rocks," by Captain Charles McIlvaine. The scene is laid in the mountains of West Virginia, and the tale is one of adventure, love, and jealousy among the mountaineers. "By Telephone," a stirring newspaper story by Francis C. Regal, shows how a plucky reporter defeated a conspiracy and brought the criminals to justice. "A Question of Responsibility," by Imogen Clark, deals with delicacy vs. life-saving in a lodging-house. The other stories belong to Christmas. They are, "Mrs. Santa Claus," by Marjorie Richardson, "A Prodigal Friend," by S. Elgar Benet, and "Mrs. Risley's Christmas Dinner," by Ella Higginson. Each of them is in the spirit of the season, though the last is in a minor key. "Christmas Customs and Superstitions" are collected by Elizabeth Ferguson Seat. Edgar Fawcett recalls "New Year's Days in Old New York," and Edith Duff "Empress Josephine's Happy Day," ninety years ago. In "The Ducks of the Chesapeake," Calvin Dill Wilson tells all about the canvas-back before he is shot and after. Gilbert Parker offers a study of "Herbert Beerbohm Tree," the actor. F. M. B., in "With the Autocrat," recalls some notable private utterances of Dr. Holmes" and M. Kaufmann discusses "Socialist Novels." The poetry of the number is by M. S. Paden, Alice Brown, Kathleen R. Wheeler, and Susie M. Best.

OTHER MAGAZINES RECEIVED.

SCRIBNER'S, New York.
CHARITIES' REVIEW, Galesburg, Ill.
CHAUTAUQUAN, Meadville, Pa.
SUNNY HOUR, New York.
HOMILETIC REVIEW, New York.
LEND A HAND, Boston.
ST. NICHOLAS, New York.
QUARTERLY ILLUSTRATOR, New York.

Consumption

was formerly pronounced incurable. Now it is not. In all of the early stages of the disease

Scott's Emulsion

TRADE MARK.

will effect a cure quicker than any other known specific. Scott's Emulsion promotes the making of healthy lung-tissue, relieves inflammation, overcomes the excessive waste of the disease and gives vital strength.

For Coughs, Colds, Weak Lungs, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Consumption, Scrofula, Anæmia, Loss of Flesh and Wasting Diseases of Children.

Buy only the genuine with our trade-mark on salmon-colored wrapper.

Send for pamphlet on Scott's Emulsion. FREE.

Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All Druggists. 50 cents and $1.

EASILY THE BEST WOMAN'S PAPER IN GREAT BRITAIN.

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL...

EDITED BY

LADY HENRY SOMERSET

Is a weekly review of woman's work in philanthropy and reform, and the OFFICIAL ORGAN of

The British Women's Temperance Association....

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL is thoroughly abreast of the times, and an authority on the advanced movement now everywhere occupying the mind of thinking women. It contains interviews with prominent women; serial stories by well-known authors; Books Worth Reading, by Lady Henry Somerset; social sketches; contributions from Miss Frances E. Willard, and, in all, comprises a timely, up-to-date journal for thoughtful women.

Subscription $1.56, postpaid, per annum, to any address.....

Editorial Rooms and Office of Business Manager, to whom all communications should be addressed, 33, 34 Memorial Hall, Farringdon St., London, E. C., England.

...Choice Books and Calendars...

LIFE'S EVERYDAYNESS.

By Rose Porter.

This beautiful little volume is a gem. It is composed of sprightly, short essays on Christian and home themes, which are both instructive and soul-refreshing. It is just such a book as should be in the hands of every young wife. It will help them to be cheerful, hopeful, God-confiding, Christ-loving, and to make home pleasant and happy. It is also eminently practical.

Cloth, Gift edition ..... $ 75

HOW TO MARK YOUR BIBLE.

By Mrs. Stephen Menzies. With prefatory note by D. L. Moody. Cloth, 50c.

"It is an excellent method for Bible students, teachers and preachers."—The Christian Union.

"Full of useful suggestions."—The Observer.

"The matter is full and the directions explicit. For those in search of a method the book is heartily commended."—N. W. Christian Advocate.

"An almost inexhaustible number of suggestions for marginal notes and markings. It is a book every Christian worker will do well to have among his Bible helps."—The Young Men's Era.

DEVOTIONAL CALENDARS.

ONWARD AND UPWARD. Six sheet text, turn-over calendar (size 4½x6½ in). Mildmay designs, beautiful imitation of water color illumination. Each, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.50.

SEASON TO SEASON. Four sheet text, turn-over calendar (size 7½x10 in.), beautiful chromo designs, landscape. Each, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.50.

SEND ALL ORDERS TO

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIAT'N

THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO

Signal Notes.

IT is said of Japan that a larger proportion of the population can read than in any other country in the world.

AT the Illinois State University there was an unusual preponderance of male students last year, the proportion being as six to one.

IF a man is seen drunk four times in Sweden he is deprived of his electoral vote. Such a custom tends to elevate the right of citizenship.

IN only two states of the Union, Kansas and Wyoming, is the age of consent fixed at eighteen years. Ten states have placed the limit at sixteen.

PARIS, though the largest city of France, is eighteenth on the list of wine consumption, averaging one and one-half gallons for each inhabitant.

THE population of Germany is now stated to be fifty-one million five hundred thousand, an increase of over twenty per cent in the last quarter century.

FIVE out of the seventeen large fortunes offered for probate in England last year were left by brewers, and one by a wine merchant. The total sworn value of the seventeen was over sixty-six million dollars.

PETROLEUSE is the French word now applied to the road carriages moved by petroleum or gasoline motors. Arthur Booth-Clibborn proposes to start a Bible distribution in France by means of these novel equipages.

TWENTY thousand pounds has been paid by Commissioner Coombs, the head of the Australian Salvation Army, for the Y. M. C. A. block of buildings in Melbourne, to be used as headquarters for the organization.

THE government inquiry on the treatment of habitual inebriates, vagrants, beggars and offenders began its sittings in Glasgow recently, presided over by Sir Charles Cameron, M. P., chairman. The result of the inquiry is looked for with interest by all who feel strongly on the subject of treating the drink habit as a disease.

FORTY-SIX institutions are maintained by the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal church which has headquarters in Cincinnati. Eight thousand five hundred and twenty-five students are taught by 474 teachers, and the value of its lands and buildings is estimated at $1,800,000. The expenditures of the past year were $279,604.

BERRY, the English hangman, while lecturing at Grimsby, recently, said that during his term of office he had conducted over five hundred executions. A great many of the crimes were caused by drink, but, he added emphatically, "I have never hanged a teetotaler!" This is another evidence of the righteousness and virtue of total abstinence.

THE Woman's Budget credits recent temperance efforts in Great Britain with the substitution of non-alcoholic drinks for beer in harvest time. A new drink called "stokos," (because it is largely used by the stokers) is now gradually finding its way into gas works, iron foundries, the dock and ship-building yards, etc. It is not only pleasant to drink, but is most thirst-quenching. It consists of a composition of fine-ground oatmeal, lemon and white sugar; a gallon of this drink can be made for threepence, and if six gallons are made at a time it only costs twopence a gallon.

IN his recent work, "Problems of the Far East," Hon. G. N. Curzon, M. P., a thoughtful and observing traveler, commenting on the variety of missionary efforts in the Sunrise Land, says: "I find in the directory that in Tokio alone there are represented thirty-one different missionary societies, churches, sects or denominations, with an aggregate of three hundred male and female missionaries. When Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, Evangelicals, Lutherans, Church of England, Methodists, Reformed, Russian Orthodox, Quakers, Unitarians and Universalists appear simultaneously on the scene, all claiming to hold the keys of heaven in their hand, it cannot be thought surprising if the Japanese, who have hardly made up their minds that they want heaven at all are somewhat bewildered by the multiplicity of volunteer door-keepers."

Laughing Babies

are loved by everybody. Good nature in children is rare unless they are healthy. Those raised on the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk are comparatively free from sickness. This milk is so easily prepared that improper feeding is inexcusable.

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 % PURE

USED IN HOSPITALS.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

HUMAN OR ANIMAL

Pain from sprains, bruises, cramps, diseased or torn flesh, aches, wounds, Neuralgia, etc., can be promptly relieved and cured by using

Dr. J. H. McLean's Volcanic Oil Liniment.

The FARMER'S REMEDY for the various diseases of domestic animals. It is easy to apply, relieves at once pain and inflammation, and cures quickly. Full directions with each bottle. For sale everywhere. Price, 25c., 50c. and $1.00 per bottle.

THE DR. J. H. McLEAN MEDICINE CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

Dirt defies the king"

If the old proverb be true, SAPOLIO is greater than royalty itself: Try it in your next house-cleaning: Grocers keep it.

DO YOU LIVE IN GREASE?

As a true patriot and citizen you should naturalize yourself by using the best inventions of the day for removing such a charge. To live in Grease is utterly unnecessary when SAPOLIO is sold in all the stores, and abolishes grease and dirt.

The Bilhorn Telescope Organ

WEIGHT 20 Lbs. PRICE $25

IS THE FINEST BABY FOLDING ORGAN IN THE LAND.

1st. There is no trouble in folding, as one movement does the work.

2nd. It makes a neat travelling box when folded, is light and easily carried.

3rd. When open and ready for use it is a perfect cabinet organ with pedals.

4th. It is just the thing for local preachers, evangelists, Sabbath-schools, class rooms, cottage prayer-meetings and Christian workers.

Send for circular.

BILHORN BROS., 56 Fifth Ave., Chicago.

SAVE AGENTS THE WOMEN

work and worry by selling the Arnold Steam Cookers and Coffee Pots. Free outfits; most liberal terms.

Wilmot Castle & Co., 59 Elm St., Pochester, N. Y.

SONG JEWELS 88 pp. by Hoffman & Williams; for revivals, S. S's, etc. 7c.

SILVER TONES The great Proh. song book. 35c. W. A. Williams, Warnock, O.

INCUBATORS AND BROODERS

SIMPLEST MOST RELIABLE

FULLY GUARANTEED STAMP FOR CATALOGUE

FAMOUS MFG CO. CHICAGO. USA

DON'T BUY A WATCH or any Jewelry before sending to AMOS & CO. A-3, Chicago, for catalogue. Sent free.

AGENTS clear $100 monthly. 100 New Ladies' Specialties for Old and Young. 64 page Illust'd Catalogue FREE. G. L. Erwin & Co., Chicago, Ill. LADY

At 1/4 Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc, List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

CANCER permanently cured. No knife. No poison. No plaster. JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address, C. J. MASON, Box, 519, New York City, N. Y.

$2.75 STEM WIND FREE A fine 14k gold plated watch to every reader of this paper.

GENTS OR LADIES SIZE

Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address, and we will send you express for examination the best and only genuine gold plated watch in the world at this price, and if you think it is equal in appearance to any $25 gold watch pay our sample price, $2.75, and it is yours, and if you sell or cause the sale of six we will give you ONE FREE. Write at once as we shall send out samples for 60 days only.

THE NATIONAL M'F'G & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL.

COMPILED BY

ANNA A. GORDON

OLD—NEW—TESTED—FRESH

GOOD because it contains the favorites of White Ribboners everywhere, the songs which have become their watchwords.

NEW because rich treasures of word and song have been prepared for its pages.

TESTED because its hymns have borne the wear and tear of use.

FRESH because it rings clear and sweet for the home, the nation, and the truth of God.

It is divided into the following sections:

Devotional Meetings — Mass Meetings
Evangelistic Services — Prohibition Rallies
Gospel Temperance Meetings — Special Days
Memorial Services — Closing Hymns
Responsive Scripture Readings

WALTER BAKER & CO.

The Largest Manufacturers of PURE, HIGH GRADE COCOAS AND CHOCOLATES On this Continent, have received HIGHEST AWARDS from the great Industrial and Food EXPOSITIONS In Europe and America.

Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or other Chemicals or Dyes are used in any of their preparations. Their delicious BREAKFAST COCOA is absolutely pure and soluble, and costs less than one cent a cup.

SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE.

WALTER BAKER & CO. DORCHESTER, MASS.

Publisher's Notes.

A GREAT MOTHER

Too much cannot be said of the value of this book, not only to the mothers of the present day, but to mothers of the future. It is dedicated to the

White Ribbon Women of the World, their Husbands and their Children,

and is destined to live as one of the marked books of the "woman's century." This biography of Madam Willard is the work of her daughter,

Frances E. Willard,

and her kinswoman,

Minerva B. Norton,

and the introduction is written by

Lady Henry Somerset.

Bound daintily in gray and silver, and beautifully illustrated.

Price $1.50.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N, THE TEMPLE, Chicago, Ill.

THE CRUSADE SPOON.

New Prices.

We are happy to give our patrons the benefit of the reduction in silver by offering the Crusade Souvenir Spoon at the following prices:

CRUSADE SPOONS.

| FORMER PRICE. | | REDUCED PRICE. | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Teaspoons, | $2 25 | Now, | $1 75 |
| " gilded bowl, | 2 75 | " | 2 25 |
| After dinner coffee spoons, | 1 50 | Now, | 1 00 |
| After dinner coffee spoons, gilded bowl, | 1 75 | Now, | 1 25 |

These spoons will commend themselves to workers as especially fitting souvenirs, both of the birth and the "majority" year of the W. C. T. U.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N, THE TEMPLE, Chicago, Ill.

JUST THE THING.

"Just the thing for children!" So says an earnest correspondent in writing of

The Young Crusader.

Have you not noticed how it improves from month to month, with its short, crisp, interesting stories, which teach the children temperance truths in an attractive form? Our friend strikes the key-note when she says: "Every growing household should take at least one bright, wholesome, clear temperance paper which the children can understand, and The Young Crusader is just the thing. Only 25 cents a year. Think how much good you could do with $1, by sending a copy to four of the poorest children in your neighborhood.

HOLIDAY EXCURSION RATES VIA THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE.

On December 22, 23, 24, 25 and 31, 1894, and January 1, 1895, the North-Western Line will sell excursion tickets at very favorable rates, good for return passage until January 2, 1895, inclusive. For tickets and full information apply to agents Chicago & North-Western Railway.

IMPORTANT TO COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

On and after December 1, Baggage Agents of the B. & O. R. R. Co. will accept coupons from mileage books issued by B. & O. R. R., P. & W. R'y, B. & O. S. W. R'y and Valley R'y of Ohio, in payment for excess baggage charges, at their face value, 2 cents each. This arrangement will not include B. & O. Mileage Books indorsed "good only on B. & O.," B. & O. Southwestern Mileage Advertising Books, nor books older than one year from date of issue.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

Mrs Ursula D Herrick
1026 15th st
Denver

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXI.—No. 2.] CHICAGO, JANUARY 10, 1895. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

CHICAGO, Jan. 2, 1895.

DEAR FRIENDS:—We have had a New Year's gift—a valuable one. Just how valuable you cannot understand, unless you are a managing editor. And we are going to do a very generous thing, and share it with you.

We will not keep you in suspense, but ask you to look at the "Treasurer's Corner," the "Corresponding Secretary's Notes," that new departure, the "Local Union," and then we'll whisper into your ear that ours is a gift of space, this column in THE UNION SIGNAL, that best of papers, all our own—and yours, where blue pencil, scissors and paste pot cannot invade, and where we may chat ad libitum about the little matters of business that are of such importance to us all.

* * *

You were at the Convention? You have not forgotten, then, about the W. T. P. A., and how often the quotation from John G. Woolley was used: "The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association is a grand, unworked monopoly." Possibly you thought when your eye fell upon the announcement in Tuesday's program, "Report of the President of the W. T. P. A. Report of the Managing Editor of THE UNION SIGNAL. Report of the Editor of Books and Leaflets W. T. P. A. Report of the Business Manager W. T. P. A.," that it was not as much an unworked monopoly as our friend John G. Woolley declares it to be, and we'll tell you frankly that in our column we are going to ask you to make the New Year an auspicious one, by helping us so to work this "grand monopoly" that THE UNION SIGNAL subscription list shall reach that 100,000 mark, and the unions all over the land take on a new lease of life, because nourished and strengthened by the temperance literature which issues from our presses.

* * *

Since our return from Convention the printing department has been busy, days, and often nights, doing local printing and getting off the National and state Minutes. We are ready now to print the superintendents' reports; dear, patient superintendents! only three or four have threatened to have them printed elsewhere, if we did not make better time. Please do not forget that the National always has the "right of way," especially as they own and have paid for the plates, and we are only enabled by their kindness and generosity to furnish your extra copies even early in January. Should you desire to countermand your order, kindly do so at once, as the printing of them is not a source of revenue to us, but we desire in this, as in all business matters, to serve you reasonably and promptly.

* * *

Our Christmas stock is exhausted, but in reply to some inquiries we wish to say we can always duplicate our orders for books, and although we have just now on hand but a limited supply of that greatly admired book, "A Great Mother," the order is already in the bindery, and there will be no delay in filling your New Year's orders promptly.

* * *

We are receiving some suggestions as to Part IV White Ribbon Portfolio, which we intend to publish at an early date. We are promised a fine picture of Mrs. Alice Harris, of Boston, our beloved white-ribbon songstress, for the frontispiece. It is in order now to name the prominent faces you would like to see in Part IV.

* * *

In our next number we shall offer special inducements for old and young, W's, Y's and L. T. L's to work for new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL, Young Women and The Young Crusader.

We wish you all a happy New Year, and believe in no surer way can blessings come to your own heart than by sending to your relative, your friend, your pastor, fifty-two issues of THE UNION SIGNAL for 1895.

CAROLINE F. GROW, Bus. Mgr.

SPECIAL WORK FOR JANUARY.

Securing signatures to the Polyglot Petition. Read Mrs. Hoffman's letter on page 4.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Chicago's death rate last year was only 15.1 per thousand.

A farewell reception was given to John Burns in New York, January 4.

A reunion of the World's Congress Auxiliary was held at Chicago, January 1.

Memorial services for Robert Louis Stevenson were held in New York, Friday.

The usual crowded and brilliant New Year's reception was held at the White House.

Dr. Parkhurst has termed the closing proceedings of the Lexow committee a farce.

For the first time in twenty-two years the city of New York has a Republican mayor.

New governors have been inaugurated in New York, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin.

Chicago University has received a New Year's gift of $175,000 from its founder, John D. Rockefeller.

THE twenty-seventh annual convention of the National American Woman Suffrage Association will be held at Atlanta, Ga., January 31 to February 4. Many of our white ribbon women will be in attendance and our readers will be furnished with a full account of the meetings.

ONE of the five black states on Mrs. Hunt's map, South Carolina, has at last succumbed to the march of civilization and adopted the scientific temperance instruction law. To Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, president of the state W. C. T. U., who was instrumental in securing the passage of this bill, belongs great credit.

THE Chicago Civic Federation has decided to increase its membership from ten thousand to one hundred thousand, with a view to elect honest men at the next municipal election. Every society in the city, except such as are purely political, is to be represented and to help in this open fight against gang rule. As women form a large factor in the Federation, we feel a special interest in the efforts of this new and noble organization.

WITH this issue we present to our readers the initial chapter of Lady Henry Somerset's story, "A Debt of Honor," which has just come to our hands. We know that white-ribboners read with eager interest the occasional contributions from the busy pen of our English leader which appear in our columns, and we feel sure, therefore, that though this is properly a Christmas story, they would rather have it a little late than not at all.

MRS. MARY H. HUNT gave a birthday reception on December 27, in honor of the ninetieth birthday of her mother, Mrs. Hanchett, who is a direct descendant of Rev. Thomas Thatcher, the first pastor of the Old South Church of Boston. As the descendants of this eminent divine have been the direct participants in the events that have made this century famous, Mrs. Hanchett's memory is richly stored with scenes and incidents that have marked the progress and development of the nation. Refreshments were served in the dining-room in the light of the ninety candles that glowed on a birthday cake. Then followed a memorable hour in which were blended wit and pathos, history and poetry, contributed by the many friends of the distinguished mother and daughter. Among these were Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Cook, and many others.

IT has long been our custom to hold memorial services in the local unions when our representative white-ribboners pass onward. This was done in reverent remembrance of Madam Willard, Mary Allen West and Mary A. Woodbridge. But we had none to lose who was more priceless to the white-ribbon movement than Mary T. Lathrap, our great speaker, writer and leader of debate. Therefore, that her life and character, her words and work may make the impress that they merit upon our members and our following, we, general officers of the National W. C. T. U., request that as soon as practicable, and if it can be arranged, on FEBRUARY 3, just one month from her death, memorial services be held for Mary T. Lathrap, president of the Michigan W. C. T. U., and a vice-president of the National society. We further suggest that pastors be invited to join in this service, and that some of Mrs. Lathrap's beautiful hymns be sung, especially the one beginning, "There's a shadow on the home." The Y Song Book has this hymn, and the W. T. P. A. publishes several leaflets from Mrs. Lathrap's pen which would be invaluable to distribute at the meeting and to publish in the local press.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, President.
KATHARINE L. STEVENSON, Cor. Sec.

THE thoughts of white-ribboners have turned in tender reflection during the past few weeks to the quiet home in Jackson, Mich., where our peerless prohibition advocate has been awaiting the call of her Master. Last Thursday, January 3, that call came and the great soul joined the triumphant throng. At noon on that day we received a telegram which for days we had been dreading. It read: "Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap died at 10:30 this morning of general neuralgia, aged fifty-six years and eight months." A letter from her husband, Dr. C. C. Lathrap, received the day previous, had announced her growing weakness and added: "For four days she has held no conversation regarding the things of this life, but her confidence in the future is so strong it seems a certainty to her and to us also." Sweetly, quietly the end came,

"Like one who wraps the mantle of his couch
About him and lies down to peaceful dreams."

In an associated press dispatch sent out from Boston by Miss Willard, occur the following tributes in which all our readers who knew Mrs. Lathrap will concur: "In the death of Mrs. Lathrap, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Michigan and the foremost prohibition orator among American women, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union has met a loss not exceeded by any in the twenty years of its history. A woman of the highest quality of native talent, Mrs. Lathrap came to the first convention of white ribbon women in Cleveland, Ohio, in 1874, already an accomplished Christian worker, and took rank at once as one of the most forceful and eloquent advocates of the cause. Her broad and varied experience in connection with the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society had made her familiar with the needs of humanity and had given her a wide outlook toward social reform. Mrs. Lathrap was of Scotch-Irish ancestry and Presbyterian training, but became an honored preacher of the Methodist church, and as an evangelist has held meetings in the leading churches east and west. Mrs. Lathrap had a fine womanly presence, an earnest, convincing manner, and her rare gift of oratory won for her the name of 'Daniel Webster of the temperance reform.' She was no less gifted as a writer of both prose and verse than as a public speaker, and her melodious songs are sung by white-ribboners the world around." While the entire temperance world will mourn Mrs. Lathrap's departure, it is to "Michigan, my Michigan," that our tenderest sympathy goes, for she has been for fourteen years the president of that state, and a leader trusted and true beyond words. In our next issue we will give to our readers a picture and sketch of Mrs. Lathrap, together with tributes and reminiscences from our National officers.

HOPE.

BY JENNIE CHRISTIAN.

Hope is the Lord's best gift to man
To keep him merry hearted,
E'en when he, from the fondest dreams
That come to man, is parted.

The eye of faith oft looks through tears
When hope it is not heeding,
But smiles of gladness light the face,
When hope the way is leading.

What though dread disappointment comes,
With its sad partner, sorrow!
Hope bids us still look on before,
And wait for God's to-morrow.

Eternal measurements of time
Evade our comprehension;
And so it is we fret and pine,
And yield to wrong contention

While waiting for the hand of God
To shower the asked for blessing,
While hope hopes on. God knows our needs
Beyond our poor confessing,

And in His own good time will send
In satisfying measure,
In answer to our hope in Him,
The sought, the longed-for treasure.

Peotone, Ill.

A DEBT OF HONOR.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

The flickering firelight cast into cavernous gloom all save the hearth on which it burnt, lighting only for a moment the long walls lined with books, the white fluted pillars that separated the divisions into panels, catching a gleam from the gilt leg of an old-fashioned damask chair, and making wave-like shadows on the Turkey carpet. A brighter flare from the glowing flame revealed at intervals the only occupant in that dim library stretched half-length upon a sofa near the white marble chimney-piece, and as the light occasionally fell on his head and face, the fair hair and bright complexion spoke of strength and youth in their heyday.

By-and-by, however, the figure rose, tall and dark, casting a long shadow across the hearth-rug, and, striking a match, lit one of the candles that stood in the blue Sévres candelabra on the mantelpiece. The little wick seemed almost bewildered at being called to perform so large a duty, and blinked and winked in a manner that served only to emphasize the dimness of the surroundings. The young man stood a moment before the fire with his hands behind his back, his head slightly bent, apparently deep in thought. Now and then an impatient jerk of his broad shoulders seemed to denote that his meditations were not agreeable, and a smothered ejaculation showed that he wished his fate, whatever it might be, were other than it was.

Presently he looked up, and walking to the high-back armchair that stood on one side of the fireplace, he bent over it and examined minutely the small piece of paper that was pasted on the gilt carving above the damask cushions, on which was printed in unmistakably clear characters, "Lot 178." "Great God!" he murmured, under his breath; "why did I not tell Longhead to save that one? It's too late now." He laid his strong hand upon the cushion caressingly, as one would stroke some beloved brow. "I saw her there the last day. I see her now. Poor soul! how glad I am she is not here to-night;" and almost unconsciously he dropped into the chair and sat gazing into the fire.

The glowing coals seemed full of pictures passing in quick succession. They say that to the drowning the past comes rushing by, one great dissolving-view of life's story. Be that as it may, there are moments in our experience when events long since forgotten rise like specters, beckoning us back to con the pages we have turned long since in the history of our existence. And it is at such moments that we stand apart from ourselves ready to judge the only individual whom we have carefully shielded from criticism. Perhaps it was the first time in this young man's history that he had ever thought.

Until this night when any reflection troubled the calm of his existence he had looked upon it as a sacred duty to find some channel into which he might divert the unpleasant current of his reflections. He "owed it to himself not to worry"; his bright life must not be clouded; it was a wrong against which he strictly guarded himself; but to-night the sentries were gone; the enemy had invaded the citadel of his being. There was the long line of events, the regiment of memories drawn up before him; and the stern reality of that little piece of paper on the back of the old chair forced him to face them. The fire had crackled just as it did to-night long years back; the shadows fell on the nursery floor; he saw again the familiar room, and it seemed as though the little curly fair-haired boy sat once more in front of the blaze—on Christmas eve. Would the next day ever dawn? The chubby face turned wonderingly up the dark chimney. Would Father Christmas come creeping down there, or would he float in at the wide window through the frost-dimmed panes? The narrow bed looked white and tempting, but the blue eyes were wide awake, and the little pink toes were stretched out towards the blaze.

"Now, Master Jack, git up." How familiarly the voice sounded in his ear. "Git up, do; if you don't git into bed and to sleep Father Christmas won't come; he doesn't come to naughty boys."

For many days before this festival Father Christmas filled a convenient place in nursery threats. Every morning he had heard nurse say with unfailing persistence, "If you don't stand still and have your ears washed you'll find your stocking empty, for sure. Father Christmas never comes to boys with dirty ears." Whereat he held his breath while the hard twist of towel was poked into his ear and rolled round until it seemed to him to almost penetrate the brain.

Then he lay in the little white dimity-curtained bed, well tucked in, with eyes that seemed as though they would never close, watching, watching till the fire burned low and the room faded into mysterious depths of shadow. Then, tired of his vigil, he closed his eyes. In his dream there came to him the sound of soft rustling. Was it a silk gown or an angel's wing? A whispered hurried consultation, and he half remembered a long kiss pressed on his curly head, and then darkness and forgetfulness.

The pale winter-morning light struggled into the nursery. The monotonous sounds of nurse's slumbers broke the silence; but as soon as consciousness returned there came the delightful sense that at last it was Christmas day. The little form was crawling down the bed to where a large white cotton stocking hung, taking a shape that would have indicated some most terribly complicated ailment had it been on the leg of its owner. The busy hands were soon plunged into it. "Oh, nurse," broke forth in triumphant accents the clear young voice, "it's full!" And soon the quiet of the early morning was broken by the tooting of a trumpet, the bells on a toy harness and the beating of a miniature drum.

"You naughty boy," said nurse drowsily; but threats were impotent since Father Christmas had come indeed.

Hardly second in importance to presents received were the presents to be given; the mysterious parcel in silver paper "For Mother," which had been hidden long on the top shelf of the cupboard; and soon the little night-gowned figure was flying through the passage and sitting under the large canopy of the bed, while mother with an effort roused herself to receive the packet with appropriate enthusiasm. "Don't you wonder what it is?" said the eager voice, as anxiously he watched the string untied, to disclose a fearful card-rack in ormolu, carefully chosen by him and nurse in the neighboring town. "Isn't it beautiful?" he had said, oblivious of the fact that he ought not to usurp the double rôle of donor and recipient. "We knew you would like it;" and then the sweet voice answered in all sincerity that she would always keep it. She spoke truly, for it was docketed with date and name and put away among her treasures, and he had found it thus safely stored after many years.

Those were the days when he was taken, as a treat, to church; when the light streamed down from the colored windows as he sang, in a childish voice, about the herald angels, and sighed during the Litany, noting the landmarks and anxiously listening for the "fruits of the earth" as a blessed indication of the approaching end of an exercise which seemed to him almost interminable. Then the merry dinner, the crackers and the games. When the elders were tired of playing upstairs there was always the steward's room to fall back upon; and there the meals seemed more prolonged, and his welcome inexhaustible. Sitting on Mr. Hayler's knee he listened intently to long stories of other little boys the old butler had known, and of wonderful experiences of foreign travel that had fallen to his lot when he crossed the channel "to go to Paris with father." The happy day wore on and on, and at last the tired eyes closed only to wake again to more happiness and merriment and joy on the morrow.

Boston, Mass.

(To be continued.)

INNOCENCE is not righteousness, though many a soul thinks because it has not been stained by sin it is righteous.—F. W. Gunsaulus, D. D.

THE FRATERNITY OF REFORMS.

II.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

PAST AND PRESENT OF LABOR REFORM.

All moral reforms are but the intertwining limbs into which the solid trunk of Christianity branches out, and through which it comes to flower and fruit.

In our symbolic tree the vices that occasion the various reforms are the roots. The tap root is the love of money, —not money but the love of it—the root, not of "all evil," but as the Revision has it, "of all kinds of evil." Close beside this tap root of covetousness, sometimes bearing it up, are two roots, almost as deadly, ambition and lust.

We have recently noted one hundred and sixty-four branches of current reform, most of them closely allied to the five chief branches, whose freshest developments are to be discussed in successive articles. These chief branches are: Labor reform, purity reform, Sabbath reform, gambling reform, temperance reform.

The labor reform branch, newest of the five, is just now growing phenomenally. Christians are learning to read the Bible sociologically, and are finding it, so read, a new book. Moses is seen to be what Henry George calls him, "the first labor reformer," while Christ is applauded by the very workingmen who most criticise the church.

The world is also learning to write and to read history sociologically, as a history of peoples, not of kings only; of social developments rather than military achievements. So read we find behind the false splendor of famous kings and constant wars that the most persistent and universal fact of history is the oppression of the poor by the rich and powerful.

Our Liberty Bell in 1776 awakened oppressed peoples in all civilized lands, with the result that popular government now exists in some measure in every Christian country, except Russia, and has passed beyond into progressive Japan.

The great disturbing fact of our time is that while the people have also progressed industriously, the progress in this department has not by any means kept pace with their political progress. Industrial equality of opportunity is demanded as the natural accompaniment of political equality. That a man whose hand holds the regal ballot should stretch out that hand in vain for a chance to work seems incongruous.

Denied other tools it is not strange that he proposes to use the ballot to obtain them. He will make his right to vote enforce his right to work. Having rejected the theory that a few have by "divine right" a monopoly of government, he is questioning more peacefully whether a few should be allowed a monopoly of the means of production. Revolutions were sometimes excusable as a necessity in obtaining political rights, but workmen with a majority of ballots have no sort of excuse for using the boomerangs of violence.

Labor reformers do not ask a "grand divide." He who shows the folly of that also shows his own folly in supposing it a live issue. All that labor leaders can be said to be generally united in demanding is, government ownership and control of such means of production as have been removed from the field of free competition into that of private monopoly, which is industrial monarchy.

The gulf current of national sentiment, not only among the poor, but also among Christian scholars, seems to be setting strongly towards city ownership of lighting plants, waterworks and street railroads, and national ownership of railways and telegraphs at least, if not also the closely related express business and the mines, such ownership to be honestly acquired and to be accompanied by civil service reform.

Many are ready for the municipal part of this program, which is, in fact, being rapidly adopted, not through socialists but through tax-payers who see no reason why the profits of city monopolies should not pay the city's expenses instead of enriching private monopolies, which should be owned by the city for the additional reason that otherwise the city will be owned by them.

As to national ownership of national monopolies, there is no reason to fear it will be entered upon without due consideration.

To an unprecedented degree the nation is at school on industrial and civic problems, which are being studied, not only in labor unions, but also, with new zeal, in colleges, theological seminaries, sociological institutes, good government clubs, good citizenship conventions and Christian conferences. Industrial studies have also been carried by the press to every home in recent years in reports and discussions of the Homestead and Chicago strikes, and the consequent new departures of the courts in this new field of industrial warfare, and anew of late by the national strike report, and its remarkable recommendations, that give official standing to what had before been considered only the too radical claims of reformers, —a report the discussion of which will be renewed and tinued by the more recent imprisonment of the Chicago leaders.

The sovereign people have in recent elections shown themselves capable of sudden changes and political surprises, but they are not likely to be drawn by demagogues into too sudden changes in our industrial system, while they are so generally absorbed in studies which can hardly fail to show that peaceful evolution is really swifter than violent revolution.

Clifton Springs, N. Y.

WOMEN IN PRACTICAL POLITICS.

BY MRS. C. B. HOPKINS.

When the recent municipal campaign in this city opened and it became evident that it was necessary to bring every legitimate influence to bear to overthrow the Tammany Hall plunderers, Dr. Parkhurst suggested that an invitation be extended to all good women for assistance. Some of the reformers, agreeing with Dr. Parkhurst, were of the opinion that the women could do a great work; others were as decidedly of the view that they should stay in the shelter of their homes and above all shun the contaminating atmosphere of New York city politics. To justify such an invitation it was considered necessary to have a precedent and in searching for one Dr. Parkhurst communicated with Mayor Schieren in reference to the result of the work of women of Brooklyn in the municipal contest in that city last year. Mayor Schieren gave a most glowing report and Dr. Parkhurst began at once a vigorous and successful effort to enlist the women in behalf of the reform ticket.

Dr. Parkhurst had in mind Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell as the woman best fitted to head the movement. Mrs. Lowell went to Dr. Parkhurst of her own volition and offered her services. She sent invitations to women of wealth, influence and position who filled Association Hall, heard Dr. Parkhurst speak, became enthusiastic and immediately formed the nucleus of a city organization. Women who had never before appeared in public plunged into municipal politics and worked early and late until the polls closed.

It has seemed to me a good time to put on record the opinion of those who were in a position to know the value of the work the women did in this remarkable campaign. With this purpose in mind I have ascertained the views of some of the best known leaders who were in the forefront of the struggle against Tammany. I give only extracts from these letters, as it would make this article much too long were I to quote them in full.

Mayor-elect Strong says, "The great victory that we achieved November 6 could hardly have been so outspoken and potent if it had not been for the influence of the good women." Gen. Horace Porter declares that "every one who witnessed the coöperation of the women and weighed its effect is convinced that their efforts had much to do with the securing of a better government for the metropolis." Ex-Mayor Abram S. Hewitt says, "there is no doubt that the influence brought to bear by the various women's organizations was very effective." Dr. R. S. McArthur claims that "they have demonstrated their ability to perform brave, heroic and patriotic service in great municipal crises." Henry George enthusiastically testifies that in his opinion "the interest shown by women in that remarkable campaign was only somewhat less gratifying, and probably more important in results, than the overthrow of what I have called a 'non-partisan league for public plunder.'"

Pages of testimony of this character could be easily secured, and what seems a little strange is that hardly any one wants to put himself on record as saying anything different. I have endeavored to secure the opinion of some opponents of women suffrage, but they are uniformly either too busy to give the matter thought or paid very little attention to this feature of the campaign.

After noting the fact that it is generally conceded that the women rendered great service in the recent campaign, it is worth while to inquire a little as to just what the character of this service was. At this point I am again able to give but a very small portion of the testimony that is available. The New York dailies contain pages of the most detailed evidence of the practical political ability of those who led the women's movement.

The World of October 14 contained a long article on what the women proposed to do. The following is a portion of the article in an abridged form:

"Enlist the support of the pulpit; hold prayer-meetings in every city tabernacle; circulate pledges in opposition to Tammany in every public place; encourage the formation of women's clubs in every assembly district; arrange for at least one monster mass-meeting of the women to be addressed by women orators; encourage the formation of any and all organizations of women having in view the general good; give especial attention to young men who are just entering their majority, and vote for the first time this fall; see that a woman's appeal to woman reaches every household; go into the crowded tenement districts, and meet and talk with the workingwomen in their public halls; make a house to house registration canvass in every assembly district; visit prominent citizens at their places of business, and secure their autograph indorsements; open general and district headquarters for the distribution of literature and the enrollment of our friends; contribute freely for necessary expenses; loan carriages for use on election day, and charge every woman to see that the voters of her household go to the polls on election day."

This elaborate program, mapped out only three weeks before election, was closely followed. The World a week later noted:

"The women's movement in politics, perhaps the most remarkable that New York has ever seen, is growing and widening. . . . So significant an uprising, so radical a development has astonished even many of the women who have plunged into the work with enthusiasm."

On October 28 the World said:

"There is very practical politics in the movement. A committee on registration have covered this city from one end to the other, and through their efforts a large number of men have been set to work canvassing election districts to see that men are registered. Up to this time a great part of the efforts of the women have been concentrated upon registration. In this particular field they have accomplished a great deal. Their work is shown in nearly every boarding house in the city. Men talk about it on the street corners and wherever they come together."

The World, on November 4, said:

"During the past week the women's campaign has been pushed with desperate ardor. Pamphlets and leaflets containing resolutions, appeals, supplications, exhortations, warning and advice in English, German, Hebrew, Italian, French and Spanish have been sent out by the thousands. Personal letters have been written by hundreds. . . . One woman of the Women's Municipal League said that she had written three hundred letters herself. . . Every woman worker has made a direct appeal to every man of her acquaintance, either personally or by letter. . . The tenements have been worked over several times in the effort to win votes through the workingmen's wives. Factories where men are employed have been canvassed."

The World, in summing up the work that had been done for the reform ticket on the day before the election, said:

"It is impossible to estimate the result of the work done by the women. They have done infinitely more than Dr. Parkhurst expected them to do. They have given the fight a respectability and standing foreign to municipal politics. There is no question in the mind of any of the leaders of the committee of seventy, but that to the women is due a great deal of credit for the large increase in registration in certain districts. That is one thing that the women set out to do and they have accomplished wonders. They have awakened the indifferent stay-at-homes and made them do their part. They have made voting fashionable. They have done practical work in vote getting. The women in the league expect to astonish some folks that are looking toward the east side. They reached the voter down there through his wife. They have distributed a large quantity of reading matter. No one can pretend to estimate the number of meetings that the women have held. There were more than thirty in different parts of the city on Thursday night alone. They have made it a campaign of education."

These are only a few paragraphs of pages of the most conclusive and impartial testimony that exist indicating that the women of New York have shown a genius for political work of the most effective and elevated character. The wonderful success of their thirty days' campaign is generally acknowledged by all fair-minded men. Beyond a doubt this campaign has greatly accelerated the equal suffrage movement in this city among all classes except the criminal politicians and rumsellers.

New York City.

THE "SUNKEN ROAD" AND THE BRIDGE INTENDED TO SPAN IT.

BY JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

An article taken from the Blue and Gray Magazine appeared in a daily paper a short time ago in which reference was made to that historic bloody chasm of the field of Waterloo known as the Sunken Road of Ohain, and a parallel to it, as a lane of death, found in a certain sunken and blind road on the field of Antietam, which, even previous to the battle, had sometimes gone by the name of "Bloody Lane."

By somewhat of a coincidence it was only a few days prior to my perusal of the article referred to, that I received from the proprietors of the British Workman of London, a bundle of copies of a late issue of their paper, in which occurs a pictorial illustration of "A Crash at Waterloo," being a reproduction of a painting of the climax of carnage and death such as was said to have marked the scene at the Sunken Road of Ohain, when the French cuirassiers, coming suddenly upon the fateful ravine, rolled, horses and riders together, pell-mell into it—the rest of the regiment riding forward over the filled grave of mangled and writhing bodies!

The foregoing picture, as I judge by the initials in the left hand corner, is a production of the artist, Gustave Doré. A second picture is given, styled, "After the Battle." The white face of a dead soldier upturned to the moonlight, the head pillowed upon the prostrate form of his dead charger, a spaniel with its paw laid upon the soldier's breast, while its head is turned to look at other soldiers bearing off the field a wounded companion; on the right an overturned gun carriage; a burning homestead in the middle distance. The evident intent of these pictures, like the grim but terribly truthful canvasses of the Russian Verestchagen, and those of Felix Moscheles, of London, is to show war in its reality, for the text in the British Workman, which they illustrate, is a plea, written by Pastor J. P. Gledstone, entitled "The Abolition of War."

The excellent little paper which I have named has, during a long course of years, brought many a forcible argument for abstinence from strong drink to the attention of the workingmen of Great Britain, and I believe has exercised a determinate influence in reducing the pro rata consumption of liquors which has been recorded over there within a few years. It is likely now to do similar valuable service in arousing in the minds of the very large number of bread-winners of Britain by whom it is read, an abhorrence of the barbarism of war.

When the workingman is told, as he is in the paper now being noticed, that the cost of a single new shell, without the powder, would absorb the wages of an ordinary farm laborer five months, and that the cost of the armies of Europe is sufficient to compel every man and woman the whole continent over to work an hour a day more than they otherwise would, he is thereby made acquainted with the financial side of the appeal to the "hearts of oak" in a way well calculated to set him thinking. When the Victoria was sunk in the Mediterranean last year in a quiet sea, there went down the equivalent of the weekly wages of a million workingmen.

Referring to the various suggested ways and plans now mooted for discouraging the appeal to arms, allusion is made to those of the proportional reduction of armaments, the shortening of the (European) military service from three years to one year, and the proposed establishment of a High Court of Nations for the settlement of international disputes, all of which seemed chimerical to talk about a few years ago, but are now in the mouths of kings, parliaments, publicists, journalists and the churches. Our essayist believes that the only sure foundation on which peace can securely rest, is the teaching and authority and example of Christ, all else—the humanitarian aspect, the argument founded on expediency, and the profit and loss point of view—being but "shifting sand." Teaching the young the use of deadly weapons that may be used for the destruction of men, is strongly deprecated.

Aside from the moral aspect of the matter, the character of this physical exercise for the lads cannot be fairly claimed as possessing any superiority over that of a good system of calisthenics. Professor Sargent, Harvard's well known instructor in gymnastics, who has been frequently quoted in this connection, is authority for the statement that the usual military drill but awkwardly and imperfectly develops the body, and is a very indifferent substitute for intelligently pursued gymnastic exercises. In the matter of it being a nice way to instil habits of obedience, the result has proved so unsatisfactory in a Massachusetts public school that the plan has been abandoned; while it was but a little while ago that a daily paper of Binghampton, N. Y., recounted a street scrimmage between rival companies of boys' brigades, two of the unarmed companies driving and pelting with stones and brickbats a third company armed with dummy guns, to the shelter of the church building whence they had started out. Despite any theory or assumption to the contrary, the practical consequent of maneuvering with military weapons is to instil a craving for war and thirst for military glory.

A lady (reported in a late UNION SIGNAL issue) who has carefully looked into the new movement of the boys' brigade, says: "I have asked individual boys everywhere, 'What do you learn, what do you do with it?' And they have answered me, 'I hope there will be a war when I am a man, and if I am a general I will be ahead of any of the others.'" Another lady in remarking upon this undesirable tendency of the method, indicates what will probably be the eventual outcome of the wide discussion of the subject in the churches that "the missionary and other societies of this country have taken up this matter, and they are proposing to substitute physical culture exercises for the military tactics."

I was in attendance at the last graduation exercises of the Indian Industrial school, at Carlisle, when the boys were trotted around in the large gymnasium for quite awhile, but not one of them held a gun, neither did the sentry who was on duty at the guard-house and lock-up by the entrance gate, make any display of a deadly weapon. The lessons of the schools everywhere ought to be in the direction of peace and the amicable settlement of differences. That was a wise procedure of the American Peace Society, Boston, in offering prizes to students of American colleges for the best theses on a named anti-war topic.

It is interesting to note that Hezekiah Butterworth, editor of Youth's Companion, has lately been inditing poems of peace. That widely read educational journal, The Chautauquan, editorially referring not long ago to the better way for settling international disputes, placed it in contrast with "the barbaric resort to arms, which in an individual is now considered nothing short of a crime." It may not be generally known to readers of this journal that the late Charles Sumner, who eloquently formulated his hope and his belief in the approaching peace of the world in his oration upon "The True Grandeur of Nations," left a legacy to Harvard College, the interest of which was to be (and of late years has been) applied to theses by the collegians upon the subject herein considered.

Will not efforts such as these, multiplying as the years go on, do much to bridge and to close the bloody chasm of international animosities? All claims and quarrels of contending nations, not readily resolvable by their respective Departments of State, being submitted to the good offices of the High Court of Nations, the peoples at interest would calmly await the formal decision of their high judicial representatives with no more thought of an appeal to force than now accompanies any adjudication by our Supreme Court upon claims arising between the different states or citizens of one and another state. Longfellow's words of happy augury in this direction are always animating:

"Were half the power that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,
Given to redeem the mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals and forts.

"The warrior's name would be a name abhorred!
And every nation that should lift again
Its hand against a brother, on its forehead
Would wear forever the curse of Cain!

"Down the dark future, through long generations,
The echoing sounds grow fainter and then cease;
And like a bell, with solemn, sweet vibrations,
I hear once more the voice of Christ, say 'Peace!'"

Philadelphia, Pa.

"WHEN DOCTORS DISAGREE."

II.

BY KATE C. BUSHNELL, M. D.

It is generally assumed by commentators that the real meaning of I. Cor. 11:10 is, "Therefore ought the woman to have a veil upon her head because of the angels." That is, the word "power" is supposed to mean "veil." Not that the Greek word exousia, power, has been ever found in Scripture or classical literature having that meaning. The nearest approach to such a meaning is that the word has been used once for a method of dressing the hair.

Indeed, Dean Stanley is compelled to admit merely that "there may have been a Cicilian provincialism of which no other example is extant, of which analogies may afford a slight confirmation." He further states that "this is all that the learning of seventeen centuries has been able to produce in illustration of the meaning of 'exousia' as 'a veil.' There are several grave objections to this use of the word; exousia in the earlier epistles does not mean 'dominion,' but 'right' or 'liberty.'"

Yet upon this very slender foundation of fact, namely, that once only in all Greek literature the word exousia, power, is used (by Callistratus) in describing a method of hair dressing, the King James' version of the New Testament gives the longest marginal rendering in the Bible, and such a rendering as is an emphatic denial of the statement of the sacred text itself. We will not now say that this marginal rendering is not the true one. Be that as it may, we can most assuredly pronounce this instance the most audacious handling of the sacred text on record.

The Greek text plainly and simply, in the most direct language that could be used, makes the statement, "Therefore ought the woman to have power over her head." The King James' marginal rendering makes this mean, "Therefore ought the woman to have a covering on her head, in sign that she is under the power of her husband." No such manipulation of the word "power" is attempted, nor would it be considered allowable anywhere else in the sacred text. For instance, the exact word for "power" and the same preposition for "over" occur in Rev. 2:26, "He that overcometh . . . to him will I give 'power over' the nations." Let us try to imagine that this means, "He that overcometh to him will I give a sign that he is under the power of nations," and we find ourselves trying to imagine a contradiction to what the sacred text says.

Again Rev. 14:18 and Rev. 20:6 have exactly the same words as this tenth verse of the eleventh of I. Corinthians for "power over." Let us try to force a similar meaning into them. We must then read, "And another angel came out from the altar which had a sign that he was under the power of fire." That is quite contrary to the exact interpretation "which had power over fire." Then in Rev. 20:6 we read, "on such the second death hath no power;" shall we make that read "the second death hath no sign that it is under the power of such," i. e., those of the first resurrection? That makes an astonishing alteration in the sense.

For these reasons I fully concur with Bishop Lightfoot who says of this verse, "It is to be inquired whether 'to have power' does not properly, yea, always denote to have power in one's own hand, not a power above one; as Matt. 7:27, John 19:10, I. Cor. 7:39, I. Cor. 9:4, and elsewhere a thousand times," and with Dean Stanley who is bound, after all, to admit, "exousia in the earlier epistles does not mean 'dominion,' but 'right' or 'liberty,'" and I declare with Bishop Lightfoot my unwavering belief that the apostle distinctly states exactly what he means, namely, that women have "the right" or "liberty" to veil or unveil, and the reason given for that liberty is expressed in the phrase "because of the angels" whatever that may mean. In Bishop Lightfoot's words we would say then, "she hath free power in her own hands" over her own head to veil or unveil as she pleases.

Now the next perplexing point is to ascertain the meaning of the expression "because of the angels." There are wide differences of opinions on this point. Dean Stanley asserts that it means that women have been, in the past, a source of temptation to lustful thoughts to the angels; and were really the cause of the fall of the angels (!) which must rest upon the astonishing theory (which he does not even mention) that the angels are all males and are creatures of sex. We admit that the pronoun "he" is used of angels, but that proves little; Jesus calls himself constantly the Son of Man, when in truth, from the human standpoint, He was the Son of woman only.

Further, Jesus said that in heaven "they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels," which we supposed meant—not female nor male but sexless. Others assert (and this is the commonest interpretation) that angels are present at divine service who will note whether the women wear veils or not, and conscientious women who accept this interpretation are left to feel the terror of that statement which must be greatly enhanced by the fact that the theologians disagree as to whether they ought or ought not to wear veils. Says Cook's Commentary, "If a woman be so lost to sense of shame that she shrinks not in church from the public eye, let her fear the mournful gaze of these divine sentinels." But no one seems to think in these days that the women in the church choir who are often one step higher in conspicuous position than even the minister, need fear "the mournful gaze of these divine sentinels" when they sing unveiled, nor does the commentator offer any proof to show that the woman "who shrinks not from the public eye" is, after all, "lost to sense of shame" in anything she should really be ashamed of.

There is a great deal of this taking it for granted that what men may do most properly, only women "lost to sense of shame" will do—but there is small proof of two standards of morality in the Word of Him with whom "there is no respect of persons," and "neither male nor female." Webster and Wilkinson say, "Then [that is, in heaven] the distinction of sex shall cease; so now in their [the angels'] presence and company let the inferior sex merge as it were into the superior, [by vanishing behind their veils into oblivion and silence] let men present in appearance the human worship, the women in the men."

But this sort of oneness answers better the prejudices of the surviving than the vanishing one. I have seen such a sinking of the "distinction of sex" into oneness. Having secured a pair of spiders of a rare species, I put them into a box to chloroform them, but upon opening the box found one very wide, important-looking spider left. "They two" had become "one flesh." I observed that this sort of oneness tended greatly to the enlargement of the survivor.

Dr. Taylor suggests yet another interpretation. "The men upon sundry occasions sent messengers to these female assemblies; and these messengers, coming in the name of their husbands, brought in a sense their authority with them; on which account the women ought to observe a just decorum as if their husbands were present."

But another, and we believe the preferable interpretation of the expression "because of the angels," is "because of the messengers" sent as spies. "Angel" and "messenger" are the same word in Greek. And "angels" or "messengers" is translated "spies" in the Septuagint translation of Joshua 6:25, where it speaks of "the messengers which Joshua sent to spy out Jericho." These "messengers" are also called "spies" in Hebrews 11:31. They are mentioned as "messengers" or "angels" again in James 2:25. This meaning (spies) as equivalent in this passage to "angels," is given in Schleusner's lexicon and supported by many eminent authorities. The apostle Paul speaks of trouble from false brethren who came "to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus," (Gal. 2:4), and it is not improbable that Saul of Tarsus, the persecutor of the early disciples, Acts 9:3, was such an "angel" or "spy."

That the word "angels" may in this connection be "spies," seems to us much more probable than that they were "messengers of espousal," as Bishop Lightfoot claims, for we have given examples of this use of the words as equivalents to each other from both the Old and New Testament Greek, whereas there is no example of the meaning "messengers of espousals" ever having been equivalent to "angels," in either the New or Old Testament.

London, Eng.

THE POLYGLOT PETITION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am here at Hot Springs, Arkansas, nature's cure-all sanitarium, in attendance upon a sick and crippled son, and trying meantime in these hot baths to get rid of the cold that has threatened pneumonia and la grippe for weeks past, and coughed me almost to death.

While shut in between these "ragged hills" thought has roamed at will, taking in the whole domain of our labor, our hopes and fears and prayers.

I see that the great Polyglot Petition is to begin its "round the world" journey in February, when Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and other white-ribboners will present it to our own Congress; and next spring it will be presented to the British Parliament, and so on to the great powers of the earth.

In proportion to the number of white-ribboners, the United States presents the smallest number of names on the Petition. For this, we shall all feel a little sore and sorry. Why should any other country outdo the country in which the white ribbon leader who originated the Petition lives? Why should any other body of white-ribboners outstrip the National W. C. T. U., who is the mother of them all? There is no doubt that in securing temperance teaching in public schools and Sunday-schools, in wresting from ofttimes unwilling legislatures, laws for the protection of little boys from the poison narcotics, and little girls from the poisoner lust of evil men our women are "tired out." No other body of white-ribboners in all the world has accomplished so much in all these lines as the National W. C. T. U.

But, because we have done more than any other country in all these lines, is the very strongest reason why we should not allow any other country to outdo us in this Great Petition which is bound to become a matter of history for all the future.

It is not too late to make up our record. I have issued a circular letter to all unions and to all friends of temperance in Missouri, asking them to cut out the Petition from THE UNION SIGNAL, paste it on long sheets of paper and begin in every church in the state. Ask the pastor to read the Petition and explain that it is to be presented in February to our own government, next to Great Britain in the spring.

Then he will ask all in the audience who will assent to this most reasonable Petition to rise and be counted. The pastor himself will then record on petition that "three hundred and fifty persons in the M. E. church of —— did subscribe to this Petition." Thus without labor thousands of names may be obtained in one single Sabbath. Of course many other names may be obtained by solicitation, as time, strength and opportunity permit.

If all states would make this effort through the churches for the next four weeks our numbers on petitions will not be smaller proportionately than other countries.

The effort can so easily be made, shall we not try it? Then our restored and beloved leader could not say so sadly of her American women, "It is the one thing in which they have not come up to my hopes." We need not fail in anything, and we shall not fail, if we will only make the effort, and make it at once.

I appeal to all state presidents and to all local presidents to try this plan (unless they can suggest a better one) through January and the first week in February.

Try it in all the churches, and in all sorts of public assemblies where good and true temperance people gather. Try it with individuals so far as time and opportunity permit, but we can swell the numbers chiefly at the public meeting.

We ought not to allow any country to surpass us in this historic deed, and no country can surpass us unless we sit supinely with folded hands and let them do it. Our national pride should forbid that.

We can change all the record and stand at the head if only we will make a strong, united and decisive effort through the next few weeks.

Shall we make the effort? How many say "yes"? How many will do as well as say?

Hot Springs, Ark. CLARA C. HOFFMAN.

DEAR FELLOW SOLDIERS:—I attended a revival service last night in a locality where white-ribboners are in force. It thrilled me to watch our earnest-faced sisters as they worked. When the leader said "come" they were ready; when he said "pray" their voices were not lagging, when he said "speak" their words were quick, to the point, urgent. I said to myself, "They are typical white-ribboners and the secret of their power is the secret of the power of our whole army: Ready obedience. First, obedience to the Highest, then prompt following of every good call whether it be from the voice of the Spirit within or from without. It takes as much "grace, grit and gumption" to follow as it does to lead.

Some of us are growing old in the service. We regret that some day not far off we must lay down our activities. Who shall take them up? Our thoughts turn trustfully and joyfully to our reserve force in

THE LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION.

The Crusade swept into line what men would call "raw recruits." Their newness to the march was supplemented by special grace from God, and they went forward as heroes. Now, the little feet are catching the step and we find ourselves pressing forward lest the younger soldiers be hindered.

Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National superintendent of the L. T. L. work, has issued a leaflet for her aids from which I want to quote a paragraph in case some of our readers may not otherwise see it:

"One of the most important decisions made in regard to our work for the coming year was for the creation of a normal department for the development and training of L. T. L. superintendents and teachers. Mrs. Bradbury, of Wisconsin, from whom have come so many bright ideas for our work, gives us this plan: Each W. C. T. U. and Y is asked to constitute itself a normal class for the study of L. T. L. lessons and methods. If the union as a whole does not care to adopt this method, let all who are willing to do so, band themselves into such a class.

"As the class grows in numbers and interest special talents will develop; some women will be found best fitted to teach the very little ones, some the older juniors, some the seniors. Each class may work toward the gathering of a choice library for its own use. We believe that the members of the normal class 'will grow in thought and heart and lofty purpose,' that the oft-repeated question, 'How can we make our regular W. C. T. U. meetings interesting?' will be in a large degree answered, and the painfully frequent wail, 'We can find no leader for the L. T. L.,' will give way to the song of thanksgiving that the union is permitted to minister to Christ in the person of the children for whom He showed such tender care."

DEPARTMENT OF MERCY.

Many questions arise as to what is allowable in the matter of dress and what is not, such as, "If wearing feathers involves cruelty, where are we to stop? Must they not be used at all?" No doubt the difficulty is a genuine one. Mrs. Mary F. Lovell, National superintendent of the department, gives the following answer:

"In the present state of our civilization the production of much that we need is attended with more or less cruelty, yet some of the things produced seem to be necessaries for which as yet no substitutes have been invented. We must look at these matters honestly and conscientiously, and with the exercise of common sense. Articles which are chosen for their beauty, and which something else could replace, should be done without if procuring them causes cruelty or a waste of innocent life. The same rule seems to apply in the case of food. There is enough to eat without using food which is procured through torture of living creatures. It is true that in many cases it is possible to do the killing with little suffering, but if it is not so done, a question seems to arise which each must answer as conscience dictates. And it may be asked what claim any one of us has to the possession of humane and merciful sentiment who does not take some time to investigate the sources of food and dress supply, and who will not endure what conscience may impose as a result of discovery. As a result of my own investigation I have felt that I cannot consistently wear some articles of dress or adornment, but must find substitutes. Through the literature of the department I shall try to enlighten others. The rest is with their consciences. The reading of the book 'Animals' Rights' was the final cause of my discontinuance of the use of meat. After a trial of more than a year, I find no diminution of health, but rather improvement."

W. C. T. U. LIBRARIES.

A letter that has just come to Mother Experience says: "Our union has bought 'A Great Mother' to use in connection with our mothers' meetings, and it is to be the nucleus of a W. C. T. U. library later on." There are hosts of unions that have never even dreamed of owning a library, and yet such a thing is not unattainable. A Bible, THE UNION SIGNAL, National and state minutes, the state W. C. T. U. paper, the local newspaper, a copy of the state laws, could all be procured by a little pains and very slight expense. Set the "wits" of the union to work, arrange an attractive "book" entertainment, admission to be the donation of at least one good book. Have a children's corner in your library, so that when mother brings the child to "meeting" there may be something good for the tender mind to feed upon when abstruse questions are discussed by older heads.

All the way from Virginia comes the cry, "Please tell me through your paper what you think of a W. C. T. U. honorary member wearing the white ribbon and SMOKING CIGARETTES?"

Ephraim is joined to his idols most surely. The white ribbon is an outward sign of the wearer's obedience to the command, "Keep thyself pure." Our National pledge says nothing about cigarettes, but they ought to go without saying. A smoking honorary is no honor, and after due warning and persuasion ought to give up his cigarette or his badge. The smoke habit is only a remove from the drink habit. Both are perversion of appetite; both are hurtful to body and brain; both are unclean; both are intemperate; both are unmanly and unChristian.

We now come to the third and last account of the

RIPLEY MOTHERS' MEETINGS.

"There were fifty ladies assembled at the church parlor for the June mothers' meeting. The subject was 'Generosity, how cultivated? Selfishness, how eradicated?' Our president selected for her Scripture reading the third chapter of I. John. A short season of prayer was followed by the discussion of the subject.

"Some of the thoughts advanced were as follows:

"True generosity must embody love. Some who are conscientious in appropriating a definite portion of their means to charity, do not feel that this includes anything but actual need, and thus pass by many opportunities of cheering and lightening the burdens of those to whom some little luxury which they cannot afford would be a real blessing. Another class are always giving and doing for others, but will not permit others to do for them, and thus are selfish in not allowing others to participate in the blessing of giving, as shown in the text, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.' Lavishness is not necessarily generosity. Some people give as they talk, freely and constantly, but wholly for their own enjoyment.

"Parents should train their children to feel that thoughtless giving which involves no self-denial is not real generosity, and also that they must be just as well as generous. One should not be constantly making presents while his family want for many things, or his debts remain unpaid.

"One practical form of generosity was recommended, viz.: that people open their homes more to homeless young men and girls, who are found in such large numbers in our towns and cities.

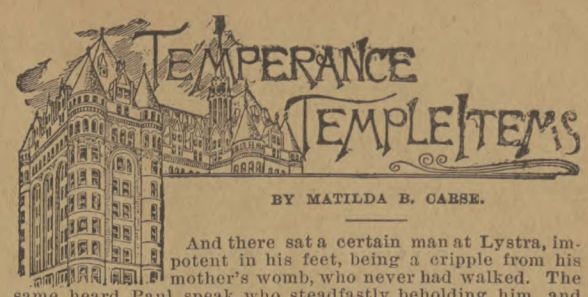
"The desire of many young people to evade whatever they 'do not feel like doing,' was strongly denounced, and mothers urged to enforce their commands and requests.

"The question was asked whether mothers are not sometimes too generous, and thus allow their children to outgrow them in the advanced education and in the literary and musical pursuits. In the discussion which followed one prominent thought was that the children should be expected to share their pleasures, concerts, etc., with their mothers. If the pocketbook will not allow all the family to attend these, the mother should have her share with the rest. Even babies should be encouraged to share with mother, who, for the sake of the child's future, must be willing to take the little favors.

"Some experiences with little children were given, and questions asked from some who were puzzled as to the best way to proceed with the two or three-year-olds, for some of whom it is much harder to be generous than for others. One mother said she thought children should give from principle and with a good motive, being instructed in regard to the duty as well as privilege. The outcome of all the discussion brought us back to the seed thought given at the beginning of the meeting, that true generosity must be from love, and only as we cultivate love in our own and our children's hearts shall we see that generosity which seeks the happiness and comfort of others. 'Love seeketh not her own.'"

If ever there was a work and labor of love it is that done in the interest of God and Home and Native Land.

MOTHER EXPERIENCE.



BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked. The same heard Paul speak who steadfastly beholding him, and perceiving he had faith to be healed, said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet, and he leaped and walked.—Acts 14: 8, 9, 10.

Already answers have been received to the appeal for a tablet in Willard Hall to the memory of the beloved and talented secretary of the World's and National W. C. T. U., Mary A. Woodbridge. Miss Cornelia M. Dow, daughter of our "grand old man," Neal Dow, encloses a dollar and writes: "I saw your appeal in last week's UNION SIGNAL for a tablet to the memory of Mary A. Woodbridge. I want to add my mite to the fund as I greatly admired her in every phase of her life." Under same date (December 31) Lelia E. Johnson, Toledo, O., writes: "I certainly think the name of Mary A. Woodbridge should be on the walls of Willard Hall. I would like to be the one to start a subscription for such a memorial. Enclosed find $2 for that purpose; wish it was ten times as much but it is all I can do just now." Miss M. A. Gould, of Urquepaugh, R. I., sends twenty cents and writes that it is to be applied on a tablet fund for Mrs. Woodbridge. We hope a large number of the admirers of this great and good woman will consider it a privilege to send loving tributes towards the memorial.

***

Two letters lie before me, one from Massachusetts and the other from New York; one pledges $1,000 to the Temple, the other $500. This surely is auspicious for the opening of the new year. There are thousands among our white-ribboners that could subscribe equally large sums to insure to us the ownership of the Temple if they only would. Will they not send along their names and pledges? We must raise at least $300,000 for the Temple this year. So many have written urging us to renew the offer made last year of giving a Temple souvenir silver teaspoon to all persons who fill a mite-box during 1895 that we have decided to do so. The limit is January 1, 1896. This offer will not hold good to those who have taken the boxes out for 1894. We give them a month's grace. The contents of all boxes ordered during the past year must be returned to us by February 1st, if persons holding them desire to secure a souvenir spoon, after that date the offer will be void. There are still over two thousand boxes out for 1894. Will our friends kindly try to get their contents to us by the first of the month; by so doing they will greatly aid the Temple and secure for themselves the beautiful spoon, which is so greatly admired and of which Mrs. D. L. Muckleman, Hannibal, O., says, "I think it very beautiful, it more than repays me for the sacrifices I made to fill my box." Mrs. T. W. Alston, East Orange, N. J., writes, "We consider the Temple spoon a great addition to our collection." In next week's paper we will tell our friends, old and young, who have no money of their own to give, how they can help the Temple and at the same time secure for themselves a nice gift.

***

Mrs. Emma C. Bascom, wife of Professor Bascom, Williams College, Mass., writes: "Please find enclosed a check for $4. I shall receive the souvenir teaspoon with pleasure and thanks. It is always a grief to me that I can have only so small a share in this great monumental work of woman's faith and devotion. Untold blessings to humanity will yet evolve from the Temple." An aged saint, Mrs. Charlotte F. Woodman, Cambridge, Mass., is over eighty years old. She is crippled from a broken hip, shoulder and wrists; added to all this, failing eyesight and hearing. Yet with all these disabilities this good woman has written a long and sympathetic letter enclosing $15, and a pledge for something far greater. What a blessed thing it is that the soul can soar above the weakness of the body, forget self and hold out a helping hand to aid in bringing the world nearer the loving heart of Christ. Miss Mary C. Douglass, East Hamilton, N. Y., sends a check for $100 to place the name of her loved and honored mother, Mrs. Abigail Douglass, on the New York tablet in Willard Hall. She pledged her sister on her deathbed to send the said amount for the above purpose during the month of December, 1894. Miss Douglass also pledges to place her sister's name there also. "I do want to contribute my widow's mite," writes Mrs. M. H. Avery, Le Roy, Minn., "towards our House Beautiful, where souls are being saved from sin and gathered into the fold of Christ. I have resolved to send out of my very small income the required amount to obtain one of the Temple souvenir spoons and herewith enclose $3.65."

***

Mr. William D. Preston has severed his connection with the Metropolitan National Bank and has gone to Michigan to live, consequently the Temple Trustees have had to elect another treasurer. They have appointed Mr. G. B. Shaw, president of the American Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago, who assumed the office January 1. All checks in future should be made out in his name and sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, the Temple.

***

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who sends the contents of a mite-box, amounting to $3.65, by February 1, 1895, will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir.

***

All persons wishing to fill a mite-box during 1895 for the purpose of securing a spoon, should send their name and address to Miss Johnson. If any have boxes and would prefer to use them, simply send the name and address, that they may be properly recorded.

CALLING THE ANGELS IN.

We mean to do it. Some day, some day,
We mean to slacken this fevered rush
That is wearing our very souls away,
And grant to our goaded hearts a hush
That is holy enough to let them hear
The footsteps of angels drawing near.

We mean to do it. Oh, never doubt,
When the burden of daytime broil is o'er
We'll sit and muse, while the stars come out,
As the patriarch sat at the open door
Of his tent, with a heavenward gazing eye,
To watch for the angels passing by.

We've seen them afar at high noontide,
When fiercely the world's hot flashings beat,
Yet never have bidden them turn aside
And tarry awhile in converse sweet,
Nor prayed them to hallow the cheer we spread,
To drink of our wine and break our bread.

We promised our hearts that when the stress
Of the life-work reaches the longed for close—
When the weight that we groan with hinders less,
We'll loosen our thoughts to such repose
As banishes care's disturbing din,
And then—we'll call the angels in.

The day that we dreamed of comes at length,
When, tired of every mocking quest,
And broken in spirit and shorn in strength,
We drop, indeed, at the door of rest,
And wait and watch as the day wanes on—
But the angels we meant to call are gone.

—Selected.

MRS. BLAKE'S W. C. T. U. TEA.

BY FLORENCE HIGGINSON.

"I'm tired to death of these card parties. Here we've played once a week all winter, and what has it availed?"

So said Mrs. Blake as she sat down in an easy chair before the grate without removing her wraps.

"Well, Gertrude," answered her husband, sleepily, "do you know the hour? Suppose we retire, and you take to-morrow to 'turn your searchlight' upon your winter's card playing."

Mr. Blake had a playful way of calling his wife's serious moods "turning the searchlight," for she had always been so gay of spirits that he did not quite understand the more thoughtful manifestations in her character. Nothing in life had hitherto seemed very grave to her.

At the breakfast table the next morning Mr. Blake referred to the remarks made by his wife the night before. "So you're tired of cards. What will the club do without us?"

"There are only two more meetings; we will attend those, but after this I am going to do something else. Mrs. Thornton was here a few days ago and asked me to join the W. C. T. U. She told me of the good work they were doing, but how much they needed earnest and intelligent women to help. I have decided that there is much more in the world to live for than just society friends."

Mr. Blake had never given much thought to the W. C. T. U., and was rather surprised to hear his wife talk in this way, but he only said as he kissed her good-by, "Very well, dear, just as you say."

The truth was Mr. Blake was much more interested in his business than he was in social life, but had always attended with pleasure anything that his wife suggested. He was the president of the largest bank in a prosperous young city of Kansas, and was filled with the push and enterprise that characterizes young business men of the West.

Mrs. Blake watched her husband down the walk, went slowly back, and took the same comfortable chair she had thrown herself into the night before upon her return from the card party. She was thinking of a family of whom Mrs. Thornton had been telling her. The husband had died of strong drink. The oldest son, a young man of twenty, was following in his father's footsteps, and the mother, almost broken-hearted, had hardly the courage to go on with the battle of life. She was poor as such mothers are, but had told Mrs. Thornton if she could only raise money by selling her furniture she would take her family to her own home in the east, where she would be among old friends. There her boy would be surrounded by new influences which she hoped would win him away from the downward path he was now following.

This tale of trouble had awakened serious thoughts in Mrs. Blake's mind. After a time she went over to Mrs. Thornton's. They had an earnest talk and before the younger woman left, she had formulated a plan. She would give a W. C. T. U. tea. The following day she sent out her cards, bearing the words:

Mrs. Thomas Blake. At home. Thursday afternoon, W. C. T. U. Tea, 5 to 11.

Her tea was a success socially and financially, for her friends were so taken by surprise at this new departure that they flocked to her home to see her in the new role of patroness of the W. C. T. U.

. . . . . .

The mother was sent home to her eastern friends and a small balance left in the treasury.

The local union received a new impetus. In course of time, Mrs. Blake became its president.

So much for one woman who responded to an earnest word and the promptings of a still, small voice, urging her on to a more noble and useful life.

Chicago, Ill.

TOBACCO: RIGHTS OF NON-USERS.

BY WM. A. MC CLEAN.

Liberty is a much abused word. It is the cloak under which license and lawlessness stalk about upon the earth. "Is not this a free country? Cannot one do as he please?" is the query of man as he treads upon the toes of many of his fellows, "enjoying life," as he calls it.

What then is liberty? Surely such freedom of action as harms no other individual.

The tobacco habit is a national and—masculine one. It is expensive, and often enjoyed at the expense of wife, children and other dependents. It is a dirty habit, as ninety-nine out of a hundred users will concede. Ask, argue, advise that it be conquered for such reasons, and what reply will be received? Either a laugh, or that the user is old enough to judge for himself and knows what he is doing; that he enjoys it and it is nobody's business. Anger often supplies an answer that reason cannot give.

Non-users should ever insist in every legitimate way, and upon all appropriate occasions for their rights.

At the very outstart certain concessions will be granted to the smoker or chewer: The right to expend as much money on tobacco as he wishes, so that the expense is not at cost of wife, children, creditors and other dependents; the privilege of making himself as filthy as he desires, so he does not intrude his foulness on others; also the liberty to waste time and paint the inner man with a coat of nicotine. While all this is conceded, it is done with the limitation that this right, privilege or liberty of the individual must be so exercised as not to interfere with the rights and freedom of any other individual.

Does any one doubt that smoking in public interferes with the freedom of others? The streets, stores, public buildings and conveyances are for the use of the entire population, no one portion of which has a better right to them than another. One-half of the adult population are women, who are non-users; a portion of the male population are non-users; children are non-users. To the great mass of these the odor of tobacco is an assault upon their sense of smell, a sickening, loathsome nuisance; to many it is injurious. The non-user goes into public places aware of her or his equal right to the free fresh air of heaven with all other creatures, but that air which is her or his birthright is tobacco tainted, even to being poisonous.

Knock the cigar from a smoker's mouth and he is assaulted, and may call law to avenge his insult. A whiff of tobacco from the mouth of that same smoker in the face of a non-user is a more grievous assault but passes without comment or redress. Of all comparisons and distinctions the legal are often the most absurd. Slaughtering houses and phosphate warehouses are removed as nuisances, by mandate of law, far from crowded habitations; but the same crowded populations that are relieved from such odors must endure the nuisance of all grades of cigars, obnoxious pipes and vile cigarettes, to say nothing of befouled streets.

For a man to go along the street recklessly puffing and blowing great clouds of smoke over his shoulder into the faces of other persons having an equal right with him to the public thoroughfares, is clear lawlessness. Such an one is without any conception of respect for the rights of humanity. The "liberty" of the tobacco user is lawlessness which no custom, precedent or long-suffering can make right and just.

If the rights of non-users were respected, it would not be necessary for a woman to ask as a favor that a man throw away his cigar in a street-car or in a closed omnibus where one man has been known to torture half a dozen women.

Let users be taught the lesson of respect for the rights of fellow members of society. It may be a slow education, but it is surely possible of accomplishment, for most men wish to be just.

As the user is learning the lesson of the rights of non-users he will possibly continue to smoke, but it would be in private, on his own premises. To avoid trampling upon the rights and freedom of wife and children to equally enjoy the home, the husband would relegate the cigar to the yard, or a well ventilated apartment at the top of the house.

If the user can ever reach this point, there is hope for him. The present concern should be to educate as to the freedom of the individual to inhale air pure and life-giving as heaven bestows it. This is right and just.

Gettysburg, Pa.

THE BANQUET BOARD.

BY S. J. UNDERWOOD.

Eating belongs undoubtedly to the animal part of our nature, but the manner of eating reveals the degree of refinement. The Germans employ two verbs to express the taking of food, one for man and one for beast, and at any table where there still lingers the idea of feeding, there also lingers that which tends to debase; so it seems evident that to keep a boarding-house must be a demoralizing employment, where one on a mere mercenary basis constantly ministers to the lower life.

May it not be then, because the table marks the triumph of civilization, the evolution of delicacy from grossness, as well as because it promotes sociability, that the banquet occupies the high place of honor in the domain of hospitality?

At the ideal banquet there is eating, of course, but it is wholly subordinate; the pleasures of sense are but the substructure hidden by the pleasures of mind and soul; one is expected not only to be delighted but to be delightful. He must bring to the feast his best and brightest. Here poetry and eloquence twine their garlands, grace and grandeur clasp hands and wit menaces wisdom with flashing sword.

To be bidden to such a board is not the lot of all. But there might be a daily banquet spread in every house more inspiring than even these where the gods do assemble. There are many whose life like that of Mr. Mantalini, is one "horrid grind"; many, who though striving bravely to keep step, miss

"The music of the march of life."

Even in houses where there is gentle breeding and noble aspiration, the evening meal is often little more than a necessary operation that must be completed as speedily as possible. The head of the house looks over his mail or dips into the newspaper; the mother is removing with imaginary fingers the soiled dishes that she may get back to her sewing-machine; the children hasten through the meal, impatient to clasp again doll or ball; the youth is in a hurry to join his companions.

If this daily meeting could be made a joyful reunion, an intellectual stimulus, it would be a "brook by the way" that would make many a weary wife and mother lift up her head and walk onward with glad feet.

The first step in the inauguration of the banquet would be the absence of haste. It must be an event sufficient to hold its own among crowding circumstances. It must be planned for. Each member of the family must contribute a share of the mental repast; the father can find something of interest in his business day, the mother in hers, even if it be nothing more than a whimsical account of some domestic convulsion; the children can bring in pictures of glowing life from school and street and tennis court. The very fact that something is expected will render eyes keen and minds observant and add a zest to existence. Simple programs might be made out; a character given for discussion, or a new poem or invention; politics, reforms, religion might all find room. Fun, nonsense even, should have a large place, it will prove alluring to the younger members of the family and enliven the older and graver. Especially should the atmosphere be warm with appreciation and good fellowship. Elegant napery and transparent china are beyond the reach of all, but there may be an influence more refining than outward beauty and luxury. The food may be plain, but it can be seasoned with Attic salt.

"Let each guest bring himself, and he brings the best dish."

A man cannot bring about such a repast, neither can a woman, even though she be one of those wonderful creatures who always greet their husbands with a smile; but together a man and woman can compass it. It will be the oasis, living and green, which shall cheer the traveler in his daily march through the desert; it will draw still tighter the cords of affection; it will give home a new attraction, and furnish many an hour which will be radiant in memory in the days when death shall have broken in on the family group, and time scattered it far and wide.

Syracuse, N. Y.

"We ought to have our conscience so trained that it will trouble us at night when we have failed that day to read or pray."

THE FATHER'S LESSON.

A little lad sat in his own high chair,
Blue were his eyes and golden his hair;
But the sunny smile had flown from his face,
And an ugly frown had taken its place.

The table was laden with dainty food,
But nothing could tempt his naughty mood;
His tumbler sparkled with water clear,
While that of his father was filled with beer.

There lay the grievance; and soon he said
(With a saucy toss of his curly head:)
"I mean to grow up as fast as I can,
And I'll always drink beer when I'm a man!"

But the mother's cheek grew blanched with fear,
And she glanced from her boy to the glass of beer;
Till now it had only a beverage been,
But her eyes were opened, and lurking within

She saw germs of folly and crime,
Rapidly swelling 'neath the touch of time;
Hiding all trace of a once good name,
Reveling in a drunkard's shame.

She glanced at her husband; his face was sad,
The willful words of his little lad
Had reached his heart; and he stopped to think:
"O God! am I tempting my boy to drink?

"In me it awakens no craving for more,
And stronger spirits I loathe and abhor;
But my son may be tempted though I be strong,
And through my example he may go wrong.

"Please God, he shall never be able to say—
'I began to love it when, day by day,
I saw my father his tumbler fill,
And knew that in him it worked no ill.'"

Then, meeting the anxious gaze of his wife,
"Will you join," said he, "in a pledge for life,
For the sake of our child, and because it is right
To shield his life from drink's curse and blight?"

So the pledge was signed; and that lurking fear
Vanished for aye with the glass of beer.
And the boy grew up to make them blest,
And took for his motto, "water is best."

—K. E. C.

GYPSIE LINNETT.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

(Concluded.)

Just about noon on the third day, we boys went out into the shed where mother couldn't hear us talk. I knew she would be sick again unless I could get something for her to eat, so I said I'd steal bread or meat, if I couldn't get it any other way.

Mother had always said it was wrong to lie and steal, and when I told Tim my scheme, the little chap cried, and said he wished we were all dead—he "didn't want to steal and he didn't want mother to starve." Neither did I, but I was sure God would rather have me steal than have us die for want of bread.

We went back into the house, and do you know, we were ashamed to look at each other, and ashamed to have our mother look at us. The sun was shining on Gypsie's cage as I went in, and I thought he looked at me as if he were saying, "Shame, little boys, shame!"

Just then he commenced to sing, the first time since he had been in our house. I sat down to listen. It was such a happy song. Mother turned her head on the pillow to hear it. He sang as if he was so glad he couldn't help it, and the notes tumbled over each other in his hurry. Somehow I began to think of the time when I was a real little fellow, and Tim was a baby. You see, we had a canary bird then, and his cage used to hang just where Gypsie's hung. I remembered how pretty the room was then. There were mother's plants in the window, and pretty white curtains. But plants and curtains were gone, and father had sold all the nice things for drink. Then when Gypsie changed his loud song to a low twitter, I remembered how mother used to take me on her knee every night and hear me say, "Now I lay me," and "Our Father." I had almost forgotten them. Gypsie took a seed in his bill with a low tweet! cheep! just the way Dickie did at night before he put his head under his wing. I tried to say the prayer over. "Our Father who art in heaven." "If He is our Father why does He let mother and us boys"—cheep, cheep, t-r-r-rrr! Chipper, sweet!" It seemed wicked to think that way when Gypsie was singing so sweetly. "Give us this day our daily bread," was the next piece I remembered. "Tweet! Cheep! Swe-e-e-t!" and then Gypsie commenced to sing again as if his bit of a throat would burst. I listened a minute more, and then all the wicked thoughts went right away. I wonder how?

"Come here, Tim," I said. "I guess we won't go steal. Maybe some one will send us something to eat. Perhaps father has found work. Don't cry, little chap! Gyp isn't afraid of starving and we won't be—yet awhile."

I went over to mother and kissed her. We had all forgotten how to be nice to each other for a long time, and when I did that, mother put her arms around me. Then Tim came, and we three cried a little bit, while Gypsie twittered low as if he could understand and was sorry for us. We got warmer lying cuddled close together and felt a little bit better.

After awhile the door opened, and father came in. We knew by the look on his face that he was not drunk; we almost hoped he would be, because then he was not so cruel to us.

Just as he got into the middle of the room Gypsie broke out singing harder than ever. Father cursed and swore, but the spunky little fellow puffed out his feathers, put his head on one side and sang away.

"William, don't you remember our old Dickie?" said mother.

Nearly always when father came home sober so he could understand mother would scold him hard about things.

Then he would go out and drink more. But this time her voice sounded ever so pleasant, and father sat down without saying a word.

"Twee-e-e-t! Twitter!' Swee-e-t! Trrrr!" and off went that Gypsie again swinging on his perch and twisting his head about as if he were wild with joy.

Father turned round so quick he scared me. "Here, Bill," he said, "go and get a loaf of bread, and some meat. Guess there's enough money there for something else. Have you had any tea this morning, Maggie?"

Poor mother could not speak. She hid her face in Tim's curls. I wasn't afraid any more, but went away fast enough to buy the things. When I came back, mother was sitting up with Tim on her lap, the fire was lighted (I guess father had to break up an old chair for wood), Gypsie was singing harder than ever, and pretty soon we all sat down to a real good dinner.

From that day we had better and better times. I never quite understood it, but I do believe God made Reenie's bird help in some way, don't you? At any rate we all love him, and will neither starve, give away nor sell our little Gypsie Linnett.

Chicago, Ill.

USEFUL FACTS TO KNOW.

To light a candle, hold the match to the side of the wick, and not to the top. Remember that flame always travels upward.

Do not meddle with fire. But, if by any accident your clothing catches fire, try to have enough presence of mind to throw yourself on the ground, instead of allowing the flame to travel upward to your face and head. But few lives would be lost by fire, if this direction could be remembered and carried out.—Selected.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

374.

DIAMOND.

1. A consonant. 2. Not old. 3. A precious stone. 4. A grand old man. 5. Sorrowfully. 6. The present time. 7. A consonant.

The centers down and across, a grand temperance worker. MABEL DOROTHY.

375.

PI.

"Os ighn si nardugre ot ruo sudt,
Os aren si odg ot anm.
Newh udyt hwsieprs olw, tuoh smut,
Hte oytuh preiles, 'I nac.'"

ALICE BROOKINGS.

376.

CHARADE.

My first is a color. My second is a vowel. My third is not high. My whole is the name of a large city.

EDITH M. THORNTON.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED DECEMBER 20.

366. Time, hear, chime, near; wall, gay, all, day; wild, day, child, lay; take, sad, make, glad.

367. A merry heart maketh a continual feast.

368.

C h e r u B
H o s t e L
R e s c u E
I d e a l S
S e r i e S
T h o m o I
M u l l e N
A g o i n G
S e n s e S

Correct answers: Genevieve C. Williams.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—One of the leading pastors in New York recently told the following interesting incident:

"So long as you have to stop and think to do right, you are very imperfectly educated. Two boys were going up the stairs of a Cincinnati factory; there was a pail of naphtha on the landing. One boy threw his lighted cigarette into the pail, thinking it water; there was a flash of upleaping flame. One of the boys ran down the stairs into the street to escape; the other boy ran up the stairs to warn women who were working there that they might escape. Neither boy thought; each boy acted instinctively; one boy was a coward in his sub-conscious life, the other boy was a hero in his sub-conscious life, and neither of them knew it. We are not what we try to be, we are not what we think we are; we are what we are down below the line of our thought, below our conscious life-purpose."

Do you understand what the preacher meant, dear Cozy Cornerers? "We are what we are down below the line of our thought, below our conscious life-purpose." It's very simple after all—it's character. There is not one of you who would not rather have been in the place of the heroic boy—the one who saved others' lives—than to have cowardly ran away.

Each day of this new year will bring an opportunity for you to build upon your foundation character. Thoughtful acts, kindness, self-control, obedience to God's commands just a little day by day until without knowing it you have built your house upon a rock and have become a real Christian hero.

Affectionately your

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

I have often thought I would write to you. I will be thirteen years old Christmas. My papa is a Prohibitionist and mamma is a white-ribboner. I have one brother and two sisters. My brother and I have never tasted cider and we never expect to use tobacco. We expect to vote for Prohibition if we live to vote. We live on a fruit farm about sixty miles from New York. I would like to receive a letter from some of the nephews of the Cozy Corner. Will you please let me join the Cozy Corner?

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to all.

Your new friend,
HARRY ALBERTSON.

Hope, N. J.

Nephews, attention! Give this new cousin a cheery welcome and many a letter of greeting from Cozy Cornerers.

---

I would like to belong to your Cozy Corner. Papa is a Prohibitionist and mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. There are quite a number of saloons here, I am sorry to say. I am ten years old. I have one sister and two brothers. For a pet I have a cat. Your friend,

ETHEL MOORE.

Huntington, Ind.

I know yours must be a temperance cat, so we invite him into Cozy Corner, too.

---

I hope women can vote when I get big enough. I am nine years old. This is my first letter to you. I live with my grandma and she takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I like to read the Cozy Corner. DOT BURNETT.

Delaware, O.

There's no doubt but what you'll have your wish, little niece; and what will you do with the ballot?

---

I wrote a letter to Neal Dow on his ninetieth birthday and received a letter in return. I hope I will be like Frances E. Willard when I grow up. Mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I love to read it. My brother and sister are both temperance. My kitten's name is Toots. I am nine years old. HALLIE LUND.

Medina, N. Y.

Perhaps you may not be a Frances Willard when you grow up, but you can be that kind of a woman. It always makes me very happy to receive a letter from a Cozy Cornerer who wants to be like our president when she grows up.

---

Please let me be one of your little nieces. I am a little temperance girl five years old. I have a little brother three years old. I hope he will grow up and be a Prohibitionist like my papa. My mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. and reads THE UNION SIGNAL.

ETHEL HARLAN SPENCER.

Chrome Hill, Hartford county, Md.

Of course your brother will be a "home protector" with such good surroundings. I hope to enroll his name in Cozy Corner too, before long.

THE UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President. MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, London, Eng.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. MARY T. LATHRAP, Jackson, Mich.
MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Chicago.
MME. LOUISE DEMOREST, New York City.
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MRS. E. B. INGALLS, St. Louis, Mo.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS
THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK ..... 1
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Hope. By Jennie Christian ..... 2
A Debt of Honor. By Lady Henry Somerset ..... 2
The Fraternity of Reforms. II. By Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts ..... 2
Women in Practical Politics. By Mrs. C. B. Hopkins .. 3
The "Sunken Road" and the Bridge Intended to Span It. By Josiah W. Leeds ..... 3
"When Doctors Disagree." II. By Kate C. Bushnell, M. D ..... 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
The Polyglot Petition ..... 4
LOCAL UNION ..... 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS ..... 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, Calling the Angels In ..... 6
Mrs. Blake's W. C. T. U. Tea. By Florence Higginson 6
Tobacco: Rights of Non-Users. By Wm. A. McClean ... 6
The Banquet Board. By S. J. Underwood ..... 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, The Father's Lesson ..... 7
Gypsie Linnett. By Ada M. Melville ..... 7
Soft-Shelled Nuts ..... 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER ..... 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Our Unanimity on the Suffrage Question ..... 8
Our Fallacy ..... 8
The Life of Frances Power Cobbe ..... 9
THE WATCH TOWER ..... 9
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
Miss Jessie Ackermann—Mrs. E. W. Nicholls—Australasian W. C. T. U ..... 10, 11
World's Wave Crests ..... 11
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Illinois ..... 11
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Parlor Meetings ..... 12
News in a Nutshell ..... 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES ..... 12
TREASURER'S CORNER ..... 13
National Temperance Hospital ..... 13
TEMPLE RECEIPTS ..... 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT ..... 14
OUR LIBRARY TABLE ..... 14
SIGNAL NOTES ..... 16

For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you.—John 13:15.

OUR UNANIMITY ON THE SUFFRAGE QUESTION.

How comes this unanimity? The same authority which declares us a suffrage society says that we have simply "frozen out" the suffragists. The basis of truth underlying this statement is that at one time seventeen women left our ranks avowedly because of our suffrage views. Probably seventeen more have dropped out for the same reason without avowing their reason, and perhaps seventeen refuse to join for the same reason, but, after all is said, there are at least 150,000 of us. Enough, indeed, to create an iceberg sufficient to do considerable "freezing." But the very large question remains, What made these 150,000 women, whom the suffrage associations had never been able to reach, woman suffragists?

The answer is, They have come to demand the ballot for the sake of their homes and their dear ones, as a mother who stood between her helpless little ones and a hungry wolf might call for a gun. If any one doubts this, let him read the history of our leading women, and question the more unknown workers in the ranks.

A few examples here will serve as illustrations of all. Very early in the history of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Hibben, a Presbyterian lady of the most conservative views on the woman question, accompanied Miss Willard, who was not at that time herself an avowed suffragist, to the Illinois legislature, to work for the passage of a temperance law. Their chief work was in personally persuading individual legislators to support the bill. One and all replied in so many words, "I can't stand by you for you can't stand by me; you have no vote." Mrs. Zerelda Wallace, our great apostle of suffrage, was converted in the same way. She went on a similar errand to the legislature of her state, Ohio. She sat in the House and listened while one member after another gave his reasons for voting to repeal the bill which the mothers of the state were entreating them to support. At last the representative from Mrs. Wallace's own county arose and said: "We are not here to vote our own views, but those of our constituency. My constituency wants license, and I shall vote for license." Instantly there sprang up in her mind the question, "Why am not I one of the constituency which Marion county's representative must vote to please?" The longer she has thought about it the less has she been able to answer the question.

Such has been the uniform experience of our women. Almost without exception they entered the ranks of the W. C. T. U. non-suffragists, and have become suffragists convinced by the logic of events. When Miss Willard made her first speech for suffrage in a National convention, she did it in the face of the almost tearful protest of her friends, and when she had closed the presiding officer arose and said: "I wish it distinctly understood that the speaker represents herself, and not the Woman's Christian Temperance Union." As they were leaving the hall she whispered to Miss Willard, "You might have been a chief, but you have deliberately chosen to be nothing but a scout." Four years later Frances Willard was elected President of the National W. C. T. U., and has held her position ever since, elected almost unanimously every year.

Nor is the experience of temperance women exceptional. Women who enter upon reform work of any kind become as a rule suffragists very soon and for the same reason. The questions of the day are all moral questions, and every one of them is in politics. Our defeats have proved to us that there is only one weapon which can avail. We have tried the "womanly" method of persuasion. There is nothing about persuasion that we do not know. And one conclusion has been slowly but surely forced upon us, that the talk about "womanly influence" along political lines is the merest namby-pamby nonsense. The uniform reply of legislatures, courts, municipal authorities and political parties to our petitions has been, "You can't vote, ladies, you can't vote." In Nebraska, when mothers, wives and sisters were using all of their magic "womanly influence" to persuade the voters of the land to prohibit the liquor traffic, Christian men voted for license, and hundreds of Italians, who had been imported to work upon a railroad, who could not even speak the English language, were naturalized (?) and voted in the interests of the liquor traffic, while the women stood by voiceless and voteless. These things have been done again and again.

Moreover, since we came out from our homes we have learned how men have "represented" us. We have found that we had been despoiled of our property, that we had not even a part interest in our own children; that the shameful laws concerning the "age of consent" left our daughters when mere children at the mercy of vile wretches, and from agonized mother hearts has gone up the cry, "Brothers, we don't want to be represented that way, and we won't be represented that way. With God's help we are going to get the ballot for ourselves." Yet, according to our own showing, we have accomplished something with our petitions. Yes, when after untold expenditure of labor, time and money, we have succeeded in getting the petition presented and backed by voters. But, brothers, we are tired of this laborious, roundabout way. We are convinced that from every point of view it would be better that we vote ourselves.

The women of the land could never be induced to work for their own emancipation merely. Even if they had sought the ballot for this purpose alone they would not have been self-seekers of a worse character than were their patriot fathers of 1776; but now, by a very large majority, they are asking the ballot for the sake of "God and Home and Native Land."

OUR "FALLACY."

In an article entitled "A Fallacy of the W. C. T. U.," a contributor to the American Journal of Politics, a Mrs. Ella Winston, points out the grave mistake our organization is making in demanding the ballot as a weapon of power, and, further, undertakes to show why it has accomplished so little for the cause of temperance!

Naturally the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will ask, who is Mrs. Winston? We must confess she "has the advantage," for while she knows, or believes she knows, the W. C. T. U., the W. C. T. U. cannot claim the honor of acquaintance with the lady who feels "called" to show up our faults.

But the article in question gives evidence that the writer is hardly as familiar with the character and purpose of our organization as one assuming the role of critic should be. She knows the letter of its constitution but has not grasped its spirit. She does not interpret those words in its preamble, "the suppression of intemperance," as white-ribboners interpret them.

In its twenty-one years of existence the W. C. T. U. has learned that intemperance never can be suppressed until the drink traffic itself is abolished, hence, intemperance and the liquor traffic are, from the standpoint of a white-ribboner, synonymous terms.

Mrs. Winston evidently regards the W. C. T. U. as wofully lacking, not only in logic but also in common sense because it is not discouraged by its "record of failure." Perhaps if her article had been written after instead of before the twenty-first National Convention, she would have had less to say about causes for discouragement, especially if she had read and digested those twenty-seven paragraphs of Miss Willard's address, beginning with the significant words, "Since we were here." Whatever of criticism may apply to the work of the W. C. T. U., none but the most superficial thinker will pronounce it a "failure."

Woman's ballot, in the opinion of Mrs. Winston, will not "assure the world's redemption from drunkenness," and in support of this opinion she points to Wyoming where for some "unexplained reason" the purifying process has not taken place. Surely a woman who writes for a political journal must be "posted" on the situation in Wyoming, and knowing that there are in that state nineteen men to one woman, a person of ordinary intelligence can easily understand why reforms progress slowly.

Colorado, too, is viewed with a pessimistic eye. There, we are told, "the Germans are organizing to offset the vote of the W. C. T. U. by German women, who will vote according to the wishes of their male relatives."

It is to be regretted that Mrs. Winston did not wait until after election before submitting her views to a widely read magazine, for then she might have drawn upon fact instead of fancy in the preparation of her article. For it is a fact most encouraging to the W. C. T. U. in its efforts for woman's enfranchisement that the Prohibition party vote in Colorado increased from 1,700 to over 7,000, or more than 300 per cent.

"The world has greater need of wise mothers than it has of any sort of voters," says our critic. Just how the ballot in woman's hands is going to hinder the world from having wise mothers she does not make clear. A peculiar fallacy of Mrs. Winston seems to be that the exercise of the rights of citizenship is antagonistic to the proper mothering of the individual home. "The remedy for the sin and misery of the world," she says, "lies not in the ballot box but in individual effort." As if the two were necessarily distinct!

It is the fault of mothers, she declares, that there are "sinful legislators" who license the liquor traffic, and if "the average man and woman had possessed a mother like Miss Willard's there would be no need for the latter to spend her life trying to raise the fallen." While emphasizing the influence of this "noble mother" in holding her children to the right so that "her home needed no outside protection," she omits mention of the influence of the noble father. In fact fathers, with Mrs. Winston, "don't count." She draws an appalling picture of woman's "burden of power," and represents men as characterless, irresponsible sort of beings whose faults are all due to the improper training they received from their mothers. We can but wonder in what remote regions of the mental cosmos Mrs. Winston's subliminal consciousness has been wandering that she has evolved such a novel ideal of man. Of the two we infinitely prefer the old-time "tyrant."

Because the saloon has many patrons from W. C. T. U. homes, our critic concludes that "the mothers in such homes have been so engrossed with the welfare of the nation that they had no time for work with their own sons." But why ignore the fact that many more patrons of the saloon are sons who have not been reared in W. C. T. U. homes? That very many are sons of mothers who spend a great deal of their time "protesting" by voice and by pen against woman's ballot? That very many are recruited from churches whose pastors are too busy counting "additions" to their membership to work or vote for the closing of those gates of hell open on every hand, luring their flock to destruction?

The W. C. T. U. demands the ballot as a means to an end. Dr. Parkhurst says that "the wicked flee when no man pursueth, but they make better time when somebody is after them." We would add they make the best time when the pursuers, men and women, bear in their hands that insignia of power, the ballot. All mothers are not yet wise enough to so train their sons and daughters that they will not gravitate toward evil, but we believe that a majority of mothers in this day are wise enough—made so largely through the work of temperance organizations—to understand the dangers of the saloon and to vote it out of existence when they have the opportunity.

THE LIFE OF FRANCES POWER COBBE.

Changes are so rapid and varied in these strange days that we take them "by leaps and bounds" without sufficient time to realize their real significance. A remarkable illustration of this statement is furnished by the autobiography of Miss Frances Power Cobbe, the English philanthropist.

Here is a spinster, seventy-five years old, who avers that her life has been so happy that if the opportunity were placed before her she would gladly live it over again. Contrast with its "fullness of joy" the meager allotment of the average spinster in the olden time. She was houseless except as some friendly relative "gave her a home." She was the butt of tittering ridicule among the young people. She was looked upon by the community at large as in some sense an object of charity, and by all women as "a warning." Her one resource was to spin, not street yarn, but useful threads long drawn out, which helped her married relatives in their unwearied industry, the clothing of a family and supplying the bed and table linen for a household. She was a spinster because there was nothing else that she could do but spin; and yet colorless as was her life, and oftentimes her character, in the English speaking countries her position was queenly compared with that of the unmarried women in all other nations. In Italy one of the most endowed daughters of that land of sun and song said to me in accents melodiously sad, "I feel myself to be a patriot as much as my brother Romano, who fought with Garibaldi. I should love to live or die for Italy, but for such as I am there is no place; they are an excrescence, if not a monstrosity. In my country a woman must marry or find refuge in the cloister."

In countries farther east an unmarried woman is unknown. Her very presence would be considered a symptom of ill-luck. She must be attached to the harem of some man or she would far better be dead. It is well known that the lifelong anxiety of parents is to dispose of their female children, and if they cannot make provision for their marriage they are thrown into the Ganges in India or drowned in some pond or river of China. When we contrast the rich, ripe, mellow years of the great English spinster with any of the lives at which we have hinted in these opening words, we are better prepared to perceive what Christian civilization has done for womankind, for it remains true that even as a June day is traced upon the earth by sunshine, so Christianity is traced by a sunshiny lot for woman and child.

Just in proportion as the precepts of the Master are cherished and lived up to in any nation does the condition of woman become at first ameliorated and at last glorified. One reason of this is that wherever the gospel has been applied to custom and law the tendency is toward peace, and it is only under conditions of peace that women have come to their best. "Impedimenta to the rear" was the command of Cæsar when the fighting began. Women and children are always impedimenta at such a time in the estimate of soldiers, but an industrial age or country gives to the industrious sex the opportunity to come forth like a singing bird after a thunderstorm.

In the life and character of Frances Power Cobbe, who was the chief woman comrade of Lord Shaftesbury in some of his great philanthropic undertakings, we have the very acme of what can be achieved by a woman who has not yet come to her own in the government of church or state, but has everything else that heart can wish, viz., a remarkably good physique; a richly endowed intellect; a desire for knowledge so insatiable that she has made herself a classical scholar, a scientist and a theologian; the friendship of all the best men and women of her nation; the love of a few rare spirits who have been her comrade sisters all the way along; a satisfying work—one that ennobled her own character and enriched humanity; and as age came on, a handsome legacy from a rich woman which not only left her above want, but gave her every comfort and the wherewithal with which to conduct the noble enterprises to which her noble powers have from the first been dedicated.

No woman of her time has thought more deeply or with a greater earnestness and sincerity on the deepest problems of human destiny than Frances Power Cobbe. She had a period of doubt and the stern view taken by her father of her religious difficulties caused him to bid her leave his house, and so alone and desolate she went out from her home and lived for awhile with her brother. After a long and most painful experience she came to a belief in immortality and in its indispensable corollary, the goodness of God, which she has now steadily held for forty years. While we can but regret that the comforts of the evangelical faith have not been hers, and that she does not stand with us in our total abstinence principles, we are glad and grateful to recognize the splendid work that she has wrought for the two cardinal doctrines of natural religion among a wide constituency to whom doubt is as natural as faith is to most people reared under Christian influences.

We white-ribbon women have learned to seek for the good in each and all and to recognize it fully, no matter how much we may differ concerning the principles and methods of the higher life for individual hearts and homes and for the nation. We believe that the true way in which to approach every person is by a recognition of good in him, which in many important particulars may far overtop our own, and by that very recognition to form a kindly tie which shall lead on through a better mutual understanding to an attitude of mind that shall, to say the least of it, be no longer antagonistic, but shall induce language respectful and kindly from each toward the other. Lady Henry Somerset, in her recent admirable and extended review of Miss Cobbe's book, published in her own paper, The Woman's Signal, has treated with her usual rare good sense one sentence in Miss Cobbe's book, which we believe will be made milder in future editions as a token of good will toward her white-ribbon sisters. We cannot do better than to close this brief consideration of the two noble volumes comprising the life of Miss Cobbe by transferring to our pages the closing paragraphs of the sketch by Lady Henry Somerset:

But a phrase occurs in this delightful book to which we must take exception. Miss Cobbe writes that Lord Shaftesbury did not share "the very common bigotry of teetotalism."

We can but feel that this sentence expresses an idea of which we would have thought a woman of Miss Cobbe's logical mind incapable. Every age has a particular call to the reformer and the philanthropist. The glaring evil that encountered Lord Shaftesbury was the fearful abuse of the factory system, the suffering of the children, the injustice manifested by employer to employed and the barbarity with which lunatics were treated in this country. He was not blind to the evils of intemperance, but he faced one difficulty at a time, and breasted the waves as a strong swimmer overcoming the forces that met him, and battling manfully against the evil. It remained for another generation to see that the brain poison was at work deteriorating the moral life of the nation. It is no exaltation to one philanthropist to say that because he has not faced all questions it proves that that reform unfaced is unnecessary; for we believe that had Lord Shaftesbury lived on into these days he would have undoubtedly sided with one of the greatest moral reforms of our time.

So we come to the end of the book, having spent many bright hours in the company of a brave, kindly, affectionate spirit. In these days of self-analysis and introspection it is indeed refreshing to find so cheery and wholesome a survey of life as this which Miss Cobbe has given to us. The book is an answer to the woman question—and the best answer possible. Ought any woman to have a career, be independent of friends and fortune, live a spinster's life, and yet be free to make her influence broad and potent? Yes! a hundred times yes, answers Miss Cobbe, and none who have gone with her from the first chapter of the book to its last page will find in it a single reason for disagreeing with her conclusion.

---

IN a recent number of the Banner of Gold, Dr. Leslie E. Keeley has an article on "Woman as a Reformer," which is one of the most reasonable and practical that we have anywhere seen. Science and philosophy are brought to bear upon his argument. He believes in such a standard as would permit any woman to do anything in the home or society, in church or state, that she can do well. He takes the ground that women are born equal to men; that their mental action is more intense; that they are better morally than men; that their participation in the work of the world will elevate labor and capital, purify business and politics, cleanse not only the polls, but the streets; and that they are, indeed, in the very van of moral evolution. It would not become us to say that this is true, but we are glad that one who has an influence so wide and helpful as that of Dr. Keeley does not hesitate to take the advanced positions that we have indicated. What Dr. Keeley says concerning the rejected dogma of Rev. William A. Hammond, is of special interest:

"Dr. Wm. A. Hammond, in several publications, a few years ago, demonstrated the fact that the average brain weight of woman is considerably less than that of man. His conclusions relating to this exact difference make no difference in the problem, but he next went on to prove that the mental endowments of men were proportionate to brain weight, and his inference was that men and women were alike dependent for mental abilities upon the respective avoirdupois qualities of their brains. This is the doctrine of absolutism, a long since rejected dogma of science. Dr. Hammond's problem assumes but one factor in brain activity—that the functions and faculties of the brain are in definite ratio to brain weight, or brain quantity. There are, however, in brain action, as in all other force, two faculties or functions, or two methods of activity. One of them is quantity, and the other is intensity. The force of electricity is measured by quantity, but is also measured by intensity. Some great quantities of force fail for want of intensity, and some forces of small quantity succeed because of their great intensity of action."

Dr. Keeley makes short work of the last argument left to the conservatives when he says: "Woman is all things but a soldier; but when her equality is sufficiently extended there will be no more soldiers wanted."

On Duty is delighted to correct a statement in her column of November 22. Rather more trusting than usual, she accepted as true a news item in the daily press to the effect that the Boston University had yielded the point of co-educational honors on the demand of the Harvard University orators, and denied the right of a young lady contestant to appear in the contest, carrying on the same without her. From the highest authority I learn that the Boston University boys held to the traditions of their renowned co-educational institution in a firm and honorable manner, and that as a consequence the debate proposed by the Harvard society was not held. Thus once again is the cause of equality and justice advanced and our esteem for this great institution of learning increased.

***

During a recent street-car blockade a woman was heard confiding her household cares to a neighbor. She said: "Yes; I keep a girl awhile so as to rest my body; then I go without her for awhile so as to rest my mind."

***

Miss Willard writes On Duty that on the last Sabbath of the old year she and Miss Gordon worshiped in Park Street Church, Boston, where eighteen years ago they met in Christian work. It is the church in which for the first time our national anthem "America" was sung, two generations ago, by Sunday-school children on the Fourth of July, and probably more distinguished speakers have occupied its pulpit than that of almost any other church in Boston; for it is in the heart of the business portion of the city and on a great variety of occasions its auditorium is placed at the disposal of those who work in great causes. Its present pastor is Rev. Isaac J. Lansing, whose wife is president of the Y unions of Boston, and was one of the original Crusaders. It was refreshing to hear Mr. Lansing in his prayer offer a petition for "a blessing upon all heroes and reformers, upon all who work for humanity in difficult and trying causes, upon all mothers and little children, upon all sick people and those who watch over them." Ministers do not know how such prayers endear to them and to the cause of Christ the hearts of all who belong to any of these classes, so often forgotten in the public ministrations of the house of God.

***

Some one quoted at a mother's meeting from Phillips Brooks' mother, who said: "There is an age when it is not well to question or follow your boy too closely. Up to that time you may carefully instruct and direct him and be his confidant in everything; then comes the time when he begins to merge into manhood, and when he grows reserved; this is the time to trust your boy and pray, and shortly he will be the same confidential son as in his childhood."

***

Wendell Phillips was wont to say to his friends, "Some of you will live to see the temperance question, the woman question, the labor question, the purity question all merged in one mighty movement of the people, massing itself in a political party that shall make for righteousness and save the nation from its sins."

***

The patron saint of this age is St. Vitus, and it is his dance that miserable millions are dancing with none to pay the piper.

***

The ever "feminine" was very much in evidence during the days immediately preceding Christmas, and in the office of the Rocky Mountain Daily News was watched with a fascinated interest. For, in the interests of "sweet charity" the entire regular force of editors and reporters abdicated that day in favor of the woman's club and the Christmas number of the great daily was brought out under the sole management of that enterprising and courageous body of women. It is safe to say that the demand for that issue of the News was unprecedented and that Christmas morning brought a veritable "snap" to Denver newsboys. The cartoon on the first page pictures. flying from the hand of the editor, seven carrier pigeons bearing budgets marked respectively, temperance, philanthropy, equal suffrage, reform, humanity, good government and free coinage. Besides the ordinary news of the day—political, social, business, religious—the paper has many unique features. One is a "man's page," wherein "facts, fancies, faults, foibles, fads and fashions" pertaining to masculinity are given proper attention. It has also, we are pleased to note, a W. C. T. U. column in which the state W. C. T. U. secretary ably sets forth the purpose and work of our organization in general and that of Colorado W. C. T. U. in particular. ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

MOTTO: "For God and Home and Every Land."
OBJECT: To unify the methods of woman's temperance work the world over.
BADGE: A knot of white ribbon.
HOUR OF PRAYER: Noon.
METHODS: Agitate, educate, organize.
DEPARTMENTS: Preventive, educational, evangelistic, social and legal.
THE POLYGLOT PETITION has been circulated throughout the world and signed by representatives of over forty countries. It asks for the outlawing of the alcohol and opium trade and the system of legalized vice. The chief auxiliaries of the W. W. C. T. U. are the United States, Canada, Great Britain, Australia, South Africa, India, Japan and the Sandwich Islands.

MISS JESSIE ACKERMANN.

First Australasian President.

That great movement among women, the most active development of which has been the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, was in its rudimentary state when our second round-the-world missionary came to us. The seed planted in faith by her predecessor was still alive in the colonies she had visited, but it was just at the stage needing impetus from a heart bounding with high enthusiasm and filled with strong, loving impulses, generous self-renouncement, faith in God and indomitable courage, added to a deep sympathy with human nature, a keen, steady brain, calm judgment and unswerving loyalty to the cause.

These qualities, and many more, our young missionary brought to these shores. The work itself was arduous; prejudices against any kind of innovation which should unveil and uncloister the lives of women were rife; finances to carry on the work doubtful indeed, except to the overmastering faith of a few who simply "asked and received."

MISS JESSIE ACKERMANN.

Difficulties peculiar to a young nation confronted our leader, calling out her utmost tact and skillful generalship. Women held back, men tried to frown the movement, and sometimes our sister's way was "hedged in."

Then she had to reckon with the fact of the almost universal ignorance of women on parliamentary matters, and their consequent incapacity to take an all-round view of business methods. It was hers to call some who were ready, and who took to the training with marvelous facility; but many others needed a much longer apprenticeship before they saw into the heart of things; but Miss Ackermann was endued with large patience and sympathy and wonderful administrative abilities; besides—she had counted God in her affairs, and she who does this must succeed.

"Thrice blest is he to whom is given
The instinct that can tell,
That God is on the field when He Is most invisible."

That sweet inner consciousness of which the poet speaks must have been a special attribute with our missionary; for in spite of all obstacles she went on bravely, overcoming prejudice, and letting out all her energies for the building up of her beloved cause. Her splendid physique gave ample evidence of the large reserves of vitality she contained, and those of us who in 1889 saw her upright form, the picture of health and animation, and heard her eloquent appeals to heart, will and judgment, spoken straight from her own great soul in all the strength of hope and high emprise, feel somewhat saddened at the thought that the tension and burdens of her office have aged her beyond her years, and that she leaves us with much of her physical spring relaxed, through her "journeyings oft, and perils by the way." That her mental vigor has in no wise abated we rejoice, and point, in proof of this, to her magnificent address to the triennial convention last March. To the women of these colonies that masterpiece is an inspiration; and our dear late president leaves us crowned with the deathless bays of a renown granted to few women. For her works' sake we give her high honor, for that work well and nobly done, we thank God; for her rich qualities of mind and heart we are glad to have had her among us; while for her own self's sake we enshrine her in the sunniest corner of our heart of hearts.

Coming to South Australia in 1889, she formed in Adelaide a colonial union; and that the work has been solid and enduring, no one having the remotest acquaintance with the doings of the sixth annual convention held recently in Adelaide would be heard to gainsay. In 1891 she organized a colonial union in Tasmania, which is steadily advancing. Miss Ackermann has labored untiringly in each of the colonies, organizing unions, strengthening and consolidating the work and leading the workers on to victories and triumphs; but she is absolutely the mother of the cause in West Australia. With what self-denying zeal she carried the principles of our glorious union into that western land, and how she labored there, winning troops of admirers and many solid and enthusiastic friendships, I have not space to relate.

She organized a colonial union in Perth in 1892, and it has just held a triumphantly successful third convention. In many indirect ways also her work in that colony and her influence have been revealed. Many cases of rescue from the perils of drunkenness and of safe anchorage to the Rock of Ages come under notice from time to time, and West Australia has reason to bless God for the visit of Jessie Ackermann. Fain would Australasia have retained so gifted a woman, so enthusiastic and reliable a worker, so good a chief; but in the overruling of that Providence who "runneth not on broken wheels," the visible links of association had to be severed and the regretful farewell said. We have parted from her with loving, mutual good-will and trust, with ardent wishes for a life of blessed work in her native land.

"God be with her till we meet again!
Keep Love's banner floating o'er her," and grant us all a happy reunion in the "Land of the Leal."

This sketch would scarcely be complete did I omit to mention the gift of £1,000 which was offered to Miss Ackermann, from two grateful hearts, in memory of her blessed influence over their lives, she having been instrumental in their reclamation from the perils of strong drink. Much adverse criticism, and a rather garbled account of the transaction have gone the rounds of society; but these are the facts. And when, at the second triennial convention held last March in Sydney, New South Wales, our present Australasian president, Mrs. Nicholls, made the presentation of this gift, which was intended to purchase a home for her, if ever she needed one, Miss Ackermann, while feelingly speaking of her work and the love which had been expressed to her, said she preferred not to accept so large a sum for her own use, but hoped the donors would allow it to form a nucleus for Australasian national headquarters. A purse of sovereigns, a small tribute from personal friends, she gladly accepted. It is the general hope of Miss Ackermann's best friends who know how she has labored, being an entirely unsalaried officer, and raising by her own efforts the funds for her own needs as well as for the needs of the work, that she may be induced to reconsider her decision; as the fact of the gift being the outcome of loving personal gratitude should place it entirely outside the category of ordinary presentations.

I conclude this, which to me has been a pleasing duty with prayers for white ribbon work and workers, the whole world over.

J. A. CLATWORTHY,
South Australian Colonial Reporter.

MRS. E. W. NICHOLLS.

Present Australasian President.

Elizabeth Webb Nicholls, the eldest daughter of Samuel and Mary A. Bakewell, pioneer colonists of South Australia, was born in Adelaide on February 21, 1850. She owes much to hereditary influences, her father being refined, gentle, philanthropic, and an earnest Christian worker, one of a family which through many generations has been religious and literary, with more than average ability and excellence. Her mother, sensitive and devout in spirit, who died when her daughter was but three years old, was a descendant of worthy Christian people. It was, therefore, but natural that the subject of our sketch should early enter the ranks of Christian service, which she did at the age of fifteen by joining the Wesleyan Methodist Church, of which she is still a member, and in which she has always been an active worker.

Her marriage in 1870 to Mr. A. R. Nicholls, who is manager in a large business house, was helpful in the development of her Christian character, for Mr. Nicholls is an enthusiastic Sunday-school worker, was a total abstainer previous to their marriage, and is in entire sympathy with the aims and methods of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Their four sons and one daughter are like-minded with their parents, the hereditary yearning for the salvation of others being conspicuous in the eldest son, who has just been accepted by the China Inland Mission for work in that dark land, and the literary taste in their third son who took his B. A. degree at the Adelaide University at the early age of nineteen years.

Mrs. Nicholls first became a total abstainer in 1875, but was unwilling to sign a pledge, until, for the sake of example in the Sunday-school, she did so in connection with a Band of Hope. This act was not performed on the impulse of the moment, but was the outcome of gradual conviction, and also of keen personal observation and occasional conversation with temperance workers. She first came into touch with the W. C. T. U. during Mrs. Leavitt's meetings, held in Adelaide in 1886, and, attracted by its refined and Christian character, she became identified with the organization three months later. The first office Mrs. Nicholls held was that of president of the Adelaide union, the only one then in the colony, and in 1889, when the first colonial convention was held, she was elected Colonial president, and the white-ribboners found her to be such a capable and reliable officer that she has been annually elected to this office ever since.

During the Australasian convention held in Sydney last April perhaps the question which most occupied the minds of all present was that of finding a successor to dear Miss Ackermann, who had been an almost ideal president. Great excitement prevailed, and it was only after a prayer-meeting had been held, which was attended by about sixty women, who poured out their hearts to God in earnest prayer for guidance and wisdom, the moral storm abated, and all seemed peacefully to await the issue of events, fully believing they would be led by the never-failing Guide at this critical juncture in the history of their work.

MRS. E. W. NICHOLLS.

When the poll was declared it was found that Mrs. E. W. Nicholls was elected to the very honorable and onerous position of Australasian president, a result that seemed to give general satisfaction. The newly elected Australasian president was soon the recipient of numerous congratulatory letters and telegrams from all the different colonies, and at a large public meeting held in Sydney, the president of each colony, in behalf of her sister white-ribboners pledged her sympathy and loyalty to their future leader.

There is no doubt that Mrs. Nicholls is a God-given

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N.Y.

officer. Filled with the love of Christ and holy zeal, possessing a great amount of organizing business and literary ability, she is a fitting leader of the Australasian white-ribbon host. In business Mrs. Nicholls is our Australian Mrs. Carse, and as a speaker she gains in favor with her audience, and being a well read woman, her addresses are nvariably good from a literary point of view. Mrs. Nicholls has held no less than ten offices in the W. C. T. U. in South Australia; has been a member of the executive of the Suffrage League since 1889, and a member of the executive of the South Australian Alliance ever since women were admitted in 1891. She has a striking personality, is of dignified appearance, medium height and full figure, with a fine head and a pleasant face, which inspires love and confidence. Mrs. Nicholls' genial disposition and quick sense of humor often brightens what might otherwise be uninteresting business details. Her views are very broad, and her quick grasp of details remarkable. Miss Ackermann, who has traveled over all Australia, says that Mrs. Nicholls has a more complete knowledge of parliamentary usage than any other woman in the colonies, a fitting qualification for the one who was chosen in April last as the Australasian leader of "the greatest woman's organization of the century." May the Australasian "chieftain" long be spared, and may she be abundantly blessed in her "work of faith and labor of love." FLORA B. HARRIS.

Brisbane, Queensland.

AUSTRALASIAN W. C. T. U.

Hoping to reach and interest many whose sympathies are not with us, we have arranged to have a W. C. T. U. exhibit at the Tasmanian International Exhibition, opening in November at Hobart. The Australasian officers have coöperated with Mrs. Blair, the colonial president of Tasmania, and the result will be an effective display of banners, photographs, etc., sent by the different colonies. Photographs of the Australasian officers, vice presidents and superintendents enclosed in one frame and suitably inscribed, will occupy a place of honor, and copies of the Australasian and colonial reports, with literature, will be distributed among the visitors. South Australia has sent the World's Declaration of Principles and the World's Petition, glazed and mounted on rollers.

Miss A. L. A. Murcutt's record for her first quarter as Australasian organizer, shows that during her stay in Western Australia she visited twenty-three towns, gave fifty-nine addresses and nineteen lectures, besides filling five pulpits and conducting ten evangelistic services. Being also recording secretary for the Western Australian W. C. T. U., she helped the colonial and local unions financially, and gave an impetus to white ribbon work generally. So highly appreciated were her efforts on behalf of the colonial convention, held in September, that a special resolution of thanks was passed and the press unstintingly praised her work, acknowledging that much of the success of the convention was due to her. One feature of the program was a limelight lecture on "The Rise and Progress of the W. C. T. U.," by Miss Murcutt, who held the interest of her large audience for two hours.

Misses Vincent and Cummins, Australasian organizers, have visited fifty-one towns in the two quarters since their appointment and have been impressed and much encouraged by the increased interest shown in the W. C. T. U. throughout the colony of New South Wales since the triennial (Australasian) convention. They have given 137 addresses each and twenty-two lectures, have enrolled 170 active and thirty-eight honorary members besides taking 534 other pledges. They have done well financially in spite of many difficulties owing to the general depression in business matters.

FLORA B. HARRIS,
Australasian Secretary W. C. T. U.
Brisbane, Queensland.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

MISS ALICE PALMER sailed on the Union line, Steamship Guelph, leaving Cape Town about December 17, and is to reach England about January 10. By invitation of Lady Henry Somerset she will spend a few weeks in Ireland, help the work there, and plans to remain in London for the World's W. C. T. U. Convention. Her mail should be addressed to Memorial Hall, Farringdon St., London, E. C.

AN intercolonial temperance convention will be held in Hobart, Tasmania, during the last week of January, 1895, to consider questions bearing upon temperance work from political, educational and social standpoints. The United Temperance Council, which is arranging for this great convention, consists of representatives from the W. C. T U., I. O. G. T., Rechabites, Temperance Alliance, Ministers' Association, Y. M. C. A., and Y. W. C. T. U. and Salvation Army.

CAIRO, Egypt, W. C. T. U., Miss Anna Y. Thompson, president, has passed resolutions on the death of our late corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, in singularly thoughtful and well chosen words. They "bear testimony to her faithfulness as exhibited weekly in the Corresponding Secretary's Corner of THE UNION SIGNAL. The beautiful spiritual sentiments which she expressed in her writings, lead us to believe that she not only set the example during 'self-denial week,' but that her whole life was one of self-denial 'For God, and Home, and Every Land.'"

MISS ALICE BRIGGS, for four years office secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., has resigned the position which she has filled with so much ability and faithfulness. In parting with Miss Briggs for awhile, we hope not permanently, as she is an expert in the work of the World's W. C. T. U., we desire to put on record our sincere affection and esteem for one of the most loyal white ribbon women that the movement has developed. Her name is known in all countries, and is loved wherever known. Our tender good wishes go with her in the enforced rest that comes as the sequel of a long and arduous period of beneficent Christian activity. Miss Briggs is spending the winter at Asheville, N. C., and will be glad to hear from friends.

News from the Field.

ILLINOIS.

A BRIGHT OUTLOOK.

Among the encouraging signs of the times in the Illinois W. C. T. U., was the work of the press department in reporting our excellent state convention for local papers. This made a good "round-up" for last year's work, and helped to multiply results. No sooner were the records closed than plans for the coming year began to be executed. Miss Brehm, of the sixteenth district, who has a way of causing things to come to pass on short notice, was keen enough to get in the first announcement of a new union organized. No wonder it was the Keens union. It was the sixteenth district that had ninety Demorest medal contests last year, and a district convention of such interest that a local paper gave space in reporting, equal to a column five yards long. There must have been some pressing work in that vicinity to receive a press report of that length.

Mrs. Kuhl, of the fifteenth district, follows closely with several new unions organized, and the seventeenth is always pushing ahead. The fifth, sixth and eighth have also been heard from with new unions. Mrs. Groat and Miss Morrow have held meetings in Warren, Savanna, Mt. Carroll and Lanark, and that means an arousement. Miss Morrow, president of the sixth district, has proposed, through the Watch-Tower, a plan for the establishment of a Bureau of Exchange, where carefully prepared papers on any line of work are requested to be sent to Mrs. Alice C. Eichelberger, of Freeport, after they have been used. Then any union desiring a public meeting can be supplied by sending to her, thus utilizing each paper several times.

The scientific temperance department was fortunate in securing the right of way for Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, in many of the leading cities of the state, where good results follow her addresses at educational centers, as Normal, for instance, where a thousand students gather in the State University. Mrs. Brumbach and her assistant, Miss Morrow, keep at least one eye single to scientific temperance instruction interests. Warren's school board has recently adopted this line of study, the result of W. C. T. U. work.

Nokomis union held a reception in honor of the teachers in the public schools, at which members of the school board and their wives were present, as were also the local editor and his wife.

There was a short and interesting program. Special mention is made of the scientific temperance instruction work by Morris, Gardner and Naperville unions in the eighth district. Morris union furnishes fifty-three text-books, to be used as readers in the third grade of schools, and monthly magazines for the teachers. It furnishes THE UNION SIGNAL to six pastors, and holds services in the jail, supplying reading matter there also.

The white-ribboners of the eighth district issue a little twelve page quarterly in the interest of their work. A few advertisements help out the financial part of the enterprise.

Joliet has been doing vigorous work among the foreign element, also in prison and jail. More than twenty-two thousand pieces of foreign and miscellaneous literature were distributed last year.

Bowen W. C. T. U. celebrated its tenth anniversary not long ago in the Congregational church, and its Loyal Temperance Legion had a prominent part in the exercises. Aurora is rejoicing over the fact that seven hundred boys and girls have taken the triple pledge during the twelve years of L. T. L. work there.

Effingham county has 1,800 listed in its Band of Hope membership, notwithstanding the large foreign element there. The seventeenth district has done good work. The L. T. L. of the Central W. C. T. U. of Bloomington has $40 in the bank to its credit, the result of a fair held recently in the interest of a mission building fund. The children "had a mind to work," and friends gladly assisted them. The Illinois L. T. L. star is still in the ascendancy.

Miss Mahon, of the Y department, has sent out through The Watch Tower excellent suggestions and topics for Y meetings. Not very wise Y's would our young women be if they fail to follow such a counselor. Miss Mahon did some good service in Bloomington, under the auspices of the Central union.

Lockport Y's have held a successful union service of the churches. They give also enjoyable social entertainments. Joliet Y's have accomplished much in the anti-cigarette movement in the Sunday-school. Camp Point has a new Y. W. C. T. U. The honoraries of the Altamont Y gave the young women a surprise at the close of one of their meetings, taking the part of entertainers. The girls were served to oysters, fruit, etc. Such little pleasantries brighten the way, and leave no vain regrets.

Vandalia Y, that made a gain of three hundred per cent last year, will of course be expected not to go back on its former record.

Illinois unions have not only been attending to what is considered their own legitimate "knitting-work," but have lent a hand to many good works. Bethesda and Anchorage missions and the Temperance Hospital have been remembered, and also boxes and barrels of clothing have been sent to the needy.

Some of our unions have Dr. Strong's books, "Our Country," and "The New Era," among their text-books. They are cultivating what he calls, "An enthusiasm for humanity." Several unions are adopting the plan of printed programs for the regular meetings.

Bloomington was fortunate in having Major George Hilton in the city conducting union revival services in some of the churches. At the close of those meetings arrangements were made by the Central union for a woman's meeting and an evening temperance lecture. The large church was nearly filled with women in the afternoon and the W. C. T. U. membership was increased by sixty names. The church was packed again in the evening to hear him speak of this age of "Strong Delusions." We are glad he is to be in Illinois again this winter.

The Illinois W. C. T. U. will be pardoned for a little pride in its state reports coming out so bright and early, looking not "as fresh as a new blown rose," but better still, with its beautiful chrysanthemum design decorating the cover. Thanks to our state president, Mrs. Rounds, who did the editing, and the W. T. P. A., that executed the work. Mrs. Rounds knows what she wants done in the way of skillful work, and the W. T. P. A. knows how to do it.

I have only given a hasty glance at W. C. T. U. work in Illinois. Whole sections of the state are doubtless omitted, for I have not attempted thus to classify.

And now last, but not least, rather first of all, is the work of our evangelistic department, under the direction of Miss Anna Downey, superintendent. Beginning with the close of the state convention, she has been constantly in the field, holding two evangelistic conferences each week, usually of three days each. This is only a continuation of last year's program. She usually preaches twice on Sunday and each evening, conducting the conferences in the afternoons.

Carefully prepared papers on practical topics are read, and general discussion follows. The following are among the subjects considered: "Gospel Meetings," "Personal Work," "Mothers' Meetings," "House to House Visitation" and "Temperance Work for Young People's Church Societies." Pastors and Christian workers join in carrying out the program with great profit. The Bible talks by Miss Downey are helpful. The January 1 issue of our state paper is a special evangelistic number, its eight pages full of timely suggestions, helps, and a view of the field at large; and yet several articles on practical evangelistic W. C. T. U. work were crowded out—so large is this department.

Our state president is enjoying a well earned rest at Clifton Springs, N. Y. Her first service after returning from the National convention was to conduct a memorial service for one of our promoted veterans, dear Mrs. Mingle, for twelve years district president. To-day, for the first time, we write 1895. Before another

Two Mince Pies, equal to our Grandmother's, from each package of None-Such Mince Meat, without the worry and work. For sale by all Grocers.

MERRELL-SOULE CO.,
Syracuse, N. Y.

Any Instrument Without a Teacher

(EUREKA METHOD.)

Winner's Eureka Instruction Books do for the pupil exactly what a teacher would do, and in an equal length of time. No previous knowledge of music is required. Beginning with the first rudiments of the subject, the pupil is led, step by step, by means of simple and direct explanations, illustrations and progressive exercises, to a complete mastery of the instrument studied. All musical terms are fully explained, and the books are Fully Illustrated.

Besides the instruction pages each volume contains nearly a hundred carefully chosen pieces for the instrument of which it treats. This alone would cost from $2 to $3, if purchased separately.

The Eureka Books are intended for pupils living at a distance from the music teacher, or for those who cannot conveniently employ one. They are the most popular and successful self-instructors published.

In ordering ask for "Winner's Eureka Method," and designate the instrument for which it is wanted. Any volume will be mailed postpaid on receipt of price.

Organ
Piano
Violin
Clarinet Flute
Banjo
Guitar
Viola
'Cello
Mandolin
Cornet
Piccolo
Accordion
Flageolet
Double Bass
Zither

75 CENTS.
LYON & HEALY,
Chicago, Ill.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, BOSTON.

YOUNG LADIES SHOULD WEAR GOOD SENSE
CORSET WAISTS. Permit full breathing.

New Year's day shall be ushered in, two hundred will be called up higher from the ranks of the Illinois W. C. T. U., according as the last record has shown, but we go trustingly on, for we walk not alone.

MRS. G. H. READ,
State Reporter, Bloomington.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MEMORIAL services were held for Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, by the Crusade Band and Federation of W. C. T. unions of Cleveland, O., in Y. M. C. A. building, November 4. Mrs. Woodbridge was well known in Cleveland.

MOTHERS' meetings in the Winnipeg, Manitoba, union are made especially valuable under the fine leadership of Dr. Amelia Yeomans. A recent address of hers entitled "Mothers and the Suffrage," delivered before a mothers' meeting, has been leafleted.

THE following letter from an earnest worker, Inez Godman, explains itself: "We have been many years trying to organize the colored women of Louisiana. I think the arrangement we have now made might help some others. They appointed me district superintendent of work among the colored people, and gave me a seat in the convention. I traveled among the colored people, organized them and represented them at the convention. Of course this would not work where the colored women were alive to the work and wished to represent themselves. By the time our district is in that condition we will let them have their own convention. I presume that there are no Southern white women who would consent to travel among them as I do, but I think Northern women could be found in each district who would do it if the Southern women would be very nice to them, as they are to me."

THE seventh annual convention of Rensselaer county, N. Y., W. C. T. U. was held in the Fifth Avenue Methodist church, New York in the fall. Mrs. H. A. Kenny presided and conducted the devotional exercises. Mrs. A. J. Barnes heartily welcomed the delegates in behalf of the Troy central union, and Rev. I. D. VanValkenburgh in behalf of the Fifth Avenue church. To these Mrs. H. C. Bascom responded in a very happy speech. The reports from the local unions showed a growth in many instances. The president's address was the feature of the afternoon and was an able presentation of the work and deeds of woman. A witty and eloquent address was given by Rev. S. B. Roberts, of Utica. He defined the present position of the temperance question and pointed out the duty of Christian voters, and that was to vote the ticket that stood for "God, Home and Native Land." In conclusion he gave reasons why he was a Prohibitionist. Mrs. H. A. Kenny was elected president for the ensuing year. The resolutions gave evidence that the county union proposed to take no backward steps.

The local union of Penn Yan, Yates Co., N. Y., celebrated its twentieth birthday in a most enjoyable manner. More than one hundred were present and former members including fourteen charter members, met together to enjoy an historical and social program. The story of the Crusade was told by Mrs. Gray, followed by a letter from Mrs. J. M. Lattimer, of Chicago, who did much for the early success of this union. The recording secretary, Mrs. Butterfield, gave a clear summary of the twenty years' work. Several organizations have sprung up from the good influence of the W. C. T. U. as was shown by this summary. Miss Hutton spoke of the department work and Mrs. Louise B. Ayres, who with Mrs. Emily Hutton Gray, has been engaged in the juvenile work during the past nineteen years, told in pleasing words of the progress of that work. Personal recollections of Crusade day were given. The social part included supper. Later a parlor meeting was held at the home of Mrs. John Sheppard with about one hundred present. Mrs. J. T. Ellis, of New Jersey, addressed the meeting in a most instructive and enjoyable manner.

MRS. S. E. V. EMERY, National superintendent of the relation of temperance to capital and labor, has been speaking on temperance to Populists and on finance to Prohibition audiences, and has found that all received the same truth gladly. Mrs. Emery is one of our most capable women, and has filled out the measure of her department remarkably, considering that she has not been well for the last year. Mrs. Emery has a plan for a self-regulating currency which she says "is so simple that a ten-year-old schoolboy cannot fail to comprehend it." She would have the three millions of idle men in this country employed by the government on public works, would fix their wages at $1.50 a day, and would increase the volume of money to meet the bill. Through this means a demand would be created for the products of the manufacturer and he would be enabled to increase the wages of his employés. The increased supply of money paid to the man at present idle would increase the demand for his products and thus enable him to increase not only the wages, but the number of his employés. This increase of the money volume would soon enable the manfacturer to pay not only $1.50 but more than that, and the result would be that men would leave the public works for private enterprises and the Government be relieved from further increase of the money volume.

Official Communications.

PARLOR MEETINGS.

MY DEAR CO-WORKERS:—A New Year's greeting to one and all. I am exceedingly desirous that this shall be the best of all the years for our department. Now is the time for planning parlor meetings, so that during the winter and spring months a large number of these social gatherings may be held.

It may be more convenient in one locality to meet in the afternoon; in another, an evening meeting may be preferable. We must be governed entirely by our surroundings.

We need to study our various departments, so that we can determine which one could be used to the best advantage; for a topic which would be suitable at one time might be very inappropriate for another.

Franchise is a subject that is agitating the public in these days of reform, and possibly this, more than any other topic, is needed in your community.

Letters frequently come to me asking for literature. I have a circular prepared for arranging and conducting these parlor conferences; but it is for you to determine the thought you wish presented; then send to the W. T. P. A. at the Temple, Chicago, for literature pertaining to that subject.

Papers read at county conventions or schools of methods are of an educational character and after much study and labor are too valuable to be cast aside with the one reading. These could be utilized at great advantage in a parlor meeting. Extracts from Miss Willard's address, from THE UNION SIGNAL, from The Daily Union Signal, giving an account of the National Convention, Cleveland, are highly interesting as well as instructive.

A self-denial week might be helpful to your county, state, National, World's, the Temple or Temperance Hospital. Hold a parlor meeting, bring in your money and each rehearse the methods employed. Some gifted poetess in your union might be inspired to write a temperance poem, for which some woman might be induced to sacrifice fifty cents or a dollar to purchase it to place in the archives of the union. Set your brains to work, and you may surprise yourselves by your ingenious schemes.

Send invitations to an afternoon tea from three or four to six, at which time an address or short papers could be given, followed by light refreshments. Russian tea and wafers, chocolate and small cakes, or any other you may prefer; but remember the more simple the repast, the more elegant it is considered in fashionable circles.

Let us commit ourselves, our homes, our labor unto the Lord, that eighteen hundred and ninety-five may be a prosperous year, and that thousands instead of hundreds of members may be gained through this method. Be earnest, be active, be enthusiastic. Yours for work and success,

MARY D. TOMLINSON,
Nat. Supt. Parlor Meetings.
212 La Grande Ave., Plainfield, N. J.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The Great Petition has again come to the front, as readers of THE UNION SIGNAL have discovered, but this time is "positively its last appearance" so far as securing signatures is concerned.

As has already been stated editorially, it is to be presented to a joint committee of the Senate and House at Washington, February 15, and on the same evening a mass-meeting is to be held with the Petition as its central feature, and such inspiring addresses, music, etc., as shall serve to grandly inaugurate the round-the-world journey of this, the most gigantic Petition the world has ever known. The great advantage of holding this meeting in connection with, or immediately preceding the Women's Council, must be apparent to all.

But one thing is needed to make the success of the demonstration assured, and that one thing is such a magnificent effort to secure names as we have not known before. It is true barely six weeks intervene between to-day and the proposed presentation, but six weeks may be made expansive enough to hold the ordinary results of six months, or even years, if only their possibilities be rightly apprehended and their moments wisely used.

Will not each reader of this column proceed AT ONCE to the work of securing names on this wonderful object lesson to the governments of the world?

As Miss Willard says, "The United States has never touched the edge of what it ought to do in this matter." Great Britain, Canada and much smaller countries have done almost as much in actual numbers and far more proportionately to membership.

Let there be a grand final rally. Take the Petition into your Sunday-schools, into your church prayer-meetings, Christian Endeavor and Epworth Leagues. Take it to the editor of your religious paper and ask him to insert it with editorial comment. Take it to your secular paper, especially in towns and villages. Make it the matter of your own thought and conversation during the weeks to come. Think petition; talk petition; dream petition; pray petition, and then you will surely WORK petition. Can we not roll up an additional million of names in six weeks?

---

The responses to my letters of greeting to state presidents and corresponding secretaries have been so exceedingly encouraging that I feel already as if the success of the year's work were assured. Several report organizers already in their territory or shortly to enter it. A spirit of hope and determination seems in the air.

Massachusetts—never far behind, and usually far ahead—is preparing for the winter campaign with new vigor. I attended the weekly prayer-meeting at state headquarters only yesterday, and found the large room filled. The meeting was one of great interest and power. A grand reception to Lady Henry Somerset in Music Hall is on the tapis for Thursday night; a course of lectures by Prof. W. H. Stuckenberg, of Berlin, is to follow almost immediately, while the forces are bending their united efforts to the coming struggle against the Norwegian system. It were not strange if I should be suspected of seeing Massachusetts with partial eyes, but I think if I had entered that prayer-meeting a total stranger I should have felt that such a gathering together of force and consecration must produce great results. No state could be happier in its officers than is Massachusetts. We are expecting it to be far in the vanguard in the march of the next twelvemonth.

---

One more correction in the addresses given in the Minutes. By some unaccountable mistake the name of the former president of Arkansas, Mrs. Hart, was printed instead of that of the present president, Mrs. Fanny L. Chunn. It is difficult to understand the lapses of the human mind, especially when brought into such intimate relationship to the eye as proof-reading implies. We know Mrs. Chunn was Arkansas' president. She had been in attendance upon the National Convention, and yet we allowed the name of the former president to stand. The Annual Leaflet will make this, with other matters, right. A Happy New Year to all.

KATHARINE L. STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner.

Seven hundred copies of Miss Willard's address at Cleveland have been ordered and sent out. The Minutes are so voluminous that fifteen cents in postage is required to send them out, so they are virtually sent free. Heretofore they have cost eight, nine and last year eleven cents, so that what was received, left a few cents to apply on postage for the complimentary copies sent to state presidents and National superintendents. But this year each copy costs us the large price for printing and the fifteen cents for postage beside. They are so heavy that only two copies can be sent by mail, hence, orders above that must be sent by express. Only two hundred more copies of Miss Willard's address will be printed. Send early for they will soon be gone.

Indiana's wide awake treasurer sends her first installment of dues to the National, $80.50. This is very encouraging—three of our large states sending in dues less than two months after close of Convention. New Mexico has also sent in dues for last year that were delayed by changes in office of treasurer. Mrs. McWhirter, treasurer of Indiana, writes: "Our dollar membership fee is generally approved by the unions. Of the dollar, twenty cents is sent to the county, and fifty cents to the state. The state work will be entirely supported by this after the debt is paid. No free-will offerings will be asked for state work." They are planning for thorough organizing work in Indiana this present year.

Mrs. Lulu Luce, of Perryopolis Y Pa., sends one dollar as a birthday offering. Think of one of our bright Y's one hundred

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
NOTICE NAME THUS Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

New Chrysanthemum Seed

These charming new types of Chrysanthemum from Japan bloom the first year from seed. They embrace all styles, varieties and colors, including the exquisite new Ostrich Plume types, Rosettes, Globes, Fimbriated, Miniature and Mammoth. Sow the seed this spring and the plants will bloom profusely this fall, either in pots or in the garden. From a packet of this seed one may have a most magnificent show of rare beauties. Price 25c. per pkt., or FOR ONLY 30c.
WE WILL MAIL ALL OF THE FOLLOWING:
1 pkt. NEW JAPANESE CHRYSANTHEMUM Seed.
1 pkt. BEGONIA VERNON, mixed, finest of all.
1 pkt. GIANT WHITE SPIDER FLOWER, new.
1 pkt. JAPANESE WINEBERRY, king of berries.
1 pkt. NEW SPOON GOURD, curious and useful.
5 bulbs NAMED GLADIOLUS, 1 each of White, Pink, Scarlet, Yellow and Variegated.
3 bulbs MAMMOTH OXALIS, different colors.
1 bulb VARIEGATED TUBEROSE, Orange flowers.
1 bulb ZEPHYR FLOWER, a perfect fairy-like gem, and our GREAT CATALOGUE with 9 magnificent colored plates and covers, and sample copy of the MAYFLOWER with two great chromo plates. These 5 packets of seed Novelties and 10 choice Bulbs (worth $1.35) will all flower this season, and we send them for 30 CENTS only to introduce our superior stock. 4 collections for $1.00. Catalogue will not be sent unless asked for, as you may already have it.
Order at once, as this Offer may not appear again.
Send us the names of 5 or 10 of your neighbors who love flowers and we will add a fine Novelty, FREE.
OUR CATALOGUE of Flower and Vegetable Seeds, Bulbs, Plants and Rare new Fruits is the finest ever issued; profusely illustrated with elegant cuts and colored plates. We offer the choicest standard sorts and finest Novelties. We are headquarters for all that is New, Rare and Beautiful. This elegant Catalogue will be sent for 20c., or FREE if you order the articles here offered.
JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N.Y.

THE ELEVENTH EDITION.
WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS
Has just been issued. This song book is certainly the most popular collection of Temperance Songs
ever published. The melodies are unusually pleasing and the words are right to the point. It covers a wide range of themes, expressing all the varied emotions, from the comic to the pathetic. Get it, and your young people will bless you, and your old people will praise you.
Price 35c.
Order direct of the author,
FLORA H. CASSEL, Hastings, Neb.

THE STANDARD "Dripless" Strainer.
Agents Wanted.

No drip to soil table linen. No wires to clog spout. No falling off. Nickel-plated. Sent on receipt of 25 cents.
STANDARD STRAINER CO., 35 Maiden Lane, N. Y. City.

LOOSE BOTTOMS PERFECTION CAKE TINS
Delicate Cake
Easily removed without breaking. Perfection Tins require no greasing. 10 styles, round, square and oblong. 2 layer tins by mail 30 cts. Circulars Free.
Agents Wanted. Richardson Mfg. Co., 14 St., Bath, N.Y.

A $1 Magazine for 30c.
Send 30 cents and names of 6 people who might subscribe, and we will send you THE ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE a full year. The price of the magazine is $1 a year. A sample copy for 6 cents. Address
ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE 2819 OLIVE ST. LOUIS, MO.

6 tubs in one BATH TUBS, Wholesale & Retail. For "Bath Room" & "Portable." Durable, many long used renewed, light, little water. Agents and others send for circulars.
E. J. Knowlton, Ann Arbor, Mich.

MILLER'S HOTEL. New York City, 39 West 26th Street. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths.
Address CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

SALESMEN WANTED to sell our goods by samples to the wholesale and retail trade, sell on sight to every business man or firm; liberal salary, money advanced for advertising and expenses. Permanent position. Address with stamp, KING MFG. CO., A 55 Chicago, Ill.

At 1/4 Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc, List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE years old. Mrs. E. Lond, of Roxbury, Mass., also sends one dollar to same fund. Self-denial remembrances have come during holiday week from Miss Jennie Stewart, Willard Y's, $1; Mrs. E. E. Dunn, Morrill, Kan., $1; Mrs. L. A. Conant, Brainerd, Minn., 75 cents, while Mrs. B. Funk sends a belated ten cent gift of 70 cents, and Lillian W. Bailey, Clinton, sends for same fund, $2.20. So the littles thus early are helping us in paying expenses and every one brings cheer, not alone for the money but the love, interest and confidence they betoken.

In reply to my inquiry as to Ohio's financial methods, Mrs. Estelle J. Purdum writes:

CHILLICOTHE, O., December 29, 1894.

DEAR MRS. BARKER:—The treasurers of the local unions of this state pay state dues directly to the state treasurer without regard to county or district organization.

At the close of each month, the state treasurer sends to the state president a full report of receipts, and funds ready for order of payment. National dues accruing from state dues paid each month are paid monthly to the National treasurer.

If funds are contributed for special purposes they are also paid out monthly and the current expenses of the state are paid as promptly as the income will permit, without trespassing upon funds designated for special purposes. Sincerely,

MRS. ESTELLE JONES PURDUM,
Treasurer Ohio W. C. T. U.

I should be glad to hear suggestions from other state treasurers as to methods that have proved successful.

HELEN M. BARKER.

TEMPLE RECEIPTS.

Colorado—Denver: Mira R. Sprague, $1; Fort Morgan: Mrs. Elizabeth Chace, $1; Canon City: Laura A. Thompson, $1; Sterling: Madam Willard W. C. T. U., $3.65; Green Mountain Falls: A. Garland, $1.

Dakota, North—Crary: Mrs. E. D. Calderwood and daughter, 20 cts.; Casselton: Mrs. Verner Lovell, $1.89; Ellendale: Mrs. Minnie R. Tibbetts, $4; Moselle: Mrs. M. A. Springer, $1; Hope: W. C. T. U., $2; L. T. L., $3; New Rockford: W. C. T. U., $5; Wahpeton: W. C. T. U., 50 cts.; Dazey: Unknown, 44 cts.

Dakota, South—Langford: Mrs. Lillie Marsh, $2; Farmington: W. C. T. U., $7.09; Arlington: Y. W. C. T. U., $3; Gary: W. C. T. U., $3.65; Badger: Flora Wilson, $2.50; Watertown: Miss Lettie Hereford, $2.88; Vermillion: W. C. T. U., $10; Hazel: Mrs. Joseph D. Hall, $1; Rondell: Florence Mission Fund of King's Sons and Daughters, $1; Mt. Vernon: Hannah A. Hunt, $1; Sisseton Agency: Government Indian Boarding School, per Philena E. Johnson, $2.

Delaware—Wilmington: Sarah Bringhurst, $1; Laurel: W. C. T. U., $10.

District of Columbia—Washington: Mrs. Marion J. McLean, $1; M. B. Platt, $2.

Florida—Winter Park: Emeline A. Sparrell, 40 cts.; Arletta Packard, $7.30; Erratic: W. C. T. U., $10 and $8; Bartow: W. C. T. U., $5, $5, $10; Clear Water: Miss Detta Plumb, $3; Starke: Mrs. T. M. Comstock, $1; Ormond: Mrs. H. J. Andrews, $3.65; De Funiak Springs: Mrs. R. L. Stoors, $2.80; Palm Beach: Mrs. J. C. Stowers, $1.

Georgia—Etowah: Mrs. S. S. Johnson, $1; Atlanta: Mrs. G. W. Wilson, $1; Demorest: H. E. Smith, $1; W. C. T. U., per Mrs. S. H. Manny, $1.

Idaho—Boise: Mrs. N. J. Stevenson, $1; Mrs. Jonas W. Brown, $3.65.

Illinois—Arlington: Mrs. Ann H. Booth, $1; Morrisonville: Mrs. Sarah Wyckoff, 10 cts.; Arcola: Mrs. E. A. Martin, $1; Summer Hill: Mrs. Melissa Rathbun, $1; Mendon: W. C. T. U., $1; Thomson: Mrs. Harriet Olds, 10 cts; Aledo: W. C. T. U., $5; Batavia: W. C. T. U., $5; Beardstown: W. C. T. U., $20; Bushnell: Miss M. L. Morris, $3.65; L. A. Morris, $2; Bone Gap: Mrs. C. W. Sabine, $1; Susie McClure, $1; Miss Ellen Harmes, $1; South Belvidere: Mrs. Levina Howard, $5; Chicago: Mrs. F. L. Fake, $1; Mrs. Harriet B. Kells, $2.67; Mrs. George Hasseldon, $1.61; Mattie E. Phillips, $1; West Side W. C. T. U., $33; Kate Sturges Benton, $2.16; First Scandinavian W. C. T. U., Hope Mission, $25; Mrs. J. P. Enyart, 50 cts.; Mrs. J. J. M. Angear, $1; Mrs. L. Waring, $1; Mrs. O. M. Holsey, $1; Mrs. M. A. Fanning, $1; S. J. Follett, $1.32; Carthage; W. C. T. U., $15 and $55; Cisco: Bertha Marie Jones, 10 cts.; Cazenovia: Anthony Snyder, $2.50; Coral: Mrs. E. L. Stoddard, $5; W. C. T. U., $1.50; Central Park: W. Fortieth street W. C. T. U., $5; Clinton: Mrs. E. A. Argo, $1 and $3.65; Danville: Mrs. L. C. Shea, 50 cts.; Mrs. Leonard, 50 cts.; Jane E. Weeden, $10; Duquoin: Olive S. Burgess, $1; Fairview: Mrs. Laura A. Dickson, $1; Fairbury: Mrs. H. H. Gravina, $2; Englewood: V. S. Holton, $4; Evanston: Gertrude Reiley, $3.65; Y. W. C. T. U., $10; Mrs. George Key, $5; Miss Anna Durney, $1; Griggsville: M. Y. McMahan, $1; Mrs. Amy S. Gay, $1; Geneseo: Mrs. E. E. Read, $1; Galesburg: Mrs. S. A. Kiefer and Miss Grace D. Kiefer, $9; Gardner: Mrs. J. N. Woods, $3.65; North Harvey, Mrs. Emma Guild, 50 cts.; Mr. Preston Guild, $1; Mrs. Belle Phillips, 50 cts.; Harvey: Mrs. Davidson, $1; Miss Mary Little, $1; Mrs. Gilbert, $1; Mrs. Myrers, $1.18; Mrs. Osgood, $1; Mrs. R. Laurette Murphy, $1.02; Baby Band, $3.80; Hampshire: W. C. T. U. $37; Hanna City: Mrs. Wm. Wiley, 50 cts. Hannah City: Martha F. Patton, $1; Irving Park: W. C. T. U., 50 cents; Mrs. Geo. Currier, $1; Libertyville: W. C. T. U., $4.10; Mansfield: Mrs. M. Ruckman, $1; Moline: W. C. T. U., $100; Thirza A. Nye, $1; Amelia B. Keyes, $3.65; Marseilles: Mrs. E. J. Piester, $1; Mattoon: Bessie D. McLain, $5; Mendota: Mrs. Emily S. Barker, $1; Middletown: Mrs. N. H. Flager, $1; Mason City: W. C. T. U., per Mrs. C. H. Merritt, $7; Morton Park: Mrs. Charlotte Torle and children, $1; Millington: W. C. T. U., $2.50; Moweaqua: D. C. Ayars and sister, $7.40; Newman: Agnes Finney, $1; Nachusa: W. C. T. U., $3; Orion: W. C. T. U. and Good Templars, $10.75; Odell: Mrs. Matilda Edmunds, $3.75; Oregon: Mrs. A. P. Hatch, 50 cents; Eden: Mrs. Martha Glasgow, 50 cents; Oak Park: Mrs. Mary Lovell, $1; Mrs. E. Hilton, 50 cents; Plymouth: Mrs. R. J. Edwards, $1; Plainfield: Mrs. S. G. Royce, $1; Pecatonica: Mrs. H. K. Perley, $1.50; Pesotum: Mrs. A. Moncrieff, $1; Payson: Augusta M. Hood, $5; Rockford: W. C. T. U., $20; Rock Island: Y. W. C. T. U., $2.15; Robinson: W. C. T. U., $20; Rantoul: Y. W. C. T. U., $1; Springfield: H. C. Barker, $2.50; Sandwich: Mary A. Davis, $4.65; Sparta: W. J. Wylie, $1; Sycamore: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Osborn, $3; M. W. Peters, $2; Utica: Mrs. W. P. Smith, $1; Virginia: Mrs. A. H. Reat, $1; Waterman: Emma K. Macklin, $1.67; Western Springs: W. C. T. U., $1.46; Wilmington: Mrs. C. Main, $1; Waukegan: Mrs. Geo. Brean, $3.65; Mrs. S. S. Cole, $1; Woodstock: W. C. T. U., $9.12; LaGrange: Mrs. M. J. Dorr, $1; Princeville: W. C. T. U., $3; Tuscola: W. C. T. U., $2.82; Seventeenth District: W. C. T. U., per Miss Cora Husband, $15; per Amelia Cram, $2.

Long Island—Good Ground: Mrs. E. J. Curtiss, $1; Riverhead: Mrs. S. D. Whaley, $2.50.

Virginia—Lynchburg: Mrs. M. N. Moorman, $1; Ivanhoe: Miss Manie C. Eakin, $1; Winchester: Mattie Shumate, $15; Riverton: Mrs. M. E. Weston, $1; Mrs. Samuel Carson, $2; Parksley: Mrs. H. E. Van Deman, 50 cts.

West Virginia—Parkersburg: Mrs. S. Davidson, 50 cts.; Romney: A Friend, $4.

Wyoming—Sheridan: Ida F. Mills, $1.

Utah—Ogden: Mrs. S. Ash, $1.

SARA G. JOHNSON,
To June 1, 1894. Financial Sec'y.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL AND SANITARIUM.

1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago.

The annual reports of the board of trustees of the National Temperance Hospital are now ready for distribution, and any one desiring a copy can secure the same by requesting it of Mrs. Ralph S. Greenlee, corresponding secretary, 1691 Sheridan Road, Chicago. Please inclose stamp for return postage.

Under direction of the board of trustees, two leaflets have been prepared giving information of value to all interested in the work of the hospital. These can be secured from the corresponding secretary.

The following donations were received during the month of November, 1894:

CONNECTICUT—Mystic Y's, 1 bureau scarf, 1 pin cushion; Mrs. Forbes, Hartford, 1 Bible; Watertown Y's, a Christmas present of white aprons for each of the nurses and a hair mattress for the Y room.

ILLINOIS—Tiskilwa W. C. T. U., 2 bbls. vegetables, 1 box apples; Chicago, Baby Wilkins, box of toys for L. T. L. room; Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, 2 glasses jelly; Monmouth W. C. T. U., 10 glasses jelly, 5 gals. grape juice; Seneca W. C. T. U., 26 cans fruit, 12 glasses jelly; Odell W. C. T. U., 15 cans fruit, 5 glasses jelly; Wheaton, public school children, 18 cans fruit; Farmer City W. C. T. U., 1 quilt; Martinsville W. C. T. U., 12 cans fruit; Murdoch Y. W. C. T. U., 18 cans fruit, 12 glasses jelly; Sycamore W. C. T. U., 38 cans fruit, 12 glasses jelly, 1 chicken.

NEBRASKA—Hampton W. C. T. U., 4 sheets, 4 pillow cases.

PENNSYLVANIA—North East W. C. T. U., 1 bottle grape juice.

IOWA—Hopkinton W. C. T. U., 12 heads cabbage, ½ bushel potatoes, 1½ peck of onions, 1 glass jelly, 6 cans corn, 1 can tomatoes, 6 pounds honey, 1½ bushel turnips, 1 can peaches, 1 pumpkin; Letts W. C. T. U., 1 case of eggs.

INDIANA—Fairmount W. C. T. U., 14 cans fruit, 1 bottle grape juice, 1 dozen eggs, 2 glasses jelly.

OHIO—Kinsman, James McGranahan, 2 dozen Gospel Hymnals.

NEW YORK.—Hermitage W. C. T. U., 17 cans fruit, 14 glasses jelly.

UNKNOWN—41 cans fruit, 2 barrels potatoes, 25 glasses jelly, 2 comforts, 3 quilts, 2 boxes cut flowers, 1 scrap-book, old linen and cotton.

MASSACHUSETTS—L. T. L., Easton, 6 scrapbooks, 1 quilt; L. T. L., Fall River, 4 cans fruit, 9 glasses jelly; Miss Gates, Leaticket, 1 white apron.

IOWA—College Springs W. C. T. U., 48 qts. fruit, 4 cans grape juice, 24 glasses jelly; Mrs. Leighton, Des Moines, 1 bureau scarf; W. C. T. U., Wyman, 6 cans fruit; Harlan Y's, Clarinda, 1 picture, 1 throw; Clarinda W. C. T. U., 12 glasses of jelly; Floyd, 1 painting, 1 table cover; Battle Creek W. C. T. U., box flowers.

It is earnestly requested that in all boxes sent the name of donors shall be placed and the list of articles the package contains; that all charges be prepaid, and everything shall be addressed to the National Temperance Hospital, 1619 Diversey avenue, as when addressed to Miss Willard, or any other person, or to the Temple, added cost becomes a tax, as the two buildings are about three miles apart. It is also desirable that when quilts or comforts have been made for the hospital they should be disposed of at home and the proceeds sent to apply on the purchase of blankets, which are more readily kept in sanitary condition.

The following is the report of the house physician for the quarter ending November 30, 1894.

DISEASES TREATED.

| | |
|---|---|
| Abdominal Aneurism | 1 |
| Abdominal Tumor | 1 |
| Chorea | 2 |
| Constipation | 3 |
| Cystic ovary | 1 |
| Cysto-papillomatous degeneration of ovaries | 1 |
| Endometritis | 5 |
| Fibroid of uterus | 1 |
| Floating kidney | 1 |
| Gastric fever | 1 |
| Gastro-enteric fever | 1 |
| Hemorrhoids | 2 |
| Hypertrophied cervix | 1 |
| Infected hands | 1 |
| Lacerated cervix | 3 |
| Lacerated perineum | 4 |
| Malformation of labia majora | 1 |
| Morphine habit | 2 |
| Nephritis | 1 |
| Neurasthenia | 1 |
| Nervous prostration | 1 |
| Persistent headache | 1 |
| Proctitis | 2 |
| Prolapsus uteri | 4 |
| Phimosis | 2 |
| Pneumonia | 1 |
| Pulmonary hemorrhage | 1 |
| Relaxed vaginal walls | 1 |
| Retroversion | 4 |
| Ulcerative vulvitis | 1 |
| Urethral caruncles | 2 |
| Uterine engorgement and induration | 2 |
| Uterine polypus | 1 |
| Obstetrical cases | 1 |
| Total | 57 |

Number of females, 34; number of males, 9; total, 43.

OPERATIONS.

| | |
|---|---|
| Abdominal hysterectomy | 1 |
| Alexander's operation | 1 |
| Amputation of cervix | 1 |
| Amputation of labia majora | 1 |
| Amputation of uvula | 1 |
| Circumcision | 2 |
| Dilatation and curetting of uterus | 6 |
| Dilatation of rectum and removal of hem | 5 |
| Ovariotomy: | |
| Single | 2 |
| Double | 1 |
| Perineorrhaphy | 4 |
| Trachelorrhaphy | 3 |
| Removal of urethral papillar | 2 |
| Total | 30 |

NATIONALITIES:—American, 27; Danish, 1; German, 8; Norwegian, 2; Scotch, 1; Swedish, 4. Total, 43.

STATES:—Dakota, 1; Idaho, 1; Illinois, 34; Kansas, 1; Missouri, 2; Wisconsin, 3; Wyoming, 1. Total, 43.

OBITUARY.

[Obituary notices of five lines or less are published free. Longer notices will be inserted at the rate of ten cents a line.]

MRS. C. W. TEETE, for seven years president, of the St. Lawrence county, N. Y., W. C. T. U., died at her home in Potsdam, November 16, 1894.

***

MARY LAWRENCE STAPLEY, familiarly known as "Grandma Stapley," was called to her reward on the last day of the old year, 1894, at the ripe age of eighty-nine. She was born in England. This is the first death in the Belmond union.

***

AT Van Buren, Ark., December 28, the mother of Mrs. C. M. Thompson passed away, at the honored age of eighty-two years and seven months. She never lost an opportunity to use her influence in favor of temperance.

***

MRS. HENRIETTA KIRBY, of Marietta, O., wife of S. B. Kirby, died in December. No member of the W. C. T. U. could have been more missed than she who was always so gentle and thoughtful in all her work.

***

MRS. FRANCES ROBERTSON SHEARMAN died in a railway accident December 7, 1894. She was a member of the Lakewood, N. Y., W. C. T. U., and an earnest Christian temperance worker.

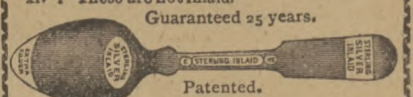
***

MRS. S. J. LOCKRIDGE, the beloved and honored president of the Pawnee, Ill., W. C. T. U., received the summons to come up higher, on the morning of December 4. Through her efforts the local union was organized and headquarters built.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are unequalled for clearing the voice. Public speakers and singers the world over use them.

The Wearing quality of spoons and forks is the test of their real value. STERLING SILVER INLAID spoons and forks have the wearing qualities of solid silver. Why? Because silver is inlaid in back of bowl and handle before plating. Not to be confounded with sectional plate, "xii" or "xiv". These are not inlaid.

Guaranteed 25 years.



Patented.

Each article stamped on the back:
E. STERLING INLAID HE.
For sale by all jewelers. Made only by The Holmes & Edwards Silver Co., Bridgeport, Ct.
New York salesroom 2 Maiden Lane, (second door from Broadway). A complete line of Solid Siver, Plated Ware and Novelties. 14

PRIZES ON PATENTS.

How to get $100 and Perhaps Make a Fortune.

We secure patents and to induce people to keep track of their bright ideas we offer a prize of one hundred dollars to be paid on the first of every month to the person who submits to us the most meritorious invention during the preceding month. We will also advertise the invention free of charge in the National Register, a weekly newspaper, published in Washington, D. C., which has an extensive circulation throughout the United States and is devoted to the interests of inventors.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

The idea of being able to invent something strikes most people as being very difficult; this delusion the Company wishes to dispel. It is the simple things and small inventions that make the greatest amount of money, and the complex ones are seldom profitable. Almost everybody, at some time or another, conceives an idea, which, if patented, would probably be worth to him a fortune. Unfortunately such ideas are usually dismissed without thought. The simple inventions like the car window, which could be easily slid up and down without breaking the passenger's back, the sauce pan, the collar button, the nut lock, the bottle stopper, the snow shovel are things that almost every one sees some way of improving upon, and it is these kind of inventions that bring the greatest returns to the author.

The prize we offer will be paid at the end of each month, whether the application has been acted upon by the Patent office or not. Every competitor must apply for a patent on his invention through us, and whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a valuable patent.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
JOHN WEDDERBURN, Gen'l Manager,
618 F. St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

P. S. The responsibility of this company may be judged from the fact that its stock is held by about seventeen hundred of the leading newspapers of the United States.

PIMPLES

Freckles, Blotches, Ringworm, Eczema, Scald Head, Tetter, and all other skin disorders positively cured with

HEISKELL'S OINTMENT.

If you would have soft, smooth and healthy skin, free from all imperfections, use constantly

HEISKELL'S SOAP.

Price 25 cts. Send Stamp for Free Sample.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., PHILA.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED.
DYSPEPSIA FLOUR.
Also Special Diabetic Food, Barley Crystals, and Patent Biscuit, Cake and Pastry Flour.
Unrivaled in America or Europe.
Pamphlets and Baking Samples Free.
Write Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U. S. A.

DENT'S TOOTHACHE GUM
STOPS TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY.
Ask for DENT'S; take no other.
Sold everywhere, or by mail 15 cts.
C. S. DENT & CO., DETROIT, MICH.
(A Swell Affair.)

Dent's Corn Gum Cures Corns, Bunions, Warts.

AGENTS WANTED FOR NEW BOOK, MARK TWAIN'S "Pudd'nhead Wilson, and Those Extraordinary Twins." An immense hit. Write quick for exclusive territory and terms. NATIONAL PUB. CO., 160 Adams St., Chicago.

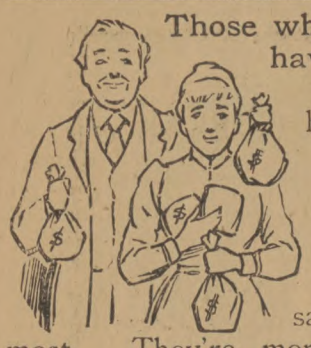
HOME STUDY Success in Business Life is within the reach of all who take a thorough Business College course at Home, by Mail. It will pay to investigate. Cat. free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 77 College Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

CANCER permanently cured. No knife. No poison. No plaster. JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address, C. J. MASON, Box, 519, New York City, N. Y.

AGENTS clear $100 monthly. 100 New Ladies' Specialties for Old and Young. 64 page Illust'd Catalogue FREE. G. L. Erwin & Co., Chicago, Ill. LADY

BAKER'S COCOA ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used.



Those who have the most have it, as a rule, because they save the most. They're more economical. These people buy Pearline. Proof—in all stores of the better class throughout the land, you'll find the sales of Pearline far in the lead. Now, these economical people wouldn't use Pearline for their washing and cleaning, if they didn't find it to be just what we say—the most economical in every way. Would they? 440 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

Publisher's Notes.

The monthly

RESPONSIVE READING

is entitled "Prohibition Cross Fire." It is a skillful compilation of facts and theories connected with the cause of Prohibition.

Price: Bible Readings:
Single copies per year.....$ 12
10 copies to one address....1.00
Price: Responsive Reading:
Single copies per year.....$ 10
13 copies to one address.... 1.00
Per 100..... 25

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ARE YOU FULLY EQUIPPED FOR WORK?

If Not, Send for a Catalogue of Our Publications.

Send for a catalogue now, and see what supplies we have for your own particular line of work. We will gladly furnish them for distribution in your local union if you will send to us your address. "I have one and could not work intelligently without it," writes an enthusiastic worker. "When I want to know anything about any department, I take the catalogue and know what to send for, so I desire one for every member of our union, as I want them to be familiar with the very good stock of 'weapons' with which to carry on this peaceful war for God and humanity, which the W. T. P. A. can furnish them at rates so cheap."

Send to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

The subject for the

JANUARY BIBLE READING

is Pentecostal Preparation and is particularly suggestive as a starting point for the work of the year.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A CALENDAR WORTH HAVING.

Almost everyone has use for a calendar, and by the same token, they ought to have one that is of some use. A calendar that you have to study or "set" has little excuse for existence.

The one we like best of all that is published by N. W. Ayer & Son, the Newspaper Advertising Agents of Philadelphia.

The handsome copy for 1895 carries on its seal their famous motto, "Keeping Everlastingly at it Brings Success," which will alone each day be worth to all who use it far more than the price of the calendar. The size is generous, and the work a beautiful specimen of the printer's art. Each day, as is becoming to such an important slice of time, is printed large enough to be read across a room. Then, too, the matter on the flaps deals with a subject in which there is a growing general interest.

That the demand for this calendar increases each year, we can easily understand, for we do not believe that any one who has spent one year in company with it, will be willing to spend another without it.

The price is 25 cents, delivered everywhere postpaid, and in perfect condition.

Publisher's Notes.

THE WHITE RIBBON BIRTHDAY BOOK

will make a splendid

New Year's Gift

to a W. C. T. U. woman, or to any other woman. It contains a selection for each day from the best writers among women, and on the opposite page spaces for autographs.

Edited by Anna A. Gordon,
and
Illustrated by Mary A. Lathbury.

This is the first Birthday Book composed, compiled, illustrated and published solely by women.

Bound in appropriate and attractive form.

Price $1.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A GREAT MOTHER

Too much cannot be said of the value of this book, not only to the mothers of the present day, but to mothers of the future. It is dedicated to the

White Ribbon Women of the World, their Husbands and their Children,

and is destined to live as one of the marked books of the "woman's century." This biography of Madam Willard is the work of her daughter,

Frances E. Willard,

and her kinswoman,

Minerva B. Norton,

and the introduction is written by

Lady Henry Somerset.

Bound daintily in gray and silver, and beautifully illustrated.

Price $1.50.

HAVE YOU SEEN OUR YOUNG WOMEN FOR JANUARY?

Surely a daintier exponent of our cause was never issued from any press. Your attention is caught by the glowing New Year Wish upon the title page and the varied table of contents.

A visit to Miss Grace Dodge by Frances H. Ensign is this month's special article.

The paper is brim full of interesting reading for young people from fifteen to fifty.

Send for sample copy.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

You will find the "White Ribbon Hymnal" a great help in temperance meetings and song services. Price 35c.

POLYGLOT PETITION.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

Names. | Residences.

SCOTT'S FREE CATALOGUE OF AND OTHER FLOWERS ROSES

Brighter and handsomer than ever with special features of Premiums, Discounts, Club Offers and Low Prices with full description of the latest varieties and profusely illustrated. IT IS SENT FREE. WRITE TO-DAY.

ROBERT SCOTT & SON, 19th and Catharine Sts., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1895

"The Leading American Seed Catalogue."

A handsome book of 174 pages with many new features for 1895—hundreds of illustrations, pictures painted from nature—it tells all about the BEST SEEDS that grow, including rare novelties that cannot be had elsewhere. Any seed planter is welcome to a copy FREE. Send your address to-day on a postal.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Seed Growers, PHILADELPHIA.

EASILY THE BEST WOMAN'S PAPER IN GREAT BRITAIN.

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL...

EDITED BY

LADY HENRY SOMERSET

Is a weekly review of woman's work in philanthropy and reform, and the OFFICIAL ORGAN of

The British Women's Temperance Association....

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL is thoroughly abreast of the times, and an authority on the advanced movement now everywhere occupying the mind of thinking women. It contains interviews with prominent women; serial stories by well-known authors; Books Worth Reading, by Lady Henry Somerset; social sketches; contributions from Miss Frances E. Willard, and, in all, comprises a timely, up-to-date journal for thoughtful women.

Subscription $1.56, postpaid, per annum, to any address.....

Editorial Rooms and Office of Business Manager, to whom all communications should be addressed, 33, 34 Memorial Hall, Farringdon St., London, E. C., England.

ATTENTION BOYS!

FOR SIX NEW SUBSCRIBERS

to THE UNION SIGNAL we will send this watch to your address, postpaid.

FOR FOUR NEW SUBSCRIBERS

and Fifty Cents we will send it to your address, postpaid.

FOR TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS

and Seventy-five Cents we will send it to your address, postpaid.

THIS OFFER IS

FOR BOYS ONLY

Boys who will thank us for this generous offer to own the best pocket time-piece yet made by any Clock Company. Extreme diameter of case 2¼ inches.

As soon as your mind is made up to secure one of these Watches, write to us. Address

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

OUR NEW YEAR'S OFFER

To NEW Subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL.....

Cut out the Coupon given below and send it to us with $1.15, and get THE UNION SIGNAL for 1895, and The White Ribbon Cook Book.

This offer is made to NEW subscribers only.

COUPON

This coupon, if sent to THE UNION SIGNAL together with $1.15, is good for one year's subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and a copy of the White Ribbon Cook Book.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n
...THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

LETTERS FROM THE PSALM COUNTRY,
By Mary A. Lathbury,

Which was published in THE UNION SIGNAL of August 30, has been issued as a Department Leaflet (Evangelistic) No. 76.

It comes to one's soul like a breath from the hills of God. Buy it for all your friends.

Price, per 100 ..... 15
" 1,000..... 1.25

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

A BOOK FOR FATHERS AND MOTHERS

and for the friends of children everywhere. A book which should be in every home.

Childhood: Its Care and Culture, By Mary Allen West.

"It is designed," says the author, "to assist parents in their work of training the coming men and women, which means the developing of the higher nature and bringing into subjection to it the lower." "It is

Not a Book of Sermons, or didactic teachings, but one that has grown naturally out of the rich soil of a thousand homes, ranging through all gradations of social life. . . . Its thoughts, therefore, are not untried theories, but blessed experiences." It is a book of wonderful power and fascinating interest and withal intensely practical. A book that appeals to the awakening heart of

American Motherhood

and whose influence will widen and deepen as the years go on. No more fitting or helpful gift could be found for a young mother.

The work is profusely illustrated and contains many exquisite pieces of music adapted to the little folks.

Price,

Cloth, marble edges..... $3.00
Full morocco, gilt edges.... 4.25

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ATTENTION, PRESS WORKERS!

"The press department of W. C. T. U. is above all else an educational propaganda," so says Miss Irene Fockler, associate superintendent of this department in the valuable department leaflet No. 112.

The Associated Press and How to Use It.

"Have the religious press and woman's temperance work common interests? If so how can they coöperate to extinguish the fire fiend of drink?"

These questions are ably discussed by Miss Margaret Sudduth, managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, in the new department leaflet, No. 113.

Co-operation of the Religious Press with W. C. T. U. Work.

How to help and how to hinder temperance evangelization through the press is set forth in leaflet No. 111.

The Press as an Evangelist.

The above leaflets are part of the indispensable equipment of every W. C. T. U. press worker. State superintendents should see to it that every local superintendent is provided with these helps to systematic and effective effort along this line.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

COMPETITIVE STORIES.

The prize contest for readers of Young Women has been extended in time until March 1.

Five dollars is offered for the best short temperance story.

Three dollars for the second best.

Two dollars for the third best.

Conditions.

1. The writer must be a subscriber to Young Women.

2. The story must be from 600 to 1,000 words in length.

3. The manuscript must be received on or before March 1, 1895.

4. The three prize stories, and any others which are worthy publication, will appear in Young Women.

5. No manuscripts will be returned unless stamps sufficient to cover postage are enclosed.

Address YOUNG WOMEN.
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE PENAL DEPARTMENT.

has also a new leaflet which will be heartily welcomed by our women whose specialty is prison work. It is, as its title indicates to the "shut-ins" of our jails and penitentiaries and was prepared by Rev. George Hickox, chaplain of the state prison at Jackson, Mich., at the request of our National superintendent of penal and reformatory work.

An Open Letter

Price of all department leaflets 15 cts. per 100; $1.25 per 1000.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Our Library Table.

BIGELOW'S HANDBOOK OF PUNCTUATION. For the use of Printers, Authors, Teachers and Scholars, by Marshall T. Bigelow.

This little volume is not a new publication but is in demand because of its completeness and compactness.

Lee & Shepard, Publishers. 10 Milk St., Boston. Price 50 cents.

---

FROM BLOMIDON TO SMOKY, by Frank Bolles. A most charming volume made up of descriptive notes of travel and chapters about birds. The author betrays in every line his friendship for the feathered tribe and his love of nature.

Houghton, Mifflin & Company, Boston and New York. Price $1.25.

---

MORE BED-TIME TALES. By Minnie E. Kenney (Mrs. George A. Paull). A collection of thirteen short stories for children, written in a happy vein and not even suggestive of the stuff that dreams are made of—unless they be dreams of the most ideal character.

Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House, New York.

---

IN THE WILDS OF THE WEST COAST, by J. Macdonald Oxley. A story of travel and adventure, interesting and spirited. Fort Victoria—whales—whirlpools—Queen Charlotte Islands—Indians—Russians—seals—sea-otters, are suggestive words from the pages of this "splendid" story.

Thomas Nelson & Sons, 33 East 17th St., New York.

---

In the series of "American Reformers," edited by Carlos Martyn, is JOHN BROWN AND HIS MEN, by Richard J. Hinton. This is a fine character study. The author takes abundant time to analyze cause and effect, purpose and effort, failure and success without becoming at any time tedious. After study of the civil war such a work as this is invaluable for its detail and sidelights. The author speaks of John Brown as punctuating "American history with the dynamic acts of a life unawed by power and untrammeled by policy."

Published by Funk & Wagnalls Company. New York.

---

THREE TIMES AND OUT. By Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson.

Mrs. Dickinson has a rare gift of story-telling and a rare one in striking a high and pure key-note in the plot of her narratives. The little book in question recites the experiences of three good women in country homes who took three city girls to work for them, the purpose in view being to help the girls to better ideals of life. The amusing situations and often tragic encounters, with the healthy and happy thread of romance, form a combination well-pleasing to readers.

Hunt & Eaton, New York; Cranston & Curts, Cincinnati. Price 75 cts.

---

Francis H. Jenks, whose death is so sincerely mourned in Boston musical circles, was a most careful student of American musical history. Just before he died he prepared a thorough article on Lowell Mason for the NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE, the proofs of which were on his desk at the time of his death. The article appears in the January number of the magazine, and will be read almost as much by reason of the interest in the writer as the interest in the subject. But the interest in Lowell Mason in all American musical and religious circles is very great. In the last generation Mason's influence upon our church choirs was dominating; and to this day probably no other tunes are sung in our churches so much as his.

Warren F. Kellogg, Publisher, 5 Park Square, Boston.

---

PENS AND TYPES; OR HINTS AND HELPS FOR THOSE WHO WRITE, PRINT, TEACH, READ OR LEARN. By Benjamin Drew.

The title is exhaustive, and the book gives in two hundred pages, very minute details regarding the work of authors and editors, compositors and proof-readers. Mr. Drew very ingeniously lays upon the author the responsibility for the compositors' wages, showing how one who works by the piece is retarded and actually defrauded of his right by an obscure manuscript. Plain handwriting is at the command of all, unless a paralytic or palsied condition forbid control of the muscles, and this is exceptional. The little work in question gives many helpful rules in regard to writing for the press, reading proof, etc., with lists of words to be italicized, abbreviated, etc.

Lee & Shepard, publishers, Boston. Price $1.25.

Coughs and Colds,

Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Weak Lungs, General Debility and all forms of Emaciation are speedily cured by

Scott's Emulsion

Consumptives always find great relief by taking it, and consumption is often cured. No other nourishment restores strength so quickly and effectively.

Weak Babies and Thin Children are made strong and robust by Scott's Emulsion when other forms of food seem to do them no good whatever.

The only genuine Scott's Emulsion is put up in salmon-colored wrapper. Refuse cheap substitutes!

Send for pamphlet on Scott's Emulsion. FREE.

Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All Druggists. 50 cents and $1.

THE UNION SIGNAL

Published at The Temple, Chicago, by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

...EDITED BY...

Miss FRANCES E. WILLARD,

LADY HENRY SOMERSET, Corresponding Editor, and Miss MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, Managing Editor.....

...The price is $1, postpaid, per annum...

The paper was founded in 1875, and is the literary child of the great temperance Crusade of Women. It is the official organ of the World's and National W. C. T. U.; has subscribers in every civilized nation, and is doubtless read by half a million persons every week..... Its key-note is "Home Protection," and its pages are mellow with the thought, affection and purpose of that "organized mother-love" which is inspired by the Spirit of God.

Books for Mothers and Daughters.

Confidential Talks with Young Women.

By LYMAN B. SPERRY, M. D., Lecturer on Sanitary Science, Carleton College, Minn Author of "Concerning Narcotics," "Confidential Talks with Young Men," etc. With introduction by Frances E. Willard and Mary Wood Allen. 16mo, cloth, 75c.

This helpful volume, treating an important subject from a Christian, medical point of view, should be carefully read, and its contents imparted to the daughters of to-day.

In all the long catalogue of useful books published by Revell, I know of none more likely to do noble service than Dr. Sperry's two series of "Confidential Talks with Young Men and Young Women." These books treat of subjects the most delicate in an absolutely plain and fearless way without that mischievous vagueness so often assumed by writers of such books—a prudery that aggravates by its half-suggestions whatever pruriency may be lurking in the mind of the reader.—Golden Rule.

The Science of Motherhood. By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life." Paper, board and illuminated cover. 12mo, 35c.

"To be a mother is the grandest vocation in the world. No other human being has a position of such power and influence. She holds in her hands the destiny of nations, for to her is necessarily committed the making of the nation's citizens." This extract from the author's prefatory chapter but enunciates the principle of the little volume, and our readers are sufficiently familiar with the gifted author's former volumes to realize that in this new line of thought they will have a helpful treatise.

DAINTY GIFTS.

A GIFT OF PEACE. Peace texts for 365 days. By ROSE PORTER. Daintily bound in white vellum; pansy cover design; silver top; boxed. A companion volume to "A Gift of Love."

Our Special Price, postpaid, $1.

A Gift of Love. Love texts for 365 days. By ROSE PORTER. Fifth Edition. Uniform with "A Gift of Peace."

Our Special Price, postpaid, $1.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKS by F. B. MEYER

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE SERIES.

Key Words to the Inner Life.
Future Tenses of the Blessed Life.
Present Tenses of the Blessed Life.

"He always has something to say that is suggestive."—Sunday-School Times.

The Shepherd Psalm.

"Worth its weight in gold."—Central Baptist.

Christian Living.

"A small book, but mighty in power."—Interior.

Elegantly bound in white vellum and silver top, each, 60 cents; the five volumes in neat case, $3.

Since the days of Miss Havergal's "Kept for the Master's Use," no devotional books have attained the deserved popularity that is accorded the Christian Life Series, by F. B. Meyer.

"Few books of recent years are better adapted to instruct and help Christians than those of this author. He is a man 'mighty in the Scriptures.'"—D. L. Moody.

"I do not know of any writer whose works on 'The Life More Abundant' I could more heartily recommend than those of Mr. Meyer."—Rev. B. Fay Mills.

HANNAH WHITALL SMITH'S WORKS.

Just Out.

Every-Day Religion; or, The Common-Sense Teaching of the Bible. By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life." 12mo. cloth, $1.

"In preparing these Lessons, I have aimed not so much to get at the doctrinal truths of our religion, as at the every-day, practical common-sense principles; and to show how to apply these principles to our week-day lives."—Preface.

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life. 175th Thousand.

THE "STANDARD EDITION." 12MO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| No. 1. | Paper | $ 50 |
| 2. | Cloth | 75 |
| 3. | Cloth, gilt edges | 1 00 |
| 4. | ½ white cloth, boxed | 1 25 |

THE "HANDY CLASSIC EDITION." 16MO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| No. 3. | Cloth, gilt edges | $ 85 |
| 3½. | Half white vellum, gilt edges | 1 00 |
| 4. | French morocco, seal | 1 50 |
| 12. | Best German calf, embossed | 2 25 |
| 14. | Best German calf, padded | 2 50 |

Nos. 4, 12 and 14, are each gilt edges, round corners boxed.

Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

Signal Notes.

SOME one estimates the number of inebriate women in British jails at six thousand.

EIGHT of the Chicago aldermen are said to be proprietors of gambling houses and saloons.

SPURGEON'S sermons, though in the fortieth year of publication, are in increasing demand.

THERE are thirty-three Y. M. C. Associations in Japan, numbering one thousand and fifty-five members.

IT is thirty-two years since the first colored woman to receive the degree of M. A. in the United States, Miss Mary Patterson, was graduated from Oberlin College.

THIRTY-SIX out of forty-eight eminent physicians of Europe, who were questioned recently concerning the healthfulness of bicycling for women, approved the exercise in moderation, three approved only under certain conditions and nine were entirely opposed.

THE "Chautauqua idea" in another form is exemplified in the "Boston Society to Encourage Studies at Home," which was founded over twenty years ago by Miss Ticknor. Through its branches it helps many women who live on isolated farms and ranches. The Pacific coast branch has students in the Hawaiian Islands and Japan.

THE population of the Fiji Islands, according to the Heathen Woman's Friend, is estimated at 123,000; of these 103,775 attend the services of the Wesleyan churches, and about 10,000 are Catholics. There are 40,000 children in the schools, under the care of 1,095 teachers; and there are 10 European missionaries, 72 native ministers, 40 catechists, 1,838 local preachers, and a century ago these were cannibals.

As a result of the crusade for cheaper bread, the price in Washington, D. C., has been reduced from five cents to four cents per loaf. The report of Professor W. O. Atwater on the cost of bread, issued by the Agricultural Department, shows that with the present low price of flour, which can be purchased by bakers in the eastern states at not over $4 a barrel, the cost of bread to the poor man who buys it of the baker is unfortunately large.

CANON MALCOLM MACCALL, who was the first to call public attention to the cruel treatment of Armenians by Turks in 1877, after having seen people impaled on the banks of the Danube, claims that the present Turkish investigating committee can be nothing more than a farce, for by the sacred law of Turkey, which is absolutely unchangeable, Christian evidence is never received against a mussulman and no mussulman will give evidence against a mussulman in favor of a Christian.

SECRETARY HOKE SMITH, in his recent report of the Interior Department, dealt largely with Indian affairs in the course of which he condemned in strong terms the establishment of saloons upon the line of Indian reservations. He called attention to the decision of Judge Ellinger, of Oregon, to the effect that the sale of liquor to an Indian who has received his land in severalty is not in violation of law because the allotment of land constitutes him a citizen. This, in the secretary's opinion, presented another argument against too speedy allotment of land in severalty to Indians.

THE plan of providing coöperative homes for young men has been successfully tried at Toynbee Hall, London, during the last five years. The halls contain fifty private study bedrooms and large common rooms, to which all residents are free to invite friends, take meals, etc. The cost of living which is managed by a committee, is only from fifteen to eighteen shillings a week. Athletic clubs are formed among the residents who can be as retired or as social as they please. The only condition of entering is proof of intention to study for which abundant opportunity is afforded.

THE Ceylon Educational League is an organization recently formed for the purpose of promoting the education of girls in that country. Mr. Peter de Abrew, an educated Sinhalese gentleman and merchant of Ceylon, is deeply interested in the movement. Mrs. Marie M. Higgins, president, left a lucrative position in the government office at Washington and is giving her services to the education of girls in the new Girls' School and Orphanage at Columbo, which is built on land donated by Mr. de Abrew. This is the first school founded by the League and it is hoped that with timely aid it may be supported and many others added.

Merit is Essential

Consumers have a habit of determining by experiment whether an article of food is pure, wholesome, convenient and economical. Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream possesses intrinsic merit. Will stand every test.

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 % PURE

USED IN HOSPITALS.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CIN'TI.

RHEUMATISM

Is often caused by a bad Liver. How is your Liver? Are your Kidneys all right? Does your sleep rest you? Does your back ache? Are you weak and thin? Are you dull and bilious? Marvelous success has attended the use of

Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm.

All who use it say it is the "PEERLESS REMEDY" for curing ailments of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, Female troubles, Rheumatism and Bright's Disease. For sale everywhere at $1.00 per bottle.

THE DR. J. H. McLEAN MEDICINE CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

Good Wives

grow fair in the light of their works, especially if they use SAPOLIO: It is a solid cake of scouring soap used for all cleaning purposes. All grocers keep it.

COPYRIGHT

LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST by many a woman who strives to please her household and works herself to death in the effort. If the house does not look as bright as a pin, she gets the blame—if things are upturned while house-cleaning goes on—why blame her again. One remedy is within her reach. If she uses SAPOLIO everything will look clean, and the reign of house-cleaning disorder will be quickly over.

RUBIFOAM FOR THE TEETH

SAMPLE VIAL FREE.

E. W. HOYT & CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Mother! Mother! Mother!

SET YOUR CHILD TO WORK.

The Young Crusader

will send a

PRIZE

to the boy or girl securing largest number of subscribers before

APRIL 1.

Send for January CRUSADER and read the particulars. Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

State L. T. L. Superintendents.

Do you know about

THE CRUSADER BANNER?

Has your state L. T. L. ever held it? Why not?

Send for January issue of YOUNG CRUSADER, and then get the children interested.

BOOKS.

"LADY GAY AND HER SISTER," by Mrs. George Archibald, is a sequel to "Lady Gay," published as a serial in Our Little Men and Women. The two little maids, quaint, wise and bubbling over with fun, will remind more than one mother of the children in her home. They are live children, with whom any other little man or woman will be glad to be acquainted.

Price 75 cents.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Young Women.

New Series Oak and Ivy Leaf...

★

Official Organ Young Women's Christian Temperance Union.

★

12 Pages. - Published Monthly. - 50c. a Year.

JENNIE A. STEWART, Editor.

★

A welcome change has taken place in our Y paper during the year. Enlarged and improved it is an attractive paper for the general reader as well as the young folks within the white-ribbon fold. The new list of departments includes:

News of the Month (in temperance, religious, political and educational circles); Special Articles (biography, travel, interviews, etc.); Queen's Gardens (poems, stories and sermonettes); Worth Repeating; Editorial; Official (messages and hints from the leaders in Y work); College Corner; Kindred Societies; Have You Read——? Brothers of Girls; Good Times; Girls at Home; By Mail; Silhouettes; Y Round Table and Pearls and Feathers.

TERMS TO UNIONS.

Single copies, one year, each ..... 50c
Five copies on one order, one year, each, 40c
Any number of copies, for distribution, each ..... 4c

TERMS TO SOLICITORS.

One copy, one year ..... 50c

For clubs of five or more, the solicitor may retain 10 cents of each cash subscription. After the first club is sent the solicitor's name will be entered, and ten cents may be retained for each subsequent cash subscription.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Young Women to one address, one year, $1.40.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO...

We still have on hand a limited supply of these beautiful art portfolios. If you have not seen them, by all means send for Part I, and we are sure you will want Parts II and III. A dainty and appropriate souvenir for white-ribboners to present to their friends at any season of the year,

...SEND FOR A COPY...

PART I

CONTAINS PICTURES OF

Frances E. Willard,
Lady Henry Somerset,
Mother Thompson,
Madam Willard,
Mother Wallace,
Mary Clement Leavitt,
Margaret Bright Lucas,
Mother Stewart,
Hannah Whitall Smith,
Neal Dow,
Clinton B. Fisk,
John B. Gough,
Mary Allen West.

PART II

Matilda B. Carse,
Mary A. Woodbridge,
Helen M. Barker,
L. M. N. Stevens,
Clara C. Hoffman,
Letitia Youmans,
Josephine E. Butler,
George W. Bain,
Ella F. M. Williams,
Kate C. Bushnell,
Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew,
Jessie A. Ackermann,
Alice R. Palmer and General John Bidwell.

PART III

CONTAINS LARGE EVANGELINE PICTURE OF

Frances E. Willard,
Esther Pugh, Caroline B. Buell,
Mary T. Lathrap,
Louise S. Rounds,
Susan S. Fessenden,
Mary T. Burt,
Margaret A. Sudduth,
Katharine Lente Stevenson,
Harriet B. Kells,
Jennie A. Stewart,
Caroline F. Grow,
Ruby I. Gilbert,
John G. Woolley.

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO

...COUPON...

Send this coupon, together with 75c., to this office, and you will receive Parts I, II and III of our White Ribbon Art Portfolio, or with 25c and this Coupon any one number you may designate.

Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE.
Chicago, Ill.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXI.—No. 3.] CHICAGO, JANUARY 17, 1895. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Mrs. L. Ursula Hetrick
1029 16th St.
Oak 93

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

OUR PREMIUMS.

While we do not think premiums a necessary impetus to zealous effort on the part of white-ribboners to work for THE UNION SIGNAL, we offer as an incentive to immediate effort the following premiums, whose value is at once apparent, without enlarging upon their literary or artistic merit.

FOR ONE NEW SUBSCRIBER.

Regular price, 35c.

A rare opportunity to supply your unions with the best collection of W. C. T. U. songs yet published.

* * *

FOR TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

Regular price, 50c.

A great prohibition story of thrilling interest.

* * *

FOR FIVE NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

Regular price, $3.

"If I could have but one book beside the Bible to help me in bringing up children I would by all means choose to have this."—Madam Willard.

CAROLINE F. GROW, Bus. Mgr.

WHERE TO SEND.

Send to Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, The Temple, Chicago, for the blank forms of the Polyglot Petition, but send the Petitions with the signatures attached, to Mrs. Rebecca C. Shuman, 2130 Sherman Ave., Evanston, Ill.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

A severe snowstorm invaded all of Europe Thursday.

All gambling houses have been ordered closed in Brussels.

The Carlisle currency bill has been rejected by the House.

Chicago's Civic Federation is investigating public school sanitation.

Food, clothing, coal, etc., are being sent by the carload to needy Nebraskans.

Senator Lexow has asked the New York legislature to continue the work of his committee.

The proprietor of The Toronto World was arrested last Thursday for issuing a Sunday edition.

Riots by unemployed and hungry working men are reported from St. John's, Newfoundland.

OUR National president has written each of our round-the-world missionaries, inviting them to speak at the presentation of the Polyglot Petition in Washington, February 15. It is hoped that Miss Ackermann will be there, but Mrs. Leavitt does not return until May. Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell are at work in England; Miss Alice Palmer has probably reached England by this time after her long and successful sojourn in South Africa and will work in the mother country until the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in London, June 14 to 21. It is hoped that all these white ribbon leaders, who have planted our standard in far-away lands, will participate in the presentation of this Petition to the British government. Meanwhile, let our forces at home "improve each shining hour," that their localities may not be counted out in the greatest petition work of the century. Cut out the Petition on page 13, and begin. Send all signatures to Mrs. Rebecca C. Shuman, 2130 Sherman Avenue, Evanston, Cook county, Ill., who is making the Great Petition, i. e., pasting and sewing it, and has been for several years a white ribbon woman faithful and true.

AT the banquet to Lady Henry Somerset, on the evening of January 3, in Boston, strong words were spoken for reform movements by all the speakers, the most prominent being those of Rev. Dr. Lansing, our Chieftain and the special guest of the evening, Lady Henry Somerset. A more elegant and tasteful banquet has never been given in Boston. The white ribbon, fastened at the center of the great Music Hall, stretched in long lines to its farthest corners and formed a canopy of peace and purity above the heads of the great throng. Mrs. Fessenden, Massachusetts' president, was at her best; the Y's were strongly in evidence, and the presence of such noted men and women as Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Mrs. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward and her brilliant husband, Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, Miss Anne Whitney, Rev. and Mrs. Joseph Cook, and a score of similar distinction, made a notable event. The menu card displayed a picturesque photogravure of Eastnor Castle and was tied with the white ribbon as were the Union Jack with the Stars and Stripes. Miss Willard's reply to the toast, "Only the Golden Rule can bring the Golden Age," will be found on page 4 of this issue. In her peroration Lady Henry Somerset introduced a most impressive and eloquent figure—the eagle as she had seen him chained in the Zoological Gardens of London, and as he is to-day by the curses of intemperance, monopoly and the disfranchisement of women.

IN their addresses of welcome to John Burns, in Faneuil Hall, on the evening of January 2, our two leaders expressed their sympathy with the working classes in all lawful attempts to better their condition. They declared in favor of the eight-hour law and of the national ownership of railways, telegraphs, telephones, etc., but these were by no means new departures, for the same position has been taken by our temperance host as a whole and in most of its specifications has a place in the platform of the Prohibition party.

JANUARY witnesses the opening of many state legislatures and an influx of new bills for the better conduct of the state. Kansas sets an admirable example in its first act—the introduction of an anti-lottery and gambling measure. The question of continuing the Lexow investigation is before New York's law-makers. One Illinois senator wants anarchy defined and another wishes to give civil service rules to Chicago; another proposes a state local option law. The annual messages of the governors are interesting reading. We can commend Governor Allen, of North Dakota, for his recommendation of the extension of suffrage to women in municipal matters at least, while we deplore that Governor Lewelling, of Kansas, in his fifteen thousand word output, has advised the state dispensary system. Governor Nelson, of Minnesota, would have a good municipal law, and Governor Renfrow wants statehood for Oklahoma Territory. In Texas, Governor Hogg advocates a more rigid anti-trust law. Governor Altgeld, of Illinois, in his lengthy message, calls attention to the large number of women whom he has appointed to office. Indiana will make prize-fighting a felony if Governor Matthew has his way. Governor Holcomb urges an immediate appropriation of a $100,000 relief fund by Nebraska. In Wisconsin Governor Upham, husband of our able National W. C. T. U. superintendent of work among lumbermen, gives a comprehensive review of the affairs of the Badger state, urging civil service reform. Each executive from his own standpoint indicates the needs of his state. "Knowing these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

WE again call attention to the great meeting of the National W. C. T. U., to be held in Washington, D. C., February 15 and 16, in connection with which the Polyglot Petition will be presented to representatives of the United States government. There will probably never be—at least not in this generation—another petition so varied in its circulation, so representative in its character, so historic in its status. White-ribbon women wishing to go to the Women's Council, which opens on February 17 and 18, should plan to come to the capital a few days earlier, that they may participate in the historic meeting to be held in connection with this presentation of the Petition. A meeting will be addressed by Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Mrs. Fessenden, of Massachusetts, Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, and other representative women. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, of Maine, the vice-president of the National W. C. T. U., will participate in the exercises, as will Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, our corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Helen M. Barker, our treasurer. Several of these ladies will remain and speak at the National Council of Women, which promises to be the most representative thus far held, and this is saying much when we remember the remarkable sessions of 1888 and 1890. The W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia is working hard to arrange for the coming of the Great Petition and those who will form its guard of honor. Mrs. Griffith and Mrs. LaFetra know how to "work up" a demonstration such as cannot be had outside the capital city of the United States. It is hoped that Mrs. Alice J. Harris, our superintendent of the musical department, will be present on this occasion.

TO THOSE IN THE VALLEY.

BY A. J. WATERHOUSE.

Not to the world-crowned heroes
Who list to a people's praise;
Not to the ones whom pleasure
Has led through the joyous days;
Not to the men whose treasure
Gives power to gladden or blight,
Nor to those whom the nations cherish
Would I sing a song to-night.

But to those who toil in the valley
Afar from the hills of peace;
Whose lives are an endless struggle,
Whose labors may never cease;
To those who are stunted and driven
By the day's recurring care,
Who deem that their God forgets them
Nor heeds their pleading prayer;

To the weary, weary toilers
Who work with a purpose dim,
Not knowing that, through the darkness,
The way leads up to Him;
To these—who are still my brothers
Though they walk afar from light—
I would sing, were the singer worthy,
A song of cheer to-night.

Oh, for a song whose music
Might gladden some heart of care,
Bringing one moment's blessing,
Cheering some soul's despair!
Oh, for that song!—Though, stricken,
My hand should no longer write,
I would know I had served the Father
And my heart would rejoice to-night.

Stockton, Cal.

A DEBT OF HONOR.

II.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

The scene shifted, and in the glowing embers it appeared to the dreamer that he saw the boxes were packed and on the cart; the carriage was at the door; it was the last hour at home, and he roamed around the house. Yes, he would just stick that catapult into his pocket—it might be handy. A lock of Rob's gray hair was wrapped in note-paper, and the wistful brown eyes looked up into his master's from out the shaggy eyebrows as though he knew some misfortune were about to fall on the house. Nurse's eyes were swollen till they looked as though they would drop out, and she was very aggressive in the use of her pocket handkerchief. Somehow he could not cry. it was all so new and interesting—his curiosity was so keen about the unknown life that was soon to unfold. He felt as he did on the day when his baby brother lay still and cold in the little white box, and when mother sat beside him and sobbed as though she were hurt, and he was so sorry for her; he wished he could have squeezed one tear, but he was watching eagerly to know what they would do with baby and how they would put him in the ground, so that he could hardly feel sorry. And then the first school-days passed before him—the time when he was alone as "the new boy," and when, after the lights were out and everything was still, he thought of the old room and mother and nurse—and somehow his pillow was wet, and he held his breath for fear any should hear him cry.

By and by all that was changed, and he looked patronizingly on new boys and "showed them round." He saw again the long shadows on the cricket-field—the slim, white-flanneled figures—and heard the sharp crack of the bat, and at intervals the cheers. The happy school-days! Then he was lying back in the boats at Eton, lazily drifting past the green fields, while Windsor Castle was outlined blue and faint against the sky-line. The dream was not so peaceful then. There was a vision of the green-cloth billiard-table in the small public-house in a narrow street; of strange faces and loud laughter. Home-coming was not quite all it used to be; there were things he didn't tell mother. He began to feel that there were distinctions between what could be told to good, pure women, who must be guarded from ill, and what must be kept for the coarser world in which men moved. Then, after Eton, Oxford—the wild, merry life—the fags and wines, the boating and riding, the good company and the debts. How vividly it all came before him! "'Old Moses' refuses to renew the bill"—the words lived again! The scene with his father at the writing-table in that very room when the kindly old face looked so pitifully into his and the blue eyes were dim with tears as the gentle hand was laid on his shoulder and he said, "Dear boy, let this be a lesson; it is a grief to your mother and to me, but we can trust you—can we not?" The kindness broke his heart. How fervently he promised, what strong resolves he made, and then—the pile of burning wood fell with a crash, the embers glowed more vividly, and again the picture changed.

The great race-course gleamed like an emerald in the sunshine; the eager crowd craned one way to catch the first sight of flying figures that were just showing on the sky line. Red and blue, white and black, they came; a cloud of dust heralds their approach, while the clatter of the horses' hoofs is the only sound that breaks the silence. Then a dull roar, followed by a deafening cheer as with a click the figures fall into their places at the winning post. He seemed to feel again the cold numbness that seized him as he saw those horrible arithmetical combinations. The crowd yelled, the bookmakers shouted and the negroes sang and twanged the banjo; and the people surged past him but he seemed alone. He went back to the grand stand and smiled and talked. The men whispered to each other that he was "hard hit," and the women consulted him about their speculations and asked him to go and lay their money in the ring. Then the drive back to London—the dusty road, the noisy streets, the quiet club, the velvet carpeted stairway and the civil porter touching his hat and handing him a telegram. He heard the rustle of the paper as he tore open the orange envelope, and once more he saw the words that were then burnt into his remembrance: "Come—father dying." The whirling express, the hurried inquiries from the old coachman who sat with a white, sad face upon the box and only said, "Get in, Master Jack. I beg pardon, sir, I'll get you there in time." The hushed house with the servants huddled on the stairs in groups, the darkened room; the figure that lay white and weak upon the bed with sobbing breath and upturned face; the bending woman that raised her head as she heard his step and hid her face upon his heart; the faint, faint smile that gleamed in the dear, tender old eyes, and then the awful hush when the sighing breath ceased and they waited hoping against hope to hear that sound again.

He lived again in thought the long, mournful days; he saw the quiet form in her black dress that sat so still by the fireside and the eyes that seemed now to look out into eternity watching for the companion of so many years; the long interviews with the family solicitors and the haunting feeling that the truth must soon be known, when the faithful followers who looked to him to replace the master they had loved must realize that the old home must go to pay the "debt of honor." And then when the marble stone in the mortuary chapel was only just affixed that told of the last of the long line laid to rest in the old parish church, the day came when in the twilight he had entered that very room and found the slight figure bent forward in her chair, her face hidden in her hands, and stooping down he laid his head against her knee as in old days. She did not stir, she did not stroke his curls as she was wont and look smiling into his eyes. He wanted to tell her all his trouble but she did not heed. Startled, he sprang to his feet and cried: "Mother, mother." But she had gone out to join her loved one where he beckoned to her across the narrow stream of time.

Boston, Mass.

ONLY THE GOLDEN RULE CAN BRING THE GOLDEN AGE.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The free and off-hand rendering of the Golden Rule in our nineteenth century vernacular would be, "Put yourself in his place." To do this requires imagination, that angel of the mind, and I believe that we have among us no end of people who would put themselves in the place of others if they only had the power.

The man at the club, delighting himself with a good dinner, enjoying his canvas-back and wine, would put himself in the place of the shivering street sweeper, but the shape of his head forbids him to do this; he is not built that way.

The woman who turns her wedding ring upon her finger, saying, "I have all the rights I want," would put herself in the place of the weary seamstress in the garret, except that she has a niggardly fitting out in that high poetic quality that gives color and perspective to the mind.

The man inside the cab, wrapped in furs and sheltered from the storm, would be more considerate of the cabman on the box who drives through storm and sleet, except that through lack of imagination he never thinks about the cabman any more than he does about the horses, and he thinks of these animate fellow creatures of his as much as he does about the tire of the wheel or the straps of the harness.

It is not that they are actively bad, these friends of ours who do not think, but perhaps it may be said without offence that they are not actively good. Now what we want is so to stamp the impress of the Golden Rule as to work into law the imaginative faculty of those who are gifted with the powers to put themselves in another's place, that those people who lack this "vision and faculty divine" shall still, by the very constitution and course of government, be obliged to carry out the Golden Rule in the dealings of man with man.

"Her faith and works are bells of full accord."

In this line from Tennyson is embodied the knowledge that three years of almost constant association in Christian work has given me concerning the guest whom we are met to honor (Lady Henry Somerset). That what I say is true is proved perhaps most potently in the fact that "the common people hear her gladly." Many a time at the close of a meeting where thousands upon thousands have assembled they have surrounded her carriage as we went away, with cheer upon cheer from voices that have not been wont to praise the class she represents, but whose curses for that class have been not loud, but deep.

In the temperance demonstration over a year ago, when a procession five miles long moved into Hyde Park and from a dozen different platforms the leading temperance speakers of Great Britain addressed the multitude, the tokens of loving affection and confidence that came to her were incomparably beyond those received by any other advocate of our holy cause, even by those who have served it the longest, and the sturdy workingmen were overheard saying to one another as she passed, "There goes Lady Henry Somerset; we can trust her; she is for us every time."

To my mind this faith has been borne in upon the spirits of the people for the reason that they perceive that our English leader is not content with the simple idea of the Golden Rule in action as the ideal of individual life, but that she has staked all upon its application to the common customs of society and the every-day laws of the land. This is the keynote of the present conflict, where countless armies are marshaliing under the white flag of peace (so let us hope and pray) to work out for themselves and for those about them a better destiny.

I was at the state-house this morning to witness the inauguration of the governor. What struck me most in the speech made by him was the growing space given to the subject of what may be called the coöperative commonwealth. He passed in review that subject, always paramount in Massachusetts, popular education. He told of Normal Schools founded, and a High School education now offered by the state to every child within its borders, and as he did this I was saying to myself, "If this is good why not go farther and let us have technical schools to furnish every child a trade, to put into every hand an honorable, bread-winning instrument?" When he described the elaborate system by which the public highways are improved by reason of state action, I could but think, "What except a superstition prevents the people from seeing that to operate the highways is just as much for their collective good when they are made of iron as of asphalt or of macadam?"

Why should the postal system be accepted as belonging to the people and not the telegraph system, the telephone system, and that open letter, most important of all, the newspaper?

When he told of the great institutions for the care of the defective, delinquent and dependent classes, I thought, "what, except a prejudice, holds the state from building tenements that shall replace the slums, and renting them, as is already done in some localities of London, to the same class of inhabitants?" When he told of the cattle killed by state authority, because they were infected with tuberculosis, I wondered when the application of the Golden Rule to the aggregate population would cause the state to destroy the dram-shops, whose virus flows out into the body politic.

When he said that the enforcement of existing laws for the restriction of the liquor traffic was more to be desired than the "feverish legislation," (by which he probably meant the outlawing of the saloon,) and yet had declared a little earlier that "persons were more important than property" in their relation to the state, and closed his address with the words, "may this be a commonwealth governed by laws rather than by men,"—I could but think that the application of these principles which are but corollaries of the Golden Rule, which is the one great law, would give all that we ask or ever have asked for the protection of the people and the progress of the state.

But reformers find at last the futility of putting the new wine of a new kingdom into the old bottles of an outworn conservatism. It is not under the political parties of the present, nor through the churches as now constituted, that the Golden Rule will be applied to the new conditions that are rushing upon us with the force of gravity and the persistency of fate.

For my part, I have for twenty years in vain sought to enlist the great, fortunate, entrenched, well-to-do class, as an active factor in the measures by which the Golden Rule shall, as I solemnly believe, serve to bring in the Golden Age. And I believe that the noble woman whom we are met to honor has the same prescience of what the future is to bring. Ringing in my ears for many a day, nay, for many a week and month, has been that great utterance of the apostle,

"Turn we now to the Gentiles."

It is not those who have achieved, but those who would achieve, through whom the Golden Rule shall bring the Golden Age. It is not the comfortable and well-to-do who will ever carry unpopular reforms to the climax of success. A thousand times have we heard quoted, when radical ideas and social questions were introduced, the words, "Oh, well, but you can't make things different." Is it not declared from lips divine, "The poor ye have always with you"? And almost never in the pulpit, or out of it, is the text referred to, "Let him that has two coats give to him that has none."

The temperance reform, the labor reform, the woman movement, the purity question, all close in like the fingers of a hand on the one determination to cause this and every commonwealth (I quote again the message of the Governor) "to be controlled by laws not men." We want laws that embody the Golden Rule; we want the selfish and thoughtless employer obliged to give the employed the benefit of the eight hour law; we want the living wage not to depend on men, but to be the enactment of the statute book; we want the corporations to have no alternative except to seek the greatest number's greatest good, because they have become the property of that greatest number. Indeed, I will go further and say, we want all the means of production and exchange to be so controlled and conducted by a majority of the people that the Golden Rule shall be carried out whether some people will or no; that it shall be for the interest of all concerned with these great enterprises so to conduct them that the maximum amount of benefit shall accrue to all the people in the state, and later on in the nation, and later on in the whole world.

As temperance reformers, we see that the liquor system is the concentration of selfishness, and we would give to the people themselves the right, the power, the process of putting it away, and we would back up that power by giving it two votes to the home where it now has but one. For we believe that what is true now has been true from the beginning, and will be to the end; the mother heart is the home of altruism; it is the fountain-head of the Golden Rule on earth; it always seeks the best interests of those committed to its care, and for this reason we would let loose upon those vile institutions of our towns and cities that threaten to undermine our civilization the tidal wave of purity and of affection that wells up from the heart of woman.

We believe there is no way out of the labyrinth of misery and sin in which the masses of the people wallow except by opening the sluiceways of the law and pouring in the pure and steady current of Golden Rule legislation until the classes built on artificial distinction shall be blotted out and the masses shall rise to the utmost that their inherent powers of brain and heart and hand can work out under a coöperative rather than a competitive system of industry, finance and law.

Because she holds to all these principles, because she has the bravery to declare them, because she suffers the ostracism of the aristocratic class from which she sprang, as the penalty of that great, free-hearted nature that has led her to espouse the cause of the people rather than the cause of the peer, Isabel Somerset has become the most trusted and the best loved woman of her nation, and next to John Burns she is the rising hope of that rising party of the people, whose motto is, "Each for the other, and God for us all."

Themistocles, the Grecian general, once brought unwelcome tidings to his superior officer, and was beaten for his pains with many stripes, but only said as the blows fell thick and fast, "Strike, but hear me!" So, to-day, with an earnest heart, she says, as I do to you and all who think us wrong, brothers, sisters, "Strike, but hear me!" and the future's victory shall justify these words.

Boston, Mass.

WILLARD HALL NOON MEETINGS.

BY MRS. ELLEN K. DENNY.

An aged mother, eighty-five years old, writes: "Pray that my son may be reclaimed, and that in my old age I may have a home; that the strength and ability of my son, instead of being wasted in the licensed saloon, may be used to furnish the home I long for." In conclusion she says: "Tell every one to pray."

From every part of the nation come requests from mothers for the boys that are lost—lost to home, lost to reason. A request from London, England, says: "Pray for the poor seamen that are entangled in the meshes of King Alcohol."

We have had testimonies to remarkable answers to prayer. If we had space we should like to give them for the many readers who in spirit meet with us every day at twelve o'clock and tarry for an hour at the feet of Jesus, making all their requests known unto Him.

We have had the privilege of listening to the most consecrated workers of this nation within the last month. The delegates to National Convention found their way to Willard Hall, and gave us their best thoughts. Mrs. Riggs, of Oregon; Mrs. Teats, of Colorado; Mrs. Woodward, of Nebraska; Mr. Coffin, of Iowa, that grand man who has furnished the temperance button for so many railroad men; Mrs. S. M. I. Henry; Madame Sakurai. Workers meet for the first time coming here to pray.

A gentleman who frequents Willard Hall said one day, "We never know what surprise is in store for us when we come to the noon meeting. Some one that we have read about and loved for 'good works' may be the very one we will hear." God has so many sweet surprises for us at Willard Hall in answered prayer and helpful communion with dear saints from every part of the earth.

The song service is one of joy. Having a leader of fine ability, the congregation joins heartily in the good old songs that stir every heart.

May the sweet incense that ascends to Heaven every day from Willard Hall voice the united petition of a world that is being equipped for the final struggle that will end in the overthrow of King Alcohol.

Chicago, Ill.

"WHEN DOCTORS DISAGREE."

III.

BY KATE C. BUSHNELL, M. D.

As it is quite impossible for women of thoughtful intelligence to accept either Dean Stanley's theory that women are to wear a veil in divine services as a sign that they defy even "the angels who stand before the throne of God," or Bishop Lightfoot's conclusion that Paul gave special permission by this passage to the young women to "promote their espousals" by displaying their charms to the best effect during divine worship, it is well for us to find a more satisfactory meaning of the text. This we will do first by a slight alteration in the punctuation, always bearing in mind that such an alteration is a radically different thing from an effort to alter the sacred text itself, for the punctuation is wholly of modern invention.

We would join the expression in verse 13, "Judge in yourselves," to that which precedes it, instead of what follows, as is done in I. Cor. 10:15, where the same expression occurs, making it a part of verse 12, and we would put a period in the place of the interrogation mark at the end of verse 13. Then we will have in perfectly simple Greek the declaration, "It is comely to pray unto God uncovered." In the English we change the order of the expression "is it?" into "it is," if we change from a question to a declaration. The order is one and the same in the Greek, so that there is no difficulty in the order of the words to stand in the way of this being a simple declaration.

Indeed, there is a real difficulty in the original in making this a question at all; for as a question which anticipates the answer "no," it should contain the Greek particle "ma"; but that is not present. When the authors of the Revised Version re-translated I. Cor. 1:13, they noted the fact that in the question "Is Christ divided?" of the King James' Version, the particle "ma" was absent from the original, although it was present in the questions "Was Christ crucified?" "Were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" As a consequence they changed the question, "Is Christ divided?" into the simple statement "Christ is divided"; (see Revised Version). We wish they had been equally fair in changing "is it comely?" into "it is comely," for exactly the same reason for so doing is present in this latter expression.

Again we would treat the next verse (14th) in the same way and it reads in simplest Greek, "Neither doth nature herself teach you," etc., the expression "doth not even" is usually translated "neither" doth or do, as in John 8:11, "Neither do I condemn thee," where the opening negative expression and the order of the words are exactly the same as in this passage. To change this fourteenth verse from a question anticipating the answer "yes" to a simple declaration may, to a certain extent, injure the theory that women are to veil themselves in divine services, but on the other hand, it brings the verse into accord with fact and common sense, for who can but smile at the declaration that long hair is a shame to man when every portrait of our Lord represents him with long hair and we sometimes see even the Apostle Paul himself so pictured!

Strange to say nearly all commentators agree in saying that the apostle declares that nature keeps man's hair short—in exact contradiction of fact and common sense. The plain truth as known to us all is that man's hair will grow long unless art interposes. That being the fact, it would have been better to have endangered the theory of the propriety of women's veiling rather than to have made the word of God go against fact by faulty punctuation.

The comments of Dean Alford will illustrate the extraordinary logic applied to the passage. He declares, nature teaches the shame of women not veiling by "the mere fact of one sex being by nature unveiled, i. e., having short hair—the other veiled, i. e., having long hair." "This plainly declares," he continues, "that man was intended to be uncovered—woman covered." But which veils the face most, hair hanging down the back, as with a woman, or hair covering the face, as the whiskers of a man? Nature does make whiskers grow on the face whereas nature does not keep the hair of men short. Hence, if, as Dean Alford continues, "that which nature has indicated to be left uncovered we must so leave; that which she has covered when we clothe the body we must cover likewise," then logically man, not woman, is the one nature indicates should be veiled, if by a "veil" we are to understand a covering for the face.

Said a Chinaman in Burmah to a missionary, "I dislike to see women speaking unveiled in meeting when Paul says it is a shame to them." "Did he not also say," she replied, "that long hair is a shame to man?" He looked thoughtful—but did not cut off his cue.

As to the import of the entire passage the clue is furnished by a careful study, first of all, of II. Corinthians, third chapter, from which we learn that the unveiling of the face in worship was, in a sense, the profession of Christ (verses 14 to 17) and contrary to the custom of the Jews, who veiled during worship and the reading of the law. There is no dispute among commentators as to these facts and the apostle plainly declares (verse 18) that "we all with unveiled face (R. V.) beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord are changed into the same image from glory to glory." That is, that growth in grace depends upon man's being unveiled in the presence of his Lord, his image—his head.

The mirror cannot reflect the glory of the sun unless it is uncovered in the presence of the sun. Man cannot as a mirror reflect the Lord's glory unless uncovered in the presence of that glory.

But there was a very real difficulty in the way of the early women converts to Christianity professing Christ by this method and that was (see both Stanley and Lightfoot) that Jewish, Roman and Grecian law all united in forbidding woman to unveil when she went abroad; and if a woman did so she was in danger of being arrested and her head shaved as a sign that she was of immoral character.

Bearing these facts in mind: First, that unveiling in worship was equivalent to professing faith in Jesus Christ; second, that unveiling in the presence of men not of the same household, was forbidden by law to Jewish, Roman and Grecian women; third, that the sign of unveiling in women was the sign of prostitution (as it is in many parts of the East to-day) the penalty of which was the shaving of the head; fourth, that "because of the angels," means "because of messengers sent as spies," the whole passage becomes perfectly clear and consistent with slight alterations merely in the punctuation, and means when thus interpreted:—

I would have you know that the head of every man is Christ and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God. Every man praying or prophesying having his head covered dishonors Christ (by refusing to profess Him publicly). But every woman praying or prophesying with her head uncovered dishonors her husband, for it is one and the same custom with the shaved woman (the prostitute) which custom says, that if a woman is not veiled let her be shaved, and if a woman is ashamed to be shaved or shorn let her be veiled.

But a man ought not to cover his head inasmuch as he is the image and glory of God, and he cannot reflect that glory unless unveiled before God; but "the woman is the glory of man" and how can she reflect that glory unless unveiled before him? Man should feel that as his elevation is to God's glory so woman's elevation is to his glory, for she was made expressly as a helpmeet for him; not he for her. Therefore ought the woman to have authority over her head to uncover it (to the glory of her Lord and her Christian husband) or to cover it because of the spies, just as occasion makes necessary.

Nevertheless, although the woman may be veiled by necessity because of spies, with the Lord woman is not apart from man nor man apart from woman, although in the world she may be compelled to yield somewhat to custom. For as woman was made for man so is man also borne by woman; and all things are from God; judge in yourselves.

It is proper (or comely) that a woman pray unto God uncovered; neither doth nature herself teach you that if a man have long hair it is a shame to him, but if a woman have long hair it is a glory to her, for hair is given to her not for her to glory in but merely as a covering (I. Tim. 2:9 and I. Peter 3:3), and even if she should lose her hair by the spies reporting her for unveiling in divine worship she can put another covering on her head. But if any man seemeth to be contentious about his wife wearing her veil in worship we will not enforce his wishes by ecclesiastical command for (although it might be wiser for her so to do) "we have no such customs, neither the churches of God."

To sum up: I believe the entire passage is intended to uphold as ideal in the form of divine worship, the spiritual lesson that "the veil is done away in Christ," although the apostle is compelled to make some concessions which he mentions because of the Roman, Grecian and Jewish customs against the unveiling of women in the presence of men not of their own households, giving women the "authority," or option, of veiling or unveiling when afraid of messengers sent to spy out their liberty in Christ. Yet, in the main, the form of worship must illustrate the spiritual fact that "We all (men and women) with unveiled face, beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory." II. Cor. 3: 18, R. V.

London, Eng.

"A NEW DEPARTURE."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In your issue of August 9, 1894, is a letter headed "A New Departure," by Dr. Kate Bushnell. In Queensland and South Australia we have local, district and colonial unions, in the other colonies, local and colonial unions, district unions being only a question of time. In addition we have an Australasian union meeting triennially to which the colonial unions are affiliated and of which Miss Ackermann was president for the first three years. Mrs. Nicholls, the present Australasian president, is an exceedingly capable and energetic woman, second to none in her grasp of the principles of the W. C. T. U. The colonial officers as well as the Australasian officers are in direct communication with our World's leaders, the W. T. P. A., and the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL.

Seeing that the links of organization are so complete, the question naturally arises, which is the better for local unions to do when in need of advice and sympathy, to apply to their own leaders who are in touch with all the questions of the time, or to some local union on the opposite side of the globe, which, no matter how close the correspondence may be, cannot possibly understand the position like those on the spot? To give "help and counsel" one must be able to understand the position of those to be helped or advised. I fear the result would be eminently unsatisfactory.

Under the four divisions of work assigned to the fellowship secretary, number one only seems practicable: "Mutual information" is always beneficial. Point two says, "to represent distant unions in THE UNION SIGNAL and in Lady Henry Somerset's paper and to see to the publication of manuscript sent to THE UNION SIGNAL from distant parts." Supposing that five hundred only of the estimated five thousand "distant" unions adopted the suggestion, are the "home" unions in a position to get the manuscript inserted in THE UNION SIGNAL when they cannot themselves be reported as local unions? As to the loss of important documents are they likely to be safer when sent to a local union than when sent direct to the editor? And is a fellowship secretary, say, in the states of Louisiana or California, or even Illinois itself, more likely to be able to trace them than those at headquarters?

With regard to point three, Dr. Bushnell does not seem to be aware that a large number of our local unions already take THE UNION SIGNAL. Queensland reports in 1893, forty-two unions taking seventy-two copies of the official organ. South Australia takes sixty-five copies and the other colonies are probably taking as many or more in proportion to their membership. A larger number would be taken than are, but Victoria and New South Wales have their own organs, whilst the other colonies edit portions of existing papers and naturally those being cheaper and dealing with home news receive our support.

With regard to point four, "To select what is suitable in filling orders from the distant field." Each colony has its literature department as a rule well supplied with the best English and American literature, the latter purchases direct from the W. T. P. A. By purchasing from the colonial office local unions get better terms and more suitable supplies than could possibly be secured by sending to those unacquainted with the distinctively local needs. Whilst each colony buys largely from the W. T. P. A., we find most of the literature, although very valuable to the leaders, is hardly suited to our needs because of the different standpoints from which it is written. Our real need, which is being rapidly supplied, is well written literature of our own on the same lines as the American. All statistical literature from America is practically valueless because of the difference in our monetary systems, legal literature because of our different laws, and so on.

Another difficulty presents itself. How are the distant unions to find out the home unions able to correspond with them? I am fully convinced that when Dr. Bushnell considers these reasons she will see that as far as we are concerned the "new departure" is unnecessary. The women of Australia are on the average fully awake to the needs of the hour, and after ten years' experience of these colonies I am convinced that the questions of the day are quite as well understood and as much discussed here as at home.

As a temperance worker in one of the southern counties of England for several years, my first opinion on coming to these lands, and it has not altered yet, was that there is a far larger proportion of the people here awake to issues of the temperance cause than at home, and were I in need of information here I should do as I did at home, write to London direct, or, being a W. C. T. U. woman, now to Chicago. We all fully believe in Dr. Bushnell's sincere desire to help win the world for purity and prohibition, but believe it can best be done by our World's missionaries and evangelists keeping in touch with and strengthening the hands of the leaders in distant lands and through them the rank and file of the workers.

MARY J. GEORGE,
South Australia. Colonial Cor. Sec. W. C. T. U.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE NORWEGIAN W. C. T. U.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—The readers of THE UNION SIGNAL perhaps will be glad to hear a few words concerning one of their leading representatives in the land of the Midnight Sun.

On a visit to Christiania, a few weeks since, Mrs. Clark and myself were kindly accorded a reception at the hospitable mansion of Mrs. General Lundh. When we reached the drawing-room we found that almost all of the company were white-ribboners, as their pretty white enamel badges plainly declared.

Among the company was the efficient secretary of the W. C. T. U., the secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Miss Birgithe Esmark, Miss Rina Bockmann, and that leading spirit in every good work, the Countess Wedel-Jarlsberg.

These good ladies were anxious to know something of the Society of Christian Endeavor and its adaptability to Norway, and after a short address, which Miss Esmark most happily interpreted, and after answering a number of intelligent and sympathetic questions concerning the movement, we had the opportunity of meeting personally this little company of earnest reformers.

As many of them speak excellent English, we did not need the services of an interpreter any longer, and I was much impressed with the earnestness, zeal and intelligent devotion of these ladies.

As yet there is but a small company in Scandinavia, who take the advance ground of our white ribbon reformers in America, but of this little band their sisters in America may well be proud. There seemed to be no mannish freaks among them, but it was a company of gentle, womanly women, whose evident purpose was to make the womankind of Norway, so far as in them lay, more gentle, more womanly and more brave to fight against the wrong.

I was particularly impressed with the beautiful personality of the president of the W. C. T. U. for Norway, the Countess Wedel-Jarlsberg. No cause could desire an abler leader. Of high birth and noble family, of fine education and large experience, it is a wide outlook that she can take over the ills and sufferings of sinning humanity. Nor could any one commend the cause more intelligently or effectively to her countrymen than the Countess Wedel; for while she is respected and honored in all circles from the court downwards, she is one of those who esteems most highly her service for the King of Kings, and her connection with the court of heaven. As it is said of Count Bernstorff, of Germany, that he holds the Christ higher than the count, so it may be said of this devoted Christian worker of Norway, that she holds the Christ higher than the countess.

In personal appearance, in eloquence and tact she might well stand side by side with Frances E. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset on any temperance platform in the world.

When I asked the countess if she were not coming to America one of these days to see her sisters of the white ribbon army, she replied that she could not tell, for there was so much to do in Norway and so few to do it that she had no time for holidays. That reply shows the undaunted and devoted spirit of the president of the Norwegian W. C. T. U. While such a woman and those who are associated with her are among the leaders of the temperance forces in Norway, we may believe that this nation which has contributed so much to the bone and sinew of America will not be laggards in the reform movements of the better century to come. FRANCIS E. CLARK,

Pres. International Christian Endeavor Society.
Boston, Mass.

A VOICE FROM COLORADO.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—I am surprised and indignant to think of the National W. C. T. U. thanking the Republican party in Colorado for woman's suffrage! They did not give it to us nor to them. From 1876 to 1892 the party was in power, but did not grant it. It was a Populist administration that submitted the question, and Populist votes carried it.

The corrupt Republican party favors woman's suffrage about as much as the brewers favor temperance. As you will see from the enclosed circular, in the House twenty-two Populists voted to submit and eleven Republicans; opposed, twenty-one Republicans and three Populists. In the Senate twelve Populists and eight Republicans voted for it, but four Republicans voted against suffrage, and only one Populist. Thirty Populist counties gave majorities in favor of it, and only one against; while ten Republican counties gave majorities in its favor, eleven gave majorities against it. Again, the Populist counties gave a majority of 6,818 for suffrage, while the rest of the counties in the state gave a majority of 471 against woman's suffrage!!

I am not a Populist, but I do believe in giving credit where credit is due, and therefore request you to publish this letter in justice and fairness.

Yours for the war, JOHN HIPP,
Chairman Prohibition State Central Committee.
Denver, Col.

A RAY OF LIGHT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—We hear so much of "the illiterate foreign vote" that when we can get hold of statistics by which the foreign vote is shown to be wiser and better than those of "Christian patriots to the manor born," they ought to be published.

The third district, in Kansas, has a large foreign population. It is a mining district and the towns and cities are most of them more than fifty per cent foreign population. Yet this district gave a majority for woman suffrage. While Topeka, which is almost entirely American, went overwhelmingly against it. The W. C. T. U. president of the third district told me that her husband stood at the polls in one town, largely foreign, and noted the fact that the men who voted for woman's enfranchisement were almost all foreigners, the colored men going almost universally against it. If our foreign people had half the education on these moral questions bestowed on Americans they would, I firmly believe, better repay our efforts than many of our own do.

That third district has been distributing tracts in foreign languages for three years,—more in number than any other district in the state. Is there any relation in the two facts? SOPHIE F. GRUBB.

Kirkwood, Mo. Nat't Supt. of Foreign Work.

VIRTUE OF HOT MILK.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In Kit Clover's article, "Competition" of December 13, the soup kitchen idea is again conspicuously brought to the front, but instead of soup why does not some one suggest hot milk as the needful stimulant? If you do not believe in its powers try it after a day's fast, or of great mental or physical strain.

I know by an experience covering a period of five years, while an invalid, that after necessary journeys to the city and return, it was the only thing that would prevent extreme prostration, and ten minutes after taking it would seemingly rally all the vital forces.

It is most nourishing, easy to prepare, our first food, therefore near to nature, and contains all the food elements necessary to growth, and any adulteration or impurity can readily be detected.

Working men learn to like it quickly, and after a few trials will take it of choice, I observe, during the times of their heaviest work. Then why not begin a hot milk crusade to benefit those who like myself cannot sing the merits of soup as loudly as some wise ones do.

One year ago at a moving I was left to close up the house—the last van was packed—the movers accompanying it were obliged to go twelve miles out of the city; it was one o'clock and they had been too busy to think of dinner until the packing was completed, then I caught the words "saloon," and "something to drink," "no time for dinner if you want to get back to-night." Having been used to preparing meals for "men," or seeing that others did it, my mother who had returned for a little while hastened out to buy some bread while I heated all the available milk at a five minutes notice. Mother returning quickly, we called to the men, "Come and eat luncheon here, it is only hot milk and bread, but it is the best we can do, and certainly more nourishing than beer and will not cost you anything."

They ate as only hungry men can, but evidently they were greatly benefited, and when they arose thanking us, they said: "If all were as thoughtful where we movers go, there would be less beer drank. We men have to have something and often have not time to hunt up a restaurant, and the saloon is always handy."

"Daughter, I call that doing temperance work in a most practical way," mother said, but how few do it, it is too near home. LAURA S. PANCOAST.

Harrisonville, N. J.

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—I have had something akin to a house-warming lately and think you who were not present will like to share some of the good words said about our LOCAL UNION corner:

"We hail with joy the LOCAL UNION. It will supply a long-felt want. As I am a local president, I have long felt the need of a Mother Experience."

"I am delighted with the LOCAL UNION corner. The suggestions are helpful."

"The LOCAL UNION is just the thing!"

"We love you, Mother Experience, and thank you so much for the kind invitation to your charming home nook. The moment our eyes rested upon the little group assembled there, it seemed as though we had always been acquainted and could sit down and feel 'at home.'"

---

Just at first, Mother Experience had "a right good time," for the mails were light, perplexities had not arisen, and she felt much as a bran-new housekeeper might—"Really, I hardly know what to do with my time!" But those days are well passed, and the alone are numerous enough to exclude all other claims. If your special question, worried comrade, is not answered immediately it is only because a little time was needed to secure the best answer.

SPECIAL DIFFICULTIES

The old, old query relative to non-alcoholic remedies for snake bites and mad-dog bites has arisen. Here is a remedy given some years ago in THE UNION SIGNAL by an old country practitioner, who had had much experience with the bites of dogs and reptiles:

"The bark of the root of the

WHITE ASH TREE

is an absolute antidote for snake bite, hydrophobia and poison ivy. The bark should be gathered when the sap is down, dried thoroughly and put away in paper sacks to protect from dust and dampness. It will then be good as long as it lasts. Put a few pieces of the dry bark into a glass jar or some earthen vessel (never tin or iron), pour on water and let steep. It will soon be strong enough to use. Give the patient two tablespoonsful of the hot tea, repeating the dose every two or three hours. Keep a cloth wet with the tea upon the wound or swelling. Add more water to the bark until all the strength is extracted, when a fresh preparation is needed. Continue treatment until patient is well. An overdose will cause dizziness. The first symptom of relief will be the quieting of the nerves. In any case of blood poisoning or severe inflammation this remedy is safe and speedy. The leaves of the tree may be chewed or bruised and laid upon the wound."

To make a person drunk as a remedy for the above troubles is an old and most fallacious superstition, grown in later days into the proportions of a crime.

---

"What is the duty of the superintendent of

PRESS WORK

in county and local unions? Also, are there any special helps for such workers?"

The answer is quoted from the "Annual Leaflet."

"This department aims to provide the press, both religious and secular, with the latest and most important news concerning the W. C. T. U. work in every department." I would add that county superintendents are the "watch-dogs" who see that each local union is provided with press superintendents.

Local newspapers ought to be supplied regularly with temperance items and these are gathered and prepared by the superintendent. For send to the W. T. P. A. for "The Associated Press and How to Use it," "Co-operation of the Religious Press with W. C. T. U. Work," "The Press as an Evangelist." These leaflets cost but fifteen cents per hundred and ought to be scattered far and wide.

SPECIAL PRESS HELPS

From Indian Territory comes this familiar question: "What are the best ways of interesting MINISTERS IN W. C. T. U. WORK?"

The inquirer partially answers her own question: "I am trying this year, as one means, sending them THE UNION SIGNAL."

It often is the case that a minister knows little of our work for two reasons: Absorption in his own specialties and the fact that it has never come strikingly to his notice. Invite the ministers to your meetings to speak; request them to open their churches for your conferences, platform meetings, district and county conventions and put them on the programs; have a live W. C. T. U. vice-president in each church, who will wear the white ribbon, circulate information regarding work of the union, and give the pastor W. C. T. U. notices to read (if notices are read from the pulpit); let the ministers feel that the strongest ally they have in their work is the W. C. T. U.; and then pray for each man who stands before the people in the Lord's house.

Here are two questions from one signing herself "A Helper." One is almost superfluous, but for the sake of other presidents in like straits it is given space:

1. "Is the president, local or district, supposed to be an encyclopedia for the various departments of work, or would you advise that superintendent and officers, at least, take THE UNION SIGNAL and sometimes?"

READ FOR THEMSELVES

Yes, the president is "supposed to be" and ought to be, an encyclopedia, but not that her co-workers may act as simple "sponges." Every member of a union ought to know for herself the plan of the white ribbon movement and its progress. I would not want a teacher for my child who was not a student, a minister in the pulpit who did not read the Bible, and a union ought never to elect officers who do not "read for themselves sometimes." The very reason why so many unions are failures is because the "workers" are really drones. I would like to refer you, right here, to an editorial in the files of last year's UNION SIGNAL, under date of October 11, 1894, entitled, "Local Department Work."

2. "Should a person hold a state or district office if they do not make a business of attending their local union, when the aforesaid office does not take them from home?"

Logically—no.

---

The matter of

ALCOHOL IN COOKING

is like a renowned ghost in history,—its regular reappearance is to be "counted on." "One of the young girls of our union came to me," writes a correspondent from sunny Florida, "asking if it were wrong to use flavoring extracts in cooking which we know contain alcohol. She also asked about cider and other liquors in mince pies."

You will pardon me for my name's sake—"mother"—if I speak very plainly right here. My mother was a "fancy cook," i. e., she could perform most elaborate wonders between pantry shelf and oven door, and I remember many years of her life when she furnished appetizing and varied menus without the ghost of an extract or the whiff of alcohol. Dearie me!—if mince make thy sister to offend let it be cranberry or apple. Because grandmother used her vanilla and lemon extracts, her brandied cherries and wine sauces, may not I, in this day of multiplied delicacies, find a way out, if by so doing I may give the right the "benefit of the doubt"? I sat down to a Christmas dinner not many weeks ago as complete as such a dinner could be, the only white-ribboner present, yet it would have been "safe" for one however weak to have partaken of each pie, jelly, custard and cake. Do you know, I think we put a little too much stress on flavors? It is like spending hours and hours on the shade of a ribbon when some helpful deed might better have filled the time. But flavors are often hurtful, you say, because of the presence of alcohol. True. Then just leave them out and swing free! Digestion and conscience will be that much better for it!

In another letter I will give some "temperance" (?) mince pie recipes, albeit the spicing in them makes me query the temperance part.

---

"Accidents will happen in the best regulated society," is a word of comfort to me as I ruefully contemplate an error in the LOCAL UNION column of THE UNION SIGNAL of January 3, under the sub-head, "Annual Minutes." By a slip of the shears and a lapse of concentrated observation, the resolution of "thanks to the Federated unions of Cleveland" was inserted instead of the following, which was meant to appear:

Resolved, That we thank the Populist party in Kansas for placing a woman suffrage plank in its platform, and for indorsing the enfranchisement of women in several of its platforms in other states and territories; and we thank the Republican party for placing a woman suffrage plank in its platform in California and in several of the territories; and we sincerely appreciate the efforts made by both of these great political groups to improve the laws for women and to place them in positions of financial independence.

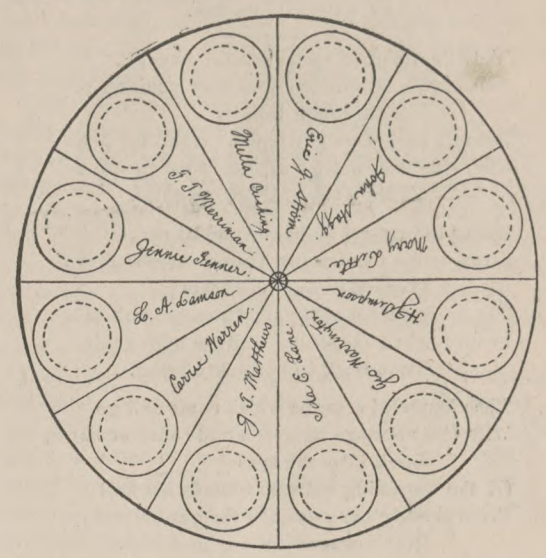
We thank the Democratic party in the South for the work it has done in bringing large areas under local option, for we are not unmindful of any advance movement taken by politicians, either in their conventions or as individuals, believing that all these indications prophesy the triumph of the larger hope when woman shall be a political and legal factor in the prohibition of the liquor traffic and the protection of the home.

There's more to talk about next week!

MOTHER EXPERIENCE.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The law was our school-master to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith.—Gal. 3:24.



In order to give all an opportunity to have a part in paying for the "House Beautiful," we have devised a plan whereby during 1895 young and old, especially those who are too poor to give anything themselves, can by loving service become owners of a few bricks in the building. The Temple Wheel shown in the above cut is the vehicle through which we hope to roll in large sums to the Temple treasury. There is no woman in the ranks of our two hundred thousand white-ribboners too poor or too old but she can work for it. Is she an invalid and shut in, she can have her little wheel beside her, and tell the friends who may call upon her, how the W. C. T. U. women are struggling to pay for their national building in order to secure a revenue for state and nation with which to do more effective work for temperance. Hard would be the heart that would refuse a dime for such a cause—especially when in return each will receive a small lithograph of the wonderful building, with a description of it on the back. It will also afford a fine opportunity for our three hundred and fifty thousand boys and girls in the L. T. L's to do a great work for the Temple. It will be seen by the picture that the wheel has twelve spokes, between the end of each spoke there is a little receptacle just large enough to hold a dime; when the dime is placed in it, the red seal on [the edge is moistened and securely fastened over it, and the person who gives the dime, writes his or her name and place of residence between the spokes.

***

The one who has the wheel in charge presents each person who places a dime in it with one of the above mentioned pictures. On the back of the wheel is registered the number and name of the person who has it in charge. When twelve dimes are secured they are to be forwarded to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, the Temple, Chicago. The person sending will receive in return one of the following premiums as they may select. Premium No. 1, the Temple medallion, made of that marvelous material, aluminum, which possesses more silvery luster than silver, and unlike it, never tarnishes. On one side is a most superb cut of the Temple, on the reverse the profile of Miss F. E. Willard and the founder, with suitable inscription. It is enclosed in a dainty little silk lined box. Premium No. 2, the Temple Souvenir Book, telling all about the wonderful building, beautifully illustrated, with an introduction by Miss Willard. This book is a gem of art. No. 3, the Temple edition of the Ladies' Household Repository—with a bill of fare for each day in the year, and all sorts of useful recipes. A book which all housekeepers should possess. Premium No. 4, the game of Educational Checkers. This is a regular checker game with historical facts printed on each checker and each square of the board. Premium No. 5, the game of Pixies, a game of checkers, the checkers representing brownies of all nations. The two latter games are of especial interest to children and young people, they are not only delightful pastimes, but most instructive. It is hoped that every one interested in temperance, man or woman, boy or girl, rich or poor, will send a two-cent stamp to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple; Chicago, for a wheel which will be returned to them with twelve small lithographs of the building for distribution among those who place their names on the wheel.

***

Our friends must not think because we give so much prominence to the Temple Wheel that we have given up our old stand-by—the mite-box. Not at all. As we said in our last issue, to all who send a two-cent stamp for a mite-box for 1895, and place in it what amounts to a penny a day during the year, we will give one of our beautiful Temple souvenir tea-spoons. Those who took boxes for 1894 must send the contents by the first of February if they expect to get a spoon. All who have old boxes and intend refilling them, should notify us, so as to have their names entered for the spoon. All letters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

OUTGROWN.

BY HANNA A. FOSTER.

"A little too good to be thrown away;"
Those troublesome trousers that wouldn't pay
For thorough repairs
Because they were getting too small for John;
They might sometime answer "just to slip on."
So they were carried upstairs.

Under the rafters so heavy and brown,
Stray drops from many a shower creep down
O'er waistband and seam;
The spider spins softly, and weaves with care
From broken suspender to little high chair,
Then back to her dusty beam.

The changeful seasons which come and go
With their carpets of green and robes of snow,
Look into the eyes
Of the rollicking lad who bounds his ball
From the big barn door to the garden wall,
'Neath wonderful boyhood skies.

None heard the swift-footed seasons go past.
The weary mother has leisure at last
To nourish the pain
Of her hungry heart—for she finds some day
The little, old trousers she hung away—
"Hardly worth mending again."

She brushes the cobwebs with tender hand
From broken suspender and buttonless band,
While her eyes grow dim,
And she bows her head on the little high chair
That used to be Johnny's; his evening prayer
She seems to be teaching him,

Forgetting his bounding ball was tossed
Quite over the garden wall and lost,
One sweet summer time!
That his tasks were over, and school was out!
But it rings not back—his merry-toned shout—
From heights of manhood's prime.

"His little, old clothes!" With a heartache sigh,
She folds them and lovingly lays them by
For no one to wear!
Then her eyes grow glad in the sunset glow,
"For Johnny," she says, "will never, I know,
Outgrow his trundle-bed prayer."

Berea, O.

A DERELICT.

BY FRANCES HANDLEY.

A moaning wind drove the rain in fitful gusts against the hospital windows, and the long bare limbs of the faithful old elm tree in the quadrangle swept restlessly to and fro, occasionally tapping the panes in a muffled, careful way as though to reassure the wakeful sufferers, without disturbing those who slept. The tree had looked so long upon scenes of suffering that Nurse Somers always felt a certain confidence in its sympathy. She was a little fanciful, maybe, and to-night as she sat in the quiet ward, she was thinking what a dreary, lonely night it seemed for a soul to go out into the great unknown. Hers was a good face to look at, brave and strong, with tender eyes that had lighted many a poor soul down the valley of shadows.

Her thoughts were now troubled and uneasy, and the words of the worn little book that lay before her on the table took no meaning, as she felt the wide, bright gaze of the young fellow on the opposite cot, with death in his face, fixed steadily upon her. When she glanced at him, or busied herself about him, his look was turned away in a repelling fashion that had again and again baffled her.

He had been brought in terribly hurt from a railway accident, but refused to talk except in monosyllables in answer to questions about his hurts. He bore the pain in silent heroism and the only indication of his extreme suffering was an involuntary twitching of the forehead as the beads of agony settled in drops over it, or the faintness that drove the color from his very lips. Nurse Somers knew the signs and in these moments of physical anguish would take the limp hands in her strong clasp, but by no word or look did the patient afterwards recognize her presence and sympathy. The surgeon thought the man's sufferings had rendered him oblivious of passing events. But once or twice the nurse had suddenly met a look that convinced her of his consciousness.

"He will not outlast the night," the surgeon had said at parting that evening.

The man was young, but his face was deeply lined and the hair on the temples gray. Already the features were stamped with the dignity that approaching death gives to the humblest of mortals.

The nurse picked up a small card that had slipped from her Bible, and turning it absently in her hand gradually became conscious that it was an engraving of Reni's Ecce Homo, the pallid, thorn-crowned head of the Man of Sorrows. With sudden impulse she moved to the bedside of the sick man and holding the picture in his range of vision said gently, "He, too, suffered."

The dying man turned his eyes upon the Face, and as his gaze became intent, the nurse asked in a tone of earnest appeal: "He is your Friend?"

He answered with a slow negative motion of the head.

She put her kind, firm palm on the thin fingers that lay outside the coverlet and said in an even, quiet voice: "Before very long you are going into His presence, and He wants me to tell you that in spite of all the past He will be your friend; will go with you before the great Judge, and ask for your pardon, if"—continued the nurse slowly, "you will even now be reconciled to Him."

"You do not understand," replied the man. Then in a weak, uncertain voice, pausing for words like one groping his way in the dark, he said brokenly: "It's a long story—I haven't strength to tell it all. I was out of work—friendless—cold—hungry. A man offered me work behind a bar—I went until I could get something else. One night I sold a miner glass after glass of whisky until he staggered out of the saloon drunk. A few hours afterwards I found him dead on the railroad track—killed by a passing train as he had fallen drunk on the track. His open eyes and white face as he lay in the moonlight accused me. I was his murderer. I fled from the spot."

Nurse Somers prayed silently, as he paused, that he might relieve his tortured heart by full confession.

"It was ten years ago," he sighed wearily, "and I have been flying from that face ever since. There has never been a sober moment, waking or sleeping, that it has left me—I drank,—would sell my soul for drink to get away from it—have lived in hell for ten years. Ten long years," he repeated hopelessly. "He can't save a soul that is already in hell."

"My poor friend!" answered the woman tenderly, and then continued in short sentences that might be understood without effort, "It was a long time. You must be very tired. Did you forget that our Saviour descended into hell?"

The eyes of the dying man burned into hers with eager light, and she repeated in a steady voice, "He gave His life to release souls in bondage. Think of His pitying love. That same tender love is reaching out to save you—to release you from your hell. Look at the compassionate eyes, whose tenderness even the great artist could not wholly picture. Ask Him to forgive your doubts of His mercy, His power. Even now He is waiting to forgive and to help."

Then the nurse rose. "I must go now for a few minutes to another patient, but I shall return soon."

As he thought on her words and gazed intently upon the pictured head of the Saviour, slowly the pain-smitten Face assumed to him a look of deepest compassion, and the divine eyes seemed turned upon him with inexpressible tenderness and sympathy in their depths.

When Nurse Somers returned she straightened the limbs and gently closed the eyes from which the light had gone. Mechanically she stooped to pick up a handkerchief that had slipped to the floor. It was wet with the dead man's tears. Thus a long drifting derelict at last reached port.

Warrensburgh, Mo.

A SUNDAY PROBLEM.

BY A. A. WHITFIELD.

"Mamma, do you not wish we gathered manna now, as did the children of Israel, getting a double portion Saturday and having no need for so much baking and brewing on Sunday? We could all go to church then as they do at Aunt Hattie's."

It was my eldest daughter, Lena, who asked the question, standing in the dining room door, ready for church going save the gloves she was putting on, having aided me about the work until the last moment.

The others calling her, she did not hear my answer but joined them and together they went out. I heard the front door close. In fancy I walked with them to the church, taking my seat beside them and thinking how good it would be to be there, all together in the house of God.

"As they do at Aunt Hattie's." I seemed to hear the words over and over as I went about my work preparing dinner, for it was for this I had remained at home. Since Lena, now nearly seventeen, had been able to take my place somewhat, we often took turns remaining home from church to prepare the dinner.

"As they do at Aunt Hattie's." How well I knew that was but a repetition of the way they used to do at home; that old home where Aunt Hattie and I were girls together. How well I remembered Sunday in that dear New England home! Lena's words had brought it back to me as though it were but yesterday I had enjoyed its restful Sabbath day. There no extra hours were spent in the kitchen preparing an elaborate dinner on Sunday. The children accompanied their parents to church; returning home a plain and wholesome meal, easily prepared, was set before us; that dispensed with, what long-to-be-remembered, cherished times we had with mother and father. Then we clustered about their knees, and listened to well told stories; had our youthful perplexities solved, and been drawn very close to each other, to our parents and to their God; then it was we sang together and prayed together. More than one member of that family circle traced their first earnest seeking after truth to those Sundays. The remembrance of that hallowed day went with us as we left the home roof to enter homes of our own, urging with a sweet benediction, "Go and do thou likewise."

"Why is it," I asked myself, "Sunday is so different at my home?" Had I found a better, more profitable way of spending it? Ah, no, my dissatisfied heart told me that. The unwelcome fact that I found Sunday the hardest day in the week, the day that often left me too tired to sleep reiterated the fact that Sunday was not in my home a day of rest, a milestone on the path to heaven.

The why was easy told. I had simply drifted. The first step was easily taken. My husband's work allowed of his being home at midday only one day in seven, and that was Sabbath. I had always done my own work, and when a little one came necessitating that one of us should remain at home, I was the one who remained, though not without protests from my husband that I should attend church mornings and he evenings; the suggestion soon came (I think it must have been the evil one instigated it), how nice it would be to give my husband an extra dinner on Sunday. I was at home anyway and might prepare it just as well as not.

"Would you mind my inviting —— and —— to dinner, Sunday?" my husband had one day said, adding, as he saw my hesitation, "Poor fellows! they have nothing but boarding-house fare year in and year out and spend their afternoons as best they can; it would really be an act of Christianity, I believe, to invite them here and give them a taste of home life."

The argument conquered. It was a struggle for me to give up the one day I had my husband to myself; "but then who knows," urged a voice, "that you may not thus save a soul?" I yielded a reluctant consent.

From then until now Sunday was the day our friends gathered around us. We never spent the day alone. Sunday dinner was the most elaborate meal we had. There was no time for reading or quiet talking. What wonder Lena wished we might "do as they did at Aunt Hattie's." Dear child! in her plea I heard the voice of my God. I saw my mistake, and what I had been bearing. Thinking I was giving others pleasure and conquering selfishness, I was in reality doing no one good and might be working inestimable harm since I was robbing my little ones, who would soon be grown and away from me, of the sweet influences that should always come to them on Sunday in the old home, when in days to come they should hear the church bells calling to worship and feel it is good to mingle with God's people.

I resolved, with God's help, to pursue a different course. No more should Lena sigh for a day such as they had at Aunt Hattie's. There were now none in my keeping too young to be present at the Lord's house under ordinary circumstances, and I determined hereafter, "as for me and mine, we will serve the Lord together in His sanctuary."

I knew it would take planning, but others had done it, my mother had and I would. It took a little more work on Saturday; it called for a little earlier rising Sunday morning and a helping hand from each member of the family, but it paid.

Hot Springs, S. Dak.

SUNSHINE.

Learn to laugh. A good laugh is better than medicine. Learn how to tell a story. A good story is as welcome as a sunbeam in a sick room. Learn to keep your own troubles to yourself. The world is too busy to care for your ills and sorrows. Learn to stop croaking. If you cannot see any good in the world, keep the bad to yourself. Learn to hide your aches and pains under a pleasant smile. No one cares to hear whether you have the earache, headache or rheumatism. Don't cry. Tears do well enough in novels, but they are out of place in real life. Learn to meet your friends with a smile. The good-humored man or woman is always welcomed, but the dyspeptic or hypochondriac is not wanted anywhere, and is a nuisance as well.—Exchange.

HURRY AND SPEED.

BY AMOS R. WELLS.

While speed is filling the bottle,
Hurry is spilling the ink;
While speed is solving the problem,
Hurry's beginning to think.
While speed is hitting the bull's eye,
Hurry is stringing his bow;
While hurry is marching his army,
Speed is worsting his foe.
Hurry is quick at beginning,
Speed is quick at the end;
Hurry wins many a slave,
But speed wins many a friend.

—January St. Nicholas.

SOME WIDE-AWAKES IN OUR ARMY.

BY ELLA GUERNSEY.

During the great prevalence of ta Grippe in the winter of 1892 I visited one family sadly afflicted, the father alone being exempt.

"What remedies are you using?" I asked.

"We're not swallowing whisky," cried Ned, a brown-eyed boy, lying on a cot, and then three boys began to sing hoarsely:

"We'll not take whisky for la grippe,
Else whisky'll get a grip on us.
Oh, dear, no, not any whisky for Joe,
No whisky for Ned, Jim or Joe."

"The boys will recover, I think," said the father, laughing. The boys did recover, and without swallowing one drop of whisky.

. . . . . .

In a little home brimful of boys I asked:

"John, what will you be when a man?"

"A minister, ma'am," he replied.

"And you, Harry?"

"A lawyer or congressman."

"And you, Edward?"

"The President of the United States."

"And you, Willy?"

"A street-car driver, or travel with a show."

Sturdy little three-year-old Ben, proud of his new pants with long pockets in them, stood in a chair, hugged his mother tight, looking manly and proud. Not waiting to be questioned, he shouted, "I'm growin' up mother's comfort."

"Yes, you are, and my little temperance boy," said the mother, proudly.

. . . . . .

Quite lately I saw an anxious look clouding a certain sweet, bright little face—a darling in a beautiful home. Ruth hovered near the door, waited eagerly somebody's coming.

"Whom are you expecting, dear?" asked the mother.

"It's our engineer; I want to beg him to take care of his new bills; his little boy and girl will need them. Oh, mamma, the saloon men must not get Dick's new bills."

Mrs. Merton thought a moment. "Oh, yes, Ruthie has heard papa read of a business man marking the new ten dollar bills he paid his employés on a certain pay-day that he might recognize each bill. Four days after pay-day the greater number of these bills had been deposited in the banks by saloon-keepers. Dick's little motherless children certainly do need his ten dollar bills."

"Dick Browne is one of Papa Merton's old friends, and boards with us. He is a companionable man, and a capable engineer. On the monthly pay-days the Big Horn railroad men, after receiving their checks, repair in numbers to the saloons, where the proprietors are waiting to cash the checks and secure the greater portion of the money. The thrifty liquor seller plants his saloon near to the pay-car's stopping place.

"I am convinced that numbers of young men not addicted to drink present their pay checks to these saloons for convenience, and learn to love drink from want of thought."

"Oh, mamma," Ruthie begged, "do please say I may ask our engineer not to let a saloon man cash his check."

"Yes, little daughter, you may begin your temperance work now," replied Mrs. Merton.

Kansas City, Mo.

"WERE you at the seashore last summer, Polly?" "Only for a day." "Did you bathe?" "No; somebody was using the ocean when we were there."

EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL.

The following essay was written by a Michigan girl twelve years of age and took the first prize in an essay contest given by the W. C. T. U.:

"The first symptom worthy of notice is the quickened action of the heart and with it the expansion of the blood vessels. The face becomes flushed, and there is a warm glow all over the body. The tiny blood vessels of the brain become more active, thoughts flow more rapidly, and speech becomes more fluent. The real substance of the nerves, the great nerve centers, and the brain are made up of nerve pulp, the softest and most delicate matter in the body. No other part of the body is so sensitive to the presence of alcohol as this nerve pulp. It has much water in it to keep it in a moist and workable condition. Alcohol satisfies its thirst by rapidly drinking up this water.

"The lining of the stomach is irritated, the blood vessels expanded and the gastric juices taken up.

"From the stomach alcohol is carried directly by blood vessels to the liver and thence to the other parts of the body, inflaming and destroying the delicate tissues.

"The trained muscles under the influence of alcohol become feeble and trembling, and are no longer wholly under the control of the will. If enough is taken all muscular control may be lost and deep breathing be the only sign of life.

"This same lack of control is shown in the act of speech. Every word we utter requires special movements of the muscles of the tongue, palate and throat, all acting in harmony.

"After drinking alcohol there is less control over these muscles and words may be left out, cut short or misplaced.

"The muscles of the eyes are also affected. Much has been said on the question, 'Does alcohol enable one to do more work?' At first alcohol may give a slight and short renewal of strength, but it is only for the moment. It is rapidly followed by a diminished ability for work. Hence men who are in training for boat-racing, baseball, foot racing and other sports, where great exertion is called for, are never allowed to use alcoholic liquors.

"Instinct and experience have taught this to uncivilized people. The Indian porters of South America when they travel on their hard journeys, with heavy loads upon their backs, are careful not to take a drop of alcohol. Experience teaches them they can do their severe work better without it.

"However deceptively prepared or diluted, alcohol is always a poison, and when it enters the human system it is always on its mission of death. Scientists now tell us that in alcohol there is not a particle of nutriment nor any principle of a negative quality. Consequently, there can be no such thing as moderation in use of alcoholic beverages. Its only effect is to produce delirium by unnatural excitement of the nerves, corrosion of the mucous membrane and the tissues, and a blunting and deadening of the moral sense. This is followed by paralysis or stupor with congestion and derangement of all the vital organs, and finally, death."

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

377.

*I*EN*E.

Add to the above the letters C, L and S, in the places occupied by the stars (*), in any order to spell a current English word without changing the letters now in place. See how many words you can thus spell. If you are a temperance thinker paste it in your hat and study the relation of the words to each other and to you.

A. S. H.

378.

DROPPED LETTERS.

L–o– t–o– n–t u–o– t–e w–n– w–e– i– i– r–d –h–n i–g–v–t– h–s c–l–u– i– t–e c–p, n–e– i– m–v–t– i–s–l–a–i–h–.

ETHEL NEWCOMER.

379.

BEHEADINGS AND CURTAILINGS.

Behead a hard substance and leave a part of music. Behead it again and leave a numeral. Curtail it and leave a preposition. GRACE WAIT.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED DECEMBER 27.

369. New Year.

370. Sunda; May; George: Sydney; Florence; Lena; Turkey; Shetland; White; Morocco; Sydney; Lookout; Great Bear; Fear; Newfoundland; Lena; Lyon.

Correct answers: Johnnie Burr; Genevieve C. Williams; Fanny H. Wingert; Myrtle Young; Bertha Brownell: Andrew R. Scully; Nellie L. Vale; Edith Batchelder; Pearl Smith; Edwin Hammond; Mary L. Fishburn; Phillips P. Bartlett; Martha D. S. Tyrie; Edna K. Munford; Mattie Joy; Llewellyn Roffee; Bessie LaFevre; Mamie L. Snider; Maude Weaver; Horace Gillette; Stella Williams; Edith H. Day; Ella A. McComas; Jean Howard; Glen Stillyer.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Such lovely long winter evenings we are having now! And although the days are getting perceptibly longer since we passed the shortest day of the year (which is that?) there are still long evenings for play, study or reading before the bedtime hour.

I had in mind when we gathered in Cozy Corner this week, to give you some suggestions for reading, especially for those who are near a public library and can get books at pleasure. Cozy Cornerers who live on farms, as many of you do, and have to depend on borrowed books from friends and neighbors are (and I suppose I will surprise you very much by saying it) often much better off than those who get books freely and read them rapidly. You see, the value is not in how many books we read, but in what we get out of them.

Somebody has said study what you read. A splendid practice is to close the book after each chapter and repeat its thoughts and happenings to ourselves or to others who would like to hear. A nice plan is to have one member of the family read a chapter aloud and at its close let each one in turn give his opinion of the contents, before reading the next.

Having made up our minds as to how we will read, the next point is to decide upon what we will read. I found recently the following list of twenty-five books which I think so good that I give it to you entire:

1. "Tom Brown's School Days at Rugby," (Thomas Hughes).
2. "Tales from Shakespeare" (Charles and Mary Lamb).
3. "Poetry for Home and School" (selected and arranged by Anna C. Brackett and Ida M. Eliot).
4. "Little Women" (Louisa M. Alcott).
5. "How Success is Won" (Sarah K. Bolton).
6. "Hans Andersen's Fairy Tales."
7. "Ivanhoe" (Sir Walter Scott).
8. "Cecil's Natural History" (Selim H. Peabody).
9. "Story of the Bible" (Charles Foster).
10. "Lyra Heroica" (selected and arranged by W. E. Henley).
11. "From the Hudson to the Neva" (David Ker).
12. "Stories of Old Renown" (R. Hope Ascott).
13. "In His Name" (E. E. Hale).
14. "Tanglewood Tales, Wonder Book and True Stories" (N. Hawthorne).
15. "David Copperfield" (Charles Dickens).
16. "Girls Who Became Famous" (Sarah K. Bolton).
17. "Swiss Family Robinson."
18. "Bullfinch's Mythology, Age of Chivalry" (revised by E. E. Hale).
19. "Five Little Peppers and How They Grew" (Margaret Sidney).
20. "Westward Ho!" (Charles Kingsley).
21. "Wild Flowers and Where They Grow" (Amanda B. Harris).
22. "Poetry for Children" (compiled by Samuel Eliot).
23. "Boys' Book of Famous Rulers" (Lydia Hoyt Farmer).
24. "Stories From the Northern Myths" (James Baldwin).
25. "Tales of a Grandfather" (Scott).

You will notice that the author's name is given with each book. That is another point to observe. We must have some knowledge of the writer, his history and character, before we read the thoughts he gives us in his works,

Yours, for good reading,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Ethel Newcomer, | Illinois. | Grace Wait, Iowa. | |
| Maude Weaver, | | Bertha Smalley, | Indiana. |
| Maude Nutter, | Kansas, | Ethel Smalley, | |
| Lora M. Copeland, | | Marguerite Tippett, | |
| Maude F. Stanley, N. Dakota. | | Helen Lawrence, | Pennsylvania. |
| Harry Albertson, New Jersey. | | Edith Irvine, | |
| Mattie Sechrist, | Michigan. | Helen Weed. | Minn. |
| Alice Springstead. | | Genevieve C. Williams, | |
| Alice DeForest, | | Pearl Smith, Wisconsin. | |
| Wilton Ratcliff, Indian Ter. | | Anna S. Thompson, Virginia. | |

I read the letter in the Cozy Corner from Delight Mellowsweet about the book, "The Bird's Christmas Carol." I have the book and have read it and think it a lovely book. It was a Christmas present from my cousins two years ago. I should like to join the Cozy Corner if I may. We have no L. T. L. here now. We did have one in the summer but it has been given up for a time. My father is the Methodist minister here. I should like some of the nieces to write to me. Yours, for temperance.

GENEVIEVE C. WILLIAMS.

Chatfield, Minn.

Happy, little minister's daughter! Don't let that L. T. L. stay "under" too long, Genevieve.

I would like to join your Cozy Corner. I am a little temperance girl ten years old. I read the stories, puzzles and the letters of the boys, and I thought I would make a puzzle and send it to the Soft-Shelled Nuts. There is no saloon in Coudersport but there are six churches.

MILDRED HOLCOMB.

Coudersport, Pa.

What a nice place that must be to live in! I wonder if the people who live there wouldn't like to vote so that everybody could have a home where there are no saloons.

THE UNION SIGNAL
AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD, LL. D.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK ... 1
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, To Those in the Valley. By A. J. Waterhouse.. 2
A Debt of Honor. II. By Lady Henry Somerset.... ... 2
Only the Golden Rule Can Bring the Golden Age. By Frances E. Willard ... 2
Willard Hall Noon Meetings. By Mrs. Ellen K. Denny 3
"When Doctors Disagree." III. By Kate C. Bushnell, M. D ... 3
CORRESPONDENCE:
"A New Departure" ... 4
The President of the Norwegian W. C. T. U ... 4
A Voice from Colorado ... 4
A Ray of Light ... 4
Virtue of Hot Milk ... 4
LOCAL UNION ... 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS ... 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, Outgrown. By Hanna A. Foster ... 6
A Derelict. By Frances Handley ... 6
A Sunday Problem. By A. A. Whitfield ... 6
Sunshine ... 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Hurry and Speed. By Amos R. Wells ... 7
Some Wide-Awakes in Our Army. By Ella Guernsey.. 7
Effects of Alcohol ... 7
Soft-Shelled Nuts ... 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER ... 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Our Heavenly Host ... 8, 9
National Woman's Christian Temperance Union Directory ... 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Maryland—Maine—Southern California ... 10, 11
News in a Nutshell ... 11
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Loyal Temperance Legion—Remember the Stranger Within Thy Gates—Announcement ... 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES ... 12
TREASURER'S CORNER ... 13
National Temperance Hospital ... 13
The Polyglot Petition ... 13
ORGANIZERS' CORNER ... 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT. ...
OUR LIBRARY TABLE ... 14
SIGNAL NOTES ... 16

And they shall see his face, and his name shall be in their foreheads. . . . The Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign forever and ever.—Rev. 22: 4, 5.

OUR HEAVENLY HOST.

"They're gathering homeward from every land,
One by one, one by one."

The W. C. T. U. is rapidly making for itself another home, and that an heavenly. "One by one" we go, but the going has been so swift with so little intervening time, that the "host" is already assured. When we think of our "Marys" alone, we know we have four shining stars in the heavenly firmament. First, there was Mary T. Hill Willard, the "Great Mother" of our Chieftain, and, indeed, of our organization; then the devoted editor of this paper, Mary Allen West, whose breath went out in far Japan—an offering to the work she loved better than life; then Mary A. Woodbridge, our beloved corresponding secretary, whose sudden departure last October we cannot yet comprehend, and now it is Mary T. Lathrap, our peerless prohibition pleader. Full well we know that these four do not complete the consecrated Mary's who have loved and labored for the white ribbon and have lain with it on their peaceful breasts in the last "narrow house." They and their devoted sisters are well-nigh countless to mortal ken already. The twenty years have deeply depleted our ranks but new workers are turning towards us, and by and by we will not know which is the larger host, the heavenly or the earthly.

In the meantime, let us work, let us watch, let us pray. The burden grows heavier on the old shoulders as the comrades fall, but the new recruits are fast buckling on the armor, and while it is our privilege to live, let us live joyously and in the full "liberty wherewith Christ has made us free."

The words of tribute which follow give to our readers a partial estimate of the character and work of our recently promoted leader, and form material for the memorial service, which we trust all unions will hold on or near February 3.

Mary Torrens Lathrap.

HER LIFE.

April 12, 1838, and Jackson county, Mich., are the date and birthplace of our latest promoted leader, Mrs. Mary Torrens Lathrap. Her girlhood years were spent on the farm and at school in the nearest village, Marshall. The first epoch of her life was her conversion at the age of ten years. The next was the initiation of her contributions to the public press at the very early age of fourteen years. For three years, 1862–65, she taught in the schools of Detroit, and at the age of twenty-seven she married Dr. Carnett C. Lathrap, assistant surgeon in the Ninth Michigan Cavalry. Soon removing to Jackson, she drew her letter from the Presbyterian church, in which she had been reared, and united with the Methodist church, with which her husband was associated. It was not long until her ability as a revivalist and preacher became known, and she was licensed to preach by the quarterly conference of her church, holding her license for eight years. After listening to one of her sermons, Bishop Simpson reverently exclaimed: "God has certainly called and anointed our sister to preach His gospel."

During the years of her ministry, which partook of the nature of revival work, her zeal for temperance was increased and at the first convention of the National W. C. T. U., in Cleveland, O., in 1874, she was one of the leading spirits, but it was not until 1881 that she accepted the presidency of the state of Michigan.

First as an evangelist and later as a temperance lecturer, Mrs. Lathrap has reached tens of thousands of people, and until her flagging health counseled caution, about two years ago, the invitations for her services were in excess of the nights of the year.

Mrs. Lathrap has been a great sufferer for the past year, but dauntlessly bore with her "prison house of pain," until the inevitable was faced and smilingly greeted. During the last hours of her life she repeated many times: "It is all right; it is all right." Her passing away at 10:30 on the morning of January 3 was so peaceful and painless that those nearest were hardly aware when the last breath was drawn. It is no disparity to our scores of earnest, eloquent speakers to say that Mrs. Lathrap was considered by many if not all of our best judges, the most logical, eloquent and invincible orator which the W. C. T. U. has produced.

We are indebted to Mrs. Parish, corresponding secretary of the Michigan union, who knew her well, for this sketch of Mrs. Lathrap's home life:

"The W. C. T. U. owes a great debt of gratitude to Dr. Lathrap for his devotion, sympathy and assistance to his wife in her marvelous work. He has wrought with her. The home life has been made such that she should be untrammelled. He has spared no expense and made many sacrifices that her work should not be hindered. In the family he prayed with deep earnestness for the temperance work and the temperance worker. The two nieces, Misses Emma and Florence Knight, have been helpful agencies in making Mrs. Lathrap's public work possible, and to all these the temperance hosts are indebted for the welcome home made for them at Jackson. Her relations to her mother were childlike, affectionate and reverential. She kept ever the child spirit in her heart."

The gentleness and devotion of her character was shown particularly to this aged mother. Those who knew Mrs. Lathrap only from the platform did not know her at all. As one of her own Michigan women says: "That rare combination of strength and gentleness was blended in her in an unusual degree. Her deep conviction of the work to be done and her clear vision as to how it should be done so emphasized her active life that the casual observer did not detect the gentle traits that were underneath all, but she could be touched into love and sympathy as readily as she could be roused into heroic action, and she could love tenderly and deeply as well as reason forcefully."

THE FUNERAL.

On Monday, January 7, the form of our leader, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, was borne to its resting place.

A private funeral was held at the residence at one o'clock, at which only the family and relatives and the white-ribbon guard of honor, ten of the local unions, and the members of the state board, were present. The floral offerings were rich and numerous. From the Michigan W. C. T. U. came "The Gates Ajar," with the words, "My Michigan"; the National W. C. T. U. sent an open Bible, with "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord"; Lady Henry Somerset sent an ivy cross, with roses; Anna Gordon, for the L. T. L., gave a bunch of Easter lilies, bearing the words, "We are coming to the rescue"; a star—the prohibition rose, was presented by Mrs. C. H. Johnson, recording secretary of the state.

Offerings were made also by ladies of the M. E. church, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and Sunday-school of the Jackson M. E. church, of which she was a member; the eighth district, Kent Co. W. C. T. U., State Central Prohibition Committee, besides many personal floral tributes.

At the house, Dr. L. R. Fiske, the pastor who took Mrs. Lathrap into the M. E. Church, paid a glowing tribute to her modest, unobtrusive, effective Christian life.

It was a pathetic scene when her aged mother (ninety-eight in June next) bent over the form of her beloved daughter, sobbing and saying in broken words: "My darling Mary, farewell for a short time. I am coming soon. It won't be long."

The funeral cortege, a long line of carriages drawn by white horses, was a scene long to be remembered. The four white horses drawing the hearse, draped in black with the white ribbon floating over their heads, seemed conscious of the value of the burden they carried. There was nothing somber about it. There was no crape. All was white. This she requested before she went away.

The church was beautifully decorated in white, and the immense crowd that thronged the spacious church gave evidence of the respect and love in which she was held in her own city. Not only was the edifice crowded, but the street was thronged to see the procession.

At the church appropriate music was rendered. Remarks were made by her pastor, Rev. M. W. Callen, who spoke briefly of her position in the church as a consecrated Christian woman, devoted loyally to all its interests. Rev. John Graham, a former pastor, paid her a high tribute. She was naturally timid and retiring, but the voice of God was stronger than her fears and she launched out into broader paths. Mrs. J. W. Kinney spoke in behalf of the white ribbon women of Michigan, and Mrs. Julia R. Parish, state corresponding secretary, in connection with the dates of her birth—conversion, marriage, etc. Miss Anna Gordon read letters from Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. Prof. Samuel Dickie, chairman of the National Prohibition committee, paid her a glowing tribute and read some selections from one of her masterful addresses.

A large concourse of people followed the silent form to Evergreen cemetery. The grave was beautifully decorated and there was nothing like a funeral about it, but when the casket was lowered we realized that our beloved had gone from our sight, yet only for a little time. The "gray-haired girls" whom she loved so tenderly and loyally, each plucked a rose and threw it on to the uncovered casket, and Mary T. Lathrap was gone to her "home over there," while we turned to the conflict which still rages, bereft of her leadership, of her companionship and of her love.

The vision of Mary T. Lathrap has been a guide to the Michigan division of the white ribbon army for nearly fourteen years and we stand to-day anxiously inquiring, "What next?" He who has called His worker home will keep His hand upon His work. We wait not in idleness for we propose to march forward, but it will be a lonely journey. We shall greet her "over there," in the meantime trying to make the Michigan work worthy of the noble teaching of our noble leader.

JULIA R. PARISH.

OUR CHIEFTAIN'S TRIBUTE.

(Read at the funeral.)

To Mrs. Torrens, Dr. Lathrap and the relatives, friends, and white ribbon comrades of Mary Torrens Lathrap, in her own town, her state, and the National and World's W. C. T. U. Beloved ones, all, who rejoice in her triumph, and sorrow over our irreparable loss:

It has been nobly said by a great thinker that "the only wealth is life." By this computation, what riches melted away from the white ribbon movement, when in this world of chance and change Mary T. Lathrap was no more alive. The riches of the W. C. T. U., as its leaders have said a thousand times, consist in the women who have cast in their lot with us, and on the round earth no woman of greater power has ever done so than the president of "Michigan, my Michigan." She has been from the first the central figure of our great debates, uniting the grasp of a man's mind to the electric intuition of a woman's. She has been one of the century's most vivid illustrations of the fact that in intellect there is no sex.

No woman among us was less self-seeking; none had retained more of that fresh, girlish enthusiasm which made her company delightful in the rare hours off duty that we knew. None had a more radiant eloquence, nor had any a wing so swift and white in the realm of poesy. I had learned to lean on her; to love her I had no need to learn. From the day I saw her first (and it was the first day of the Convention at which our National society was organized in 1874) she has always stood to me for power purposely consecrated to the highest uses; power original, immense, and guided to the wisest ends. She has traversed the United States and Canada, as carefully searching for prohibition votes as Diogenes traversed the streets of Athens, lamp in hand, searching for an honest man.

Her commanding figure, her face radiant with intellect, her attitude of equipoise and dignity, but instinct with vigor and vitality, the rhythmic movement of her beautiful hand, the flashing smile, the scintillating dark blue eye—how plainly we can see them all, and how grievously the remembrance of her thunderbolts of speech contrasts with the silence never again to be broken, the pallor never to brighten, the motionless form never to breathe again with thought, affection and the aspirations of a great and glowing soul!

In the long laborious years I always felt that no keener sickle was at work in the great harvest field, and none came back to us more richly laden with the spoils of our splendid "peaceful war."

Wherever Mary Lathrap went a broad path of light flashed out over the darkness of average opinion and mediocre purpose. When she represented the white-ribbon movement at the great council of women in Washington in 1889, it seemed to me that no woman living could have equaled the lofty and inspiring view she gave of our society, its genius, history and method.

Such gifts as hers must not be lost to us. Those matchless orations, poems and papers prepared for great occasions must be gathered up in a volume that shall stand as the most enduring monument of her genius and devotion.

No one has given us a greater number of golden sentences than she has coined in the rich mint of her racy, philosophic and original forms of speech. It is beautiful to admire as we have admired her, indeed, hardly less delightful than to be worthy of such admiration and loyal pride as every white-ribboner felt in the richly endowed personality of Mary T. Lathrap.

She has made a record brilliant as a star, and enduring as the granite of old Scotia, whence came her sturdy ancestry. She had the wit of that Irish race, a strain of whose blood was in her own; she had the broad, bright outlook of the great West, where she was reared; she had the generous sisterly sympathy of the movement, that swept her into its deep current, and bore her on to fame and death.

To the Spartan mother who bore her, now in her ninety-eighth year, to the husband whose care was her chief solace, I send, in the name of our whole army, the sympathy of our whole hearts. Only a few days before deliverance came to her great soul, she sent me this telegram in response to one from me:

Gratitude, love, remembrance—the chariot swings low—resigned and sweetly trusting.

What more blessed and beautiful message could come from the chastened heart of a Christian disciple? So, she has gone from us to the larger company, and in her own beautiful words let us remember that

"We follow that way."

The shadows lengthen but they point toward the morning. As our beloved one said in her telegram to the recent great Convention of the National W. C. T. U. at Cleveland (which testified its love for her in many pathetic ways), so I say in closing this letter with deep regret that I cannot be present, "My heart is with you and I send you greetings in Christ's name."

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET'S TRIBUTE.

(Read at the funeral.)

To the faithful comrades of Mary T. Lathrap:

DEAR SISTERS:—In spirit I join with you in this hour of mingled sadness and triumph. My heart goes out to all who mourn the loss of one of the most rare and radiant spirits I have ever met, and my soul soars with yours to those heavenly heights where the voice that swayed the multitudes of earth so powerfully, that sang the white-ribbon songs so sweetly, now joins the triumphant chorus of the redeemed.

May the memory of this gifted comrade inspire us to deeper consecration and nobler efforts.

I have always held Mrs. Lathrap in special affection and warm admiration. She was ever to me a figure that towered strong in her accomplishment, and above even the gifted comrades in white-ribbon work. Her songs are an inspiration to her English sisters, and her written words have touched thousands who never heard her eloquent voice. She has gone on ahead. The call has come to "Mary" to go up higher, to meet the Master whom she loved and served, and for a little time we who remain must wait and work. But it is good to remember, "we follow that way."

Your comrade in the work, ISABEL SOMERSET.

OUR VICE-PRESIDENT'S TELEGRAM.

Request too late to write. A great soul has been released and glorified. The inspiration of her life, the triumph of her death, will forever be a sacred help to her comrades. I honored her, I loved her. I weep that she has gone, but she is not lost to us, for "Life is ever lord of death,

And love can never lose its own."

L. M. N. STEVENS.

AN ELOQUENT FRIEND'S TRIBUTE.

Last Friday morning as I watched beside my sick son a telegram was put into my hand. Instantly came the question, "Has Mary gone?" and when the opened message had answered that question, my heart cried out in sorrow, "The hand of God hath touched me, my stroke is heavier than my groaning."

For weeks and weeks we had known that the chariots of the Lord were swinging lower and lower to catch up the ransomed spirit from its "prison house of pain," and bear it on to "rest and rapture"; but still we sent our messages of love and sympathy, and still came back the response of love and trust unfaltering, and we could not give up all hope that we should see her yet again on these mortal shores.

That hope is gone, and from sore hearts we say, "How is our strong staff broken!" We know that though the workers fall, the work goes on, but in all the white ribbon army we see no one who can take Mrs. Lathrap's place; no one who has her strength and breadth of thought, her power and eloquence of expression.

It was not an idle compliment that denominated her "the Daniel Webster of the temperance movement," for she possessed many of the qualities of that illustrious statesman. Mrs. Lathrap was like Webster in statescraft; in the ability to understand and set forth all that pertains to the highest material and spiritual welfare of the commonwealth and the nation. But she was wholly unlike him in politics, and in life. Thank God that she never marred her fair record as he did, by compromising every principle of righteousness for place and position. In native ability and power, Mrs. Lathrap and Webster were akin, but in life they were wide from each other as pole from pole—as the arched heavens are wide from the earth. The controlling principle of her life was love to God and love to humanity; his life was controlled by political policy. He failed and went to his grave a disappointed and embittered man. She won, and met the angel of death serene and content. She had lived not for sense and time, but for Christ and eternity.

MRS. MARY T. LATHRAP.

Mrs. Lathrap was a strong state president—none stronger or more loyally supported by the rank and file—but the detail work necessarily connected with such an organization was not congenial to her. She was eagerly sought for as director in our great Publishing Association, and as Temple Trustee for our great building, because she possessed, to a marked degree, the judicial quality of mind. But Mrs. Lathrap's place was in the pulpit and on the rostrum—there she was a power with few equals and no superiors.

Poets are born we are told; Mrs. Lathrap was a born poet, although she wrote but little poetry—but all her prose was poetic in expression. Some of her poems, as "What means this Stone?" and "Comrades Two," are gems of strength, beauty and tenderness.

A disease of the throat had affected Mrs. Lathrap's voice, rendering it sometimes a little harsh and unmusical, but under the burning, eloquent flood of truth poured out with power and directness, the audience forgot the person, manner and tone of the messenger; they never forgot the message.

With all her eloquence and power to move the heart and convince the reason, Mrs. Lathrap had true Christian humility. She never sought to amuse her audiences. She sought to convince, because she held her talent responsible to the Giver.

Because she was reticent and undemonstrative, save to the few to whom she gave her confidence, some deemed her cold and unloving, but this was never true. Her heart was warm and loyal, her sympathy quick and tender.

I was brought into very intimate relations with her, and loved her as a sister dear and beloved. I thank God for this tender friendship, which shall outlive the grave. She has only gone a little before. "We follow that way." Not alone do I weep as a friend bereaved. I weep most for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, because its "strong staff" and "beautiful rod are broken," because its eloquent champion is silent.

Mrs. Lathrap never feared the consequences of any truth. She did not hesitate where to stand in the contest between right and wrong, and her words ever rung with the rapturous faith that can see from afar the ultimate triumph of good and of God. She was indeed a preacher of righteousness, and the gospel of the kingdom of God on earth.

CLARA C. HOFFMAN,
Rec. Sec. Nat. W. C. T. U.

GOD, OUR LEADER.

Mary T. Lathrap, the brave, the strong, the tried, the true, is gone from us. Others will tell, in stronger words than I can command, all she was to our organization, all she was to humanity, how she ever held a high ideal before the thousands who annually came under the spell of her matchless logic. Is there any one in our ranks who can rise to fill her place, or is God manifesting His purpose, as one by one He takes our leaders home, of Himself becoming the leader, and thus calling all the rank and file to close up under His guiding power?

FRANCES E. BEAUCHAMP,
Assistant Rec. Sec. Nat. W. C. T. U.

MRS. LATHRAP AS AN ORATOR.

The standpoint from which my tribute to Mary T. Lathrap must be given is not that of the charmed inner circle of those who knew and loved her personally, but the wider circumference of those who knew her from afar. I shall never forget the first time I heard her speak. My expectations were of the highest and when she began in that cool, unimpassioned manner which always marked the first sentences of her addresses, I feared that I was doomed to disappointment. But she had not spoken many minutes before my fears were dispelled. Her logic was as resistless as the torrent of Niagara. She struck such sledge-hammer blows, in such forceful, chaste words; her earnest conviction so permeated her every utterance, that she accomplished the highest feat of a speaker;—made me forget her personality entirely, and think her very thoughts. I went away from that meeting as the Greeks are said to have gone out from the presence of Demosthenes, saying: "Let us go and fight Philip." If any one had asked me at that moment what I thought of Mrs. Lathrap as a speaker, I could not have told, but Mrs. Lathrap's subject was as fire in my veins. It was not until I reviewed the matter afterward in the quiet of my own room that I realized that this result had been brought about by her marvelous eloquence and was the crowning proof of her matchless oratory.

That one word describes her. She was, more fully than any other speaker I have ever heard, an orator. But hers was not the oratory which expends itself upon its own ends. It was the oratory born of highest convictions, backed by sublimest earnestness and resting on the absolute integrity of her character.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON,
Cor. Sec. Nat. W. C. T. U.

MRS. LATHRAP ON THE PLATFORM.

No woman upon the American platform in the last twenty years has received higher encomiums from intelligent men and women than Mary T. Lathrap. She possessed in an eminent degree many qualifications necessary to the greatest success as an orator. She was mentally endowed as few men and women are. Her reasoning was of the highest order, not of a speculative sort. Sophistry was unknown to her as a weapon. In her lectures, she began with well known and established facts, brought them with a skillful hand before her hearers, stripped them of all subterfuges and threw upon them the clear light of her own brilliant truthfulness.

If it were the liquor traffic that she arraigned before her auditors, it was made to stand out in all its enormity. With a Master's hand she depicted its blighting curse upon the home, its power to destroy the young, its danger to the nation, until every hearer shuddered, and no man in her presence was willing to acknowledge that he was in any way responsible for such an abhorrent evil as she pictured. Then with a logician's power she reasoned from the fact, back to its cause, and showed the law back of the traffic, the law-maker back of the law, and the Christian voter back of the law-maker, and she did not cease until she had led the Christian back to the law thundered from Sinai, and lovingly reaffirmed from Calvary, and showed the contrast between that righteous law given for the rule of the world and the unrighteous law made by Christian voters. Argument, wit and sarcasm were servants at her will.

Few speakers were able to say so much in so few words. Ideas were crowded into sentences so short, and followed each other so rapidly, you wondered if she would ever have material for another lecture. Her ideas were like beaten oil, never crude; you were impressed that they had been weighed and measured and arranged with careful thought and with an artist's skill; each given its proper place, where it would tell with surest effect for the truth she loved. Christian men who listened to her were never again quite as comfortable in their apathy as before, and many were awakened by her eloquent words to heroic endeavor for the redemption of our beloved nation from the domination and oppression of the liquor traffic.

Mrs. Lathrap convinced and converted people to the truth by her wonderful logic, but better than that, she reached their hearts, by her tender and loving pathos, inspiring them with love and sympathy for the suffering and stimulating them to a new consecration and to greater activity in behalf of others, which is really the secret of a Christian life.

HELEN M. BARKER,
reas. Nat. W. C. T. U.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION DIRECTORY.

PLEDGE.

I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt Liquors, including Wine and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

FORM OF BEQUEST.

I give and bequeath to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union the sum of ———; and the receipt of the treasurer thereof shall be a sufficient discharge of my executors for the same.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

HEADQUARTERS—The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

President—Miss Frances E. Willard, LL. D., Evanston, Ill.
Miss Anna A. Gordon, Private Secretary

Vice-President-at-Large—Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Portland, Me.

Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Recording Secretary—Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, 510 Rialto Building, Kansas City, Mo.

Assistant Recording Secretary—Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, Lexington, Ky.

Treasurer—Mrs. Helen M. Barker, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Office Secretary—Mrs. M. B. Horning, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

YOUNG WOMEN'S BRANCH.

General Secretary—Mrs Frances J. Barnes, 146 W. 103d St., New York City.

Asst. Secretary—Mrs. F. S Evans, 161 W. 84th St., New York City.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Alabama — Mrs. Martha L. Spencer, Birmingham.

Alaska—Mrs. Jno.G. Brady, Sitka.

Arizona—Mrs. Joseph Watrous, Tempe.

Arkansas— Mrs. Fanny Chunn, Cotton Plant.

California — Mrs. B. Sturtevant-Peet, San Jose.

California, Southern—Mrs. N. P. J. Button, Riverside.

Carolina, Northern—Mrs. Mary E. Cartland, Concord.

Carolina, North, No. 2.—Mrs. M. J. O'Connell, Greensboro.

Carolina, South—Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, Charleston.

Colorado—Mrs. Eva Higgins, The Richelieu, Denver.

Connecticut — Mrs. Cornelia B. Forbes, 206 Wethersfield Ave., Hartford.

Dakota, North — Miss Elizabeth Preston, Casselton.

Dakota, South—Mrs. Emma Cranmer, Aberdeen.

Delaware—Miss Margaret S. Hilles, Wilmington.

District of Columbia—Mrs. Mary E. Griffith, 2034 I St., N. W., Washington.

Florida—Mrs. E. A. Hill, Orange City.

Georgia—Mrs. W. C. Sibley, Augusta.

Georgia, No. 2 — Georgia Swift King, 80 Jenkins St., Atlanta.

Idaho — Mrs. R. Mitchell, Idaho Falls.

Illinois—Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, The Temple, Chicago.

Indiana—Mrs. Lena Beck, Bloomington.

Indian Territory—Mrs. Eva Ratcliff, Vinita.

Iowa—Mrs. M. H. Dunham, Burlington.

Kansas — Mrs. L. B. Smith, Ottawa.

Kentucky—Mrs. Margaret Watts, 1127 Second St., Louisville.

Louisiana—Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, Baton Rouge.

Maine—Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, 150 Free St., Portland.

Maryland—Mrs. Mary Haslup, Rider.

Massachusetts—Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, 171 Tremont St., Boston.

Michigan—Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, Jackson.

Minnesota—Mrs. Susanna M. D. Frye, Dodge Center.

Mississippi — Mrs. Lavinia S. Mount, Greenville.

Missouri—Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, 510 Rialto Bldg., Kansas City.

Montana—Mrs. M. S. Cummins, Helena.

Nebraska—Mrs. S. M. Walker, Surprise.

Nevada — Mrs. Lucy M. Vandeventer, Reno.

New Hampshire—Miss C. R. Wendell, Dover.

New Jersey—Mrs. Emma Bourne, 205 High St., Newark.

New Mexico—Mrs. M. J. Borden, Albuquerque.

New York—Mrs. Mary T. Burt, 217 W. 134th St., New York City.

Ohio—Mrs. Henrietta L. Monroe, Xenia.

Oklahoma — Mrs. M. H. Switzer, Enid.

Oregon — Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney, Astoria.

Pennsylvania — Mrs. Anna M. Hammer, Chestnut and 42d St., Philadelphia.

Rhode Island—Mrs. Mary A. Babcock, Phenix.

Tennessee—Mrs. Lide Meriwether, 14 Talbot St., Memphis.

Texas—Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, Dallas.

Utah—Mrs. G. W. Martin, Manti.

Vermont—Mrs. Ida H. Reid, Shelbourne.

Virginia—Mrs. R. H. Jones, 130 Granby St., Norfolk.

West Virginia — Mrs. N. R. C. Morrow, Fairmount.

Washington, Eastern—Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Newberg.

Washington, Western — Mrs. Ella J. Fifield, M. D., Tacoma.

Wisconsin—Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, Evansville.

Wyoming Territory—Mrs. Wilhelmine Brown, Laramie.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPARTMENTS.

I. ORGANIZATION.

MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, SUPT.

Organizers—Miss Frances E. Griffin, The De Soto, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, Port Jervis, N. Y.; Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, 1105 Davis St., Elmira, N. Y.; Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, Chautauqua, Washington; Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, 1907 Bush St., San Francisco, Cal.; Miss Ida Clothier, Manitou Springs, Col.; Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.; Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, 1009 Bainbridge St., Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. E. A. Blair, 936 College Place, Los Angeles, Cal.; Mrs. Maude L. Green, Manitou Springs, Col.; Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Colfax, Wash.; Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Baraga, Mich; Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, Pacific Grove, Cal.; Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.; Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.; Mrs. E. A. Kenyon, Townshend, Vt.; Miss S. C. Harris, Franklin, Va.; Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.; Mrs. Sue V. Tomlinson, Charlotte, N. C.; Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, Vincennes, Ind.; Mrs. E. L. Calkins, 922 S. Rose St., Kalamazoo, Mich.; Miss Lilian Wood, Maryville, Mo.; Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, McMinnville, Ore.; Mrs. Addie Northam Fields, Bedford, N. H.; Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, Lecturer, 27 Everett St., Cambridge, Mass.; Mrs. Ella A. Boole, Lecturer, Prohibition Park, Staten Island, N. Y.; Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown, Lecturer, 136 Richmond street, Cincinnati, O.; Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, Lecturer, Roslindale, Mass.

Work among Foreigners—Mrs. Sophie F. Grubb, Kirkwood, Mo.; Associates—Missionary at Ellis Island, Miss Anna Lindahl; Dutch, Mrs. Mariette S. Van Olinda, Holland, Mich.; Chinese, Mrs. Nellie Blessing Eyster, San Jose, Cal.; Spanish, Mrs. E. J. Harwood, Socorro, New Mexico; Scandinavian, Miss Kate Lunden, Flemington, N. J.

Work Among Colored People—Mrs. Lucy Thurman, Jackson, Mich.

Juvenile Work—Mrs. Helen G. Rice, 1597 Washington St., Boston, Mass.; Associate, Miss Anna A. Gordon, Evanston, Ill.; Organizers and Chalk-Talkers, Mrs. Ellen Dayton Blair, Clinton, N. Y.; Mrs. Maude L. Green, Manitou Springs, Col.

II. PREVENTIVE.

Health and Heredity—Annette Shaw, M. D., Eau Claire, Wis. Lecturer—Mary Wood Allen, M. D., 37 S. Thayer St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

Sanitary and Economic Cookery—Mrs. Abbie E. Shapleigh, 168 Brattle St., Cambridge, Mass.; Associate—Miss Amelia Shapleigh.

III. EDUCATIONAL.

Scientific Temperance Instruction—Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, 23 Trull St., Boston, Mass.; Associate, Mrs. Mary F. Lovell, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

Physical Culture—Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, Mansfield, Ohio; Associate—Clara Gregory Baer, New Orleans, La.; Normal and Popular Class Instructors and Lecturers—Miss R. Anna Morris, Cleveland, O.; Miss Minnie B. Snow, Mansfield, O.; Miss Lydia Newcomb, Bethlehem, Pa.; Mrs. Bertha Morris Smith, Elmira, N. Y.; Miss Effie M. Hecker, Miamisburg, O.; Assistants Y Branch—Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.; Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.

Sunday School Work—Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, 300 The Colonnade, St. Paul, Minn.

Temperance Literature—Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, The Temple, Chicago.

The Press—Miss L. E. Reed, 66½ N. Penn St., Indianapolis, Ind.

Presenting our Cause to Influential Bodies—General Officers of the National W. C. T. U.

Relation of Temperance to Labor—Mrs. S. E. V. Emery, Lansing, Mich.

School of Methods and Parliamentary Usage—Mrs. Anna S. Benjamin, Portland, Mich.

Narcotics—Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, 4119 Westminster Pl., St. Louis, Mo.; Associates—Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, 1105 Davis St., Elmira, N. Y.; Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, Roslindale, Mass.

IV. EVANGELISTIC.

Evangelistic—Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood, 151 Remsen St., Brooklyn, N. Y.; National Evangelists—Mrs. J. K. Barney, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, 77 24th St., Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Annie M. Palmer, Boone, Iowa; Mrs. Mary Sparkes Wheeler, Phœnixville, Pa.; Mrs. Harriet D. Walker, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. Mary McGee Snell, Columbus, Miss.; Mrs. R. J. Trego, Delaware, Ohio; Mrs. Mary J. Weaver, Batavia, N. Y.; Mrs. E. M. Haughton, Midland, Tex.; Miss Cassie Smith, Ocean Grove, N. J.; Miss Anna Downey, Evanston, Ill.; Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing, Chicago, Ill.; Rev. Frances E. Townsley, Maywood, Ill.

Unfermented Sacramental Wine—Miss Mary Moore, Attica, N. Y.

Systematic Giving—Mrs. Esther Tuttle Pritchard, Kokomo, Ind.

Penal and Reformatory Work, Including Police Station Work.—Mrs. Jane M. Kinney, North St. P. O., St. Clair Co., Mich.; Prison Evangelist—Mrs. J. K. Barney, Providence, R. I.

Work in Charitable Institutions.—Mrs. S. A. Morrison, Wayne, Mich.

Work among Railroad Employes—Mrs. Caroline M. Woodward, Seward, Neb.; Secretary—Miss Mattie Woodward, Seward, Neb.; Evangelist—Miss Jennie Smith, Mountain Lake Park, Md.

Work among Soldiers and Sailors—Mrs. S. A. McClees, The Temple, Los Angeles, Cal.; Associates—Mrs. Mary Grant Cramer, East Orange, N. J.; Mrs. Cornelia Chauvet, 22 State St., New York City.

Work among Lumbermen—Mrs. Mary C. Upham, Marshfield, Wis.

Sabbath Observance—Mrs. J. C. Bateham, Williamsburg, Ky.

Department of Mercy—Mrs. Mary F. Lovell, Bryn Mawr, Pa.; Lecturers and Organizers. Mrs. Lydia A. Irons, Lima, O.; Mrs. Louise P. Rounds, Lafayette, Ore.

Purity—Dr. Mary Wood Allen, 37 S. Thayer St., Ann Arbor, Mich.; Mothers' Meetings—Mrs. Dr. J. H. Kellogg, Battle Creek, Mich.; White Shield Societies—Miss Emma F. Bates, Valley City, N. Dak.; Lecturers—Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Alice Williams, Cameron, Mo.; Mrs. Mary E. Teats, Oakland, Cal.

Purity in Literature and Art.—Mrs Emilie D. Martin, Room 85, Times Building, New York City; Associate, Mrs. Eliza T. Hauk, Dayton, Ohio; Counselors—Anthony Comstock, Secretary of New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, Room 85, Times Building, New York City. R. W. McAfee, Agent for the Western Society for the Suppression of Vice, St. Louis, Mo.

Work Among Miners.—Mrs. W. F. English, Quincy, Ill.; Associate—Mrs. Mary L. Meredith, Montrose, Col.

Securing Homes for Homeless Children.—Mrs. Margaret T. W. Merrill, 99 Winter St., Portland, Me.; Lecturers—Miss Lucia E. F Kimball, Woodfords, Me.; Miss Harriet Leavitt, 772 Congress St., Portland, Me.

V. SOCIAL.

Parlor Meetings—Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson, Plainfield, N. J.; Associate.—Mrs. Maria W. Vaughn, Moscow, Pa.

Flower Mission—Miss Alice L. Sudduth, Colton, Cal.

State and County Fairs.—Mrs. Clara V. Weaver, Des Moines, Ia.

VI. LEGAL.

Legislation and Petitions—Mrs. Mary T. Burt, 217 W. 134th St., New York city.

Franchise—Dr. Louise C. Purington, 3 Park Street, Boston, Mass.; Associate.—Miss Alice Stone Blackwell, 3 Park St., Boston, Mass. Lecturers.—Miss Frances E. Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, 171 Tremont St., Boston; Miss E. U. Yates, Round Pond, Me; Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, 510 Rialto Building, Kansas City, Mo.; Mrs. Mary E. Haggart, California, Penn.; Mrs. Helen B. Harford, Newberg, Ore.; Mrs. Mary Seymour Howell, Albany, N. Y.

Peace and International Arbitration.—Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, Winthrop Center, Maine. Associate and Lecturer.—Mrs. Emilie U. Burgess, Highlands, N. Y.

VII. AFFILIATED INTERESTS.

Woman's Temp. Pub. Association—The Temple, Chicago. Pres.—Mrs. Matilda B. Carse. Secretary—Mrs. Helen M. Barker. Treasurer—Mrs. L. A. Hagans, Elmhurst, Ill. Directors—Mrs. H. M. Barker. Mrs. L. H. Plumb, Lady Henry Somerset, Frances E. Willard, Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, Mme. Louise Demorest; Business Manager—Mrs. C. F. Grow, The Temple, Chicago.

Editors The Union Signal—Miss Frances E. Willard, Miss Margaret A. Sudduth, Miss Jennie A. Stewart; Corresponding Editor — Lady Henry Somerset; Contributing Editor—Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson.

Editor Young Women (formerly Oak and Ivy Leaf)—Miss Jennie A. Stewart, The Temple, Chicago.

Editor The Young Crusader—Miss Ada M. Melville, The Temple, Chicago.

Editor Dept. Books and Leaflets—

National Temperance Hospital and Training School for Nurses—1619 Diversey St., Chicago, Ill. President of Board—Mrs. M. E. Kline, 62 43d St., Chicago. Treas.—Mrs. Calista E. Bigelow, 539 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

The Temple—Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, President Building Association; Miss Sara G. Johnson, Financial Secretary, The Temple, Chicago.

VIII. STANDING COMMITTEES.

On Appropriations.—Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. L. M. Beck, Mrs. M. H. Dunham, Mrs. C. M. Woodward, Mrs. J. M. Kinney; Advisory Member—Nat'l Treasurer W. C. T. U.

Transportation—Mrs. C. F. Grow, The Temple, Chicago; Mrs. Helen M. Barker; Mrs. C. M. Woodward.

Sabbath Meetings—Mrs. Louise Downs Quigley, Orange, N. J.

Overflow Meetings—Dr. Anna H. Shaw, Somerton, Pa.

Convention Seating—Miss Carrie Buzby, Moorestown, N. J.; Miss Anna A. Gordon, Evanston, Ill.; Mrs. M. B. Horning, The Temple, Chicago.

Musical Director—Mrs. Alice J. Harris, 171 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

Telegrams—Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, Peoria, Ill.

MARYLAND

GOES STEADILY FORWARD.

The coming of the National Convention to Baltimore November next is of absorbing interest here, and arrangements are already in progress whereby this may be made a success. The New Year greeting of the president, Mrs. Haslup, to the union, calls attention to this, and emphasizes also the effort to increase the membership of the union, advocated by Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, during the year recently entered upon.

The president of the Baltimore City union, Mrs. Robinson, in an invitation to the members of that union to attend a reception at state headquarters, January 8, also directed attention to the National Convention, and all are looking forward to the "uplift" expected from the presence of this distinguished body in our midst.

The usual holiday celebrations have been held at state headquarters. The kindergarten festival was the first of these, and a brilliant success. The great tree was unusually picturesque with its gay fruits of numberless kinds, many of them the work of the cunning fingers of the little tots who are gathered here day after day from, usually, some of the poorest apologies for homes in the city. The gifts of the children to their parents were, as in other years, one of the most interesting features of the occasion. These gifts are purchased with the pennies saved by the children during the year, and kept for them by the kindergartners for this purpose, and then wisely invested by the kindergartners after certain interviews with the parents, all unknown to the little folk. The gifts to the children, the donations of friends of the work, were numerous and suitable. This festival is the one time of the year when parents and children are thus brought together, and the delight of the parents in their little ones as they take their several parts in the games and plays is inexpressible. Contrary to current opinion, the kindergartners find that the Italians are among the most thrifty and saving of the several nationalities represented in this kindergarten.

The festivals of the Loyal Temperance Legion and of the Sunday-school held here followed, but reports of these have not yet reached me.

New Year's day was made most memorable through the dinner to men given by the Young Woman's Branch of the union. Five hundred tickets were issued for this dinner, and a most generous and delightful dinner it was! Turkey, chicken, ham, hominy, potatoes, celery, bread, preserves, cake and fruit—a most tempting array to ordinary appetites—what then to these hungry men! The dinner was preceded by the usual noonday services, and these were continued by different leaders while one relay of men after another was fed in the adjoining room. It was your correspondent's regular day to lead this meeting, and never did she feel it a greater privilege to give out the things that pertain to eternal life, as they had come or been given to her. Oh, the sadness, the pathos, the misery in the faces gathered there, the hunger of soul more evident by far than that of the body! And though these men were here as a rule, for the "loaves and fishes," we believe that the day will be memorable to many also because of these religious services.

Hoffman's beautiful pictures from the Life of Christ were the great feature of an evening entertainment here that day. The pictures were shown by the owner, Mr. Edward A. Robinson, whose varied kindnesses in the work during many years are numberless and most highly appreciated by the members of the union.

It is to be regretted that no one has "time enough" to write up the work that is carried on at state headquarters continually. A laundry has been fitted up here and will soon be opened for work, with the expectation of raising some revenue for the expenses of the state work.

Mrs. Whittenmore, of the Door of Hope Mission, New York, gave several addresses in Baltimore, recently. Mrs. Whittenmore's words and work are most powerful and impressive lessons in faith in "Our Father's" love and wisdom and guidance.

The December meeting of the state executive committee, though falling on a most stormy and unpleasant day, was marked by an excellent attendance of its members, several coming from country places, difficult of access. The committee decided to accept the invitation of the Talbot county union to hold the next annual meeting of the union in Easton.

Maryland sends the most cordial New Year's greetings to THE UNION SIGNAL. May this be the best and most prosperous year in every respect that its editors and publishers have ever known. M. A. L.

MAINE.

ACTIVE WORK.

I fear that Maine has not been heard from in these columns since our grand state convention was reported. But there has been much activity all over the field.

Mrs. Hoffman remained some weeks after the convention and made rousing speeches in many of our leading towns and cities. The Sunday she spent in Bangor is said to have been a red-letter day for temperance. Mrs. Hoffman preached in one of the Methodist churches in the morning, gave an address in the Y. M. C. A. hall in the afternoon, and in the evening spoke in one of the Baptist churches.

The session of our state legislature has just opened, and many of its leading members are known to be pronounced woman suffragists, and to greatly desire that the legislature of 1895 may have the honor of doing justice to women, at least in the matter of municipal suffrage. We came so near getting it two years ago that if there were not so many holes in a skimmer, we should feel quite certain of victory this winter. Petitions have been widely circulated and there is a very general willingness to sign them. Indeed, it is noticeable that many who two years ago were indifferent or even hostile are now quite eager to affix their signatures. A hearing will be given January 31st, and Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard have consented to accompany the Maine petitioners to Augusta, and to speak before the committee. But how humiliating to be compelled to ask for a crumb when we ought to have had the whole loaf long ago!

Another petition in which the temperance organizations, and especially Neal Dow, are interested, is for heavier penalties for violation of the prohibitory liquor law.

We have one white-ribboner who may be called the Parkhurst among women—Rev. Sarah Taylor, pastor of the Advent church of Rockland. Mrs. Taylor has for several months been waging a vigorous warfare against violators of the liquor law, keepers of gambling dens and disreputable houses. Some have been compelled to close, while others have been driven from the place. Several other Rockland pastors have fallen into line, but Mrs. Taylor has been the moving spirit in the crusade. Neither threats nor soft words have been able to turn her from her purpose, and she has succeeded in clearing the moral atmosphere of Rockland from much impurity. In the course of her work she has received into her own home, and in some instances restored to friends, girls whose sad histories have awakened her sympathy.

A notable medal contest was recently given in the Presque Isle opera house, the contestants being eight of the public-school teachers of that town. One feels hopeful for the checking of the liquor curse at the fountain head when one remembers that pupils trained by such teachers will soon have a voice in questions of law and politics.

The Auburn union has been holding a series of socials for the purpose of getting acquainted with new members, the money thus raised going to pay the board of a friendless young girl, whose health is now so delicate that it would be difficult to find any one willing to adopt her. She is in the home of a very kind woman, and it is hoped that a permanent home may some time be found for her.

MARY L. FRENCH,
State Reporter, Auburn.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

NEW UNIONS.

My long silence has not been for want of material, for our comrades have been true to their reputation as workers, and left no opportunity for Satan to find "idle hands" at headquarters.

We feel a little proud of our six new unions and one new Y organized since membership day. Mrs. E. I. Rice, president of East Los Angeles union, has the honor of forming the first Arroyo union, a short distance from her own district. She laid her net carefully, baiting it with a parlor social and caught seventeen members. Mrs. Elizabeth Haward was made president.

The day following saw the birth of the Long Beach Y, organized by our enthusiastic and faithful state superintendent of Y work, Miss Ada Bisbee, with eight members, and of which Mrs. Daisy V. Welbourn is president. At Fremontville, Ventura county, a union of twelve members was organized by Mrs. Mary G. Tongier, and appropriately named "Saint Courageous," Mrs. Laura B. Fisk, of Penrose, president.

In our northern county of San Luis Obispo, the progressive county president, Mrs. J. J. Coyle, accompanied by her corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. J. Cotton, did what the sisters said could not be done, held public meetings at Shandon and Creston and formed unions in both places; the first with five active and one honorary, the other with ten active and two honorary members. Mrs. E. Howell, president of Shandon; Mrs. J. W. Flemons, president of Creston.

For the last two we look to San Diego county, where Mrs. Emma Cash, state organizer, has compassed a portion of that large field from mountain height to sea coast, speaking at political meetings in some instances and giving encouragement everywhere. At Valley Center a union of twenty-three members was organized, and Mrs. A. Davis elected president.

Then followed the gathering of eleven active and nine honorary members into a union at Ballena, over which Mrs. A. Green will officially preside; also eight others took the pledge. To the other unions visited in the county there were added a total of twenty-three active and twelve honorary members, besides fifty names gained for Loyal Temperance Legions.

THE WOMAN'S NEW POLITICAL DEPARTURE, which has been heralded from shore to shore, bears the white-ribbon stamp, as it was the God-given thought to the president of San Bernardino union, and by her faithfully developed. Delegates from the county towns met in the first woman's political convention, October 12, at San Bernardino, and after the preliminaries of selecting officers and committees the credential committee reported seventy delegates present. Greetings were received from the Portia Law Club, of San Francisco, to which a reply was sent, closing with these words: "We are doing the best we know how, and we hope to do better in two years from now." All the brief speeches were charged with patriotic righteousness and a desire to wield the ballot, because it is right, our right, and in behalf of the right. Very eloquent nominating speeches were made by the ladies in presenting their favorite candidates, all of whom were selected from the tickets of the four political parties.

The women of Riverside county also prepared a ticket and both elections were held November 6 with women as judges and clerks. In Riverside our state president, Mrs. N. P. J. Button, had charge of the election, and the two first to cast their ballots were women seventy-seven and eighty-six years of age. Speaking of a little confusion which once arose from the crowd who desired to vote, the Riverside Enterprise said: "And everything passed without a single word of discord and unkindness. But one ballot was spoiled during the day, and the ladies showed as much ease in handling the stamp as they would in using the crochet hook." The ballot was so large that it was necessary to adjourn until Monday morning to finish the count. Our state president recommends that women in every county hold their separate elections at next election time.

DEMOREST MEDAL CONTESTS

have been given a fresh impetus by the appointment of Miss Nina Cuthbert, an accomplished elocutionist, as state superintendent of that department. She recently held contests in Ventura county, and a successful one at Wilmington, where the foreign element makes temperance work very difficult. One of the contestants was thoroughly converted to prohibition, and Miss Sadie Winslow won the silver medal.

MANY DENOMINATIONAL STATE GATHERINGS

were held in Los Angeles during the fall, before which an effort was made to bring the white ribbon work. To our request the Methodists made no response, the Presbyterians could not find time for us, while the Congregationalists gave opportunity for a paper from our state secretary, and heard Mrs. Sarah A. McClees in behalf of her resolutions against the bar at the Santa Monica Soldiers' Home, which they heartily indorsed. Perhaps it may not be well known that Santa Monica has a Congregational Prohibition church, securely made so in charter and creed, and of which Rev. De Kay is pastor. A generous friend gave our white-ribboners, of that city, a house and lot on a principal business street, and they now have a neat, electric-lit reading-room on the second floor and store below. They have a hard field to work because of the pleasure-loving Sabbath breakers, but stand firm.

Norwalk union is seeking a home. Have paid ninety dollars for a lot and have money in the treasury toward building a hall.

SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY

Held its semi-annual convention at Ontario, November 15, in the Congregational church, over which Mrs. Abbie Lee Button, vice-president, presided in the absence of the president, Mrs. L. E. Williamson, who was sick. Music was furnished by Ontario ladies, and short speeches by two pastors, and the only male white-ribbon wearer of Ontario. By request Revs. Healy and Tracy led in the noontide prayer. Department work was presented by the superintendents giving their plans for the year, which being suggestive created interesting discussions. Scientific temperance instruction has progressed in the county, so said Miss Mary Parker, county superintendent, and now with Miss Maggie Mogeau, as county superintendent of schools, our comrades can "speed on" faster, for, while Miss Mogeau is not a white-ribboner, she is in sympathy with all that elevates and improves the physical, mental and spiritual nature.

Our Ransom Home was ably presented by Mrs. S. B. Colvin, of San Bernardino; Mrs. Lucy D. More, of Cucamonga, gave parliamentary instruction, and franchise was treated by Mrs. Jennie Tibbot, of Rialto. The unions at West Rialto, Bloomington and West Highlands have expired.

Much interest has been aroused by our state superintendent of press work, through her efforts to acquaint the public with our state laws regarding gambling and like evils by having "law posters," and some who were ignorantly transgressing have reformed. The Compton Y's fill a column in their local paper, as their press work.

At our last state executive it was voted to let our "little giant" take a vacation until our next state convention because of the pressure upon its financial backbone. Now there is much hope that it will not yield, as "the voice o'er the land" is that we cannot get along without the Southern California White Ribbon.

Another of our number has been promoted, and San Bernardino union mourns the loss of a faithful former president, Mrs. M. L. Guthrie, who "entered the vail" after but a few hours sickness. She belonged to the few whose counsel was prudent, reliable and sure, and who never failed of duty when health permitted its performance. Her husband, Dr. Guthrie, has been for many years a Prohibitionist, in practice and in politics, and his wife stood firmly by his side, no matter how heated the battle. Such staunch friends leave a large vacancy not easily filled.

A little child has led in an important change in San Diego county presidency, and so largely claims the attention of Mrs. Ella Whitmore, that she has resigned the office she so ably filled, and Mrs. Carrie L. Roberts, of Bonsall, is now county president. We shall miss Mrs. Whitmore in our executive, but glad that the little motherless one is thus tenderly cared for.

Dr. N. W. Tracy's beautifully illustrated temperance lectures have been given at the Simpson M. E. church, Los Angeles, and created considerable interest. The doctor returns to work in Kansas.

Our Ransom Home has an able and eloquent friend and agent in Mrs. Harriet Armstrong, who is giving of her wide experience in rescue work in New York and Brooklyn, and liberally of her time and strength, to raise funds for the care of the friendless and erring ones who come to our part of the state. A fund has been started toward a much-needed new building for the Home, and Mrs. Armstrong will also plead for that. The eight-room house now rented is all too small for the demands made upon it, and many real necessities have had to be omitted.

The Los Angeles county executive sent out a protest against Sabbath desecration, and in favor of a state Sunday law, as we have none, and our only local Sunday ordinance is one governing the closing of saloons. It is easily seen we have a large field for work, and one difficult to cultivate. Nevertheless we rejoice that the Christian people are becoming more interested in the various lines of temperance work.

GABRELLA T. STICKNEY,
State Reporter, Los Angeles.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MISS BELLE KEARNEY is open to engagements in any state in the South from now until the first of May. All communications should be addressed to her at Flora, Miss.

THE Pennsylvania Bulletin (state W. C. T. U. paper) is under the care of Mrs. Anna M. Hammer, editor, and Mrs. H. H. Forrest, publisher, 1921 Arch street, Philadelphia, where all communications can be sent.

MISS FRANCES GRIFFIN is at present in Chicago where she should not remain long if unions which appreciate a live exponent of the great cause are prompt to call her forth to the service. Address her immediately at the De Soto, Chicago, Ill.

SINCE the Cleveland Convention Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, of Wisconsin, has been visited by sorrow in the death of her father at his home in Kansas, which she reached in time to be at his bedside. All white-ribbon hearts will tenderly sympathize with Mrs. Campbell.

IF some reader of THE UNION SIGNAL will furnish the address, the Rounds union of Marseilles, Ill., will send choice literature suitable for Sunday-schools or juvenile temperance meetings to any place needing it and not able to buy. They will pay charges on it if the recipients are not able. Address Emma C. Morgan, P. O. Box 615, Marseilles, Ill.

MRS. JEANNETTE G. HAUSER, whose present address is Room 1115, the Temple, Chicago, will give her pleasing illustrated lectures to Christian organizations as well as local W. C. T. U. unions in Illinois and adjacent states. Dates should be secured very soon, as Mrs. Hauser's stay in the West is limited. No live union will miss the opportunity to benefit from these good lectures, which will also aid in increasing the funds of the society.

HERE is an instance of W. C. T. U. law enforcement which took place at Medicine Lodge, Kan., a few weeks ago. A druggist persisted in selling intoxicants. The women went to his drug store and two of them held him while several others rolled out a keg of brandy, broke the head of it in and poured out the stuff on the ground; a crowd collected and the women received praise and blame from friends and opposers, but no arrests were made.

ONE of the pleasant features of the last social of Summit City, Pa., W. C. T. U. was the presentation of a copy of "A Great Mother" to Mrs. H. E. Neill on the eve of her departure from home for the winter. Mrs. Neill has been the faithful corresponding secretary of the union for the past nine years, ever since the beginning of the organization, and as a token of their esteem and in some measure to show their appreciation of her labor the members of the union presented her with the book.

NEW YORK state's department of non-alcoholics in medicine, under the superintendency of Mrs. Martha M. Allen, has issued two interesting leaflets. One of these contains the raison dêtre of the department and a résumé of the work accomplished, with hints and suggestions for local superintendents. The other is a collection of advice from eminent doctors, which is invaluable in the non-alcoholic treatment of sickness. If these simple and complete directions were in every home, a telling enlightenment would be the result.

TWO ideas which bear the mark of originality, emanate from the small but earnest band of white-ribboners at Walnut Hills, Cincinnati. Their "Temperance Sitting-room" is a ten cent noon lunch, an a la and anti-saloon, idea. It comprises three rooms, one of which is used for the union's regular meetings, and the enterprise is conducted on a self-supporting basis. Working men are welcome here for their noon lunches, in their old clothes and one evening in the week is devoted to a social occasion. Their "Temperance Club" is composed of wealthy people who favor the temperance work and are willing to help in its support.

MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN has been spending a few weeks at Hot Springs, Ark., at the bedside of a son who is very sick with pneumonia and inflammatory rheumatism. This urgent duty alone kept her from attending the last rites for Mrs. Lathrap. She begins work again the latter part of January in Indiana and Michigan. As a delegate from the National W. C. T. U. to the Triennial Council of Women, she will be in Washington, D. C., from February 18 to March 2. A part of March can be given to work in the South, while the latter part of March she will be engaged in the North, speaking at Toronto for the Canadian Temperance League, March 31. Any applications for addresses, or work in the spring conventions should be sent immediately to Mrs. M. B. Horning, The Temple, Chicago.

Cuticura

Instantly Relieves
SKIN TORTURES
A warm bath with Cuticura Soap, and a single application of Cuticura, the great skin cure, afford instant relief, permit rest and sleep, and point to a speedy cure in every form of torturing, disfiguring skin humors.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: NEWBERY, London. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Boston, U.S.A.

LATEST AND BEST

McINTOSH'S ANTHEMS

110 Pieces 256 Pages

SOLOS DUETS TRIOS QUARTETS CHORUSES
For Quartet and Chorus Choirs

This admirable new collection is the latest result of the author's careful study and acute musical taste. The best American and foreign composers are represented, and the music throughout is of rare excellence and impressiveness.

Two Editions: "Round Notes" and "Character Notes."

Each, per volume, $1, postpaid.
Per doz., $9, not postpaid.

LYON & HEALY,
Chicago, Ill.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, BOSTON.

The Natural Body Brace

Cures Female Weakness, Restores Health and Vigor.

After wearing your Natural Body Brace for nine months, the most extreme and painful female weakness has vanished.
MRS. JESSIE FISHER.
Spruce Creek, Pa.

I am pleased beyond expression with the Brace. I would not part with it for any money.
MARY F. ADAM,
Neosho Falls, Kan.

I have been afflicted with falling of the womb for 23 years, and have never had anything to help me like the Natural Body Brace has. I could not stand up long enough to wash dishes before wearing it, and now (after wearing it 3 months) I am cooking for a large family. I also help wash and do any kind of work.
MRS. LUCINDA FIELD,
Oscar, Texas.

Money Refunded if Brace is Not Satisfactory.
Send for Full Information.
Natural Body Brace Co.,
SALINA, KANSAS.
Howard C. Rash, Manager.

HAPPY CHILDREN

Because their clothes look new and neat. An old frock or suit can be changed into a new one by a ten-cent package of and they come in more than forty colors, and are made for home use. The method is easy and the result permanent.

Diamond Dyes

Sold everywhere. Direction Book and forty samples of dyed cloth sent free.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

DON'T BE CHEATED!
ALL GOOD SENSE CORSET WAISTS
Have Clamp Buckle at hip for Hose Supporters

REV. EUGENIA ST. JOHN is slowly recovering from the wound which she received by the runaway team December 20, near Burchard, Neb., on her way to Mission Creek, where she spoke for the W. C. T. U. The team was a span of Texas horses attached to a close carriage; they ran for over a mile at fearful speed, the driver unable to hold them, when the carriage turned over and Mrs. St. John was fearfully bruised. They carried her to the church on a chair where she spoke to a crowded house of anxious hearers. She is now able to go about a little on crutches. After a rest, she hopes, if able, to spend a year in the W. C. T. U. field, after which she will return to her pastorate.

MRS. ANNIE WITTENMYER, whose presence at the Cleveland Convention was missed on account of pressure of literary labors, writes that the latest years have been the busiest and most successful of her life. Among the recent legislative acts which have been secured through her efforts was the passage of a bill through the Pennsylvania legislature in the interest of social purity, raising the age of consent from ten to sixteen years. She also secured the submission of constitutional prohibition to the people of Pennsylvania, and two years ago she carried a bill through Congress, pensioning army nurses. Under that law pensions of twelve dollars per month have been secured for over four hundred. In the last five years she has founded three homes for the National Relief Corps. Mrs. Wittenmyer is in excellent health, and is now living with her married son on the Schuylkill River at Saratoga, Pa., where she finds abundant leisure and inspiration for her literary work.

Official Communications.

REMEMBER THE STRANGER WITHIN THY GATES.

The importance of the foreign department of the W. C. T. U. can hardly be overestimated. If there ever was a person in need of guidance and friendly advice it is the stranger, who, thousands of miles from his native land, finds himself in the maelstrom of new activities, new opportunities and new forces both for good and evil. Unacquainted with the customs, language and institutions of the country where he intends to build his home, he gropes blindly for some support, and grasps the first thing offered, whether it be a saloon-bar or the kindly hand holding a temperance pledge.

In a few years this alien is expected to have a voice in the government of the nation. His word, silently spoken at the ballot-box, carries just as much weight as the full-blooded American's. When the seed sown in the bar-room has taken root what will the harvest be? Saloons, more saloons.

As one of Mrs. Grubb's assistants, I make no apology for pleading the foreigner's cause. And not in their behalf only do I enter my plea. I plead for American homes and institutions, in the protection of which these foreigners may be enlisted—plead with the white-ribbon sisterhood to scatter the temperance seed before the ground is covered with poisonous liquor weeds.

The Scandinavians, my countrypeople, have fallen to my charge. What can I do for them? Alone, with two empty hands and an empty pocketbook, very little. With the assistance of my white-ribbon sisters, a good deal.

A large quantity of temperance tracts in the Scandinavian languages await distribution. Swedes, Norwegians and Danes are scattered all over this country and there is hardly a local union that cannot reach some. In the West and the Northwest there are large Scandinavian settlements and our principal cities hold thousands and tens of thousands of them. In the American homes Scandinavian girls are employed; they usually belong to some church, and through them a great number may be reached. (Scandinavian church-members need the gospel of home-protection just as bad as the American.) It is an almost inexcusable waste of time, money and opportunities to let these tracts lie unused, especially when the price is so low that it is hardly worth mentioning, $1.15 for 1,000 pages of hard, solid temperance truth—ten pages for one cent, exclusive of postage. Smaller packages may be ordered; the above is only quoted as the uniform rate.

Now, who will assist in this peaceful conquest of the Norsemen? Who will reach out to them the temperance plank before they are caught in the whirlpool of the liquor power? I know them; they are stubborn enough to stick to it if they once have taken hold. Sisters, if you cannot "sow the ground knee-deep," do help, I pray you, to plant some seed, and you will be rewarded when Olof, Nils and Anders solemnly walk up to the polls and cast their ballots, not for the legalized saloon, but for God and home and their adopted country.

The tracts may be ordered either from the superintendent of the foreign department, Mrs. Sophie F. Grubb, Kirkwood, Mo., or from me under the address given below.

Yours, faithfully in our common cause,

KATE LUNDEN.

Flemington, N. J.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The physi-culture department has added three new important leaflets. The department literature now numbers eighteen leaflets and pamphlets, which set forth various phases of physical education.

These new leaflets are as follows:

1. "Play in Education," by the well-known specialist, Carl Betz. This is a careful presentation of the influence and value of directed play in the development of the child.

2. "The Effects of Military Drill on Boys," by Dudley A. Sargent, director of the Hemenway Gymnasium, Harvard University. This should reach every family, and be placed in the hands of educators.

3. "Physical Beauty of Woman," by Prof. H. E. Richter, M. D., formerly a professor of anatomy in Germany. This is an able and telling presentation of the subject from a scientific standpoint. Every mother should read it who values the success of her growing children. Every young woman should read it who desires to know why women grow old more rapidly than men.

The price of the department envelope containing one copy of the entire list of literature is sixty cents, mailed. The three new leaflets mailed for ten cents. Send four cents in stamps for the late leaflet on "Physical Education, Its Connection with Temperance." As a matter of information regarding a department whose significance on the temperance reform is not yet fully appreciated, every W. C. T. U. member should read this, and hand it to her neighbor. Send all orders to

FRANCES W. LEITER,
Nat. Supt. Physiculture Department.
Mansfield, O.

LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION.

OUTLINE OF WORK FOR 1895.

I.

The development of L. T. L. superintendents and teachers by means of the Normal grade and Workers' Conferences.

(a) The Normal grade. Each W. C. T. U. is asked to constitute itself a Normal class for the study of the L. T. L. Lesson Manuals and Methods, some bright woman being appointed to take charge of the class. It is believed that a faithful trial of this plan will prove a great help to each union in its general work, and to each member in her individual work, as well as to the interests of the L. T. L.

(b) All-day county conferences for discussion of L. T. L. methods, and for practical examples of L. T. L. teaching. Each union, whether it maintains a Legion or not, should be asked to send representatives to these conferences.

II.

Thorough organization of the Legion into Junior and Senior grades, these grades to be subdivided into platoons. Special attention to promotions from each platoon to the next higher, and from Junior to Senior grade.

III.

Development of the Senior grade along the line of advanced work. Special attention to the diploma course. It has been decided, (a) that the diploma shall hereafter be given only upon Vol. 1, of the Lesson Manuals; (b) that eighty per cent. of correct answers shall be required to secure the diploma; (c) that written examinations shall be required; (d) that the lists of questions for examinations shall be secured from the state superintendent. All diplomas must be obtained through her. In each state as soon as practicable the graduates will be organized into a state Legion. Some kind of a review or summary should be required for each one of the seal courses of readings that are completed. A leaflet called "New Plans for the L. T. L.," gives full particulars of the diploma and seal courses; this can be obtained by sending a two-cent stamp to your state superintendent or to the W. T. P. A.

IV.

The brightest possible meetings for the Juniors, with special attention to the singing, and to variety of methods. The Juniors have now the privilege of securing seals for satisfactory examinations upon Volumes II. and III. of the Lesson Manuals. These seals are to be attached to a certificate, and to be duplicated upon the diploma whenever that is obtained.

V.

A state agent for The Young Crusader, who shall aim to secure the appointment of an agent in each district, county and local Legion. These agents will receive the usual percentage on all subscriptions secured.

VI.

Special objects for our contributions during the coming year are: (a) The support of our L. T. L. room in the National Temperance Hospital; (b) the L. T. L. work in foreign lands. In addition to these the Temperance Temple will continue to receive our gifts as long as there shall be need for them; any child collecting one dollar for this object can receive the handsome Temple souvenir.

VIII.

Special effort in each state to send at least one delegate to the next National Convention in Baltimore. When it is remembered that to accomplish this would require but one cent each from five thousand Legioners it will be seen that this can be very easily done if local superintendents will give their attention to collecting these small sums. These dues must pass through the state W. C. T. U. treasury.

IX.

L. T. L. county conventions, which have proved so successful wherever tried. Special attention to the organization of county Legions, the membership of which shall be composed of all pledged Legioners paying five cent dues. Dues should be paid into the state W. C. T. U. treasury, wherever L. T. L. representation has been secured in the state W. C. T. U. conventions.

X.

Special effort to increase the active membership of the Legion. Also, special effort on the part of the children to obtain honorary (adult) members, who pay a small annual membership fee. Cards for this purpose can be procured from the W. T. P. A.

XI.

One or more carefully prepared entertainments, given for the purpose of replenishing the treasury, and of creating public temperance sentiment. Let every selection be pithy and pointed and thoroughly prepared, and the result must be fruitful.

XII.

Faithful observance of our seven p. m. concert of prayer, by the Legioners themselves, as well as by superintendents and teachers.

HELEN G. RICE,
Nat. Sup't.

1597 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

No book will be so much quoted in this column, for weeks to come, as the Annual Minutes. The reason thereof must be obvious, since so many things were ordered to be done which can only be done through close coöperation and continual reminding, e. g., on page 57 it will be noted that it was "Moved by Mrs. White-Kinney that the General Officers carefully investigate the work of the National superintendents in order to be able to judge if they are doing active and effective work. Carried."

This by no means implies that there is any dissatisfaction, or ground for dissatisfaction with the work of the board of superintendents. So many of them have well-nigh created their departments, so many others have been associated with them for so long a time and have done such valiant service that it is difficult to conceive of the work being carried on without them. But it also happens nearly every year that one or more departments must change hands, and in order to be sure that the right choice has been made in the selection of the new superintendent this motion was carried.

There was also included in it as a necessary part thereof, that each superintendent should give to the National treasurer at the close of the financial year, a detailed account of the expenditures connected with her appropriation. This, however, should go without saying, since no other course could put the matter upon a sound business basis. While upon the subject of superintendents, may I ask the Board, as a whole, and each member thereof individually, to pardon that sentence in my circular letter which made such arrant nonsense in the reading? I cannot quite tell how it came about, but the facts of the case are that I left the manuscript copy in the hands of the office assistants for mimeographing, and the letters themselves were sent out during my absence. In some way one who almost never makes the slightest mistake made so laughable an one that you could well be excused for wondering if I had taken leave of my senses. Please cross out the words "and to superintendent," after "to lean upon," and you will have what I really said.

The evening of February 28 has been fixed upon as our evening in the National Council of Women. We are to share it with the National Peace Association, they taking the first half. The program is very nearly completed; we only wait to know if we are to have with us the presence of our white-

RUBIFOAM
FOR THE TEETH.
DELIGHTFUL, REFRESHING,
BENEFICIAL.
DELICIOUSLY FLAVORED.
ALL DRUGGISTS.
PRICE 25 CENTS.
PUT UP BY
E. W. HOYT & CO.,
LOWELL, MASS.

Book of Sense Free

How to get rid of that cold—how to prevent malaria—free for the asking—all about Calisaya La-Rilla—Drop me a postal.

Charles Allen Reed, 9 Cliff St., New York.

PRIZES ON PATENTS.
How to get $100 and Perhaps Make a Fortune.

We secure patents and to induce people to keep track of their bright ideas we offer a prize of one hundred dollars to be paid on the first of every month to the person who submits to us the most meritorious invention during the preceding month. We will also advertise the invention free of charge in the National Register, a weekly newspaper, published in Washington, D. C., which has an extensive circulation throughout the United States and is devoted to the interests of inventors.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

The idea of being able to invent something strikes most people as being very difficult; this delusion the Company wishes to dispel. It is the simple things and small inventions that make the greatest amount of money, and the complex ones are seldom profitable. Almost everybody, at some time or another, conceives an idea, which, if patented, would probably be worth to him a fortune. Unfortunately such ideas are usually dismissed without thought. The simple inventions like the car window, which could be easily slid up and down without breaking the passenger's back, the sauce pan, the collar button, the nut lock, the bottle stopper, the snow shovel are things that almost every one sees some way of improving upon, and it is these kind of inventions that bring the greatest returns to the author.

The prize we offer will be paid at the end of each month, whether the application has been acted upon by the Patent office or not. Every competitor must apply for a patent on his invention through us, and whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a valuable patent.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
JOHN WEDDERBURN, Gen'l Manager,
618 F. St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

P. S. The responsibility of this company may be judged from the fact that its stock is held by about seventeen hundred of the leading newspapers of the United States.

DEAFNESS
and head noises relieved by using WILSON'S COMMON SENSE EAR DRUMS. Entirely new, scientific invention; different from all other devices; the only safe, simple, comfortable, and invisible ear drum in the world. Hundreds are being benefitted where medical skill has failed. No string or wire attachment to irritate the ear. Write for pamphlet.
THE DRUM IN POSITION
WILSON EAR DRUM CO.
132 Trust Bldg. LOUISVILLE, KY.

DENT'S CORN GUM
Cures Corns, Warts, Bunions, etc. So easy to apply—it sticks fast. Ask for Dent's; take no other. Sold everywhere, or by mail 10 cents. C. S. DENT & CO. DETROIT, MICH.
Try Dent's Toothache Gum.

High Arm
MY HUSBAND Cant see how you do it.
$60 Kenwood Machine for - $23.00
$50 Arlington Machine for - $19.50
Standard Singers - $8.00, $11.00
$15.00, and 27 other styles. All attachments FREE. We pay freight ship anywhere on 30 days free trial, in any home without asking one cent in advance. Buy from factory. Save agents large profits. Over 100,000 in use. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write at once Address (in full), CASH BUYERS' UNION,
Warranted Ten Years
158-164 West Van Buren St., B 30, Chicago, Ill.

SAVE THE WOMEN
AGENTS work and worry by selling the Arnold Steam Cookers and Coffee Pots. Free outfits; most liberal terms.
Wilmot Castle & Co., 59 Elm St., Rochester, N. Y.

A $1 Magazine for 30c.
Send 30 cents and names of 6 people who might subscribe, and we will send you THE ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE a full year. The price of the magazine is $1 a year. A sample copy for 6 cents. Address ribbon prima donna—Mrs. Alice J. Harris. Miss Willard will preside; the corresponding secretary will conduct the devotional exercises, while addresses are to be made by Belle Kearney, Mrs. Hoffman and Lady Henry Somerset. Following so closely the grand mass-meeting which is to be held on the 15th in connection with the presentation of the Polyglot Petition, our organization will certainly have a fair field in the heart of our national life. The district union is preparing with enthusiasm for the great gathering, and it is hoped that white-ribboners from all parts of the country will flock to the council.
ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE 2819 OLIVE ST. LOUIS, MO.

Apropos to the Great Petition an official request is to be made that ministers should preach on the subject of temperance, with especial reference to itself as an object lesson and creator of public sentiment, on the Sabbath following its presentation. Will each reader of this column take especial pains to see that the matter is brought before the consideration of her own pastor?

Mrs. Marion H. Baxter, so well known as an able platform speaker and devoted white-ribbon worker, is intending to go West for work during the winter and spring. Unions desiring to secure her services should correspond with her at once at Harvey, Ill.

Even as I write the very air seems heavy with our loss. It is hard to realize that another Mary has left our ranks. Heaven must be the richer for their going from us, but how incalculably poorer is earth. And yet, not poorer for we have not lost them. They are with us still. I am sure no union needs any exhortation to observe the day which has been set apart for Mrs. Lathrap's memorial service, February 3. Let it be a day not spent in vain regrets, but from her glorious life let us each gain new courage for the conflict, which must press the sorer, so valiant a leader being gone.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner.

(Form of bequest to be adopted by testators):

"I give, devise and bequeath to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the United States, incorporated in the District of Columbia, with Frances E. Willard and twelve other trustees, the sum of —— dollars, to be used by said corporation in accordance with its declared objects."

We have had recently two or three inquiries for a proper form of bequest for the National, and it was thought best to give, at the head of the Treasurer's Corner, an approved form, which we have done in this number.

Cheering news comes from Cleveland unions. They entertained that great Convention, paid all their debts and had five hundred dollars left in their treasury. With this they are doing great good. They have sent fifty dollars to our National Hospital, one hundred to the Temple, fifty to one of our organizers and will use the entire balance to good purpose. Let Baltimore take courage and learn of Cleveland "How to do it," with help to themselves financially.

The work of a treasurer is usually so prosaic that it brings a bit of cheer to have a friend send a poem to this practical department, so I share with my readers one sent to me on Christmas day:

Christmas, 1894.

MY DEAR SISTER:—

Holder of the Treasury keys
Of Woman's Temple great,
A verse I now will write for thee,
Perchance it may come late.

It will assure you of my love
For woman's equal rights,
If I were able I would try
To get a thousand lights

Along the line from shore to shore,
To bring for her success,
My prayer, heartfelt, shall ever be
That God her work will bless.

Unto the Treasurer of all worlds
Your cause I now commend,
Yourself, with all your cares and fears,
He is your steadfast friend.

He will uphold you in each hour
When most you need His aid,
He will go with you mid the gloom,
You need not be afraid.

Oh, trust yourself, your cause with Him.
And do your very best.
With sickle sharp keep reaping on 'Till you shall enter rest.

REV. H. F. SNOW.

Cornish, Me.

I wish to call attention to the fact that the National treasurer has nothing to do with subscriptions for THE UNION SIGNAL. All such matters should be sent to W. T. P. Association. When one is sending a remittance to the National and wishes to send subscription in same draft or order, we are very willing to attend to the matter, but when subscription alone is sent, it would be quite as easy to send direct to W. T. P. A.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Organizers' Corner.

Superintendent of the Department of Organization, Corresponding Secretary of the National W. C. T. U.

ORGANIZERS.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, 1105 Davis street, Elmira, N. Y.
Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, Port Jervis, N. Y.
Miss Frances E. Griffin, The De Soto, Chicago.
Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, Chautauqua, Wash.
Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, 1907 Bush street, San Francisco, Cal.
Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair, Clinton, N. Y.
Mrs. Maude L. Greene, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Baraga, Mich.
Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.
Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Ellensburg, E. Wash.
Miss Ida Clothier, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, Pacific Grove, Cal.
Mrs. S. C. Harris, Franklin, Va.
Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, 1006 Bainbridge street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.
Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.
Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.
Mrs. E. A. Kenyon, Townshend, Vt.
Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown, LL.D., Cincinnati, O., Lecturer.
Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, Vincennes, Ind.
Mrs. Sue V. Tomlinson, Charlotte, N. C.
Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, Roslindale, Mass., Lecturer.
Mrs. E. L. Calkins, 922 S. Rose street, Kalamazoo, Mich.
Miss Lilian Wood, Maryville, Mo., Lecturer.
Mrs. Ella A. Boole, A. M., West New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y., Lecturer.
Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, 27 Everett street, Cambridge, Mass., Lecturer.
Mrs. Addie Northam Field, Bedford, N. H.
Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, McMinnville, Ore.
For terms and date address as above.

The Superintendent of the Board of Organizers has learned that it is one thing to apportion dates as requested, and quite another to have those dates filled. I have written each organizer, asking her to fill two dates in THE UNION SIGNAL according to plan presented by the organizers themselves; but the hiatus in the appearance of this column speaks loudly—as to the response.

From individual organizers I have more direct information and am glad to report most of them constantly in the field and doing excellent service. Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair reports engagements up to May 1, principally in the East. Mrs. E. Norinne Law goes very soon to Florida and Mississippi, and would like to make engagements en route in Alabama and Georgia. Miss Clara Parrish and Miss Carrie Lee Carter move westward to California and are open to calls all along the line. Mrs. Henrietta Skelton has done grand work in Ohio, chiefly in Cleveland since the Convention, and is arranging a tour through Iowa and later, through Louisiana. Mrs. Sue V. Tomlinson spends January in her own state, and February and March in Alabama. Mrs. E. L. Calkins would like engagements after March 1, and the state officers of Indiana can testify to her especial fitness. Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, after closing her excellent work in Willard Hall would like engagements South or in New Hampshire.

But the space fails to speak of each one of these brave and gifted women who are a glory to our organization and for whom we are believing there will be wider openings and better acknowledgment in days to come.

Several of the states report nearly half the additional 500 members as having been already secured.

Each one of the general officers—with the exception of the President, who has done enough pioneer work in years past for a dozen ordinary lifetimes—has pledged herself to give one month in the field to the work of organization wherever there may seem to be the greatest need. Mrs. Barker goes into South Carolina in February. From all points come most hopeful tidings, and we shall surely report large gains at Baltimore in '95.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

WILL YOU HELP?

It is scarcely necessary to ask. We know you will help when the need is laid before you. Every one of you know the purpose of the National Temperance Hospital; every one is proud of its successful demonstration of the principles upon which it was founded. Not being on the ground, you have failed to realize that the financial panic has seriously affected its resources, and some of you have forgotten your usual contributions at a time when they were more than ever needed. The result is that at the January meeting of the board of trustees the treasurer reported less than five dollars in donation received from all sources during the month of December. At the same time, a larger proportion than usual of cases needing hospital care but unable to pay for it, have been sent to us. The matron reports more than half the cases for some months have been of this class. With heavy expenses for rent, board and salary for nurses and other employés, the burden has become so heavy we must needs ask you to help care for these sufferers. They are not Chicago patients, but come from many states, and some of them are W. C. T. U. workers.

You will help us. Send what you can spare, five cents or five dollars, one or one hundred dollars will be gratefully received. Remember small donations multiplied by numbers will bring great relief to our treasurer at this time and enable us to continue to minister to suffering ones.

Address all letters containing money to Mrs. C. E. Bigelow, 539 West Adams street, Chicago.

MRS. M. E. KLINE, Pres.
MRS. W. THATCHER, Sec.

POLYGLOT PETITION.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

Names. Residences.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, bilious headache, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, loss of appetite, sallow skin, etc., when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

Go by the book. Pills 10¢ and 25¢ a box. Book free at your druggist's or write B. F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

Quaker Oats

PUREST
SWEETEST AND BEST

Sold only in 2 lb. Packages.

D AND C ROSES

Just the kind of Roses you have often wished for. Sturdy, fragrant and beautiful. On their own roots, ready to grow. Our new Guide to Rose Culture accurately describes and pictures them, together with every other flower of worth. If you so request, we will send free this book and a sample copy of our floral magazine, "Success with Flowers."

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO. West Grove, Pa.

THE ELEVENTH EDITION.

WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS

Has just been issued. This song book is certainly the most popular collection of

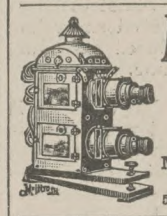
Temperance Songs

ever published. The melodies are unusually pleasing and the words are right to the point. It covers a wide range of themes, expressing all the varied emotions, from the comic to the pathetic. Get it, and your young people will bless you, and your old people will praise you.

Price 35c.

Order direct of the author,

FLORA H. CASSEL, Hastings, Neb.



Make Money

quickly by illustrating your lectures with a STEREOPTICON. Long list of Slides on TEMPERANCE and kindred subjects.

McINTOSH BATTERY and OPTICAL COMP'Y
521 to 531 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO

$50. "I wish every reading, conscientious, common-sense married man could have your Tokology in the very beginning of marital existence. Knowing what I know now, I would gladly have given $50 for it nine years ago." REV. GEO. BUCKLE.

"Baby came April 4. Needed no doctor; had none. No money could buy my book from me if I could not get another." MRS. MINNIE STARK.

"I would not part with mine for ten times its cost." MR. A. W. CRIPPE.

Tokology is the complete ladies' guide in health and disease, by Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Prepaid $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agts.

ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO, 277 Madison-st., Chicago

SHOEMAKER'S POULTRY ALMANAC

Contains 80 pages; over 70 illustrations in colors. Sure remedies and recipes for all known diseases in poultry; also valuable hints on poultry raising. Full information and prices on all leading varieties. Finest descriptive Poultry Book ever issued. Sent postpaid for 15cts. to any address. C. C. SHOEMAKER, Freeport, Ill. U.S.A.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my Invisible Tubular Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Warranted to help more cases than all similar devices combined. Help ears as glasses do eyes. Sold by F. Hiscox only, 853 Br'dway, N. Y. Send for book of proofs FREE

AGENTS WANTED FOR NEW BOOK, MARK TWAIN'S "Pudd'nhead Wilson, and Those Extraordinary Twins." An immense hit. Write quick for exclusive territory and terms. NATIONAL PUB. CO., 130 Adams St., Chicago.

HOME STUDY Book-keeping, Penmanship, Arithmetic, Shorthand, etc. thoroughly taught by Mail at student's Home. Low rates; perfect satisfaction. Cat. free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 77 College Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

MILLER'S HOTEL. New York City, 39 West 26th Street. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

SALESMEN WANTED to sell our goods by samples to the wholesale and retail trade, sell on sight to every business man or firm; liberal salary, money advanced for advertising and expenses. Permanent position. Address with stamp, KING MFG. CO., A 55 Chicago, Ill.

CANCER permanently cured. No knife. No poison. No plaster. JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address, C. J. MASON, Box, 519, New York City, N. Y.

Signal Notes.

ONE million and ninety-five thousand pounds are spent for drink in South Australia each year.

GROCERS' licenses are abolished in New Zealand and a three-fifths majority will carry prohibition in any locality. Why not do away with licenses in toto?

JANUARY 6 was observed by the B. W. T. A. as a day of prayer and special gatherings were held during the week of prayer, asking God's blessing on the work.

OHIO'S food and dairy commissioner is authority for the statement that for every gallon of genuine liquor, there are manufactured one hundred gallons of adulterated drinks made of alcohol and flavoring oils.

THE opinion of Mr. G. A. Barclay, of Edinburgh, that "drink-selling is an evil, and no system seeking to throw round it an air of respectability could make right what is wrong," is also that of all advanced temperance thinkers regarding the Gothenburg system.

AT a recent anti-opium meeting in Edinburgh, presided over by Professor Simpson, and reported by The Christian, Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell gave rousing addresses against the evils of opium and vice, from their experiences in the East. A strong resolution of protest was the immediate result.

GOOD citizenship committees and municipal reform leagues will be interested in the programs for Municipal Reform Conferences, which can be procured from Wm. Howe Tolman, secretary of the movement, 427 W. 57th St., New York city. It is the aim of the promoters to make these conferences an object lesson for one form of civic federation.

EVERY city should have a sterilized milk depot to supplement the fresh air mission work among infants and children. The Nathan Straus sterilized milk charity in New York city furnished over two thousand five hundred bottles of pure milk a day gratis last summer, the result being seen in the greatly diminished infant mortality of 1894 over previous years.

DALTON, GA., for twelve years under prohibition, has a pleasant record as a result. During that time its property has increased in value ninety per cent; school attendance is greater by sixty per cent. Its police force is no larger, and the county poorhouse has no tenants. The social evil has almost disappeared and its civil and criminal court business is reduced one-half. The town has 4,500 inhabitants.

THE Premier of Cape Colony, Mr. Cecil Rhodes, denies that he has favored the introduction of liquor into Khama's territory. Even from a commercial point of view he would oppose the liquor traffic among the natives, as it would be bad policy to demoralize the native laborers on whom the public works depend. He favors absolute prohibition—for the native.

THE new Madras Native Christian Temperance Association is doing a unique work. The members have formed a "temperance police," who do detective work among drunkards, or those in danger of becoming such, by meeting them at liquor-selling resorts and converting them to total abstinence. A great many native Christians and Hindus will undoubtedly thus be saved. Only Christians can become members, and "to keep the Sabbath day holy" is part of their creed.

A NEW development in the Chautauqua system of education is a plan for supplying to local circles, individuals, etc., lectures written by well-known authorities. These are accompanied by a syllabus for each auditor and are very helpful and economical. Pastors find them especially valuable and the reader has only to add matter of a personal or local nature to insure their popularity. Bishop John H. Vincent, Drawer 194, Buffalo, N. Y., will answer all inquiries.

THE Scottish Temperance League Journal reports that the temperance teaching recently introduced in the elementary schools of Lancashire and Cheshire, England, under the auspices of the Band of Hope union, has been most successful. Two thousand four hundred and seventy-two lectures on the physiological effects of alcohol have been delivered to 9,650 teachers and over 300,000 scholars. One thousand written essays have been sent in by the children of the schools and over 30,000 certificates of merit and many prizes have been awarded.

THE GENUINE "BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are sold only in boxes. They are wonderfully effective for Coughs, Hoarseness or Irritation of the Throat caused by cold.

Dull and Bilious.

Sleepless nights, backache, weakness—all result from a disordered condition of the Liver or Kidneys. To be strong and vigorous your Liver must be healthy. Wonderful success has always attended the use of

Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm.

It cures thoroughly all ailments of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, Female troubles, Rheumatism and Bright's Disease. For sale by Druggists at $1.00 per bottle.

THE DR. J. H. McLEAN MEDICINE CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

"Who wins the eyes, wins all."—If you regard

APPEARANCES you will certainly use SAPOLIO. In house-cleaning Sapolio is a solid cake of scouring-soap. Try it in house-cleaning.

© COPYRIGHT.

YOU ARE JUDGED

by your house just as much as by your dress. Keep it neat and clean and your reputation will shine. Neglect it and your good name will suffer. Do not think that house-cleaning is too troublesome; it is worth all it costs, especially if you reduce the outlay of time and strength by using SAPOLIO.

LADY AGENTS, Rubber Undergarment. Quick sales, big profits. Catalog free. Mrs. N. B. LITTLE, Chicago

At ¼ Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc, List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

AMERICAN DESK CO 270-272 WABASH AVE. CHICAGO, U.S.A.

4 foot desk, $16
4½ foot desk, $18
5 foot desk, $20

Send for catalogue. Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

$2.75 GENTS OR LADIES SIZE 14 KARAT GOLD PLATE.

CUT THIS OUT and send it to us with your name and address and we will send you this beautiful gold finished watch by express for examination. You examine it at the express office, and if you think it a bargain pay our sample price $2.75, and it is yours. It is magnificently engraved and equal in appearance to a genuine Solid Gold watch. A guarantee for 5 years and beautiful gold plate chain and charm sent free with every watch, write to-day, this may not appear again; mention whether you want gents' or ladies' size.

THE NATIONAL MFG. & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

STEM WIND. STEM SET.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL.

COMPILED BY

ANNA A. GORDON

OLD—NEW—TESTED—FRESH

GOOD because it contains the favorites of White Ribboners everywhere, the songs which have become their watchwords.

NEW because rich treasures of word and song have been prepared for its pages.

TESTED because its hymns have borne the wear and tear of use.

FRESH because it rings clear and sweet for the home, the nation, and the truth of God.

It is divided into the following sections:

| | |
|---|---|
| Devotional Meetings | Mass Meetings |
| Evangelistic Services | Prohibition Rallies |
| Gospel Temperance Meetings | Special Days |
| Memorial Services | Closing Hymns |
| Responsive Scripture Readings | |

EASILY THE BEST WOMAN'S PAPER IN GREAT BRITAIN.

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL...

EDITED BY

...LADY HENRY SOMERSET and MISS HOLDSWORTH...

Is a weekly review of woman's work in philanthropy and reform, and the OFFICIAL ORGAN of

The British Women's Temperance Association....

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL is thoroughly abreast of the times, and an authority on the advanced movement now everywhere occupying the mind of thinking women. It contains interviews with prominent women; serial stories by well-known authors; Books Worth Reading, by Lady Henry Somerset; social sketches contributions from Miss Frances E. Willard, and, in all, comprises a timely up-to-date journal for thoughtful women.

Subscription $1.56, postpaid, per annum, to any address.....

Editorial Rooms and Office of Business Manager, to whom all communications should be addressed, 33, 34 Memorial Hall, Farringdon St., London, E. C., England.

The subject for the

JANUARY BIBLE READING

is Pentecostal Preparation and is particularly suggestive as a starting point for the work of the year.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

State L. T. L. Superintendents.

Do you know about

THE CRUSADER BANNER?

Has your state L. T. L. ever held it? Why not?

Send for January issue of YOUNG CRUSADER, and then get the children interested

WALTER BAKER & CO.

The Largest Manufacturers of

PURE, HIGH GRADE COCOAS AND CHOCOLATES

On this Continent, have received

HIGHEST AWARDS

from the great

Industrial and Food EXPOSITIONS In Europe and America.

Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or other Chemicals or Dyes are used in any of their preparations. Their delicious BREAKFAST COCOA is absolutely pure and soluble, and costs less than one cent a cup.

SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE.

WALTER BAKER & CO. DORCHESTER, MASS.

Publisher's Notes.

JUST ISSUED.

A NEW LEAFLET.

No. 15 of the Total Abstinence Series

What It Costs.

It is a vivid setting forth of what the drink traffic costs, not only in dollars and cents, but also in grain, in flour, in bread, in human lives. The figures are appalling.

Two Million Boys

from each generation required to keep the saloons running! This leaflet is an eye-opener, and, like all our total abstinence leaflets, specially adapted for distribution at public meetings.

PRICE:

For 5, or less, each ..... $ 01
Per 100 ..... 15
Per 1,000 ..... 1 25

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

BIBLE READINGS
To be Issued.

JANUARY—"Pentecostal Preparation."
Miss Anna Downey
FEBRUARY—"Power from on High."
Mrs. Anna M. Palmer

PRICE:

Single copies, per year ..... $ 12
10 copies, per year, to one address ... 1 0(

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

RESPONSIVE READINGS
To be Issued.

JANUARY—"Prohibition Cross Fire."
D. D. Tower
FEBRUARY—"The Children's Paper."
Miss Ada M. Melville

PRICE:

Single copies, per year ..... $ 10
13 copies, per year, to one address ... 1 0(

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

MARKED REDUCTION ON BIBLE READINGS

Issued Previous to January, 1895.

Price of Bible and Responsive Readings published previous to January, 1895, 25cts. per 100.

Send to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

COCKLE SHELLS AND SILVER BELLS.

A charming collection of short poems by Mrs. M. F. Butts, known to white-ribboners everywhere by her contributions in prose and verse to THE UNION SIGNAL. It is a little volume which, with its nursery rhymes and lullabys, and its sunshiny verses about roses and posies, and birds and babies, will delight the little ones.

Price, board covers, 50 cents.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester N. Y.

ASK Your Grocer for

NONE SUCH MINCE MEAT

Two Mince Pies, equal to our Grandmother's, from each package of None-Such Mince Meat, without the worry and work. For sale by all Grocers.

MERRELL-SOULE CO.,
Syracuse, N. Y.

Young Women.

New Series Oak and Ivy Leaf...

Official Organ Young Women's Christian Temperance Union.

12 Pages. - Published Monthly. - 50c. a Year.
JENNIE A. STEWART, Editor.

★

A welcome change has taken place in our Y paper during the year. Enlarged and improved it is an attractive paper for the general reader as well as the young folks within the white-ribbon fold. The new list of departments includes:

News of the Month (in temperance, religious, political and educational circles); Special Articles (biography, travel, interviews, etc.); Queen's Gardens (poems, stories and sermonettes); Worth Repeating; Editorial; Official (messages and hints from the leaders in Y work); College Corner; Kindred Societies; Have You Read——? Brothers of Girls; Good Times; Girls at Home; By Mail; Silhouettes; Y Round Table and Pearls and Feathers.

TERMS TO UNIONS.

★

Single copies, one year, each .....50c
Five copies on one order, one year, each, 40c
Any number of copies, for distribution, each..... 4c

★

TERMS TO SOLICITORS.

One copy, one year.....50c

For clubs of five or more, the solicitor may retain 10 cents of each cash subscription. After the first club is sent the solicitor's name will be entered, and ten cents may be retained for each subsequent cash subscription.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Young Women to one address, one year, $1.40.

COMPETITIVE STORIES.

The prize contest for readers of Young Women has been extended in time until March 1.

Five dollars is offered for the best short temperance story.

Three dollars for the second best.

Two dollars for the third best.

Conditions.

1. The writer must be a subscriber to Young Women.

2. The story must be from 600 to 1,000 words in length.

3. The manuscript must be received on or before March 1, 1895.

4. The three prize stories, and any others which are worthy publication, will appear in Young Women.

5. No manuscripts will be returned unless stamps sufficient to cover postage are enclosed.

Mother! Mother! Mother!

SET YOUR CHILD TO WORK.

The Young Crusader

will send a

PRIZE

to the boy or girl securing largest number of subscribers before

APRIL 1.

Send for January CRUSADER and read the particulars. Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Kernels.

A HEN is a very superior creature, but she could never lay a corner-stone.

I FIND that the great thing in this world is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving.—Holmes.

THE day in which I give no blessing brings me no benediction.

THE eye of a little Washington miss was attracted by the sparkle of the dew at early morning.

"Mamma," she exclaimed; "it's hotter'n I thought it was."

"What do you mean?"

"Look here. The grass is all covered with perspiration."

MRS. UPPERCRUST.—You go abroad a good deal lately, do you not, Mrs. Newmonie?

MRS. NEWMONIE.—La, yes. Why we're in Paris so much lately, that they call us regular Parisites.

THE first duty in life is to learn to drudge at something.—John Staples White.

CONVEY thy love to thy friend as an arrow to the mark, to stick there: not as a ball against the wall, to rebound back to thee.—Francis Quarles.

"THEY say Green has been wandering in his mind lately."

"Well, he's safe enough; he can't get far."

TOMMY.—"There's a girl at our school, mamma, they call 'Postscript.' Do you know why?" Mamma: "No, dear." Tommy: "Because her name is Adeline Moore."

WHILE the Union troops were marching through a Maryland town during Lee's invasion, some of the stragglers broke into a bakery; and as one of them issued forth, bearing a loaf of bread on his bayonet, an Irish soldier cried out, "Liftinint! Liftinint! be jabers, there goes a man wid the staff of life on the point of death."

IT is part of my religion to look well after the cheerfulness of life, and let the dismals shift for themselves, believing with good Sir Thomas More that it is wise to be "merrie in God."—Louisa M. Alcott.

LITTLE Bobby (the enfant terrible).—"Yes, cats can see in the dark and so can Bessie; 'cause when Mr. Johnson walked into the parlor where she was settin' all alone in the dark, I heard her say to him, 'Oh, Jack! you haven't shaved to-day!'"

LITTLE Emile, as his sister Elli enters the room with an apple in her hand—"Let's play Adam and Eve, sis."

ELLI.—"How?"

EMILE.—"You tempt me with the apple, and I'll eat it."

To know that He is always coming to us, to know that there is nothing happening to us which is not His coming—to know all that is to find the most trivial life made solemn, the most cruel life made kind, the most sad and gloomy life made rich and beautiful.—Phillips Brooks.

IN a district school the pupils were asked to tell what a bee line was. A small boy was first to respond with:

"I know! It's the line a feller makes for home when a bee's stung him!"

A BRIGHT story in grammar is told of a little school girl. "Quarrel," she parsed, "is plural." "Why?" "Because—why, it takes two to make one."

AN Irishman asked a Scotchman one day why a railroad engine was always called "she"? Sandy replied: "Perhaps it's on account of the horrible noise it makes when it tries to whistle."—Pearson's Weekly.

THE love of goodness is real and healthy only when we do it.—F. W. Robertson.

IN criticising Monsignor Satolli's condemnation of liquor dealers, that eminent liquor dealer and statesman, Morris Tekulsky, remarks, "Religion will not feed a man." In this respect religion differs widely from the saloon, which may always be depended upon to feed a man, namely, the man who runs it.

AN item is going the rounds of a press to the effect that whisky is now manufactured out of old rags. We see nothing remarkable about this. Every one knows that nearly all the old rags now in the country are manufactured out of whisky, and there is no apparent reason why the process of conversion may not work as well one way as another: from whisky to rags, and from rags to whisky. What a beautiful business it is!

IN the family circle, little Mary, one evening when all was silent, looked anxiously in the face of her father, who had ceased to pray in his family, and said to him with quivering lips, "Papa, is God dead?" "No, my child; why do you ask?" "Why, papa, you never talk to Him now as you used to do," she replied.

Babies and Children

thrive on Scott's Emulsion when all the rest of their food seems to go to waste. Thin Babies and Weak Children grow strong, plump and healthy by taking it.

Scott's Emulsion

overcomes inherited weakness and all the tendencies toward Emaciation or Consumption. Thin, weak babies and growing children and all persons suffering from Loss of Flesh, Weak Lungs, Chronic Coughs, and Wasting Diseases will receive untold benefits from this great nourishment. The formula for making Scott's Emulsion has been endorsed by the medical world for twenty years. No secret about it.

Send for pamphlet on Scott's Emulsion. FREE.

Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All Druggists. 50 cents and $1.

"No better thing for womankind could be done than to scatter this book broadcast as the wind scatters blossoms."

SO WRITES ONE OF THE REVIEWERS OF

A GREAT MOTHER,

....THE....

Biography of Madam Willard.

We append a fac simile of its beautiful exterior.

Bound in Soft Gray and Silver.

Containing Twenty-two Fine Illustrations Portraits of the Willard Family,

Simple, Unique, Elegant

Prominent Temperance Women, and

GLIMPSES OF REST COTTAGE.

Written by Miss Frances E. Willard
and Mrs. Minerva B. Norton.

YOU CANNOT AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT IT.

PRICE, $1.50.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

JUST WHAT YOU WANT. WHAT?

THE CRUSADE SPOON.

New Prices.

We are happy to give our patrons the benefit of the reduction in silver by offering the Crusade Souvenir Spoon at the following prices:

CRUSADE SPOONS.

| FORMER PRICE. | | REDUCED PRICE. | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Teaspoons, - - | $2 25 | Now, - - - | $1 75 |
| " gilded bowl, | 2 75 | " - - - | 2 25 |
| After dinner coffee spoons, - - | 1 50 | Now, - - - | 1 00 |
| After dinner coffee spoons, gilded bowl, | 1 75 | Now, - - | 1 25 |

These spoons will commend themselves to workers as especially fitting souvenirs, both of the birth and the "majority" year of the W. C. T. U.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE WHITE RIBBON BIRTHDAY BOOK

will make a splendid

New Year's Gift

to a W. C. T. U. woman, or to any other woman. It contains a selection for each day from the best writers among women, and on the opposite page spaces for autographs.

Edited by Anna A. Gordon,
and
Illustrated by Mary A. Lathbury.

This is the first Birthday Book composed, compiled, illustrated and published solely by women.

Bound in appropriate and attractive form.

Price $1.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

You will find the "White Ribbon Hymnal" a great help in temperance meetings and song services. Price 35c.

These are Facts

Which Housekeepers Should Seriously Consider

IF you want the best food, you will be interested in the following facts, which show why "Royal" is the best baking powder, why it makes the best and most wholesome food, and why its use has become almost universal —its sale greater in this country than the sale of all other cream-of-tartar baking powders combined.

The Royal Baking Powder NEVER fails.

It is absolutely pure and wholesome.

It is combined from the most approved and healthful ingredients.

It makes the finest flavored, most tender, delicious, and wholesome food.

It has greater leavening strength than any other baking powder, and is therefore the cheapest.

It never loses its strength, but will keep fresh and full of leavening power until used.

It acts slowly in the dough, so that none of its strength is lost before the baking is completed.

It makes food that will keep sweet, moist, and fresh longer, or that may be eaten hot and fresh with impunity.

The reasons why the Royal Baking Powder is superior to all others in these respects are easily stated. One is because it is made from chemically pure materials; another is because it is made with greater care and accuracy than any other. It is always uniform in composition and leavening power. It has been the standard baking powder for twenty-five years. The founder has continuously conducted its business and is still at the head of its management. Thus all the knowledge and skill attained by over a quarter of a century's experience is available in its present preparation. The consumer is not experimented upon by changes of formula that are constantly being made in other powders in an effort to get a mixture that will not "cake" or lose its strength, or that follow changes of proprietorship or manufacturers. The Royal Baking Powder is always certain and equal in its work; a teaspoonful does the same perfect work to-day that it did yesterday, or last week or month, or last year.

While the last teaspoonful in a can of Royal is as good as the first, other powders lose their strength after being made a short time, and particularly after the can is opened.

No great efforts are made by other manufacturers to procure pure materials.

They use the ordinary cream of tartar of the market, which contains tartrate of lime, and is frequently mixed with alum, phosphates, or terra alba. The frequent tests by the Massachusetts and New York State Boards of Health show the great extent of this adulteration.

But experiments that cost many hundred thousand dollars were made by the Royal Baking Powder Company to secure for its use chemically pure ingredients, and to devise methods and formulas that would make a perfect baking powder.

In the manufacture of this powder there is used more than half of all the cream of tartar consumed in the United States for all purposes.

This is refined in the mammoth works of the Company (erected at a cost of over half a million dollars) by special, patented processes, by which means there are secured to the Royal Baking Powder exclusively ingredients absolutely free from tartrate of lime or other adulterant or inert matter.

While there is no secret as to the ingredients used—the methods of their preparation, their relative proportions, and the manipulations which are indispensable to this end are unknown to other manufacturers.

The exactness with which the active principle of each ingredient prior to mixing is ascertained by expert chemists; the actual prohibition enforced against the receipt into the works of an impure ingredient; the care with which the materials are dried, coated, and prepared before their combination, and the precision in packing the powder so that it shall be delivered to the consumer in the perfect condition in which it leaves the factory, are some of the details which go to make the perfect "Royal."

Are not the same means employed by other manufacturers? They are not. There have been a great many imitations of the Royal, but no equals. Pure materials are not employed, care is not taken in their preparation and combination, while in the great majority of baking powders alum is added to give them strength, while cheapening their cost.

No alum, phosphates, unwholesome or doubtful substances are used in the Royal, and it costs more to manufacture than any other brand.

The great popularity and general use of the Royal Baking Powder attest its superiority.

Success is generally deserved.

Scores of brands of baking powders have been placed upon the market since Royal was introduced. Most of these have died; none have achieved a general success, while the Royal has increased in popularity until its sale is general in every city, town, and hamlet in the country. Nothing but the superior quality of the Royal Baking Powder could have effected this.

Corroborative of the foregoing are the official tests. These have been made without prejudice, by entirely unbiased officers, have been elaborate, exhaustive, and should be conclusive. Prof. Tucker, of Albany, whose thorough and scientific work in examining articles of food for the State of New York is well known, says it is "a baking powder unequalled for purity, strength, and wholesomeness;" while the United States Government investigation, recently made under the authority of Congress, shows the Royal to be a cream-of-tartar baking powder superior to all others in purity, wholesomeness, and leavening strength.

The day has come for a rigid discrimination in the purchase of baking powders by the housekeeper.

Health and economy demand the use of that brand ascertained absolutely pure and wholesome and of greatest strength.

Those who have tested all thoroughly, use "Royal" only. If you are not using it, the facts here given should induce you to give it a trial.

No other Article of Human Food has ever received such emphatic commendation for purity, strength, and wholesomeness, from the most eminent authorities, as the Royal Baking Powder.

No other article used in the domestic economy of the household has so many enthusiastic friends among the housekeepers of America.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 WALL ST., N. Y.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXI.—No. 4.] CHICAGO, JANUARY 24, 1895. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Mrs Ursula D Hertick 1029 15th St. Moline

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

"As well might a carpenter expect to build a house without hammer and saw, as a white-ribbon worker to be efficient without reading the National and state organs of the W. C. T. U." We might write columns on the value of THE UNION SIGNAL to the working force of our great organization, but these words of an Ohio white-ribboner expresses it in a nutshell. We must build "together" if we would build well. To erect a building "fitly framed together," a building for "an habitation of God," such as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union would stand for, we must work not only with zeal but with knowledge. Our work is in the highest sense coöperative, and in order to secure the most effective effort every worker must be in touch at the closest range possible with other workers and with the whole. It is only through the National and World's organ that this vital touch can be felt. THE UNION SIGNAL is not only an indispensable tool for the W. C. T. U. woman, but it is one of the living stones which form an integral part of the building itself, for does it not represent the head and heart of that growing body to which "we all belong"? Its Official Communications, its Corresponding Secretary's and Treasurer's columns, its Publisher's Notes, its News from the Field, and its new Local Union department, to say nothing of other features, contain matters of the highest importance and interest to every woman who would be a truly helpful worker in the W. C. T. U. The Ohio state union has declared that no woman is eligible to office who does not read THE UNION SIGNAL, the W. C. T. U. state paper and the Annual Minutes. The Crusade state set us temperance women an example twenty-two years ago which we were not slow to follow. It now sets us another which we truly hope will be followed by other states with like alacrity.

The biography of Madam Willard. Price $1.50.

The Daily Chronicle, the most progressive and important of the London dailies, in reviewing the English reprint of Miss Willard's autobiography, entitled "My Happy Half-Century," makes the following charming allusion to Madam Willard: "So bewitchingly human and guilelessly good is that mother, as seen through the eyes of her daughter, that it is difficult to refrain from quoting page after page lighted by that sweet and gracious presence, which is certainly one of the most 'taking' presentments of what Gœthe calls 'The eternal feminine in modern literature.' The tender courage and unselfishness, the high-minded strength of character and charm of womanly tact, cannot be portrayed in any extract."

THE TIME IS SHORT.

Only two more weeks to work for the Polyglot Petition! Send all signatures to Mrs. Rebecca C. Shuman, 2130 Sherman Ave., Evanston, Ill.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

South Dakota's senate has favored a constitutional convention.

The Hawaiian government has overcome a revolt of royalists.

A bill creating a state board of arbitration has been presented in the Illinois legislature.

M. Casimir-Perier, president of France, has resigned, and the Senate has elected M. Felix Faure.

Governor Morrill, of Kansas, in his address, especially desires the stamping out of lotteries and gambling.

The Indian National Congress urges reduction in civil and military expenditures as a remedy for India's financial distress.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET'S story, "A Debt of Honor," which closes in this number of THE UNION SIGNAL, is published also in England by the Sunday Magazine.

ALL those desiring copies of Miss Willard's address must hereafter send for the Annual Minutes in which it is printed, the supply of pamphlets containing the address alone having been exhausted.

THE doors of another college, which for half a century have swung back for "men only," now stand hospitably open to women, the trustees of Beloit College having voted to admit women to college classes after this school year. The news was hailed with enthusiasm by the students. Thus woman's cause—which is man's also—goes marching on.

NEBRASKA Republicans gave a banquet at the state capital, on the night of the inauguration, at which intoxicating liquor was conspicuous by its absence. The reason for this unprecedented action was that John M. Thurston, the guest of honor and prospective United States Senator, wired he would attend only on condition there should be no wine. We can imagine the dismay of the liquor politicians, but knowing their man they submitted with as good grace as possible. All honor to John M. Thurston! Though not a Prohibitionist he is a "clean" man, and was at one time Grand Chief Templar of the I. O. G. T. of Nebraska.

THE report of the Lexow committee, signed by all of its members except one, has been submitted to the New York senate. It deals exhaustively with election fraud developments and states that these have been brought about by a combination of Tammany and the police force. It reviews the testimony relative to collusion with gamblers, thieves, policy men, professional bondsmen, etc., which testimony, it says, "conclusively establishes an indictment against the police department of the city of New York as a whole." It acknowledges the valuable aid rendered by Dr. Parkhurst and the City Vigilance League, expresses the belief that further disclosures regarding the purchase of appointments are to follow, and recommends among other things a continuance of the committee of investigation. The remedy suggested is the entire separation of the police from political influence. The divorce of police and politics is no doubt a step in the right direction, but another very necessary step is the reformation of that scapegoat "politics." As long as government stands in its present relation to the saloon a corrupt political power will shed its baleful influence into every department, of government, and investigating committees will always find plenty to do.

MISS WILLARD writes us in a private letter: "I have been thinking what name we ought to give to our promoted comrade, Mary T. Lathrap, and as I did so the motto of THE UNION SIGNAL flashed through my mind, 'Thou hast given a banner to them that fear thee: that it may be displayed because of the truth.' It seems to me she was our standard-bearer; she lifted our banner high, but she was also our Miriam who, timbrel in hand, sounded a pure, sweet and lofty keynote for the song of the home in these closing years of the century."

LADY HENRY SOMERSET will soon leave Boston, and after speaking at the presentation of the Polyglot Petition to the United States government in Washington (February 15), and at the National Women's Council in that city, she will go to Canada in response to the invitation of white-ribboners, and will visit some of the principal cities in the interest of the W. C. T. U. She will sail from New York about March 6, and will preside at a great meeting to be held at Exeter Hall, London, in the interest of the anti-opium campaign now being conducted by the British Women's Temperance Association. Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard have been in New York for several days, where they spoke in Carnegie Hall for the white ribbon women of that city, also in Poughkeepsie and at Vassar College.

THE W. C. T. U. of Colorado have petitioned the legislature of that state to elect no candidate to the United States Senate whose private character is not above reproach. The resolution, introduced by a Populist member, precipitated an attack upon the women from Republican quarters which has stirred up men and women of all parties. Senator Felker is the mouthpiece of the "anti-woman" faction, and in seconding the nomination of Senator Wolcott, the objectionable candidate, took occasion to denounce the W. C. T. U. with great bitterness as "an adjunct of the Populist party." Those representatives (?) of the people of Colorado who declare that the character of their candidate for senatorial honors is "high, grave and correct"; those who "point to him as standing on the highest pinnacle of nobility and honor" and who imagine that the course pursued by them will serve as a check upon the W. C. T. U., are evidently not familiar with the history and character of that organization. It is just such "checks" as these which arouse them to more vigorous and aggressive effort.

THE uses and abuses of the jury system is a subject to which the attention, not only of Chicago, but of the public generally, has been pointedly called by a recent sensational episode in a railroad damage suit in the United States District Court. The judge, it seems—as is not unusual with judges—undertook to interpret not only the law but the facts in the case, and instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant. These instructions being ignored and a verdict rendered for heavy damages against the railroad company, the judge ordered the jurors to retire and bring in a verdict in accordance with his own views. Eleven of the men complied under protest. One man, however, Juror Clayton, remained firm, and rather than stultify his conscience in this matter, suffered arrest and the risk of imprisonment for contempt of court, making himself the hero of the hour. Judge Seaman found a way of getting out of the embarrassing situation without loss of judicial dignity by expressing his respect for the conscientious stand taken by the juror and consenting to nonsuit the case, with the understanding that this should have the legal effect of a verdict rendered under the direction of the court. We have been wont to regard trial by jury as one of the bulwarks of freedom and justice, but it is evident that improvement is needed in the system somewhere. Is it judge or jury, or both, that needs reforming?

COMRADES TWO.

BY MARY T. LATHRAP.

[Written after the death of Mrs. Downs and Miss Ames, and published in THE UNION SIGNAL.]

We stood in an eloquent silence,
These holiest days,
When thoughts of the Christ have been woven
In sweetest of lays;
We came where the years were dividing
The new and the old,
And pausing 'twixt grave-heap and garland,
We counted the gold
Of sands that for joy or for sorrow
Move on where awaiteth the morrow
With story untold.

All songs have seemed far in the stillness,
Like strain of a lute
That trembles alone o'er the waters
When voices are mute;
But years that divide do not move us
To sharpness of pain,
So little they seem with their burden
Of losses and gain
When souls have come near the immortals,
And treading the edge of life's portals,
Been thrilled with their strain.

We heard in the circle of silence,
The falling of tears,
Have scented the fragrance of roses
Love brought to a bier;
Have listened while low, tender voices
Half under their breath,
Were speaking of farewells and partings—
And talking of death.
But out from a glory supernal
There thrilled a great voice,—"Life eternal
I give them," it saith.

One life was a sheaf at its ripeness
Of goldenest grain,
Its wealth had the glory of sunlight,
And sobbing of rain;
Ah! who shall dispute with the Master
For whom it was grown,
That now in its day of completeness
He gathers His own?
Or who, to earth's duty and sadness
Would call the great soul from the gladness
That heaven makes known?

One life was a flower prophetic,
Aglow with the June;
Why tarried it not for the fruitage,
But faded so soon?
Ah! who shall declare in what region
Should come to its best
The soul that so utterly loving
Is utterly blest?
Or who, in these days of bereaving,
Would break by a sob of our grieving
Ineffable rest?

Ah, comrades! we stand in the silence,
Homesick for a day.
But how can our anguish be bitter?
We follow that way.
Let us lift up our hearts, our beloved,
Love on as of yore;
Who knows but in stress of the battle
They haste to the fore?
"Then onward, ye brave," to the duty;
Not far, with the King in His beauty,
We greet them once more.

A DEBT OF HONOR.

III.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

The fire burned low and the room grew darker; the solitary candle shed a weird, uncertain light, and the current of the young man's thought seemed to stagnate as though it could make no further way. The large double door at the extreme end of the room was at this moment thrown open as if a stream of guests was about to invade his solitude. An old man with a gray head, dressed in evening clothes, advanced alone, and in a low, clear voice said: "Dinner is on the table, sir." The master thus addressed looked up; he had suddenly reached the end of the long avenue of thought down which he had wandered; he had but dreamed as he traveled, for reality was here once more with its usual retinue of everyday occurrences.

He rose slowly, and stretching his shapely limbs, walked across the library out into the paneled gallery, in which a light was dimly burning, into the dining-room, where full-length family portraits covered the dark walls. In the center of the room was a little table; on it a bright lamp glowed, a tablecloth was spread and tempting dishes stood ranged with careful art; it seemed like an oasis in the midst of a desert of gloom. Wearily he fell into the chair and unfolded a napkin, and mechanically put the little wire-twisted bunch of flowers into his buttonhole; he hardly heeded the care that had placed it there, it was an action so natural to him, an incident so common; it was much like taking up the spoon to eat his soup.

The old servant bent across him to remove the dish-cover, and then stood waiting while he ladled out the steaming consomme. "Sherry, sir?" he murmured, as though nothing could disturb the routine of such duty; and, indeed, if the clouds were gathering that heralded the Judgment, he would as imperturbably have asked the same question. Silently the old gray-headed man stood behind the younger man's chair, watching him with a sort of wistful respect. The stillness was oppressive; an ormolu clock, of the time of the Empire, ticked on the mantel-shelf—the very sound was solemn, as though each swinging of the pendulum was speaking of a finality soon to be reached. By and by, when the fruit was placed on the table, the young man pushed his plate away, and looking round, held out his hand to the old servant and said:

"Well, Hayler, old man, it's the last time in the dear old place. I've brought it on myself," he continued, as his voice trembled a little, "but I am so sorry for you. I want to know what you will do. Have you made any plans?"

The gray head bent over the straight back of the oak chair, perhaps to hide the tears that rained down the wrinkled cheeks.

"Never mind me, Master Jack, I have a little. I shall not want anything here very long; but, oh, sir, it breaks my heart to think that you must go out of the old home where you was born, and where your father and mother lived—the best lady and gentleman a servant could ever wait on—and you so loved and just like your papa, in ways and figure. I can't bear it. I beg pardon, sir," said the old voice, trying to steady its broken speech, but if I don't take too great a liberty—there is something I would like to say. I have been a servant here all my life; I commenced as a boy, and then riz to odd man, and then footman when your father first succeeded, and last, butler, which I've been now twenty years in your family, and all I ever earned I earned from them. So now, sir, if it's not a liberty, I would ask you to use this for what you'll want, when you goes out to-morrow. I know to a gentleman like you it's a poor little sum, but it's all I can do, sir, and you're heartily welcome to it. God bless you, Master Jack."

The young man could not speak as the withered hand tremblingly placed an envelope on the table, but bending his head, he laid it on his folded arms and broke into sobs. The faithful man had gone—home with its familiar scenes was fading—the good old life was slipping swiftly away. Could it be true that to-morrow the auctioneer's hammer would sound in the very hall where he had stood by his father's side the day he was twenty-one, the day he had promised the cheering tenants to try and walk in his father's footsteps, and his voice had quivered when he saw the tears rain down his mother's face? All gone—the house would be empty and silent—the familiar objects would stand in the dealers' shops, for already gentlemen in showy scarf-pins and large noses were arriving at the village inn, and he had, himself, pronounced the sentence of banishment.

Mechanically he took the envelope and broke the seal—five hundred and fifty pounds in notes, and five pounds in gold. He stood up with the money in his hand: forty-eight years of service had earned that sum, which, as he had measured wealth but a short time since, would have seemed so paltry. Patient, saving toil through long winter days and sunny summer weather; a lifetime represented in those crisp bank notes—"Poor old chap, good old boy," he thought, "how true, and honest, and upright your life has been;" and then, in contrast rose up before him his own quarter of a century with pleasure, change and happiness his only desire—not one hour's serious work or lofty aim—a wasted record of unworthy years. He looked critically upon himself, meting out the same relentless judgment he had hitherto accorded only to others.

Was it possible that this was his own history, so vulgar in its outlook, so low in its aspirations, so barren in its result—a bankrupt ruined by gambling debts; the historic lands, held for centuries by his forefathers, sold to pay a greasy bookmaker; wasted upon a race, which, after all, was a foregone conclusion, part of a system of lies and dishonesty, and now it was all too late. Disgrace—dishonor—it had come—and he stood a ruined man; aimless, hopeless and alone. Night may be always darkest before dawn, but it is poor consolation to repeat this proverb to the watcher. In life the darkest moment sometimes also heralds light, and the soul, travailing in anguish, is born unconsciously into life.

Pushing back his chair the young man knelt by the table; he had not knelt for years, and prayer was not to him familiar language; but the cry of the human is the outreach of the burdened heart to God. He formulated no words, only as he bent his head over the little bits of paper, a great resolve grew in his heart that he would lead an honest life and be able some day to look into his father's face when they met up yonder, and kiss the dear, white hand that seemed, even then, to rest upon his head.

"Good-bye, old man," he said, in the gray morning, when he stood with his hands on the old butler's shoulders, "don't think I can't understand all you wanted to do for me, though I can't take your money; by God's help I mean to lead an honest life. Some day you shall see, dear old boy, that I shall be worthy of your faithful friendship." And he meant every word he said.

Boston, Mass.

A PROHIBITIONIST'S TRIBUTE.

BY A. A. HOPKINS.

A voice is stilled forevermore to earthly ears that has thrilled hundreds of thousands of hearts, has carried conviction of right and truth to a great host of men and women, and has stirred with the most powerful emotion a great multitude all over this land.

A heart beats no longer that was warm with the utmost tenderness of a woman, that was strong with more than the strength of a man, that was faithfully loyal to its friends and supremely loyal to its God.

True hands are folded and forever at rest, which were ever swift to do the work of humanity, to lift up those fallen by the way, to assist in any service which meant for man or woman a better, nobler life.

A great brain is forevermore at peace, which often wearied with its profound study of social problems, which formulated great truths with a logical clearness none other could surpass and which crowned with royal intellect a royal womanhood.

A great soul has left its earthly tabernacle, and has risen hence to God's Uplands—a soul which grasped as few souls ever do the deepest meanings of nature and God, and entered even here into the sacred mysteries of things divine, and grew sublimely conscious of a Divine Presence and Power, through a spiritual apprehension which only great souls know.

Mary Torrens Lathrap is dead. By her death the cause of temperance and truth suffers loss irreparable; the church loses one of its most gifted and fruitful servants; the platform will miss its foremost intellectual figure, and the field of literature must mourn a genuine poet, whose voice of song would have been farther heard if wrong and evil in the land had not so loudly called her to assail them with tongue and pen.

She became well known in Michigan as far back as 1878, when she secured the passage of a bill by the legislature establishing at Adrian a girls' home; her reputation extended soon after this to other states; and for the last decade of her activities the temperance forces of the whole country knew her, desired her assistance, trusted in her leadership, and were proud of her matchless abilities. After Miss Willard, no woman of all the white ribbon host was honored by those women as was she; and the Prohibition party exalted no man above her in those honors which were not limited by sex. By all the reform leaders of both sexes her political insight was recognized, her statesmanlike understanding of governmental principles was appreciated, her wise counsel was sought.

With a delightful home, where all the home circle were proud of her, Mrs. Lathrap spent her best years in travel and service for the cause she loved. In the winter of 1886 she went South for the first time, and lectured a number of weeks in that region where woman was not then considered quite in place on the platform or in the pulpit; and more than any other of her sex she overcame the prejudice against woman as a public teacher, which long ruled in the South. The impression she made at Nashville, later, when the National W. C. T. U. held its Convention there, will not be forgotten by any who were present. She appeared to the culture and intellect of that city, then, as a revelation.

She never courted popularity. She could not say sweet and gracious things merely that she should be liked for saying them. She was more apt to be blunt, and sometimes to offend, in her private intercourse. And often in her public speech she arraigned men, and women too, as before the Judgment seat; yet was she often, also, when on the platform, perhaps oftener in the pulpit, the very embodiment of pathos, with a tenderness in her voice, and a touching gentleness in her thought, that no listener could resist.

They did not always know her well, who knew her long. But to know her as some did, was to feel a profounder reverence for self-abnegation and splendor of intellect and of soul, a stronger faith in the final triumph of truth; a more devoted loyalty to right, a prouder admiration for womanhood, and a greater hope for humanity and the world.

New York City.

A MANY-SIDED WOMAN.

BY MRS. A. S. BENJAMIN.

On the 27th day of January, 1875, I attended two funerals. In the morning, after a brief service in the home, a fair girl wife was laid to her last rest. The minister spoke of her triumphant death, said words of comfort to the bereaved ones, we sang a farewell hymn, the last tender words of prayer were uttered, and it was over. In the afternoon from the M. E. church in Portland, was borne another, a man in the noontide of his days. The sermon was by the Rev. J. W. Reed, now in glory, from the text, "Prepare to meet thy God." A more intensely thrilling and impressive discourse I have never listened to. After the slow-moving procession was under way toward the cemetery, many still lingered in the church, greeting one another in the low tones befitting the occasion. Glancing toward the front I saw standing just back of the chancel-rail, in front of the pulpit, a woman with a Bible in her hand, quietly waiting. After a few moments she moved restlessly back and forth, and then said: "Will the people take their seats? It is long past the hour for our meeting." The woman was Mary T. Lathrap, and I then looked on her face for the first time. Twenty days less than twenty years after I looked on her face for the last time.

Mrs. Lathrap remained in Portland four weeks, and through her instrumentality many souls were saved. From that time to this our duties have brought us often and much together, first in foreign missionary work then, a little later, in the white-ribbon work. Not only in our own state have we been associated, but for fourteen consecutive years we were both members of the National Convention. At the last meeting held in Cleveland her place was vacant, but in spirit she was still with us. Not only greeting, but tokens of love and sympathy were interchanged. What of the years to come? Even now, I seem to hear her remembered voice uttering the words of that wonderful prayer in our last state convention, "Comfort those who stay." It was the close of our memorial service. "Comfort those who stay." Only our Father can comfort those who stay.

It was not until Saturday evening that the sad messages reached me; then they came three in number, and as I read one after the other and realized that she was, indeed, gone forever, my poor heart cried out and would not be comforted. Even now I know not what to say nor how to say it. I look back over the twenty years that we have walked and talked together, and as memory recalls the glad days and the sad days, the anxious thought, and oft-times the weary planning, the days and days in which we have worked in the many conventions, and the rare moments or hours in which just we two counseled and communed together, as I recall the hopes and fears and prayers and smiles and tears, I find I have no words for an hour like this.

Until the last two years I never once thought of her going home first. I never even dreamed that her splendid physical system would yield to such pain and such disease. I had expected long life, and even larger liberty, and still greater power, for the matchless woman whose voice is now forever stilled.

I need not say that Mary T. Lathrap was a many-sided woman. She could deal with hard, cold facts in a most uncompromising manner, or she could fashion a poem so touching and so tender as to stir the pathos of the coldest nature. She could make the most logical argument, or preach the most convincing sermon, or make the most appealing prayer, and then turn to the wise consideration of the smallest details necessary to the quicker or slower success of our work, and with infinite patience, or marked impatience, wait for reluctant feet, and unsteady hands, and vacillating hearts, always herself pressing toward the goal, and by forceful illustration and unanswerable argument striving to move those who could not see the right, or seeing it, had not the courage to do it. Her sturdy, vigorous thought has given vitality to the weak, and force to the inactive, and has contributed to the moral progress of the world.

All she has been to the white-ribboners we do not even yet know. We do know she has been adviser, counselor, co-worker and friend—one to whom leaders looked for leadership, and on whose words victory often waited. Her place and her fame she honestly earned, and those who understood her least will join with us who know her best in saying a grand, heroic soul has passed into eternal morning.

Portland, Mich.

FRATERNITY OF REFORMS.

III.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

THE ANTI-GAMBLING WAR.

Relatively, no vice has of late years grown faster in the United States than gambling, a department to fight which I see has been proposed in the W. C. T. U.

There is encouragement in the progress made in the anti-lottery section of this war. Cromwell and Washington saw no harm in lotteries. Gambling to the glory of God in church lotteries has but recently ceased in Protestant churches, and they are still permitted in some, though not all, of the Roman Catholic bishoprics.

At the beginning of the recent fight with the Louisiana lottery, I was a visitor in the home of a congressman in the southwest, himself a church officer and his household mostly church members. But when I referred to the lottery in uncomplimentary terms, his wife said in frank surprise, "I don't see any harm in the lottery. All of us ladies buy the tickets, and the cook and the coachman. My husband is a banker and he thinks no one should buy lottery tickets except with his own money." That fairly represented the sentiment of many church-going people of that section—and of other sections too—so recently as 1890.

Another incident is needed to illustrate the attitude of the pulpit of that section at that time. Being in New Orleans to speak on Sabbath reform I incidentally said, by way of introduction, in an address to the union preachers' meeting: "Louisiana has had two blots on its escutcheon—one the absence of a Sabbath law, the other the presence of a lottery law. The first blot you have already removed, and in three years you will have an opportunity to remove the other." I said no more of the lottery, but at the end of my half hour speech I found the preachers had forgotten everything else.

One prominent pastor rebuked me for going beyond my special theme. Others attempted to defend themselves, though unaccused, for not preaching against the lottery. The chief pastor of the city said "he did not believe in preaching on particular sins." But when the war with the lottery began he preached on its "particular" infamy so severely that he was accused of "inciting to lawless methods for its overthrow." The other pastors also forgot their theories about ignoring sins that were in politics and fought bravely for the rescue of the eighth commandment from the Philistines.

A letter I had written after that preachers' meeting to the Postmaster-General, which he referred to the Attorney-General, had led the latter to cause the introduction into Congress of the anti-lottery law, and so the fighting was forced at Washington as well as in Louisiana. Despite twenty-eight millions of profits per year, which the lottery had available for bribery, let pessimists note that the legislators in Congress and the people in Louisiana both voted right. Congress, at its last session, dimmed the glory of its former vote by failing to pass in the House the Hoar Anti-Lottery bill which had passed the Senate, and was intended to drive the fugitive Louisiana lottery from its new home in Florida, to which it had been admitted by an almost unobserved, but culpable, change of state laws.

That law, too feeble in its penalties, but of some value, is still pending in the House, and will pass if the people say it must by a sufficient snowstorm of letters and petitions. The placing of a warning against using the mails for lottery letters in the sixty thousand postoffices of our land has been a valuable bit of anti-gambling tract distribution, and it is probable that lotteries have been perpetually exiled as branded lepers from respectable society. The ignorant still pour in their contributions on a large scale by the aid of the lottery robber's pals, the express companies, which should be taken severely in hand by Congress.

But it is questionable if gambling has on the whole decreased. Lottery robberies have probably diminished, but race-track gambling has greatly increased, and, what is worse, the legalizing of it also. In 1894 race-track gambling was legalized in such conservative eastern states as Maryland and Rhode Island, as it had been before in other states and in the District of Columbia, in the latter case with the signature of a Christian President, as I am directly informed. New Jersey by statute, New York by constitution, in that same year repealed race-track gambling laws, but it remains to be seen whether these repeals will be enforced.

We can hardly expect a permanent decrease of gambling until children in the schools are taught the fundamental principles of honest exchange—the meaning of "value received" in notes. Only "a fair exchange is no robbery." Except in case of a gift from one who has a right to give it to one who has a right to receive it, it is a dishonest transaction when one gets something for nothing. Betting is the brother of burglary, whether the bet be on the pace of an animal or the future price of a vegetable; on a game, or, worst of all, on an election.

There is food for thought in the case of a reformed race-track gambler of the South, who, finding his old propensity strong despite his church membership, gladly discovered that he could gratify it by betting on the price of cotton in the Cotton Exchange without being churched.

Clifton Springs, N. Y.

THE WOMAN OF THE FUTURE.

BY ELLEN HAYES.

[Given in response to a toast at the banquet in honor of Lady Henry Somerset in Boston, January 3.]

Five minutes to speak about the "Woman of the Future," when that woman is going to have all the future in which to write us up and talk us over! For without doubt she will toast us at her banquets, and I believe she will say that we were a tolerably fair kind of woman, considering that we lived away back in that dark nineteenth century. I believe also that her highest praises will be given to those of us who were wise enough and far-sighted enough to follow such leaders as our distinguished guest and our great Chieftain. The woman of the future is not going to forget Lady Henry Somerset and Frances Willard.

May I, in these few minutes, call your attention to two or three things which the coming woman will in all probability know and do and be?

First, then, she will know that alcohol and happiness do not go together. Thanks to Dr. Justus Gaule and others, we are now beginning to understand that science declares that they do not, and in so declaring ranges itself on the side of woman. The woman of the future will know enough to range herself on the side of science; and she will teach the fact of this conflict between alcohol and happiness with something of the emphasis and positiveness that we to-day give only to mathematics and chemistry and matters of that sort. Thus the teacher of the future will belong ex officio to what will then be known as the very ancient and noble Order of the White Ribbon.

Again, the new woman is going to have a new dress. This follows as a corollary to the larger proposition that she will have a respect for her physical self, which we scarcely dream of entertaining. To-day we are ready to deny the parallelogram law of forces in our anxiety to maintain that what we wear is well enough. We worship at the altars of Conventionality and Fashion, but these gods do not intend to give us help. One of them is asleep and the other one mocks when our destruction cometh.

But for the woman of that far-off to-morrow, we need have no solicitude; she will so far surpass us in powers and resources, in love of independence and in sense of beauty and sense of duty, that she will find a way to put an end to this servile subjection to a mode of dress that is a destroyer of liberty and strength and beauty.

Lastly, besides the white ribbon the woman of the future will wear the yellow ribbon. To-day a government presumes to contradict that law of thought known as the Law of Contradiction, which declares that a thing cannot both be and not be at one and the same time. We are asked to believe that a government can be of and for and by the people, and not of and for and by the people. In Faneuil Halls of their own the women who are to come after us will ask how this may be, and their question will have to be answered.

If ever a true Declaration of Independence is written, we shall know it by this token: It will teach that only they are equal who want to be free. The woman of our visions and prophecies is already heralded in our own longings for physical and political and intellectual freedom. But the approach to the ideal is always asymptotic. It is not to-morrow or in the next century that our dearest, our most daring hopes will find fulfillment; yet even in these days, darkened by so many crudities and injustices and false reasonings, there are signs for him who can read of

> One God, one law, one element,
> And one far-off divine event,
> To which the whole creation moves.

If there be any goal in righteousness to which the whole creation moves through processes of evolution, it is that of a fair chance for every human being by virtue of being human. One of the divinest of events, and let us hope not one of the farthest off, will be the coming to woman of all the prerogatives that inhere in personality, love and loveliness, yes, and more than these, liberty and power, and knowledge which is liberty and power. The woman of the future will know the truth and the truth will make her free.

Wellesley, Mass.

ALL that you and I are responsible for is doing our duty. Ours is the seeding, and God alone beholds the end of what is sown. How do we know how much good we accomplish when we do any good thing or utter any truth in love? Eternity will be full of surprises to us. Wait and see.—Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

CORRESPONDENCE

MATTERS OF CURRENT INTEREST IN THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—By order of President Cleveland the famous painting by Watts, called "Love and Life," has been hung for exhibition in the Corcoran Gallery of Art. You will remember that the picture was seen at the World's Fair at Chicago and afterward was presented to the government with the expectation that it would be placed in the White House. The picture consists of two figures, one male and one female, both entirely nude. At Mrs. Cleveland's request it was not hung on the walls of the presidential mansion, and where it will eventually rest is not known. It was stored in the cellar of the White House sometime before it was unpacked, and was the subject of adverse criticism.

The president of the District W. C. T. U., Mrs. Griffith, was interviewed by newspaper reporters who wished to know how she and her constituency regarded the painting. They were assured that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is opposed to the unseemly exposure of the human form even though it bears the name of high art. We feel it is a triumph for good taste and decency that it is excluded from the presidential mansion. When I heard of the President's order I went to the Corcoran Gallery to look at the picture. It was hung in a good position but not attracting much attention. I dropped into a seat beside a lady who was leisurely regarding it and remarked that it was a pity the woman could not have been provided with at least a little raiment.

In reply the lady said that she supposed it should not be regarded as a woman but as an allegory. I asked an attendant if there was any printed description to enable an ignorant and unimaginative on-looker to understand the allegory. He said there was not, but that the male figure was Life, the other Love. Life is provided with two large wings as well as a pair of strong and bony legs, and has secured for himself a position upon a mass of rock. He tenderly reaches downward to assist the allegory to his own high level. She seems to sorely need his help being evidently dejected and downhearted. She is not only hollow chested, but she is entirely destitute of bowels of compassion, and her limbs are emaciated to the last degree. The impression conveyed was one of sadness and uncertainty. An unclothed couple toiling up a mass of rock! We can only speculate as to where they are going and what they try to teach. They are ours, however, as the massive frame bears a tablet inscribed, "A gift to the Nation."

The societies of Christian Endeavor of the various denominations in the District of Columbia have lately formed themselves into a closer relation preparatory to welcoming to Washington the C. E. convention in 1896. This is called the "District Christian Endeavor Union." Among the committees appointed is one on "Good Citizenship," whose chairman, Judge A. S. Taylor, is a brother-in-law of the W. C. T. U. and abreast of the times in good words and works. This committee has just put out a circular declaring their principles. You will be glad to know that they take high ground for prohibition, because good government in the capital city would mean much for the whole nation. Let us quote:

"We maintain that the saloon is the greatest enemy of the day against church and home and state; that it is the greatest evil, whether considered from a moral, a physical, a political, a social, or a financial standpoint. As such, we shall fight it. We shall work, not for a high license or low license or local option, but for the total extermination of the saloon and the abolition from our land of the traffic in intoxicating beverages. We shall endeavor to secure legislation that will lead toward this; to remove temptations from the tempted and give them encouragement and help; and to so educate the youth that they will look upon alcohol as a poison to both soul and body, and upon the liquor traffic with such horror and aversion that, with increasing years, they will work for its destruction."

At a public meeting held by the W. C. T. U. of the District, after the return of our delegates from the National Convention, Mrs. Shelton, the District W. C. T. U. secretary, told us, among other things, of the resolution of the National to investigate the restaurants in the capitol buildings of various states. She announced that before the close of winter we might expect a deputation to investigate the restaurant in the United States capitol building.

It now looks as though the Senate is not to wait for such a deputation, but will itself investigate the Senate restaurant. Early in this month a resolution to that effect was offered by Mr. Allen, of Nebraska, and placed on the calendar.

A new periodical has made its appearance. It is a small four-page newspaper, and is "devoted to the interest of those who are legally engaged in the liquor traffic, and seeks to protect them from the attacks of those who oppose them, be they individuals or organizations." We are glad to feel that it has become necessary for "the trade" to do something for its "protection," as it shows the activity of the temperance forces is a menace to them.

The W. C. T. U. is pushing its various lines of work with a will, and the Anti-Saloon League is laying plans of deep significance. The saloon must go.

Washington, D. C. MRS. CLINTON SMITH.

LONDON LETTER.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—We are looking forward with much pleasure to our National and the World's meetings to be held in London next June, and hope to welcome on the occasion a large contingent of American white-ribboners.

I wish we had a Temple of our own for you to view; next best to the pleasure of possessing a woman's Temple in London is the feeling of satisfaction we British women feel in your "House Beautiful." We have in some measure shared your joy and sympathized with you in the anxieties such an undertaking must bring to the women, whose splendid effort and courageous faith have made such a building possible.

Although many of us at the National headquarters are personally unknown to each other, we hope next June to meet face to face, and hear from you more about the grand work you are doing in America and to let you see how successful the departmental system has been by which the work is carried on in England. We owe much to you in America for establishing and successfully carrying out the policy which leaves nothing undone in the forward march of the temperance crusade. You will be glad to know that in England the year just closed has been a noteworthy one for woman. Everywhere there are indications of the new idea having "got around." Whether they like it or not, people have now got to reckon with the "new woman."

In literature there has been quite an epidemic of views, and Punch's Almanac, always an accurate sign of the times, depicts with striking absurdity in a cartoon, "A Ladies' Parliament." Although there is much to forgive in the willful exaggeration of the figures of the women, the idea is sound, and is born of the spirit of the time.

In educational centers women everywhere are "holding their own." An announcement was made recently that Miss Higgins, a graduate in music, is the first woman entitled to write herself "Mus. Bac.," of the London University, as the degree is by no means easy to obtain. A thorough knowledge of the scientific theory of sound is required, as well as a high standard of excellence in music.

Under the Parish Councils Act a decided advance has been made; women are no longer citizens in theory but in fact. They are now recognized both as electors and elected; they are entitled to sit on parish councils, district councils, boards of guardians, school boards and London vestries. The strongest posts are yet to be taken; when town councils, county councils, and the House of Commons are open to representative women chosen by their constituents, the "wider hope for humanity will be nearer fulfillment."

The returns which are at present to hand show that large numbers of our British women have succeeded in the elections for poor law guardians.

Two notable women have just left us. Miss Frances Mary Buss died on Christmas eve. She was the principal of the North London School for Girls; during her life she had always taken a leading part in every movement which affected the interests, or led to the development of the profession of teaching.

At the dawn of the new year Christina Rossetti, who was chief of women poets, in the spirituality and beauty of her poems, passed home in the gleam of the new year's morn.

I remember your Chieftain saying at one of our large London meetings, "The average woman is the key to the position." Miss Willard is right; we feel here that much tact, unsparing patience and generous forbearance must be meted out wherever the average woman stands hesitating in the line of the Crusaders and thinks that a pledge signing contest is a surer mark for assault on the enemy's drink fortress than prohibitive legislation and the woman's ballot. Patience! The average woman will not long stand in doubt.

We are all for the pledge signing; one of our National officers herself has just sent out seven thousand pledge books for signatures. Meanwhile it is ours to help voice the battle-cry of the Crusade from nation to nation the world around, during this new year in the love, hope and faith of our beloved white-ribbon cause.

With best and affectionate wishes from your comrade,

MARY A. WARD POOLE.

24 Memorial Hall, Farringdon St., London.

OLIVE SCHREINER'S DREAM REALIZED.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—On the last day of 1894, at the home of Mr. C. Miller Avery and Mrs. Rachel Foster Avery, at Somerton, Pa., a thoroughly equal rights marriage ceremony was performed. The couple were Mr. Raymond W. Smith, of Trenton, and Miss Eleanor E. Shaw, and the Rev. Anna Howard Shaw performed the ceremony for her niece.

But the young people certainly took matters, at least in part, into their own hands. Somewhat after the Friends' idea they married each other by their own spoken words, leaving to the officiating pastor the part of declaring them married, and also of speaking some earnestly beautiful words upon the real marriage of hearts and souls which must, she said, have preceded the outward ceremony in order to have it of vital worth.

The phrasing of their mutual vow which was of their own arranging, was perhaps more radical than the participants themselves realized; it was exactly the same for both. "I, Eleanor, take thee, Raymond, to be my husband. I promise to be to thee a loving and faithful wife so long as thou art worthy of the trust which I this day place in thee, and with this ring I seal my vow." Each wears a golden circlet, exchanged as the above words show.

Such marriages as these, and the assumption of such entirely mutual obligations, presage the better time for both men and women, when the tyranny of sex shall have become a thing of the past, and when Olive Schreiner's dream shall be a reality, where she writes: "I dreamed I saw a land. And on the hills walked brave women and brave men hand in hand. And they looked into each other's eyes and were not afraid."

RACHEL FOSTER AVERY.

Somerton, Philadelphia.

RESUBMISSION IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—The resubmission fight is on in the South Dakota legislature. Two bills have already been introduced in the House to repeal our prohibitory law, Article 24 of the Constitution. The House is represented by Mrs. Emma A. Cranmer, president state W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Anna Simmonds, the vice-president of the W. C. T. U. and president of the South Dakota Equal Suffrage Association.

The resubmission forces are led by Moses Kaufman, a brewer from Sioux Falls. The resubmissionists claim the House by a small majority, but the anti-resubmissionists do not concede this, and are very sure of a majority in favor of prohibition in the Senate. It promises to be one of the hottest contests ever known in the state.

The past few days have been among the darkest South Dakota has experienced, because of the embezzlement by W. W. Taylor, the retiring state treasurer, of over $300,000 of state funds. A reward of $2,000 is offered by the state for his capture. It is a severe blow, and leaves the state bankrupt. Although we may suffer financially, we trust we may take no backward step morally.

May the great army of white-ribboners earnestly pray for South Dakota at this time.

Yours for the battle, with Christ for our leader,

Pierre, S. D. EMMA A. CRANMER.

[Since the receipt of the above, the bill for the resubmission of prohibition has passed the lower house by a vote of 49 to 31.—ED.]

W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS IN PARIS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"What a joy to see these letters here in the midst of the gay city," said a friend who had been well-nigh all over the world. "I have seen them in Japan, and other far-away lands, but I scarcely expected to encounter them in Paris."

"And why not? Should it really be true what so many answer when you speak of temperance reform in France: 'It is impossible here; we cannot take the water; all the doctors tell us so.'"

Dear friends, would you have a practical proof to deny this statement, here it is: For about twenty-two years Miss de Broen and her workers have never had any beverage but water on their table, yet they have kept strong and well, in the midst of much toil and harassing scenes of poverty and sorrow. But the general feeling of the people is against abstinence, though sorely needed here, as everywhere. And the little band of temperance workers which we represent have more difficulties and objections to encounter than our sisters in America are, perhaps, aware of. Yet we are pressing on. Our headquarters, in a very central part of the city, have a temperance refreshment room attached, where all our white-ribbon literature is kept on the reading tables.

Will white-ribboners keep this address in mind, and not forget to look in at our Paris office, 205 Rue St. Honoré, near the Louvre and the Tuileries Gardens? They will always find a welcome and, a rarity in Paris, a most excellent cup of tea. CORRESPONDENT.

DEAR COMRADES:—If you could look over my shoulder this afternoon upon the pile of letters that lies before me, your amusement, if not amazement, at the questions leveled at Mother Experience would match my own. May I not say without danger of "hurting" any one that it will be impossible for the two columns devoted to the Local Union (mark the meaning of its name) to be at once a dictionary, a medical guide, a housekeeper's directory, a treasury of cooking recipes, a depository for complaints, a court of arbitration, a catalogue of books and newspapers, and an aid to the Local Unions! For believe me, faithful sisters, all this and more has been asked of this department in the few weeks of its life!

Temperance questions, W. C. T. U. questions, are heartily welcomed, and when any one makes a "hit" in the way of recruit-winning, public meetings, awakened interest, let it come hither "in a nutshell" speedily.

---

An entertainment was given by a church this last Christmas, and large programs printed, part of the space upon them being devoted to

ADVERTISEMENTS,

A wide-awake white-ribboner read these advertisements and found out that five of them were of places which sold liquor. Our sister was a member of this church and also organist. She refused to play at the entertainment, and I am glad to record her own written testimony: "A legitimate business I would not object to advertising with us, but when my church deliberately embraced the liquor traffic and held up before the world on these programs a business that would take from a man health, wealth, happiness and the hope of heaven, I must and do solemnly protest."

The protestor is being persecuted for the stand taken, but it is surely for "righteousness' sake." Let us all read advertisements on church programs, etc., and be as brave as she. (I notice upon a later glance at this same program the advertisement of an alcohol cure. How to take the disease and how to both cure it exploited by this enterprising (!) church.)

---

I know a

FLOWER MISSION DEPARTMENT

in a local union that is doing no work because "there are no flowers." The superintendent has surely failed to notice that this work has far outgrown the limits of its name. Such work as the following is legitimately pursued in this department: Distribution of Bibles and clothing, canned fruit, provisions, scrapbooks for children in hospitals; coal purchased; sick people given buggy rides; half hours sewing for the needy; ditto readings to the sick—in short, as you see your brother has need shed about him the fragrance of a kind deed.

---

Why may not that oldest son of yours head the movement in his school or college?

ANTI-CIGARETTE LEAGUE

---

A local president suggested a good thought for pushing the

POLYGLOT PETITION.

Ask each member to present it, or have it presented at her church, with a call for signatures. A little table with pens and ink, placed near the exit, in charge of two young women, will facilitate securing signatures that could be obtained in no other way.

---

What do you think of local unions imposing a slight fine upon members every time they are seen without their white ribbons?

---

"What do you W. C. T. U. folks do, anyway?" is a reiterated question from outsiders not thoroughly conversant with our activities. Such testimonies as the following from the department of answer the question:

PRISON AND JAIL WORK

"A young girl, employed by a milliner, was arrested for theft. She acknowledged her guilt and was committed to the county jail to await the action of the grand jury two months later; meanwhile she was taken ill with chills and fever. In her trouble the committee of the W. C. T. U. on jail work found her. Mother hearts and white ribbon energies set to work. Bail was secured, the girl removed to the hospital and later, to avert a penitentiary sentence, the milliner was persuaded not to appear as witness when the case was called. As the goods had been restored this was not difficult of accomplishment and the case was consequently dismissed. The girl was watched over and after her recovery a home found for her among some Friends, where she served efficiently and faithfully."

---

"What is the BEST W. C. T. U. SONG BOOK?"

asks some one. The W. T. P. A. catalogue devotes two pages to itemizing this line of supplies. Send for one.

---

"Can you give a list of books on the

FINANCIAL QUESTIONS

of the day, that it would be well for us to read as a union?"

Good newspapers and current magazines form the best sources of information, if the students wish to keep pace with the fluctuations of the financial outlook.

How would it be to keep a Financial Question Scrapbook and clip from these, dating your clippings, and about once a month reading the month's clippings as a whole? Converse with business men who hold different views, and from these and your reading draw your own conclusions. W. C. T. U. women are, as a rule, newspaper students, and no insignificant share of their influence is due to this. They know whereof they speak.

---

STATE PAPERS.

Since publishing the list of state papers we have received the addition of The Virginia Call, Miss Lona Kern, editor, Winchester, Va.

Two corrections are as follows:

Texas White Ribbon, Mrs. Ada C. Rew, editor, Waco, Texas.

Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. Bulletin, Mrs. Anna M. Hammer, editor; Henrietta H. Forrest, publisher.

---

A sermonette sent to Mother Experience by Mrs. A. W. Phillips, Kingsville, embodies some recommendations we may do well to "inwardly digest." It is entitled

GOSPEL METHODS.

"A part of our work in which we find it difficult to apply Gospel methods is in raising money. So far as we can see there is no work in the world more important just now than that of wiping out the liquor traffic. This cannot be done without money. Our own purses are not over full and we must devise ways of opening the purses of other people. A number of us agree to pay something into the grocer's hands and then with what we receive in exchange from him will serve a supper at our next social to all who are willing to pay (for what they do not really need) in order 'to help on the great temperance reform.' The evening passes pleasantly and after the people have left we stay to put the hall in order and hear the treasurer's report. The proceeds are larger than we anticipated and we leave the room well pleased with our effort. On our way home, however, we find ourselves estimating the cost of the provisions furnished and are surprised to find that it almost exactly corresponds with the proceeds of the entertainment. For some reason we begin to realize that we are very tired and there are heartaches too, over unpleasant things that occurred, but the fact that the W. C. T. U. treasury is not empty cheers us. We bid our friends good-night and hasten home to tell John what a success the evening's work has been. He is pleased because we are, but mentally wonders if it would be quite safe to trust the ballot in the hands of women, at least if it would result in their managing the finances of the country.

"So universal has this method of raising money become that we take it for granted no other way is to be advocated, but I am sure a goodly number of persons in every Christian organization are saying to themselves at least, if not to others, 'There must be a better way.' A better way? Certainly, there is. God has not shut us up to methods that do violence to common sense. He has given us the Gospel method than which none can be better.

"'On the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as the Lord hath prospered him.' Perhaps some one is saying, that is the way for Christians to give, but how shall we obtain financial help from those who are not followers of Christ? It is an incontrovertible fact, that if church members would give a tenth of their income to the Lord, there would be ample funds for all departments of Christian work. Those who are outside the church understand this fact, and when we ask them for money they interpret it to mean that Christians are withholding their offerings."

---

I raised my head from my writing after that last period, and looking out upon a smoky landscape—chimney-and roof-scape, rather—noticed a plump birdie perched on the fire escape. My thoughts went wandering at once, but they soon came back with this olive leaf of comfort: whatever the hurry and the noise of an "unpopular reform," whatever the smoke of conflicting opinions and fierce oppositions, "the birds of peace" may come and sing in the hearts of the faithful in His service. Else how could they serve? MOTHER EXPERIENCE.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And He (Jesus) said to the woman, Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace.—Luke 7:50.

Beyond the shadows long and dim,
Upon the future's golden rim,
We lay the stone and raise the hymn
Prophetic, grand,
Abide in strength, O jewelled stone!
For thou art set for God and Home,
For feet that stumble, hearts that mourn,
In all the land.
Abide in strength before the gates
Where God's eternal promise waits.
We give thee to thy mission sweet,
With lavish wealth of love complete,
Nor count the sums.
Who knows but on this altar place
May shine the glory of His face,
When Jesus comes!

She who wrote these beautiful lines on the occasion of the laying of the corner-stone of the Temple, November 1, 1890, our poet laureate, our own loved, brilliant and gifted Mary T. Lathrap, will thrill us no more with her sweet, poetic legends. She has seen "the glory of His face" and passed "beyond the shadows long and dim," into the unclouded light of the heavenly morning.

Shall we not engrave high, in letters of gold, in Willard Hall, the Westminster Abbey of our great reform, the name and tell of the matchless logic and eloquence of Michigan's great leader, so that coming generations may know who the women were who laid the great foundation stones of the temperance reform? We are sure that the white-ribboners of Michigan will count it a great privilege to thus honor the name and deeds of their loved and lost leader. It would be a most fitting tribute if each union in the state of Michigan would send one dollar toward such a memorial.

***

Those who loved and honored the name of Mary A. Woodbridge, and their name is legion, are determined that she shall have a fitting memorial in the "House Beautiful." For this purpose Mrs. Ellen M. Domett, San Francisco, Cal., the W. C. T. U. of Hot Springs, South Dakota, and Miss Sara G. Johnson, Chicago, have each contributed one dollar.

***

Miss Frances E. Willard sends for the Temple column the following. She says, "It illustrates the value of the efforts we are making":

"The story of the founding of a temple for their own local use by the W. C. T. U. of Mount Vernon, N. Y., is a case in point. They had heard of our enterprise in building the great Temple. A young man under the influence of liquor had been burnt to death in a barn in their village on a winter's night, and they resolved that another building should take its place wherein the temperance gospel should be free to all. They began by meeting in the parlor of a loyal-hearted member of their union, and working on a crazy quilt whose hundreds of subdivisions were collected from women all over the nation—this quilt has been on exhibition at some of our National Conventions and finally came into my hands as a gift and will ultimately belong to the National W. C. T. U., with everything else that I possess. From this beginning they went forward using all ingenious devices to increase their fund until I was recently informed that they now owned the building practically almost free from debt; but it has taken them ten years to do this."

***

The South Boston, Mass., W. C. T. U., send through Mrs. L. E. Hebberd $35, to apply on their pledge. Mrs. Joseph Charles sends $36.25, the second payment on the pledge of the Newport News, Va., W. C. T. U. Mrs. F. I. Crawford, state treasurer of the W. C. T. U. of Nevada, sends $50 on pledge for a state tablet. This makes $94 they have paid. Fifteen dollars and fifty cents is sent by Mrs. A. A. Rowe, on pledge from the Winchester, Mass., W. C. T. U. The Garden City, Kansas, union, through Mrs. E. L. Stephenson, sends $15 on their $100 pledge. Mrs. L. A. Harrison sends $5 on a $100 pledge of the Central W. C. T. U., of Tacoma, Washington. Miss F. A. Olmsted, Burlington, Vt., sends $25 on a hundred dollar pledge for the Burlington union. This is to be added to $5 sent personally by Miss Olmsted. By an oversight this donation was not mentioned before. The Delhi, N. Y., W. C. T. U., send $50 which completes their hundred dollar pledge.

***

The Temple Wheel will be in readiness to send to our friends by the time this paper reaches them. Let everybody who wishes well to the Temple send for one. We consider the Wheel the best device that has ever been invented to raise money for any philanthropic undertaking. We are having it copyrighted, so as to protect our invention.

***

Our friends must not think because we give so much prominence to the Temple Wheel that we have given up our old stand-by—the mite-box. Not at all. As we said in our last issue, to all who send a two-cent stamp for a mite-box for 1895, and place in it what amounts to a penny a day during the year, we will give one of our beautiful Temple souvenir tea-spoons. Those who took boxes for 1894 must send the contents by the first of February if they expect to get a spoon. All who have old boxes and intend refilling them, should notify us, so as to have their names entered for the spoon. All letters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

LEAN HARD.

Child of my love, lean hard,
And let Me feel the pressure of thy care.
I know thy burden, child. I shaped it;
Poised it in Mine own hand; made no proportion
In its weight to thine unaided strength;
For even as I laid it on, I said,
"I shall be near, and while she leans on Me,
This burden shall be Mine, not hers;
So shall I keep My child within the circling arms
Of My own love." Here lay it down, nor fear
To impose it on a shoulder which upholds
The government of worlds. Yet closer come;
Thou art not near enough; I would embrace thy care
So I might feel My child reposing on My breast.
Thou lovest Me? I knew it. Doubt not then;
But, loving Me, lean hard.

—Selected.

IDA'S WARNING.

BY NAOMI.

"Ida must have a tonic; not medicine, but something to build her up and give her strength." As Dr. Morton spoke the troubled expression on Mrs. Snow's face gave place to one of hope.

"I am thankful to hear you say that. I have been so anxious all these weeks; it seems almost too good to be true that the disease is really conquered at last. What tonic do you recommend?"

"I have a preparation of my own. It is composed of the very best extract of beef, with a little good wine added. I am a strict temperance man," he continued in an apologetic tone, "and in doubtful cases, where there might be danger of an acquired or inherited appetite, I should never recommend this. I am always very particular about the matter. In this case, however, there is not the slightest danger, and I know of nothing that would do her as much good."

This apology from the doctor may have been due to the fact that being a "strict temperance man," his conscience was somewhat troubled. Or, he may have detected on Mrs. Snow's face a shadow of the resistance she felt at the thought of surrendering in the least to that against which she had so long fought as a W. C. T. U. worker. Whatever her doubts may have been, they were quickly silenced by the thought that her old and trusted physician knew better than she.

But although she uttered no word, grave questions arose in the mother's heart as day after day went by and she noted the effect of the tonic. Ida evidently liked the mixture, and gradually increased the amount, always draining the last drop from the cup. Had not Dr. Morton said there was not the slightest danger, and that it was the best thing she could use? Surely he had been right, for she was gaining strength rapidly, and would "soon be herself again"; then there would be no need of the tonic.

Ida, however, a gay, light-hearted girl of twenty, was haunted by no such scruples. If she gave the matter a moment's thought, it was because the tonic was pleasanter to take than her medicine had been. She never stopped to consider why she liked it so well. As she grew stronger, by the advice of her mother the amount was gradually diminished until it was a mere taste; but to this she fondly clung, because she "liked it so well." Not once did she suspect the thrill of apprehension her careless words sent through her mother's heart, who now longed for the summer days when they might leave the city.

They chose a quiet resort among the mountains, and the pure and bright sunshine proved to be all the tonic the girl needed.

As the summer days slipped by the memory of old anxieties grew dim, and Mrs. Snow laughed at her foolish fears. They returned to their home with happy plans for the future.

After they returned to the city and had settled into the old ways of living, Ida found herself turning to the accustomed place for a bottle which was not there and was conscious of disappointment.

One autumn day, soon after their return, Ida and her mother went out to do some shopping. Thoroughly alive to the influences of the beautiful season, the girl chatted with her mother of the many changes they saw, never dreaming that amid so much beauty could be lurking an evil ready to strike at her very heart. As they reached the crowded part of the city, Ida was pushed by the throng quite away from her mother, and close to the wall of a large building. She hurried forward and a door swung open near by. What was it that seemed to strike her in the face so that she reeled? Looking up she recognized the screened windows of a saloon and the odor of liquor so overcame her that it seemed as if she must push forward to that open door. But the hurrying crowd carried her forward until she found herself again at her mother's side. She felt thankful for the crowded street which prevented her worried and distracted appearance from being noticed by her mother.

They visited one counter after another, examining goods and discussing prices and quality. Her mother at length noticed that Ida did not act naturally.

"The crowd has completely tired you out, Ida; you are actually pale! You certainly are not able to do more shopping and I think we had better take a car home."

Ida feebly objected, but felt greatly relieved that her mother insisted. In the quiet of her own room she recalled the event of the afternoon that had so disturbed her. What did it mean? She shrank from harboring the thought which all that long afternoon had confronted her. It could not be possible that she, like some "common" people she had heard of, had become a slave to an evil appetite. It was not possible that the demon of strong drink could gain a hold on her.

For several days she fought her battle over and over. Then she resolved to face the subject squarely and put it to a test. She shrank from it with an unnamed dread, but her strong will enabled her to do what she knew would settle the question once for all.

Again with her mother she took her way over the same route, through the busy streets of the city.

She passed the saloon, breathed the heavy air as it rushed from the swinging door and recognized the delirious longing that swept over her. With steady step she kept her place by her mother's side, but it was to her as if she were walking from day into the blackest midnight. Little did her mother think as she walked by her side that day that her child had traveled the long and difficult road from girlhood to womanhood—from the innocent trustfulness of youth to a maturity of purpose, that set her face as a flint against this evil influence whose power she was now compelled to acknowledge. It was to be a battle fierce and long.

This is no sketch from fancy, but a chapter from real life. The sequel has never been written. Years have passed, but their record who could keep? Some of their awfulness is briefly hinted at in Ida's own words: "Never do I smell the fumes of liquor without being strongly tempted."

She has not yielded. She has battled bravely and well. To-day from a high position of trust and honor her Christian character speaks to all of the nobility of her life.

Ann Arbor, Mich.

THE KINDERGARTEN AS RELATED TO MOTHERHOOD.

BY FANNY C. PARDEE.

In these days of societies without number, organized and conducted for the advancement and enlargement of woman's sphere, The Great Society of Motherhood, though without formal organization, stands first as the most ancient, the most supreme, as to numbers and responsibility. It needs no corps of titled offices to interpret its universal laws, which lie slumbering in the hearts of womankind, before she rises to this special calling of motherhood, and in most instances needs only the opportunity to enable her to reflect the dignity, beauty, and possibilities that may be the outcome of mother-love.

It has been a sweet privilege to us who have been mothers, to have folded to our hearts for the first time, the little life so wonderfully interwoven with our own, and it has made us mindful of the supreme love of God—of His high estimate of motherhood, as it appeals to us through the sweet young mother, who held in her arms as her own dear baby, the Christ Child.

Almost through the valley of the shadow of death are we led to this blessing of blessings. The physical anguish over, and the helpless baby in our arms, then begins the spiritual travail, the anxieties of which must last as long as motherhood exists, "first in our arms—then on our hearts." In vain do we ponder upon the possibilities of our child's nature for the year or more of its mysterious silence, with no language but a smile or tear expressing physical wants. How ardently we desire to be wise enough to determine the results of combined inherited qualities (as a chemist might determine his chemical compounds), inherited qualities from both father and mother; what will be the result of one upon the other? To what extent has the mother's mental state during the nine months of its parental life affected this helpless baby? Only the succeeding months and years will unfold the secret. Yet we know that while this little life is building, it must, because of its delicacy, be wrought upon by the varied conditions of the mother's mind and body. Oft-times, many adverse circumstances in the mother's life leave little cause for great rejoicing, or loving welcome, or even his divine right to be, to this little stranger so dependent upon our tenderest love and care. Yet how necessary that she should rejoice deep in her heart for the life that now is and be glad for his coming.

Many young mothers have felt unprepared for the responsibilities of motherhood. Indeed, the first baby, though bringing much love, is a most profound experience to the average woman—chiefly for the reason that it has come upon her in a vague way as nothing in the life or education of the girl previously bore upon this, and consequently small ills often assume tragic proportions.

The day soon comes when the "king on his throne" desires entertainment; he soon lets us know that he has legs and arms as well as stomach, which must have employment; his teeth are speedily ready for their part, and the busy hands ply their powers in all directions. The question now rises with the mother, shall he be allowed to use them according to his own will? Is the mother wise enough to interpret these activities and use them to his development? The cradle days are none too soon to commence moral training, as Froebel himself recognizes. Thus it may become the mother's greatest joy to employ every means to interpret the various activities, which she must learn to recognize as but the expressions of the various instincts of his mind.

Who but the mother can see the inherited qualities appearing which will need diligent application of Froebel's law of opposites, by supplying lacking virtues, making motherhood the science Froebel designed it to be, saying as he did that "the destiny of the nation lies with the women." "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," can rule the world for right if she rocks it aright.

Woman's sphere is not narrow if she has this privilege. What memory is sweeter than faithful mother-love? And so this great work lies before us,—the understanding of our child; it calls for our best endeavor; we must be to him all he believes us to be, philosopher, poet, physician, what not! We must give of science, history, music and art, to the children of to-day; indeed, the very best within us must be for them. The instincts which we have discovered can be trained upward or downward, and one is hardly excusable in these days of opportunity for ignorance regarding the development of the human mind.

However, the great lack of most home life for our little ones is the lack of a proper place and materials to carry out these creative instincts. Too often the mother, worried and tried by many cares, has no leisure to devote to "play," and to her the kindergarten offers its fostering influences to her neglected child, where he finds every means for his complete development. But even if the mother have the ability and time to train him herself it is better to place him in the kindergarten. He needs companionship, that important factor in his moral development. He must learn to respect the wills and rights of others, and the going away from her each day gently prepares him for larger sacrifices.

He does not enter the kindergarten as part of the collective whole, but as one dear child plant, to be gently held and led in love. Here will be noted special needs, according to the simple lines of philosophy from Froebel's plan of gifts. He is not merely entertained by folding and cutting colored papers and put through assigned programs of "gifts"; these things are the externals, the suggestive materials used to train his powers leading through continuity of purpose to high moral, physical and spiritual results though appealing to his little heart and imagination for the most part in a symbolical way.

The kindergarten is a full plan of education, the very germ of the seed of knowledge. Its name, child-garden, implies Froebel's idea of using natural phenomena in imparting knowledge. All of this responds continually to the child's innermost being, developing symmetrically the activities of body, mind and soul.

Give then to the kindergartner—standing next to parents in influence—heartfelt support and appreciation, as hers is often a double duty, not only to educate the child, but also to open the eyes of the parents. Her task is always an exhausting one, but to her richly rewarded by love reflected into her own heart.

Pittsburg, Pa.

WE are those that march through a wilderness, and each one carries some burden on his back—of toil, of sorrow, of sin; and in this caravan some go grumbling and complaining all their life because of the burden they are bearing, and some try to get their burden off slyly on to another's shoulders, and some bear bravely their own burden, and march uncomplainingly on; but some—the noblest of them all are they who stand erect, bearing their own burdens, then creep up behind others burdened like themselves, and put their shoulders beneath the burden of their fellows, and lift it, lightening the load. Blessed are they who know how to so bear their own burdens as joyfully to bear the burdens of others also!—Lyman Abbott, D. D.

MOUSIE'S TEMPTATION.

BY CLARA G. WOOD.

Mousie looked out one very dark night,
And said, "Now I shall be out of sight,
So into the cupboard I'll creep, creep, creep,
While all the folks are fast asleep.

"I'm hungry; this cake looks nice, I think
I'll take a nibble, then quick as a wink
Will whisk up there to the shelf above,
And give that bottle a good hard shove.

"For at dinner to-day I heard it was fine;
The something in it that they called wine.
If I push it hard it will fall and break,
Then down I'll jump, and my fill I'll take."

Poor little fellow! his plan worked ill
To be sure, as he said, he had his fill,
But how did he know it would fly to his head
And make him seem soon like a mousie dead.

He hadn't been taught as you have, my dear,
Never to taste the wine and the beer,
Very soon he felt sleepy, his head ached and then,
Our mouse was as helpless as some foolish men.

His enemy, pussy, came prowling that night,
Right into the pantry where slept our young sprite.
She stared in surprise, and thought him a dunce
Said, "Now you're caught napping," and ate him at once.

Now, little white-ribboners, a word here to you,
And to all who to temperance are true;
If a mouse should be listening when you and I dine,
We'll be sure that he never hears us praising wine.

Mt. Freedom, N. J.

STUBBORN THINGS.

"Have one?" and Fred Weston held toward his friend a package of cigarettes, having just placed one between his own lips.

"No, sir! I thank you."

"Well, you needn't look so disgusted. Aren't you ever going to smoke?"

"Not if I can help it; the game isn't worth the candle."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I mean that there isn't fun enough in it to pay me for putting myself on a level with the pigs, or for taking the chance of ruining my health or making a drunkard of myself. Besides all that, too, money is worth more for some other things than for burning up, and men that smoke often burn up hundreds and thousands of dollars in that way during their lives."

"But they enjoy doing it, don't they?"

"Perhaps so; but if they never began to smoke they wouldn't miss it, and they'd be ever so much better off in every way."

"Supposing they would, don't you put it a little too strong when you compare smokers to pigs?"

"Not a bit of it, and I'll tell you why. In the first place, I'll never forget a lesson I had when I was a little chap, and had just put on my first pair of pants. They were light colored, and, of course, I was very proud of them. One day when I was playing in the street, I came suddenly round a corner, just in time to run into a man and to get a mouthful of tobacco-juice right on the front of my trousers. I think I was about the maddest little fellow you ever saw. I could not speak a word.

"The gentleman, who was well dressed and very polite, tried to tell me how sorry he was, and even offered me a silver dollar. But I wouldn't listen to him, and turned and ran home as fast as I could.

"As soon as I found mother I pointed to the ugly yellow stain, and began to cry so hard that it was a long time before I could become quiet enough to tell her how it came there. Then she improved the opportunity to give me my first lesson on tobacco. She told me how men became stained through and through, from the inside to the outside, with the miserable stuff, until sometimes when they take hot steam baths the dirty color comes right through their skins upon the sheet which is wrapped around them, and I tell you, Fred, by the time she was through I was glad the stain was on my pants instead of inside of me.

"Then, only a day or two ago I saw in one of the papers something about a little Italian boy who was brought before a justice in New York city as a young tramp. The officer charged him with picking up cigar stumps from the streets and gutters, and showed the boy's basket half full of the stumps, water soaked and covered with mud.

"When the justice asked the boy what he intended doing with them he said, 'Oh, I sell them to a man for ten cents a pound to be used in making cigarettes.' And the article went on to state that in the large cities there are a great many cigar-butt grubbers as they are called, boys and girls who scour the streets in search of half burned cigars, which are dried and then sold.

"Then these cigarettes have opium and other poisonous things put into them, and sometimes the wrappers are made of the filthy scrapings of rag-pickers bleached white with arsenic.

"Now, Fred, I'd like to know if cigarette smokers don't get their pleasure out of the filth of the streets just as truly as the pigs do."

"Mercy, Bob! Don't say any more; you've spoiled my appetite. I'll send it back where perhaps it came from," and Fred tossed his cigarette far into the street. "But surely cigars are not so bad."

"Perhaps not in some ways, but I shall always remember something I saw when in San Francisco. Uncle Will and I used to sometimes stop and watch the Chinamen making cigars. It was fun to see them working so swiftly and handily, but I noticed that they finished every one by rolling the end quickly in their mouths; and ever since then when I see a man drawing away on his cigar with such a relish, I wonder if his is the first mouth it has been in."

"H'm! I don't think I hanker after any; but what has tobacco got to do with making a man a drunkard?"

"It creates a burning or thirst which water does not satisfy, and before a man hardly knows it he is taking something stronger. Only the other day I heard a gentleman telling mother that out of his family, in which there were four brothers, the only one who had not drunk to excess was the one who never began to smoke. He himself had been nearly ruined by liquor, and said that from his own experience he was sure that the use of tobacco was one of Satan's opening wedges to drunkenness."

"Well, Bob, I don't see but what you make out a pretty clear case; you'd be a first-rate temperance lecturer."

"It isn't what I think, Fred, that makes the case a strong one; it's the facts that tell, and you know facts are stubborn things."—Selected.

DOES ALCOHOL WARM US?

A patient was arguing with his doctor on the necessity of his taking a stimulant; he urged that he was weak and needed it. Said he: "But, doctor, I must have some kind of a stimulant; I am cold and it warms me." "Precisely," came the doctor's crusty answer, "see here: this stick is cold," taking up a stick of wood from the box beside the hearth, and tossing it into the fire. "Now it is warm, but is the stick benefited?" The sick man watched the wood first send out little puffs of smoke, and then burst into a flame and replied: "Of course not; it is burning itself." "And so are you when you warm yourself with alcohol; you are literally burning up the delicate tissues of your stomach and brain."—Selected.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

380.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of fourteen letters and am a noted temperance and equal suffrage lecturer who is affectionately called "Our Deborah."

My 1, 14, 7, 10 is ardor in the pursuit of anything.
My 5, 9, 13, 2 is a trimming for ladies' wear.
My 14, 12, 8 is a part of civilization.
My 3, 4, 6 is a color. M. GRAY FOX.

381.

NAME PUZZLE.

One-half of France; one-fourth of Nora; three-fourths of Cesarea; four-sevenths of William; one-fourth of Anna; one-sixth of Rachel; one-fourth of Dora.

EDNA K. MUMFORD.

382.

BEHEADINGS.

1. Behead a small stream and leave a bird.
2. Behead an earthen vessel and leave a stone.
3. Behead earth and leave not square.
4. Behead a timepiece and leave a fastening.

EARLE MONTGOMERY.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED JANUARY 3.

371. Theobald Mathew.
372. New York.
373. 1. A-lice, l-ice. 2. He-n. 3. H-ear-t. 4. F-ee-t, eel. 5. H-o-e.

Correct answers: Grace Wait; Edith H. Day; Manora M. Walker; Minnie Schmidt; Edith Kleine.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I mean boys especially this week for what I have to say concerns them particularly. The girls will be interested to hear about it too, though.

I don't suppose that any of our Cozy Cornerers smoke cigarettes, but I am pretty sure that you all know boys who do. And I also haven't a doubt that you would all like to do something to help these boys to give up a bad habit that will only do them harm.

How can you do this? One way is by helping to form Anti-Cigarette Leagues among the boys in your school. These leagues are for boys who don't smoke as well as for those who have given it up. Your teacher will be glad to make some remarks about the bad effects of cigarette smoking and to read the following pledge to the school:

THE PLEDGE.

We, the undersigned pupils of —— School No. —, do hereby pledge ourselves, upon honor:

First. From this date to abstain from smoking cigarettes in any form until we reach the age of twenty-one years.

Second. To use all influence that we possess to induce all public school boys and other boys of our acquaintance to give up and abstain from smoking cigarettes until such boys shall attain the age of twenty-one years.

Third. By giving the pledge, hereby made and by signing our names to the above we constitute ourselves members of the Anti-Cigarette Smoking League of —— School No. —, of the ——

Then the pledgers meet and form their society, using if they please a constitution like this one:

CONSTITUTION OF THE ANTI-CIGARETTE LEAGUE OF——

SCHOOL NO. ——, OF THE——

Article I. This association shall be known as the Anti-Cigarette League of —— School No. —, of the——

Art. II. The object of the association shall be suppression of the habit of cigarette smoking among the public school boys and other boys of ———, by personal example and any other proper means.

Art. III. The officers of the association shall be a president, vice-president and secretary. There shall also be a council of ten members, all of whom shall be pupils attending the said public school.

Art. IV. The officers of the association shall be elected annually by ballot on the first Friday after the opening of school in September of each year.

Art. V. The council shall consist of the ten boys, members of the league, who receive the largest number of votes cast by the pupils of the school at the annual election.

Art. VI. Every member of the league shall be entitled to wear the button or insignia designating membership so long as he maintains good faith and keeps his agreement to abstain from smoking cigarettes.

Art. VII. If any member violates his agreement and is reported to the council, upon proof that there has been such violation the name of such offender shall be dropped from the rolls and he shall be required to surrender his button to the council.

Art. VIII. Any member who has been so dropped may, after six months, upon proof that is satisfactory to the council that he has not during such period smoked cigarettes, be reinstated in membership and have his decoration restored to him.

Art. IX. Any member found guilty of a second offense by the council shall no longer be eligible to membership while a member of the school.

Art. X. The decoration or badge shall become the property of the wearer unless deprived of it by act of the council as heretofore prescribed.

Art. XI. Elections and meetings shall not be held during school hours, and the principal of the school shall be present at all such meetings. A meeting of the league shall be held on the first of every month of the school year.

Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, 4119 Westminster Place, St. Louis, Mo., superintendent of narcotics for the National W. C. T. U., will send a badge to any boy who wants to form a league.

Now to work, boys, and let us hear of your success.

Yours for clear brains,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

My mamma was a charter member of the W. C. T. U. and I was the first girl baby born in the union, so the ladies presented me with a lovely W. C. T. U. badge, the first time my mamma took me to the union. I intend to wear it when a lady. I belong to the L. T. L. and will be ten years old my next birthday. I hope to be a temperance speaker when I am grown up.

Pomona, Cal. MARY ETHEL MCCOMAS.

Your story is very interesting, Mary. Study and prepare yourself from now on and the world will surely be better for your being born into it.

I wear the white ribbon. I knew the temperance lesson by heart in the last quarter. My brother read to me about Miss Willard when she was a little girl. One Sunday when she and her father and sister were going to get the cows, she stopped to whittle a stick. Her father said, "Frances, you know that I don't allow you to do your carpenter work on Sunday," and she said, "Father, can't I whittle if I won't make anything?" and about her riding the cow. LEAH BROWN.

Oklahoma City.

Didn't it seem queer to you that a great temperance leader was so like other girls and boys when she was little?

There are two new billiard halls in town. My mamma is a temperance woman. I am an L. T. L. boy. I am nine years old. I have to go to school. I have a little sister a year and one month old. WILTON RATCLIFF.

Vinita, I. T.

Just think of the thousands of uncared-for, cold urchins in the big cities this winter, Wilton. That will make you glad you have to go to school and have a good, temperance mother.

THE UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD, LL.D.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President. MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, London, Eng.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Chicago.
MME. LOUISE DEMOREST, New York City.
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MRS. E. B. INGALLS, St. Louis, Mo.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK ..... 1
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Comrades Two. By Mary T. Lathrap ..... 2
A Debt of Honor. III. By Lady Henry Somerset ..... 2
A Prohibitionist's Tribute. By A. A. Hopkins ..... 2
A Many-Sided Woman. By Mrs. A. S. Benjamin ..... 3
The Fraternity of Reforms. III. By Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts ..... 3
The Woman of the Future. By Ellen Hayes ..... 3
CORRESPONDENCE:
London Letter ..... 4
Matters of Current Interest in the National Capital ..... 4
Olive Schreiner's Dream Realized ..... 4
Resubmission in South Dakota ..... 4
LOCAL UNION ..... 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS ..... 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, Lean Hard ..... 6
Ida's Warning. By Naomi ..... 6
The Kindergarten as Related to Motherhood. By Fanny C. Pardee ..... 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Mousie's Temptation. By Clara G. Wood ..... 7
Stubborn Things—Does Alcohol Warm Us? ..... 7
Soft-Shelled Nuts ..... 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER ..... 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
The New Woman and the New Church ..... 8
Tobacco Must Go ..... 8
Legal Work ..... 8
An Exceptional Case ..... 9
THE WATCH TOWER ..... 9
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
North Dakota—Indiana—Georgia—New York—New Hampshire ..... 10, 11
News in a Nutshell ..... 11
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES ..... 12
TREASURER'S CORNER ..... 12
TEMPLE RECEIPTS ..... 13
The Polyglot Petition ..... 13
ORGANIZERS' CORNER ..... 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT ..... 14
OUR LIBRARY TABLE ..... 14
SIGNAL NOTES ..... 16

For the Lord is our defence: and the Holy One of Israel is our King.—Ps. 89:18.

THE NEW WOMAN AND THE NEW CHURCH.

The dedication, in Boston, of a Christian Science temple costing over two hundred thousand dollars, and for which the money was all paid in so that no debt had to be taken care of on dedication day, is a notable event. While we are not, and never have been, devotees of Christian Science, it becomes us as students of public questions not to ignore a movement which starting fifteen years ago has already gained to itself adherents in every part of the civilized world, for it is a significant fact that one cannot take up a daily paper in town or village—to say nothing of cities—without seeing notices of Christian Science meetings, and in most instances they are held at "headquarters."

We believe there are two reasons for this remarkable development, which has shown a vitality so unexpected. The first is that a revolt was inevitable from the crass materialism of the cruder science that had taken possession of man's minds, for as a wicked but witty writer has said, "If there were no God we should be obliged to invent one." There is something in the constitution of man that requires the religious sentiment as much as his lungs call for breath; indeed, the breath of his soul is a belief in God.

But when Christian Science arose, the thought of the world's scientific leaders had become materialistically "lopsided," and this condition can never long continue. There must be a righting-up of the mind as surely as of a ship when under stress of storm it is ready to capsize. The pendulum that has swung to one extreme will surely find the other. The religious sentiment in women is so strong that the revolt was headed by them; this was inevitable in the nature of the case. It began in the most intellectual city of the freest country in the world—that is to say, it sought the line of least resistance. Boston is emphatically the women's paradise, numerically, socially, indeed, every way. Here they have the largest individuality, the most recognition, the widest outlook. Mrs. Eddy we have never seen; her book has many a time been sent to us by interested friends and out of respect to them we have fairly broken our mental teeth over its granitic pebbles. That we could not understand it might be rather to the credit of the book than otherwise. On this subject we have no opinion to pronounce, but simply state the fact.

We do not, therefore, speak of the system it sets forth, either to praise or blame, but this much is true; the spirit of Christian Science ideas has caused an army of well meaning people to believe in God and the power of faith, who did not believe in them before. It has made a myriad of women more thoughtful and devout; it has brought a hopeful spirit into the homes of unnumbered invalids. The belief that "thoughts are things," that the invisible is the only real world, that we are here to be trained into harmony with the laws of God, and that what we are here determines where we shall be hereafter—all these ideas are Christian.

The chimes on the Christian Science temple in Boston played "All hail the power of Jesus' name," on the morning of the dedication. We did not attend, but we learn that the name of Christ is nowhere spoken with more reverence than it was during those services, and that He is set forth as the power of God for righteousness and the express image of God for love.

The second point in connection with this remarkable development is that whether consciously or unconsciously it is a revolt from the growing ecclesiasticism that causes the leaders of church movements to hold the reins more tightly than ever in their masculine hands and to use their utmost influence to hedge women away from being their equal counsellors in the house of God. The largest church in the United States—the Methodist—has taken away the power of any presiding elder to license women anywhere to preach. It has definitely declared, by the policy of exclusion, that they cannot be pastors, and is moving heaven and earth to keep them out of the General Conference. We mean that the leaders are thus engaged and very likely they think that they are doing God's service; but we believe that they are only emphasizing the development of women in independent religious organizations; a development which is to be unspeakably regretted.

It is surprising that at this o'clock of the century the greatest religious society in the world—one that has gained more strength from the work of women within its ranks than from any other single cause, should elect no woman on its central council. It is amazing that the Epworth League, with its knowledge of what Methodist women can accomplish, should place no woman on its board of management. We emphasize these two illustrations because they relate to societies of comparatively recent origin, and officered by young men of remarkable breadth and kindliness of nature. We can but wonder that the Evangelical Alliance, although older and more conservative, does not see what a power would come to it by inviting women to be among its officers. We are surprised that the National Temperance Society does not broaden out its policy to include women among its counsellors. Not to do this is, to our mind, unstatesmanlike; it is putting a premium upon new departures by women of the most earnest purpose and the most forceful personality. No method, and least of all a movement that seeks to bring peace on earth, good will to men through the regnancy of Christ and His gospel, can afford in these days to exclude women from any of its circles of power. It is a thousand pities that so many devout and spiritually minded women should be led into the fold of the Christian Scientist, the Theosophist and other forms of faith new at least to this continent, because they have not been warmly fellowshiped not merely as "hewers of wood and drawers of water," but as true helpmates and equal comrades in the great, beautiful and hallowed household of the church of God.

TOBACCO MUST GO.

When the daily newspapers take to publishing articles on the filthiness of tobacco chewing, articles which call attention to "our reprehensible national masculine habit" as found in what Dickens calls its "full bloom and glory" in our halls of Congress, we have reason to hope that the tobacco evil has reached its final stage and that the near future will witness a much-to-be-desired reform in this direction.

An observing writer in one of Missouri's Democratic dailies notes that the November elections were "hard on tobacco chewers." While this is to be regarded, as he says, merely as a coincidental fact, still white-ribboners—and all women who desire cleanly habits and cleanly surroundings at National headquarters—will be glad to know that "some of the worst tobacco chewers in the House and in the Senate are relegated to private life."

The congressional celebrities named will, we think hardly feel grateful for the manner in which the journal in question gives them honorable (?) mention as "high priests" of the tobacco chewing and spitting fraternity in the national capitol, nor will they be pleased—some of them—with the description of their personal appearance as devotees of the noxious and dirty "quid." The writer is especially severe on the free silver champion from his own state, and has no doubt that it was such men who inspired Charles Dickens' assault upon our national nastiness and caused him to designate Washington as the "headquarters of tobacco tinctured saliva."

The public spittoon is invariably one of the first of our "institutions" to attract the wondering notice of the visiting foreigner. But he soon discovers that this is not the worst feature attending the use of the weed a l' American. The crowning offensiveness of the tobacco fiend is the "alarming recklessness" with which he—to quote again the author of "American Notes"—"ejects the essence of his plug." To an onlooker the incessant spitting becomes a thrilling exhibition of "hit or miss," and as there is many a miss (indeed, some of our "representatives" scorn the spittoon and refuse altogether to make it an objective point) the necessity for new velvet carpets in our legislative halls—to be paid for by the people—is frequent. "It is such things as this," says one, "that make woman suffragists of retiring women who prefer the sanctity and refuge of a quiet home."

And then our city pavements! With what disgust and indignation does every cleanly, refined woman—and man—traverse the sidewalks of our business streets! "There is just one part of the municipal pie that I want to have a finger in," remarked one of these retiring women, as with raised skirts she picked her way through the "tobacco tinctured saliva" and other unnecessary filth of one of Chicago's down-town pavements, "and that is the street-cleaning department. Now doesn't that look like a man's housekeeping," she continued, with a grimace, pointing to a freshly deposited ejection of tobacco juice which had barely missed her own dainty garments. And so it goes. All these evils and discomforts are tending to impress upon an awakening public the fact that clean streets, clean public buildings and clean politics, as well as clean homes, can be best secured through coöperation.

It is truly a matter for congratulation that the current of public opinion is steadily setting against tobacco chewing and that the more civilized American is beginning to look upon the habit from the standpoint of our much-criticised English critic and to confess in his own strong language that the two odious practices of chewing and expectorating are "filthy, offensive and sickening—an exaggeration of nastiness which cannot be outdone."

We are truly rejoiced to note the growing agitation of the tobacco question by school authorities. The Michigan Teachers' Association, recently assembled at Lansing, took advanced ground in recommending that no person who used tobacco in any form should be employed to teach in the schools of that state. It also appointed a committee to urge the passage of a more stringent law regulating the sale of cigarettes.

In the evolution of the genus homo tobacco must, in the natural order of things, find its legitimate place in the economy of nature, which it certainly has not found yet. And to this end, and the time being ripe for it, we urge a still more vigorous crusade along this line. Let us, if necessary, "carry the war into Africa"—in other words into Congress.

LEGAL WORK.

One of our workers has well said that "if all our laws were known to all the people there would be no need of our franchise department." In other words, if there existed among the people, especially among women people, a more general knowledge of the laws they live under and are expected to obey, good citizens of both sexes would recognize the need of woman in government, and the ballot would be hers.

The greatest hindrance to-day to swifter progress along the line of woman's equipment for civic duties (and that means, we firmly believe, hindrance to the advancement of Christ's kingdom upon earth) is the woman who has "all the rights and all the protection she wants"—the woman whose vision is bounded by the horizon of her own distinctive personality. It is not that her impulses are radically wrong; she simply lacks growth. Her eyes have not been opened to that broader and clearer vision which comes to those who are "touched with the feeling of the infirmities" of others. The woman or the man who views the "issues of life" from the standpoint of the individual instead of from the higher standpoint of a whole humanity is not to be blamed but educated.

We do not blame the school-boy in the elementary grade because he does not grasp the principles of higher mathematics; but neither do we leave his education to chance. We coöperate with the natural law of evolution and proceed to systematically unfold the intellectual faculties. And so in the development of civic reform. If we would accelerate the process we must educate. We must set the thinking machinery of the people to going. And one of the most potent means of doing this is, as experience has shown, a knowledge of existing laws. Let the people generally become more familiar with good laws that need enforcing and with bad laws that need abolishing and we shall be making woman suffragists among both sexes with a rapidity that will astonish us.

With the opening of eyes will come the awakening of conscience. That there are men in our land who can legislate for the "regulation" of vice; that there are fathers who can deliberately make laws for an "age of consent," —even making that age as low as ten years—proves that while, as we believe, a majority of men would see all women adequately protected by law, the men who get into our legislatures—the men who "represent" us—are not safe protectors of womanhood, not safe protectors even of innocent childhood.

Knowing these things, every woman, whether her own home needs protection or not, must, if she possess a particle of that motherly instinct which is the "crown of womanhood," feel her heart going out to other homes, to other women's daughters, and she will discover that after all she does want the right to help and protect them.

Modern civil law may be a schoolmaster in more senses than one, and we hope that through our department of legislation some plan may be formulated by which a more thorough knowledge of it will be disseminated among the masses. It may not be practicable for all the people to know all the laws, but it is both practicable and desirable that we bring to the attention of more of the people some of the laws which touch them most closely in their social and industrial life.

This is a live work in which our legislative and franchise departments are both interested, as it comes under the "aim" of the legal department, and we would suggest that the superintendents of each state prepare a leaflet setting forth a summary of the laws of that state which may be of special interest to women, and by means of public meetings and through local unions and woman's clubs draw out discussion of them—make it a "fad," if you please, to thus study law.

AN EXCEPTIONAL CASE.

MANY of our readers have been surprised to learn that our two leaders, American and English, have recently addressed the strikers at Haverhill. The facts are these: Mrs. Amie Hicks was invited to visit Haverhill, where the shoe-stitchers, who are all women, and who number five hundred or more, had gone out on strike. She did so, and learned that the justice of this demonstration was evinced by the fact that out of seventeen ministers in the town all but two strongly sympathized with the strike; that the city council had passed a resolution in its favor, and had granted the use of the city hall to the strikers; that the public sentiment of the people and press was overwhelmingly with those who had taken this means to bring the injustice under which they suffered to the attention of the public, in the hope that their employers would make arrangements with them, or consonant with the principles of right. In consideration of these facts and through their interest in working women, who have never before been the leaders of a movement of this kind, Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset agreed to go to Haverhill and speak at a public meeting in the interests of the shoe-making women who had "come out." The special grievance of these women was that the firm, on account of whose conduct the strike was ordered, had made contracts with its employés whereby the firm was to have two weeks' notice before any one might leave, but was not itself obliged to give any notice whatever. The form of contract made involved the obligation of each man employed to leave a specified amount of his wages each week (we think it was two dollars) in the hands of the firm, and each woman was obliged to leave one dollar, until the total sum amounted for men to fifty dollars and for women to twenty-five dollars. If they left work before the end of the year they were obliged to forfeit these sums, but if they remained they received interest on the amount thus retained by the employer. By this means a firm employing six hundred hands would have a large amount of capital with which to work, and by the terms of the contract the employés were in a sense tied to the firm so that they could not leave without a great disadvantage to their financial condition. It is well known that fifty or twenty-five dollars means as much to a person who lives "from hand to mouth" as five hundred dollars does to the average well-to-do business firm. One of the firms involved in this disputation stated to a friend that "they had now got the working people just where they wanted them." It was this sense of being exploited, levied upon, preëmpted by the firm that caused the working people of Haverhill, the great shoe-manufacturing center, to feel that if they did not make a demonstration this method of contract now adopted by one or two firms only would become general and would spread to other towns and other industries. As the process of shoe-manufacturing could not go on if the stitchers were eliminated, the women were put in the forefront of the battle, and struck almost without an exception. It hardly need be said that we do not advocate strikes, nor do our leaders. They believe that the slower methods of agitation, education and the ballot-box must be the weapons of the working class, but this case is certainly exceptional, and we have made this statement in the interests of justice to all concerned.

---

THE tens of thousands of passengers who adventure on our railways every day ought all to be the friends of total abstinence. We are glad to read that on the Chicago and Alton road it has been determined that no employé shall be allowed to use intoxicating liquors or frequent gambling places or other places of low resort at any time. The saloons threaten a boycott, but the general manager says that he finds it necessary to specify against these things for the reason that men get into the habit of sitting up all day, or all night, as the case may be, drinking and gambling, instead of resting and sleeping, so as to be in good condition when it comes their turn to go out on the road. He says: "Such practices have ruined some of the best engineers and conductors we have ever had," and he adds these significant words: "If the saloon-keepers boycott our road the loss of their business will not hurt us a particle; it does not amount to enough to pay one-tenth part of the expenses resulting from one bad accident. I remember an accident we had a few years ago, which cost the company $30,000; that was due, as was learned afterwards, to the fact that the engineer had been gambling all night and was incapacitated for want of sleep. The fireman of the other train was killed, and the engineer crippled for life. We believe that by giving the public the best and safest service we will gain more from the better class of people who approve our course than we will lose by reason of any saloon-keepers' boycott. I do not consider the rule a hardship upon anybody. Habitual drinkers and gamblers may think it is, but I am satisfied ninety per cent of our employés favor it and will live up to its provisions. The complaint of saloon-keepers would indicate that they are doing so. We have no spies watching the men. It is not necessary. Those who can't obey the rule voluntarily will break it anyway, and they are sure to get caught, and when they do they will be discharged. That is all there is to it." A pleasant note of approval to the Alton road would be a friendly act on the part of white-ribboners.

---

MISS ALYS PEARSALL SMITH, youngest daughter of Robert and Hannah Whitall Smith, was married December 13 in the Quaker meeting-house in London to the Hon. Bertrand Russell, grandson of Lord John Russell, the famous Prime Minister of the British Parliament. Private letters received from friends of THE UNION SIGNAL who were present declare that "the Puritan maiden, Priscilla, could not have been purer or fairer than our Alys, who has done more to build up the Young Women's Temperance Union in Great Britain, than anybody else except Lady Henry Somerset." Among those present at the wedding who are especially mentioned was Earl Russell, elder brother of the groom, and his uncle, Lord Carlyle. It is pleasant to know that the young husband is as progressive in his ideas as his bride has always been, and thus another home is founded on the principle of "Two heads in council as well as two beside the hearth." The young people have gone to Berlin, where they will invest the winter in study preparatory to their life work of reform and philanthropy. Mr. Russell is a Fellow of Cambridge University, and has already won distinction by his scholarship. He is a nephew of Lord Dufferin, the British Plenipotentiary to France, and, previous to his marriage, was one of the secretaries of the Legation. THE UNION SIGNAL sends its best wishes to the founders of this typical twentieth century home, which we feel certain will illustrate the best qualities of American and English culture, progress and inspiration.

---

OUR attention is called to a new reform movement. It is named the White Star Conduct and its object is to "put away the double standard of living practiced by so many Christian professors, . . . to raise to the level of one Christian standard all relations in life." Members of the organization are required to sign the following declaration: "Whatever abridges human life or degrades human character shall not be licensed in government, transported in commerce, nor fellowshiped in the church, and to this declaration I do hereby pledge my conduct, God helping me." There cannot be too many efforts put forth to lift mankind to the gospel standard and we bid God-speed to the White Star Conduct. Any inquiries concerning its purpose and plans of work will be cheerfully answered by Mr. J. S. Hughes, Englewood P. O., Chicago.

It was John G. Whittier, the gentle poet, who said, "Of the right and duty of prohibition I have never doubted."

***

The widening circle of women's occupations is indicated in the recent announcement that Mrs. Albert Bishop Mason enjoys the proud distinction of being the only society woman in the United States who can "take out" a locomotive. She does not do this very often, for her husband is vice-president of a southern railroad line and does not think it wise for his wife to compete with his employés, but Mrs. Mason has a talent for machinery. She "knows the ropes" and can convey the engine to its place and put it through its paces as well as any man.

***

It is a token of the time that one of the new rules of the Lawrence scientific school faculty of Harvard University requires the young men students to take a course of hygienic cooking. The Boston cooking school will initiate them into the mysteries of dishpan and kettle, and there was no end of feminine gloating over the fact when the announcement was made in the presence of certain wise young women who are studying the classics.

***

I was glad to learn that the Woman's Suffrage League of New York city gave a Pilgrim mothers' dinner in honor of the pioneer women of New England on the same day that the "men people" were dining and wining alone in honor of the Pilgrim "pa's." Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Dr. Anna Shaw and other well-known women were invited to speak.

***

As a tribute of reverence and affection to Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Lady Henry Somerset recently gave a lecture in her home town, Melrose, near Boston. All the tickets were sold by boys and the audience numbered twelve or fifteen hundred. The proceeds of the lecture are to go toward founding a headquarters for an Anti-Tobacco Society of boys, who have been persuaded to "leave off" by the good women of the W. C. T. U., who are supplying them with other and more athletic amusement. One little boy said, when asked to join, "It is bully to smoke, father smokes." This answer was, as Carlyle used to say, "significant of much."

***

The eighty-ninth dinner of the New England society in New York city had its usual array of bright—men—speakers, but no women. The same was conspicuously true of the dinner given to Dr. Parkhurst. It was all very well for women to tug and toil and help bring in the famous victory over Tammany, but when it came to doing honor to the leader of the movement men crowded in with an absence of gallantry that will be the amusement of a more cultured generation, and relegated the ladies to the gallery, where they could watch their lords as they dined, and could inhale the tobacco smoke wafted from their lungs to the ceiling, along with the eloquent voices of "the brethren," who meant well, but who had not enough of the "arrest of thought" to realize how pleasant it would have been for the women to be seated with them, and how refined it would have been to have banished the tobacco smoke during the hour when they celebrated the victory of cleanliness over the fumes, the fog and the folly of New York's Vulcanic and volcanic politics.

***

A valued correspondent writes: "The special efforts of our organization in changing the tastes of the populace in regard to amusements have led me to write to you and suggest the propriety of requesting the various pastors throughout the Christian world to read and study II. Samuel, chapter 11, proving from the Word of God the effect of a living picture on a good man, when without any intention on his part it led him into every sin,—the temptation was greater than he could bear. I also thought as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union had attained its majority, how would it do to take the 46th Psalm, Luther's great stronghold during the Revolution, 'A mighty fortress is our God.' When the Crusaders started out twenty-one years ago, they needed an inspiration for the important work commenced then, but now we must realize the strength of the arm which achieves victory when He breaketh the bow and tells us He will be exalted amongst the heathen, and when our great and noble chieftains are falling by the way, this Psalm tells us, 'Be still, and know that I am God. The Lord of Hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our Refuge.'"

ON DUTY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

NORTH DAKOTA.

NEWS FROM THE PROHIBITION STATE.

Directly after the close of our state convention in September, at Wahpeton, our workers having received new inspiration and a new impulse for better and greater results, began their work for the new year with renewed activity and courage. The reports which come to me at the close of the first quarter show an increase in membership, and in most cases, new courage on the part of our brave, heroic and loyal workers.

In spite of the great financial depression some of our unions have done remarkably well in raising funds. Drayton W's report one hundred and twenty-five dollars raised during the last quarter. They have an active membership of thirty-two. The Drayton Y's have also thirty-two active members and thirty-five honorary members. They have also raised the nice sum of seventy-five dollars. They have charge of the L. T. L., which numbers eighty members and are doing good work, not only along this line, but in other departments.

Thompson, a new union, reports interesting and prosperous meetings.

Minnewaukon W's have received several new members and have a fine L. T. L.

Grafton has had an Experience Social, which netted them eighty dollars. This sum was raised for the purpose of working in connection with the liquor cure, located at that place, and is to be used as a loan to any one wishing to take the cure and not able to afford it, but willing to refund the money in a stated time, which will again be used as a loan.

Fairmount, though a small country union, but ever at the front in good deeds, has recently sent a barrel of clothing, groceries, and some silverware to our Crittenton Home, and also five dollars in money.

Casselton, Lisbon and Reynolds have likewise each sent a barrel of good things needed, besides small donations in money.

Portland and Mayville have recently consolidated, and under the leadership of Mrs. H. C. Ruth are doing good work. They have lately given an entertainment which netted them a handsome sum, and have paid a pledge of thirty dollars to our Crittenton Home.

Casselton Y's have also raised and given to the Home the generous sum of forty dollars.

Crary with her band of faithful few is making an heroic effort at enforcement.

Ellendale, Grafton, Queens Valley, Reynolds and others report interesting and successful mothers' meetings.

Hillsboro has already begun active preparations for our next convention which is to be held there and we are looking forward to that time expecting a feast of good things.

Mayville has adopted the schools savings bank with one hundred and twenty-five depositors. Grafton, also, out of five hundred pupils has three hundred depositors.

Early in the year there was organized at Bottineau an L. T. L. No woman being found who could or would take charge of the work, Alexander Burr, a young lawyer, and a graduate of Ann Arbor, since elected district attorney, came to the rescue and has charge of this little army of recruits.

In six weeks from the close of our state convention our minutes were all printed and in the hands of our treasurer. Much credit is due our recording secretary, Mrs. Carrie M. Allen, as well as the printers. They were printed at Fargo by a publishing company, who kindly and thoughtfully presented to each state officer a copy beautifully bound in Russia.

Mrs. Graham, formerly a resident of our state, and well known to our workers as a fine elocutionist who used her talent in the interest of the Temple, gave several lectures and entertainments in the state during the fall, which were spoken of in a flattering manner.

The Wahpeton Y's during the past quarter have received twelve new recruits, and now number fifty-six active and forty-four honorary members. These Y's won the banner for the greatest per cent of increase in membership, and that they deserve a banner for a new departure in the way of noble daring and example, I am sure you will agree with me when I tell you they have lately adopted the following pledge for their active members:

"That we will avoid the company of young men who use intoxicants and narcotics, and never allow young men to smoke in our presence."

All honor to the young women who will take and keep such a pledge, and may their example be followed by others, not only in our own state but elsewhere.

Last year our president, Miss Preston, in her annual letter, suggested the following as our motto for the year: "I am but one, but I am one. I cannot do everything, but I can do something. What I can do I ought to do, and what I ought to do, by the grace of God, I will do." Some of our unions never fail to use this motto at the opening of their meetings, and one sister, on being asked if she would take charge of a certain department of work in one of our local unions, replied: "Yes; I will do the best I can, for I regard our motto the same as the pledge." The same motto we have adopted for this year.

Two counties and one district have been organized in the past quarter. Richland county was organized soon after a very interesting and profitable convention.

Directly after the close of our state convention Miss Preston started on a trip for the northern part of the state, where much of the country is sparsely settled and traveling is both expensive and unpleasant. During this tour she organized Bottineau county, and our third district held two conventions, organized two new unions, visited a number of old unions, giving encouragement and strength to the weaker ones. Since her return from the National she has again gone into the field, and during the legislature, which soon convenes, she will most of the time be in Bismarck, also our superintendent of suffrage, Mrs. L. G. Barry, of Lisbon, if her health permits.

Although at our recent election our state went Republican by a large majority and notwithstanding a plank in the platform favors our prohibition law, the ticket elected is not one of which a loyal and truly patriotic citizen can be proud.

Our governor, Roger Allin, is a grand man, true to our cause, but our lieutenant-governor and attorney-general are well known as pronounced resubmissionists. Alas, for the inconsistency of a party that places at the head of their ticket men whom they know to be bitter opposers of the most important plank in their platform! But it is the same old story—party and not principle.

A strong effort will be made on the part of our friends to pass a bill favoring equal suffrage, but although we have a number of legislators who favor our cause, yet we have bitter opposers, for well they know should this be granted what it means for the cause of temperance. At the present time the outlook is not altogether encouraging, but we are, however, hopeful, for

"Behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow,
Keeping watch above His own."

DELIA W. SHINN,
State Reporter, Casselton.

INDIANA.

FOR A SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE LAW.

The white-ribboners of this state are making another effort to secure a scientific temperance instruction law. Our united efforts will be directed toward this object, until the question is decided by the incoming legislature. This is our fifth attempt to get the black cap removed from our state.

Will not our white ribbon sisters remember us of Indiana during the noon hour of prayer? Only our Heavenly Father can accomplish this work for us, in arousing us to put forth the greatest effort, and in working through us.

There are, in our state, brave workers in other reforms that we advocate. A contest will be made before the superior court of La Fayette, Ind., the trial beginning on the 10th of January. The supreme court of our state has admitted women to the practice of law, and it is argued by able jurists, that upon the same principle they have a right to vote, and that the supreme court (to which the case will be appealed by the defeated party, whichever it may be) must so decide or reverse its decision in regard to admitting women to practice at the bar. Four or five hundred women in different parts of the state offered their votes at the last election, and have worked up this test vote case of universal interest, as the laws of most of our states are similar.

FOR EQUAL SUFFRAGE

The advocates of equal suffrage are increasing. The mayor of Kokomo wore the suffrage badge throughout the day of the last election, which awakened discussion in the town for a week or two afterwards.

Many departments of our work are ably conducted and deserve being reported monthly, but I fear it would become monotonous to do so.

Greensburg has recently opened a rescue mission Sunday-school, which has a large attendance. Evansville has opened a white ribbon mission which is doing good work. Our state has been blessed for several months in having Mrs. C. Edholm within its limits. Ridgeville and other places report great interest awakened by her lectures.

Clinton county has been very fortunate in securing the services of Mrs. Edholm, and through her efforts much good has been accomplished and new interest awakened. On December 12 she spoke at Kirklin and organized a good union there. She spoke at Mulberry, Colfax, Rossville and Franklin, with large and enthusiastic audiences at each place.

N. C. MEADOWS,
State Reporter, Evansville.

GEORGIA.

A REVIVAL IN W. C. T. U. WORK.

A large number of district conventions have been held this fall, and we fully believe that there is a revival of interest in the work of the W. C. T. U. We hope that Georgia will respond nobly to the request of Mrs. Stevenson for an increase of membership during the year.

The state reporter has received only one report of these conventions, and that is from the ever active and energetic ninth district. If the other districts grow jealous of seeing the reports of Georgia largely confined to this one district they must emulate the energetic women of northeastern Georgia and send to the state reporter information concerning their own deeds.

The combined convention of the ninth district and Habersham county was held at Demorest, and is reported as having been a very interesting and profitable occasion. Thirteen departments of work were taken up and competent superintendents appointed. A Demorest gold medal contest was one of the features of the convention. The recitations were all of high merit, and the medal was awarded to Miss Ruth Starkweather, of Demorest.

Many papers of great interest along different lines of W. C. T. U. work were read. One most unique feature of the convention was a "catechism exercise" on the state minutes. Whatever may be true of our membership in general we may be sure that our Habersham county and ninth district sisters have read their state minutes.

The fifth district held its convention in Atlanta. It was an occasion of much interest, and very many profitable and interesting papers were read. One of the resolutions passed recommends that each union of the district appoint one of its members to solicit subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL.

The fifth district, especially the Atlanta unions, believes strongly in woman suffrage, and not only so, but that it is desirable that the state union declare for suffrage. Last year this district memorialized the state union to adopt the suffrage plank of the National, but the state convention refused to receive this part of the report. The sisters of the fifth district believe that the state convention misapprehended what would be the consequences of receiving the report, that it must have been mistakenly supposed that to receive it was equivalent to indorsing suffrage. Some of the members of the state convention even indicated that the action of the fifth district was insubordination. They never could have done this had they understood the situation. The fifth district simply used the privilege which no one in this age thinks of denying, the right of petition. On the supposition, therefore, that its former action was misunderstood, the district repeated its action of last year.

The infamous W. C. P. Breckinridge included Atlanta in his lecture tour and spoke in this city the evening of January 5. The clergy of the city have repeatedly hurled their anathemas against Ingersoll but were silent concerning this man who is as much worse than Ingersoll as a rattlesnake is worse than a spitting cat. The women of the W. C. T. U. believe that heresy in doctrine is a small matter compared with heresy of heart and life. The Atlanta unions, therefore, in a conference meeting of January 5 passed a resolution expressing their indignation at the insult offered the pure manhood and womanhood of Atlanta by the public appearance of this man in our city, and called upon all good people to manifest their abhorrence of his life and character in the only way in which such a hardened reprobate is capable of feeling it, by leaving him to lecture to empty seats.

The Atlanta Constitution gave the resolutions a prominent place, and made them still more emphatic by the headlines with which it called attention to them, and by also publishing in connection with them an interview with our district president, Mrs. M. L. McLendon. The Journal published the resolution without comments. The attitude of neither of these papers was what could have been desired. While no commendation was expressed of this man, neither was there any intimation of the scorn with which every respectable newspaper should treat him when he presumes to come before the American public in the rôle of an estimable member of society. His audience consisted of three hundred and twenty-seven persons, of whom three were women. One of these was his own wife. It was comparatively a meager audience, but it was larger than it should have been.

The white-ribbon women of Georgia are planning to have an exhibit in the Cotton States and International Exposition which opens next autumn in Atlanta. We feel seriously disappointed that the National Convention did not act in this matter. We believe that great good can be done by having a creditable exhibit. We are anxious that it should not be a state affair. We are anxious to show many of our benighted brethren how large a thing is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and what a world-wide and beneficent work our organization has already accomplished. We fully believe that much of the opposition with which we have to contend here would disappear if the people in general had a correct view of the nature and extent of our work. To this end, we call upon our sisters all over the nation to come to our assistance and lend us anything that may help us in this exhibit. If any of them feel disposed to respond to this request let them address either our state president, Mrs. W. C. Sibley, Augusta, Ga., or the fifth district president, Mrs. M. L. McLendon, 139 Washington street, Atlanta.

ISABELLA WEBB PARKS,
State Reporter, Atlanta.

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

The New Year finds us "up and dressed" and ready for work. As is usual at this time of year, we are active in legislative work, and our protest has gone out against the opening of saloons on the Sabbath day. The liquor dealers, not satisfied with six days in the week, are asking for the right to sell on Sunday as well, and the best people of our state are being aroused on the subject. We have met this foe before and have defeated it, and with God's help we shall succeed in defeating it again.

NEW YEAR LETTER—REPORT AND HISTORY.

The "New Year's Letter" sent out by our president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, is full of cheer and courage, and contains helpful suggestions for the work of the coming year. Our annual report is out, and is a model of neatness and accuracy; our "History" also is published and is indeed a beauty. Many words of praise have come to us, not merely for its beauty, but for the valuable contents as well. Everything is moving forward, and with the Divine hand to guide us, we shall do better work than ever during the coming year.

CORNER-STONE LAID.

New Rochelle, in Westchester county, is to have a temperance building, which, when finished, will cost about $11,000. Already nearly $3,500 are raised toward it. The lot was donated by Miss Eliza Moulton, who will also add

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N.Y.

a drinking fountain later on as another gift. One hundred and thirty dollars was raised from the names in the corner-stone, which was laid with impressive ceremony by Miss Helen A. Rollins, president of the county.

In November a grand union fair was held at Yonkers, continuing through four days. Elaborate preparations were made for it, and an eight page paper, The Crystal Fount, published, advertising the many attractive features. Such complete arrangements could not fail to bring success to the enterprise.

CONVENTIONS.

Monroe county has recently held its fifteenth annual convention at Rochester. This was one of the largest ever held in the county. The absence of the county president, Mrs. Parish, was a cause for regret, and the fact that she was detained by the severe illness of her only daughter cast a shadow over the meeting. A loving greeting was sent her. The first president, Mrs. T. J. Bissell, occupied the chair. A tender memorial service was held during the afternoon, and was followed by a graphic report of the National Convention given by Mrs. H. E. Light, the county delegate.

Mrs Ellen D. Blair, of Nebraska, gave one of her splendid chalk-talks, and Mrs. Emily U. Burgess, president of Ulster county, gave the evening address to a large and interested audience. A most interesting report of the Stone Street Mission was read by Mrs. J. T. Clarke. This mission has been established recently, and all the city unions assist in carrying on the work. Nearly seven hundred dollars has been raised for the work this year. There is also a Rescue Mission, and a mission Sunday-school has been sustained by the W. C. T. T. for several years past.

Onondaga county sends a report of a fine convention held at Marcellus. An excellent program was well carried out under the presiding officer, Mrs. Mary D. Ferguson. Several pastors added their words of greeting and good will. A report of the fair work was given by Mrs. Merriman, showing not only a financial gain but gain in many ways. The county owns a building, "White Ribbon Hall," which serves as a home for the weary, tired or sick, or those who need help in other ways, and the white banner is kept floating continually. Who shall be able to measure the influence of the good accomplished by the silent forces that are at work. One day a man came in, threw a dollar on the treasurer's desk, and said, "Do you notice anything peculiar in the ring of that?" Then he threw down another dollar and the difference was very noticeable. The stranger said, "That first is a counterfeit dollar. I came in here to get it changed, and cheat you so much, but when I saw the motto in this room I could not do it." So much for a silent influence!

A feature of every convention is the literature table, with Mrs. Bates at her place, making appeals for our state paper and others. Miss Vinnie R. Davis, state superintendent of franchise, gave a carefully prepared and able lecture on franchise. A memorial and consecration service was led by Mrs. Anne S. D. Bates, a parliamentary drill conducted by Mrs. Nellie Willis. The exercises of the L. T. L. were conducted by Prof. Lane, and echoed "Victory" in the near future. Mr. Squires, of Cortland, president of the state L. T. L., spoke with a ringing purpose to fight King Alcohol to the death.

The second evening was in charge of the Y's, who had a fine program, including an address by Mr. C. J. Hall, of Buffalo. "It is as good as an acre of sunshine to see your face," said one sister to another, and that glow of sunshine rested on the entire gathering.

A most interesting convention of Wayne county white-ribboners was held at Sodus, which took the form of a school of methods, Mrs. M. M. Allen speaking on non-alcoholics in medicine, and also upon franchise; evangelistic work, mothers' meetings, heredity, and purity in literature and art were each presented, while a model parlor meeting was conducted by Mrs. A. K. Ingraham.

A report of the state convention was given by Miss Orton, the county president, and one of the National by Mrs. E. A. Clark, the county delegate, both of these being well received. At the evening session a pantomime, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," was given by Mrs. Hill, and a dialogue, "Two Little Baskets," brought out a generous collection. Rev. Anna H. Shaw was to have spoken at this time, but being suddenly taken ill, her place was ably filled by Mrs. Van Benschoten, of Newark, and a message of sympathy was sent to Miss Shaw.

It was my privilege to be present at Albany county convention held in the city of Albany, not merely as a visitor, but as a helper, and I always gather new thoughts from a convention like this. The convention was preceded by a song service, held the evening before, conducted by the state corresponding secretary, and an address by Mr. Edmund Booth, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., of Albany. Rev. H. C. Searles also gave a brief address, and the entire service was a fitting preparation for the day which should follow.

The convention was ably presided over by Mrs. C. J. A. Jump, the county president, who kept the business well in hand. Several interesting discussions came up in connection with reports and papers, which contained many "seed thoughts" for the workers. In connection with the press department Mrs. Jump referred to one of the leading newspapers of the city which devoted almost an entire page to the brewing interests, and about an inch of space to one of the most important gatherings ever held in the city, and when the newspaper man was spoken to about it he replied that they were paid at the rate of fifty cents a line for the brewery article.

A report on the department of unfermented wine was followed by a discussion during which one woman asked the question as to whether or not a minister could legally dispense fermented wine at the communion, and a ripple of amusement passed over the convention when she said, "Ought he not, according to law, to take out a license?"

An interesting talk on "Difficulties, and how to Meet them," was given by Miss Moak, of Jerusalem, and a paper "How to Help the Children," by Miss Miller, of Delmar. The state corresponding secretary spoke on "Ways of Working," and she, together with Mrs. Ellen L. Tenney, state treasurer, sang two or three duets, Mrs. Tenney presiding at the piano. A Bible reading, by Miss E. Gibson, was especially helpful. Eight of the city pastors were present at different times, and contributed their share toward the general success.

Following this meeting I visited several of the local unions in Albany county, holding song services, and found a healthy, growing spirit everywhere. From there I went into Lewis county, visiting Port Leyden and Lyon's Falls, meeting with the ladies in the afternoon and holding a public meeting in the evening, and in each place the interest manifested in our work is encouraging. In Canastota, Madison county, I attended a conference where the "ready-for-the-next-thing" spirit was the key-note, and on Sunday evening a public meeting was held by the W. C. T. U. and Temperance Alliance, a sort of forerunner of a no-license campaign. Mrs. P. J. Adams was present and spoke.

MEDAL CONTEST.

A medal contest was held at Ghent, Columbia county, in which seven young ladies and one young man contested. The medal was awarded to Miss Grace McConnell. The house was well filled and a goodly sum realized by the local W. C. T. U., under whose auspices it was held. Nothing has been done there that has been so satisfactory or has given the cause such an impetus as this contest, and arrangements are being made for another.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

The president of Franklin county writes, "There is a good interest throughout the county and some of the unions are pressing the work of a relief committee, helping the poor in towns and villages." Malone union is very active in relief work, and has also helped a young man to go to a gold cure. An increase in membership is expected as the result of a tour which the president is making. She has visited several unions and hopes to visit every one in the county.

Temperance meetings have been held in outside school districts once a month, some minister being secured to give an address. Some unions are clothing poor children, preparing them for school, and Malone gave a Christmas dinner to poor children.

Miss Celia Hutton, president of Yates county W. C. T. U., has been called to do missionary and temperance work in the Bahamas.

An interesting woman's meeting was held in New York city to oppose the open saloon on Sunday which was arranged for and presided over by our state president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, who "instant in season and out of season," keeps a watchful eye on all things which can affect our work. Many leading representative women were present and addressed the meeting, and all were eager to distribute copies of the protest against the Sunday opening of the saloons. The women are aroused and that means a great deal in the matter.

MRS. FRANCES W. GRAHAM,
State Reporter, Lockport.

NEW HAMPSHIRE NEWS.

Christmas has come and gone, and thanks to the W. C. T. U. many hearts at our county almshouses have been made glad at this happy festival. When we look back fifteen years, we can see what great good has been accomplished in this state by the department of jail and almshouse work.

The superintendent of this department has also that of flower mission, and almost all our almshouses are visited on flower mission day by delegates from our unions. I quote from the superintendent of this department (Miss M. Kidder, of Newport, a most zealous worker for the cause). "It is pleasant to know that in eight of our county almshouses services are held regularly, usually by a chaplain. One or two have them every Sabbath, the rest twice a month; the other two almshouses are near enough to a church to permit some of the inmates to attend.

Wilton union spread a Christmas supper for the inmates of the almshouse besides having a tree. Young ladies of the Dover churches provided a Christmas tree for their almshouse. Of the police matrons she says: "They have done grand work, looking after cases after they return to their homes, giving good advice and encouraging them in efforts to do well."

STATE NEWS.

Hillsboro county convention was held December 12 at Greenville, a meeting full of interest and enthusiasm, but a stormy day prevented large attendance.

Rockingham county reports two new unions formed since September.

Strafford county held an interesting and well attended convention at Milton. Five unions were represented. Much interest was manifested in the Mercy Home, and an increase in their appropriation for that work.

Claremont union sent a delegation of ten ladies to the county almshouse six miles away at Christmas time. The barge was loaded with fruit and candies, the generous contribution of the grocers and druggists of the town, at the almshouse. They found members from the Unity, Newport and Charlestown unions. The county commissioners had also come to celebrate the day. Singing and devotional exercises, with the distribution of the good things brought, made a happy Christmas for the seventy inmates of Sullivan county almshouse.

The Lancaster Gazette reports a visit to the almshouse of Coos county; five years ago a party of five went from Colebrook, this year the visitors numbered one hundred and fifty persons, almost every town in the county being represented. Seven clergymen were present, the railroads of the section making easy rates of travel. A lunch was served the visitors. A service of praise and thanksgiving was held, and two well-ladened trees unloaded for the benefit of the inmates.

As many of the counties fail to send me any report of their work, many things which would cheer and encourage us for the work of the year are doubtless lost, but we will hope among the other good resolutions of the new year this one of making reports of their conventions to the state reporter of THE UNION SIGNAL may have its place.

M. ELIZABETH PARTRIDGE,
State Reporter, Claremont.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A PRIVATE letter from Mrs. Mary E. Griffith, president of the District of Columbia, mentions the fact that the District W. C. T. U. held gospel meetings every afternoon during the week of prayer, which were very successful.

BOSTON W. C. T. U. has secured Prof. J. H. W. Stuckenberg, D. D., of Berlin, for a course of six lectures on the social problem. The success of the course is assured, as these lectures always attract large and appreciative audiences.

THE Michigan W. C. T. U. issues a beautiful memorial number of its state paper in honor of Mrs. Lathrap. It will be specially helpful in holding memorial service. Send in your orders; five cents per copy. Address Michigan Union, 411 9th St., Bay City, Mich.

MRS. LEITER writes to make a correction in the announcement of the physiculture department last week. The envelope of literature will cost seventy-five cents instead of sixty as mentioned. Mrs. Leiter is endeavoring to cover every phase of the subject of physical education, which will be helpful to the work.

MRS. L. E. BAILEY is spending the winter in Florida, and will answer calls to lecture for the W. C. T. U. and Y. P. C. E. societies. At Orange City she gave an address for the regular monthly meeting of the union, December 30, and obtained fourteen new members. She will make her home at De Land during her stay.

MRS. ANNA HAMMER, Pennsylvania's W. C. T. U. leader, writes the following self-explanatory note: "Owing to a final mistake of the printer, and not of my manuscript, the quotations of poetry in my annual address, as it appears in Pennsylvania state minutes, are inserted as original. Not wishing to sail under false colors, I herewith make this explanation."

Learn TO PLAY THE Organ

"CLARKE'S NEW METHOD FOR REED ORGANS."

The standard instruction book for the reed organ, distinct from any previous work by the same author. It contains all that is needed for a mastery of the instrument. $2.50.

"EMERSON'S NEW METHOD FOR REED ORGANS."

Easy, progressive lessons, scales, studies, with a fine collection of organ music. $2.50.

"BELLAK'S NEW METHOD FOR THE ORGAN."

German and English Edition. Paper, 75 cents; Boards, $1.

"Winner's Eureka Method."

The latest instruction book. Paper, 75 cents; Boards, $1.

Any book mailed postpaid on receipt of price. Send for catalogues of organ music.

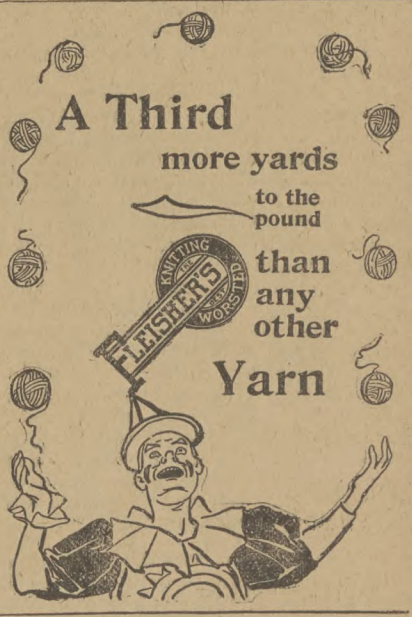
LYON & HEALY,
Chicago, Ill.

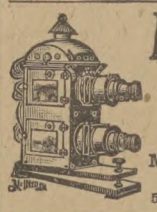
OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, BOSTON.



THE STANDARD
"Dripless" Strainer.
Agents Wante

No drip to soil table linen. No wires to clog spout. No falling off. Nickel-plated. Sent on receipt of 25 cents.

STANDARD STRAINER CO., 35 Maiden Lane, N. Y. City.



Make Money

quickly by illustrating your lectures with a STEREOPTICON. Long list of Slides on TEMPERANCE and kindred subjects

McINTOSH BATTERY and OPTICAL COMP'Y,
521 to 531 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO

AMERICAN DESK CO
270-272 WABASH AVE. CHICAGO, U.S.A.

4 foot desk, $16
4½ foot desk, $18
5 foot desk, $20

Send for catalogue. Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

KENT district lodge, No. 23, I. O. G. T., of Michigan, at its regular quarterly meeting held at Cedar Springs, January 5, 1895, adopted resolutions in memory of the gifted lecturer, Mary T. Lathrap.

AMONG the local white-ribboners of Miamisburg, O., none is more esteemed than Mrs. H. C. Hunt, who has removed to Florida with her husband in the hope that the change of climate may be beneficial to the health of the latter.

IT was a most happy thought of Lady Henry Somerset to take as the special subject of The Woman's Signal for Christmas, "This Work-a-Day World," and to show forth by editorial and essay, story and poem, with pen and pencil, the work of women in these widening years. Miss Annie Holdsworth, the associate editor, is answerable for some charming bits of biography, some choice verse and story writing in this number. There is nothing more touching in all its fair pages than Sister Kathleen's sketch entitled, "Children of the Slums." The generous pages, beaming with attractive advertisements, are due to the business skill of Mrs. Rosseter-Willard, business manager of The Woman's Signal. The paper is the chief woman's paper in the British Empire, and deserves the success that it has won.

THE Ithaca local union is endeavoring to do more effectual work than in the past. With a membership of about one hundred, an energetic president, whose efforts are seconded and sustained by a noble band of executive officers and department workers, relying upon God for success, they cannot expect to fail. Every Sunday afternoon they have religious services at the W. C. T. U. rooms, and nearly every week they hold cottage prayer-meetings, both of which are resulting in good. Recently in the afternoon prayer-meeting one of the members arose who is an active worker, and in her remarks said: "The most of you know that my husband is an excise commissioner (for license) but he wouldn't be if prayers or tears could prevent it." She advised holding a prayer-meeting for pastors and church members that are not interested in this work. They are to have an address next month from J. G. Woolley, and then hope that the Christian church will be awakened to their responsibility in regard to the liquor traffic, as well as the conscience of the excise commissioner and saloon-keeper.

AN interesting letter, called forth by the mention in these columns some time back, of Miss Willard's ancestry, has been sent by Luther Prescott Hubbard. He says, in reference to Solomon Willard, of whom he writes: "He was the honored architect of Bunker Hill Monument, and I was one of his workmen in its construction. There was a large shed at the quarry in Quincy, under which the stone was cut. He had at one end of the shed a plain structure for his office and sleeping room. He boarded with the men. On a small table stood a beautiful polished model of the monument. He undertook the work from patriotic motives, not to enrich himself, as is sometimes done in these days. The directors wished him to accept salary, but he declined to do so, and would only receive enough for his personal expenses, which were only a few hundred dollars a year. He also, before the work was commenced, subscribed $2,000 towards it. I was young, and remember him almost as a father; he was so kind. Every workman loved him. The one hundredth anniversary of his birthday was celebrated some years ago." The writer of this letter has reached the advanced age of eighty-six, and is prominent in the American Seamen's Friend Society. His wife is president of the W. C. T. U. in Greenwich, Vt.

As Nevada has no state W. C. T. U. organ we print, by request, their list of state officers: President, L. M. Van Deventer, Reno; vice-president, C. S. Ward, Reno; corresponding secretary, M. G. Nash, Carson; recording secretary, L. M. Westlake, Reno; treasurer, F. J. Crawford, Reno; evangelistic, J. G. Lenard, Reno; Sabbath observance, J. A. Beedy, Reno; Finance, B. G. Cloe, Reno; music, Belle Stanley, Reno; prison and jail, J. G. Ulric, Carson; juvenile and Sunday-school, H. H. Howe, Carson; UNION SIGNAL, S. Gilman, Reno; White Cross, L. M. Westlake, Reno; legislation and petition, Dr. Eliza Cook, Sheridan; Y. W. C. T. U., Mrs. H. Van Sickle, Genoa; foreigners, lumbermen and miners, A. F. Cox, Gold Hill; narcotic, Jennie Barnes, Genoa; health and heredity, Dr. Cook, Sheridan; work among Indians, M. Anderson, Carson; press, A. Beebe, Reno; mercy and flower mission, Sybil Howe, Carson; scientific temperance instruction, C. Taylor, Lovelock; fair, M. A. Boyd, Reno; franchise, C. B. Norcross, Reno; Young Women, organ of Y. W. C. T. U., Mrs. M. A. Parke, Sheridan; Temperance Temple, Mrs. Parke, Sheridan; purity in literature and art, A. Bulmer, Virginia City; Demorest medal contest, M. A. Boyd, Reno; temperance literature, Dora Stanley, Reno; railroad and school of methods, M. G. Nash, Carson; school savings banks, M. McGrath, Virginia City; parlor meetings, H. Spencer, Reno; mothers' meetings, M. A. Baker, Virginia City.

IT will be good news for the white-ribboners in the many local unions of New England and Massachusetts, who are now just commencing the campaign of local option in their towns for 1895, to learn that John G. Woolley, of Chicago, the widely-known temperance orator, has been secured for a series of gospel temperance, no-license and anti-Gothenburg meetings for Massachusetts and New England, February 17 to March 31, 1895, inclusive. A desperate effort is to be made by promoters of the Gothenburg license system to pass a bill on Beacon Hill this coming legislature, which if once saddled on the Old Bay State, will be a greater calamity than even the present high-license curse. Mr. Woolley will arouse the Christian conscience of apathetic and indifferent men, if any person in the world can do it. No man in the world can render better service to no-license committees, W. C. T. Unions, Epworth Leagues, Young People's Baptist Unions, or Y. P. S. C. Endeavorers. He will speak every week-day evening and twice each Sunday on any of the following subjects: "The Power of the Church"; "To Whom it may Concern"; "Alcoholic Morals"; "The Body of the Church"; "Our Inalienable Rights"; "The Voice of the Church"; "Thy Bottle"; "Christians and the Gothenburg License System." For terms and dates apply to the New England Temperance Bureau, F. W. Clark, agent, 294 Washington street, Boston, Mass

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The General Officers make the following offer: To the two states securing the largest number of new members in excess of the five hundred asked for, they promise an address at their coming annual convention by Miss Willard, our National leader, free of expense. To all the states securing five hundred new members they promise a benefit night at the next National Convention, the program to be arranged by a committee chosen from the states, the proceeds to be divided equally between them. The certification to the number secured must be in the National corresponding secretary's hands not later than August 15. It is, of course, understood that the five hundred must be in excess of last year's membership. We cannot report a gain of new members if there is a corresponding loss of old. State officers will please bear these two pledges in mind, and do their utmost to reach the five hundred limit.

The meeting in connection with the presentation of the Polyglot Petition has grown from its germ thought until it is a plant of very fair proportions. It is planned to hold all day meetings on Friday and Saturday, February 15 and 16, with such services on Sunday, the 17th, as may be arranged without interfering with the council program. The full bill of fare will be announced later, but we may say in passing that in addition to the General Officers it is expected that Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. Barnes, Mrs. Rice and other leaders will be present. A very bright thought has come to Miss Willard (by no means an unusual occurrence) in connection with the presentation of the Polyglot Petition. It is to have copies of the Petition printed on parchment paper, with the seal of the World's and National W. C. T. U., and the autographs of the General Officers of both unions in attestation of the fact that the Petition has been presented in fifty different nations and has an aggregate of not less than four million signatures. These will be sold at ten cents each and will make very effective souvenirs. The copy is already in the hands of the printer and the National officers will be very glad to receive orders for the same.

Applications for Petition blanks are coming in so rapidly that we really believe the last month before presentation is to show a glorious record in our own country. Do not forget to send signatures to Mrs. Rebecca Shuman, Sherman avenue, Evanston.

Do not be impatient, please, if the Annual Leaflet is delayed rather longer than usual before it reaches you. We are planning to wholly change its form and present it with questions and answers, incorporating many points upon which we are continually receiving queries. This, of necessity, will consume time; but we hope to have it ready for mailing early in February.

Please take notice that applications for information concerning the trip to the World's Convention next June should be addressed to Rev. Albert Shaw, Review of Reviews, 13 Astor Place, New York city, and should be marked in the left-hand corner "Pilgrimage Bureau." All white-ribboners intending to make this trip would do well to communicate this fact as early as possible to their state officers, since the delegates are to be appointed by each state executive, according to its regular membership.

States possessing less than the requisite number or a fraction over the same, would do well to combine with the surplus of an adjoining state in order that we may lose none to whom we are entitled. According to the treasurer's book of last year we could legally send from the United States 140½ delegates, besides the general officers who are ex officio members of the Convention. If only we could increase that number to two hundred before June what a glorious showing that would be.

The physiculture department has set its sail for a prosperous year, if well-laid plans signify anything. The roster includes seven able specialists, and two assistants from the Y Branch. Miss Clara G. Baer, of New Orleans, superintendent of Louisiana, is the National department associate. This promises much for the work in the South.

From the Daily Post of Staunton, Va., in its issue of November 21, I clip the following item:

"Mrs. M. W. Newton has returned to Staunton after a successful tour in W. C. T. U. organization work. The following is a summary of her work: New life was infused into the unions visited, and many new members added. She organized twenty new unions, three Y's and one Loyal Temperance Legion. Each society formed is pledged to organize a Loyal Temperance Legion among the children. In the four months devoted to the work she has organized fifty societies and secured 1,375 names for membership, including active and honorary. She reports that wherever the work has been fully explained there has been no trouble in organizing, the best material from each religious denomination taking hold of the work heartily."

Surely this is a magnificent record, which should serve as an incitement to each state and National organizer. If it is continued, we predict that Virginia will be the banner state at Baltimore in 1895. "Baltimore, '95," reminds me that this is another instance in which we should follow the lead of the Christian Endeavorers, and set up, thus early, the coming Convention as the objective point in our year's work. Let us inscribe it on all our banners—"Baltimore, '95."

KATHARINE L. STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner.

The Minutes are going rapidly. The orders have kept the girls at headquarters busy for the last few weeks, insomuch that it will be no wonder if answers to letters are not sent as promptly as usual.

A good Prohibition brother writes: "I denied myself the pleasure of attending the state fair, and the enclosed draft is the amount of railroad fare which I trust you will not refuse on account of sex." He then says, "I am in favor of the enfranchisement of women, am not afraid of women who have 'views,' if they are sensible views. There are two classes opposed to your enfranchisement. The fossils of a past age, many of them through ignorance, training, religion, bigotry and prejudice; the other the disreputable saloon element and criminal classes."

These classes are undoubtedly opposed to equal suffrage, but there is another class that oppose putting the ballot in the hands of women—good men and women who have not had the "arrest of thought" upon the question and are timid as to results, but the cause is growing. Many thanks to the brother for his remembrance of the National.

Another good brother from Eagleville, O., in some way unknown to us, got hold of one of our birthday envelopes, and what did he do? Why, just what you might expect. Filled it and sent it to the treasurer with his good wishes. How many other brothers would do the same if you would hand them one of our suggestive little envelopes. Birthday remembrances have also come from superintendents Emery and Moore.

The following is too good to keep:

CAMBRIDGEBORO, PA., Jan. 11, 1895.

MY DEAR MRS. BARKER:—The night of the birthday offering at Cleveland I was missing all the treats of the evening and was one of the women of one of the groups who was in a far different scene—among the slums trying to reach with a word, a song, or a touch of the hand, those poor girls on the downward path. Had I been at the meeting I should have counted myself among the "hundred years old," but in gratitude that my lot should be so differently cast from those poor souls I double it, and feel that is not half the expression

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
NOTICE NAME THUS Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

PIMPLES
Freckles, Blotches, Ringworm, Eczema, Scald Head, Tetter, and all other skin disorders positively cured with
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT.
If you would have soft, smooth and healthy skin, free from all imperfections, use constantly
HEISKELL'S SOAP.
Price 25 cts. Send Stamp for Free Sample.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., PHILA.

THE ELEVENTH EDITION.
WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS
Has just been issued. This song book is certainly the most popular collection of Temperance Songs
ever published. The melodies are unusually pleasing and the words are right to the point. It covers a wide range of themes, expressing all the varied emotions, from the comic to the pathetic. Get it, and your young people will bless you, and your old people will praise you.
Price 35c.
Order direct of the author,
FLORA H. CASSEL, Hastings, Neb.

PRIZES ON PATENTS.
How to get $100 and Perhaps Make a Fortune.
We secure patents and to induce people to keep track of their bright ideas we offer a prize of one hundred dollars to be paid on the first of every month to the person who submits to us the most meritorious invention during the preceding month. We will also advertise the invention free of charge in the National Register, a weekly newspaper, published in Washington, D. C., which has an extensive circulation throughout the United States and is devoted to the interests of inventors.
NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.
The idea of being able to invent something strikes most people as being very difficult; this delusion the Company wishes to dispel. It is the simple things and small inventions that make the greatest amount of money, and the complex ones are seldom profitable. Almost everybody, at some time or another, conceives an idea, which, if patented, would probably be worth to him a fortune. Unfortunately such ideas are usually dismissed without thought. The simple inventions like the car window, which could be easily slid up and down without breaking the passenger's back, the sauce pan, the collar button, the nut lock, the bottle stopper, the snow shovel are things that almost every one sees some way of improving upon, and it is these kind of inventions that bring the greatest returns to the author.
The prize we offer will be paid at the end of each month, whether the application has been acted upon by the Patent office or not. Every competitor must apply for a patent on his invention through us, and whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a valuable patent.
THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
JOHN WEDDERBURN, Gen'l Manager,
618 F. St., N. W., Washington, D. C.
P. S. The responsibility of this company may be judged from the fact that its stock is held by about seventeen hundred of the leading newspapers of the United States.

LOOSE BOTTOMS PERFECTION CAKE TINS
Delicate Cake
Easily removed without breaking. Perfection Tins require no greasing. 10 styles, round, square and oblong. 2 layer tins by mail 30 cts. Circulars Free.
Agents Wanted. Richardson Mfg. Co., 14 St., Bath, N.Y.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE WAISTS
Have MANY IMITATORS but NO EQUALS.
Be sure your Waist is stamped. 'Good Sense.'

6 tubs in one BATH TUBS, Wholesale & Retail. For "Bath Room" & "Portable." Durable, many long used renewed, light, little water. Agents and others send for circulars.
E. J. Knowlton, Ann Arbor, Mich.

RUBIFOAM FOR THE TEETH
SAMPLE VIAL FREE.
E. W. HOYT & CO., LOWELL, MASS.

BAKER'S COCOA
ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used.

LADY AGENTS, Rubber Undergarment Quick sales, big profits. Catalog free, Mrs. N. B. LITTLE, Chicago

At ¼ Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc, List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

SALESMEN WANTED to sell our goods by samples to the wholesale and retail trade; sell on sight to every business man or firm; liberal salary, money advanced for advertising and expenses. Permanent position. Address with stamp, KING MFG. CO., A 55 Chicago, Ill.

CANCER permanently cured. No knife. No poison. No plaster.
JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free.
Address, C. J. MASON, Box, 519, New York City, N. Y.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my Invisible Tubular Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Warranted to help more cases than all similar devices combined. Help ears as glasses do eyes. Sold by F. Hiscox only, 853 Br'dway, N. Y. Send for book of proofs FREE of thankfulness I felt, for, oh, who could have stood upright with a birthright of naught but temptation and evil surroundings? In sincere gratitude,

MARY F. ROSS.

Receipts for self-denial gifts to Mrs. Ellen Cottrill, St. George, Mo., Mrs. Thomas M. Holmes, Derry Depot, and Mrs. Laura Cunningham, Cadiz, have been returned "unclaimed." I therefore take this way to let them know that their welcome gifts reached us safely. Ohio and Florida have sent in dues, and Dorchester W. C. T. U. sent in their quarterly donation of $7.

Ten new members were added to the union at Turner where the treasurer spoke on the 6th instant. Rev. H. H. Rood, of the Congregational, and Rev. Harding, of the Methodist church, are earnest temperance workers, and Mrs. Harding, president of the W. C. T. U., is supported by an earnest band of women, and unitedly they are rapidly building up public sentiment for protection of the home. Desplaines, too, is waking up, and a society has been organized of the best men in the town for better government. Rev. Wirsching is the right man in the right place, and I shall be disappointed if the W. C. T. U. there that has been taking a rest is not revivified and actively at work very soon. There are many earnest, intelligent women at this place, and there ought to be a union of one hundred members, and will be, I trust. HELEN M. BARKER.

Organizers' Corner.

Superintendent of the Department of Organization, Corresponding Secretary of the National W. C. T. U.

ORGANIZERS.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, 1105 Davis street, Elmira, N. Y.
Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, Port Jervis, N. Y.
Miss Frances E. Griffin, The De Soto, Chicago.
Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, Chautauqua, Wash.
Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, 1907 Bush street, San Francisco, Cal.
Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair, Clinton, N. Y.
Mrs. Maude L. Greene, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Baraga, Mich.
Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.
Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Ellensburg, E. Wash.
Miss Ida Clothier, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, Pacific Grove, Cal.
Mrs. S. C. Harris, Franklin, Va.
Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, 1006 Bainbridge street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.
Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.
Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.
Mrs. E. A. Kenyon, Townshend, Vt.
Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown, LL.D., Cincinnati, O., Lecturer.
Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, Vincennes, Ind.
Mrs. Sue V. Tomlinson, Charlotte, N. C.
Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, Roslindale, Mass., Lecturer.
Mrs. E. L. Calkins, 922 S. Rose street, Kalamazoo, Mich.
Miss Lilian Wood, Maryville, Mo., Lecturer.
Mrs. Ella A. Boole, A. M., West New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y., Lecturer.
Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, 27 Everett street, Cambridge, Mass., Lecturer.
Mrs. Addie Northam Field, Bedford, N. H.
Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, McMinnville, Ore.

For terms and date address as above.

We have begun a new year, a year which must bring us great results if we but do our duty. I would like to tell all the sisters my experience after the convention closed. Mrs. Grubb and I thought that it was about time to tackle the German work. I had faith to go to work and do the best I could in opening my own way. Mrs. Grubb assisted me with German literature. With a parcel of that I started out each day, finding my way to the German pastors of all different denominations. I called in all on thirty-eight, and the talks I had with them about our work, about the cause I represented and the arguments I had would make enough material to write a book. They all treated me well. Some opened their churches for me to speak in, but told me at the outset, no collection, as it would look to the Germans who had never had any one come to them before, as if we came only for money.

The German work ought to have a fund raised somehow. I spoke of this years ago. I hope to organize some unions among them on my return to Cleveland. I have organized two new unions since New Year and trust it is the beginning of many more this year. I am now in the country, in Cuyahoga county, and notwithstanding the great storm, planted a good union here in West View. I expect to stay in Ohio until February, then go to Louisiana for the rest of the winter. This climate feels very cold to one who has lived so long in the golden state of California.

HENRIETTA SKELTON.

Our Library Table.

A SALT WATER HERO. A good story of a sea-faring life, by Rev. Edward A. Rand, author of "Fighting the Sea," "Up North in a Whaler."

Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House, New York. Price $1.25.

THE DAILY NEWS ALMANAC for 1895, issued by the Chicago Daily News Company, is a veritable encyclopedia of facts and figures, besides being a political register of value for reference. It comprises over four hundred pages, including therein a fine resume of the year's history in public events.

THE HONEYCOMBS OF LIFE. A series of sermons compiled from addresses made by Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D. D.

These sermons are short, spiritual, sunny—full of good food for mind and soul,—twenty-five in all, making a fine collection for thoughtful perusal.

Lee & Shepard, publishers, 10 Milk St., Boston, Mass.

HOSPITAL LEAVES. Compiled by C. G. M'Culloch.

This is the second edition of a volume of verse prepared by one whose sympathies and active help are with those who lie on beds of pain. The book is greatly enlarged, but has lost nothing thereby, the selections being choice and peculiarly fitted for their mission.

Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago; New York and Toronto.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS OF SCIENTIFIC PROGRESS. By William North Rice, Professor of Geology in Wesleyan University. Published by T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York and Boston.

This volume contains four essays, the first of which gives the title and was the Presidential address before the American Society of Naturalists. The second paper is devoted exclusively to showing the reasonableness of Evolution. The third paper, delivered before the Philosophical club of Yale University, is "The Degree of Probability of Scientific Belief," and the last is entitled "Genesis and Geology." The little volume is instructive and readable.

THE COLLEGE WOMAN. By Charles Franklin Thwing, LL. D., president of the College for Women of Western Reserve University. Published by the Baker & Taylor Co., 5 and 7 E. 16th St., New York city. Price $1.

President Thwing's last published work, "Within College Walls," might properly have been called "The College Man." The present book makes a sister volume, which the author is in every way qualified to write. His life as a student at Harvard and as president of the Western Reserve University and Adelbert College at Cleveland, together with the exhaustive study devoted to the details and statistics of nearly every phase of college experience, and the special work done on his book, entitled "The Family," have thoroughly fitted him to treat, with exceptional title to be heard, the subject of the young woman who seeks cultivation at college, both in relation to the family at home and the artificial family within college walls.

A book that ought to be upon the study table of every teacher is A NEW LIFE IN EDUCATION, by Prof. Fletcher Durell. This book is published by the American Sunday-school Union of Philadelphia, being a prize volume issued under the provisions of the John C. Green income fund. The author discusses elaborately, exhaustively, yet with sustained elasticity in style, the place of the religious element in education and the "place and function of the highest type of education in the immediate future." One of the finest chapters in the book is entitled "The New Education and Christ," from which a quotation may be acceptable: "But Jesus did also what the modern teacher has not learned to do in anything like an adequate way; he rose from all starting points to universal spiritual truth. With the woman of Samaria He passed on to speak of that water of life of which if a man drink he shall never thirst. . . . The difference between Rabbinic teaching and Jesus' method is vividly shown at the Feast of the Tabernacles during the last year of His ministry. At the close of this feast it was a custom for a procession, led by priests, to fetch water from the Pool of Siloam, and pour out the same at an altar in the court of the Temple. It had long been a question of dispute in the schools whether the water should be poured in a funnel at the top of the altar or at the base. One high priest had ventured to pour it in at the base, and had by this act brought on a riot, in which six thousand people perished. But Jesus stands at this feast and cries, 'If any man thirst let him come unto me.' Thus in all His teaching Jesus ever rose to a lofty idealism. He everywhere presents and makes final and supreme that ideal upper half, which modern education in a great degree so lamentably lacks."

TEMPLE RECEIPTS.

Michigan—Belding: L. T. L., 95 cts.; Burton: Mrs. M. Devendorf, $1.75; Burr Oak: W. C. T. U., $1.35; Mrs. B. F. Sheldon, $3.65; Chesaning: Mrs. T. E. W. Adams, $3.65; Douglas: Mrs. Sarah K. Grover, $3.65; Denton: Charlotte Cobb, $1; Detroit: Mrs. G. W. Scripps, $2.50; A. A. Craig, 10 cts.; Flint; S. M. S. Woodin, $1 and $3.75; Hillsdale; Mrs. F. W. Straight, $5; Iron Mountain: Mrs. A. M. Tuten, $3.80; Ionia: Jamie Nichols, $3.65; Jackson: Katie Urch, $1; Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, 50 cts.; Ingham county W. C. T. U., $56; Lowell: Mrs. Barrett, 25 cts.; Mt. Clemens: W. C. T. U., $1.10; Marine City: Mrs. H. C. Mousey, 25 cts.; Mancelona: W. C. T. U., $1.50; North Muskegon: W. C. T. U., $10; Miss Lelia E. Johnson, $1; Niles: A. T. Barrett, $1; Manistee: W. C. T. U., $15; New Haven: Mrs. M. B. Milton, $3.65; Mrs. Amelia B. Crawford, $1; Pierport: W. C. T. U., 40 cts.; Romeo: Mrs. E. M. Partch, $1; Red Jacket: Mary MacDonald, $4.35; Ithaca: W. C. T. U., $3; Richland: Lucinda H. Jackson, $1; Fifth District W. C. T. U., $100; Sturgis: Mrs. J. A. Kyte, $2; St. Ignace: M. R. Stringham, $7.30; Union City: Mr. J. S. Antisdale, $1; Mr. M. Zimmerman, $1; Mr. F. Johnson, $1; Mr. A. C. McCrary, $1; Mrs. H. E. McCrary, $1; Mrs. Mary Collins, $1; Mrs. T. B. Buell, $1; Vermontville: W. C. T. U., $8; West Leroy: W. C. T. U., $10; Weston: Mrs. N. B. Quick, $1; Cherryhill: W. C. T. U., $1.

Montana—Deer Lodge: Bettie C. Williams, $1; Kalispell: Clara K. Wooly, $1; Helena: Frances E. Willard W. C. T. U., $25; Red Lodge: Mrs. L. P. Bancroft, $1; Bozeman: Emma C. Clothier, $1.

New Hampshire—Colbrook: Mrs. A. T. Osgood, $1; Center Sandwich: W. C. T. U., $1; Derry Depot: Mrs. L. E. Graves, $2.50; Exeter: Mrs. Eliza Scott, $1; Henniker: Mrs. L. W. Peabody, $3.65; Keene: Sarah E. Darling, $1; Tilton: W. C. T. U., $10 and $25; Portsmouth: Margaret J. Laughton, 10 cts. and 20 cts.; Peterborough: W. C. T. U., $5; Abby E. McIntire, for state W. C. T. U., $10.

SARA G. JOHNSON,
To June 1, 1894. Financial Sec'y.

POLYGLOT PETITION.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

Names. | Residences.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, bilious headache, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, loss of appetite, sallow skin, etc., when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

Go by the book. Pills 10¢ and 25¢ a box. Book free at your druggist's or write B. F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

The Wearing quality of spoons and forks is the test of their real value. STERLING SILVER INLAID spoons and forks have the wearing qualities of solid silver. Why? Because silver is inlaid in back of bowl and handle before plating. Not to be confounded with sectional plate, "xii" or "xiv". These are not inlaid.

Guaranteed 25 years.

Patented.

Each article stamped on the back: E. STERLING INLAID M'F'G. CO.

For sale by all jewelers. Made only by The Holmes & Edwards Silver Co., Bridgeport, Ct.

New York salesroom 2 Maiden Lane, (second door from Broadway). A complete line of Solid Siver, Plated Ware and Novelties. 14

THE HOLLY SPRINGS ROUTE OF THE ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. TO FLORIDA

is a new, quick and direct line (effective Dec. 2,) from Chicago, via

HOLLY SPRINGS BIRMINGHAM AND ATLANTA

to Jacksonville and all Florida Points, and such principal points south as Birmingham, Ala., Atlanta, Augusta, Macon and Savannah, Ga., and Charleston, S. C. By it one can leave Chicago at 1.35 p. m., daily, and arrive Birmingham 2.50 p. m., Atlanta 8.50 p. m. the next day, and at Jacksonville 9.55 a. m. the second morning after leaving Chicago, and can make the journey for the entire distance in a Pullman

SLEEPING CAR FROM Chicago to Jacksonville

with but one change, and that at a seasonable hour on the train en route, to a reservation in a through Jacksonville car, which reservation can be made through from starting point. Ask for Special Florida Folder of I. C. R. R. issue; they, as well as tickets and full information, can be obtained of your Local Ticket Agent, or by addressing A. H. HANSON, G. P. A., Chicago, Ill.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED. DIABETES FLOUR

Also Gluten Dyspeptic Flour, Barley Crystals, and Patent Biscuit Cake and Pastry Flour. Unrivaled in America or Europe.

Pamphlets and Baking Samples Free. Write Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U. S. A.

(A Swell Affair.)

DENT'S TOOTHACHE GUM

STOPS TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY.

Ask for DENT'S; take no other. Sold everywhere, or by mail 15 cts. C. S. DENT & CO., DETROIT, MICH.

Dent's Corn Gum Cures Corns, Bunions, Warts.

A $1 Magazine for 30c.

Send 30 cents and names of 6 people who might subscribe, and we will send you THE ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE a full year. The price of the magazine is $1 a year. A sample copy for 6 cents. Address

ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE 2819 OILVE ST. ST. LOUIS, MO.

HOME STUDY. A thorough and practical Business Education in Book-keeping, Shorthand, etc., given by MAIL at student's home. Low rates. Cat. free. Trial lesson 10c. Write to BRYANT & STRATTON, 77 College Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

MILLER'S HOTEL. New York City, 39 West 26th Street. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

Purity and White Cross Literature.

THE PHILANTHROPIST, Monthly, 50 cents a year. BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, LEAFLETS, PLEDGE CARDS, &c. THE PHILANTHROPIST PUB CO., 39 Nassau St., New York.

Mother! Mother! Mother!

SET YOUR CHILD TO WORK.

The Young Crusader

will send a PRIZE to the boy or girl securing largest number of subscribers before APRIL 1.

Send for January CRUSADER and read the particulars. Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N, THE TEMPLE, Chicago, Ill.

You will find the "White Ribbon Hymnal" a great help in temperance meetings and song services. Price 35c.

Kernels.

IT was New Year's morning, and Mollie was looking out of the window with a very disappointed look on her face.

"Why so sad, little one?" asked her mother.

"I's dest lookin' out at de new year," she replied. "I tan't see dat it's any newer-lookin' dan de old one."

TEACHER—And Lot's wife—

Pupil—Was turned into a pillar of salt. Say, teacher, that's the first pillar-case mentioned in history, isn't it?

YOU can't keep a dead level long, if you burn everything down flat to make it. Why, bless your soul, if all the cities of the world were reduced to ashes, you'd have a new set of millionaires in a couple of years or so, out of the trade in the potash. —Holmes.

NEVER forget that it is not necessary, in order to overcome gigantic difficulties, that one's strength should be gigantic. Persevering exertion is much more than strength. —Hugh Miller.

MARGARET, who is a little over a year old, has been limited in her zoölogical knowledge to the three common domestic animals she had seen, until recently in the Catskill Mountains, where she is spending the summer, two performing bears came along. She shouted with delight and insisted on kissing them, but was much puzzled to know what they were. First she called them meows, then bow-wows, then moos. But when they at length stood up on two feet and walked around, she called out in a tone of disgust at herself for her stupidity, "Oh, man!"

"WHAT was Washington's father, Jack?" asked the teacher. "The grandfather of his country."

DR. FRANCIS PARKMAN, the late historian, had a strict idea of justice. A friend met him one day walking along the street leading a street boy with either hand. "What in the world are you doing, Parkman?" asked his friend. "I found that Johnny here had eaten all of the apple instead of dividing with his little brother. I am going to buy another for the younger boy and make Johnny watch him while he eats it."

NOTHING is sweeter than love, nothing stronger, nothing higher, nothing broader, nothing better, either in heaven or earth, because love is born of God, and, rising above all created things, can find rest in Him alone.—Thomas a' Kempis.

ONE day the children were having an object lesson on the blue heron. The teacher called attention to its small tail, saying, "The bird has no tail to speak of." The next day she asked the scholars to write a description of the bird, and a little German girl wound up by saying, "The bird has a tail, but it must not be talked about."

GENERAL BOOTH tells a story of how the consolations of religion were administered in one of Her Majesty's prisons: "What! Hawkins dead?" exclaimed the chaplain to the warden on entering the prison and learning that an inmate had expired; "why did you not acquaint me?" "Well, sir, 'twere midnight," stolidly replied the official, "and I didn't like to disturb you; but I managed it all right. 'Orkins,' says I, 'you've been a bad 'un.' 'Yes,' says he. 'Orkins, you can't expect to go to 'ev'n.' 'No,' says he. 'Then, Orkins,' says I, 'you must go to the other place.' 'Yes,' says he. 'And, oh, Orkins,' says I, 'how thankful you ought to be to have anywhere to go to at all.'"

MRS. W.—If woman were given the credit she deserves I don't think man would be quite so prominent in the world's history.

MR. W.—I should say you are right. If she could get all the credit she wanted, he'd be in the workhouse.

LIFE is a burden—bear it;
Life is a duty—dare it;
Life is a thorn-crown—wear it
Though it break your heart in twain.
Though the burden crush you down,
Close your lips and hide your pain;
First the cross and then the crown.
—Father Ryan.

BREAD FOR DYSPEPTICS.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the Dyspepsia Flour prepared by Farwell & Rhines, of Watertown, N. Y. It is a wheat flour containing all the life-giving elements of three kinds of wheat, only a small part of the wheat kernel being used, and is pronounced by physicians to be a most delicate and acceptable nutriment in all stomach and intestinal troubles. This flour, while possessing the highest degree of purity and quality, is sold at a price within the reach of all. Those who are interested can secure pamphlets and cooking samples by sending their name and address to the manufacturers.

Publisher's Notes.

We hope you noticed the superior quality of paper on which last week's UNION SIGNAL was printed, and those beautiful illustrations of our promising young artist, Miss Neill. When we reach the 100,000 mark we shall give you that quality all the time, and when you look again at these artistic offers please note above them, "For One New Subscriber," "For Two New Subscribers," "For Five New Subscribers," and we should be glad to know which premium you are striving for.

For One New Subscriber.

Regular price, 35c.

Why not supply your union with Hymnals? If each member would send us one new name we could all sing together.

* * *

For Two New Subscribers.

Regular price, 50c.

A most forcible presentation of the temperance question from the standpoint of a "third party Prohibitionist."

* * *

For Five New Subscribers.

Regular price, $3.

A noteworthy book by Mary Allen West, written with a purpose—to make better men and women. It is a cyclopedia of home-making.

Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

JUST ISSUED.

A NEW LEAFLET.

No. 15 of the Total Abstinence Series,

What It Costs.

It is a vivid setting forth of what the drink traffic costs, not only in dollars and cents, but also in grain, in flour, in bread, in human lives. The figures are appalling.

Two Million Boys

from each generation required to keep the saloons running! This leaflet is an eye-opener, and, like all our total abstinence leaflets, specially adapted for distribution at public meetings.

PRICE:

| | |
|---|---|
| For 5, or less, each | $ 01 |
| Per 100 | 15 |
| Per 1,000 | 1 25 |

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

State L. T. L. Superintendents.

Do you know about

THE CRUSADER BANNER?

Has your state L. T. L. ever held it?
Why not?
Send for January issue of YOUNG CRUSADER, and then get the children interested.

Books for Mothers and Daughters.

Confidential Talks with Young Women. By LYMAN B. SPERRY, M. D., Lecturer on Sanitary Science, Carleton College, Minn Author of "Concerning Narcotics," "Confidential Talks with Young Men," etc. With introduction by Frances E. Willard and Mary Wood Allen. 16mo, cloth, 75c.

This helpful volume, treating an important subject from a Christian, medical point of view, should be carefully read, and its contents imparted to the daughters of to-day.

In all the long catalogue of useful books published by Revell, I know of none more likely to do noble service than Dr. Sperry's two series of "Confidential Talks with Young Men and Young Women." These books treat of subjects the most delicate in an absolutely plain and fearless way without that mischievous vagueness so often assumed by writers of such books—a prudery that aggravates by its half-suggestions whatever pruriency may be lurking in the mind of the reader.—Golden Rule.

The Science of Motherhood. BY HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life." Paper, board and illuminated cover. 12mo, 35c.

"To be a mother is the grandest vocation in the world. No other human being has a position of such power and influence. She holds in her hands the destiny of nations, for to her is necessarily committed the making of the nation's citizens." This extract from the author's prefatory chapter but enunciates the principle of the little volume, and our readers are sufficiently familiar with the gifted author's former volumes to realize that in this new line of thought they will have a helpful treatise.

DAINTY GIFTS.

A GIFT OF PEACE. Peace texts for 365 days. By ROSE PORTER. Daintily bound in white vellum; pansy cover design; silver top; boxed. A companion volume to "A Gift of Love."

Our Special Price, postpaid, $1.

A Gift of Love. Love texts for 365 days. By ROSE PORTER. Fifth Edition. Uniform with "A Gift of Peace."

Our Special Price, postpaid, $1.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKS by F. B. MEYER

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE SERIES.

Key Words to the Inner Life.

Future Tenses of the Blessed Life.

Present Tenses of the Blessed Life.

"He always has something to say that is suggestive."—Sunday-School Times.

The Shepherd Psalm.

"Worth its weight in gold."—Central Baptist.

Christian Living.

"A small book, but mighty in power."—Interior.

Elegantly bound in white vellum and silver top, each, 60 cents; the five volumes in neat case, $3.

Since the days of Miss Havergal's "Kept for the Master's Use," no devotional books have attained the deserved popularity that is accorded the Christian Life Series, by F. B. Meyer.

"Few books of recent years are better adapted to instruct and help Christians than those of this author. He is a man 'mighty in the Scriptures.'"—D. L. Moody.

"I do not know of any writer whose works on 'The Life More Abundant' I could more heartily recommend than those of Mr. Meyer."—Rev. B. Fay Mills.

HANNAH WHITALL SMITH'S WORKS.

Just Out.

Every-Day Religion; or, The Common-Sense Teaching of the Bible. By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life." 12mo, cloth, $1.

"In preparing these Lessons, I have aimed not so much to get at the doctrinal truths of our religion, as at the every-day, practical common-sense principles; and to show how to apply these principles to our week-day lives."—Preface.

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life. 175th Thousand.

THE "STANDARD EDITION." 12MO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| No. 1. | Paper | $ 50 |
| 2. | Cloth | 75 |
| 3. | Cloth, gilt edges | 1 00 |
| 4. | ½ white cloth, boxed | 1 25 |

THE "HANDY CLASSIC EDITION." 16MO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| No. 3. | Cloth, gilt edges | $ 85 |
| 3½. | Half white vellum, gilt edges | 1 00 |
| 4. | French morocco, seal | 1 50 |
| 12. | Best German calf, embossed | 2 25 |
| 14. | Best German calf, padded | 2 50 |

Nos. 4, 12 and 14, are each gilt edges, round corners, boxed.

Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

PICTURE LEAFLETS

What the Robins told the Apple Blossoms.
2 A Bible Story.
3 Hands out, Young Man.
4 My Soldier Boy.
5 How to use Money.
6 Daisy's Letter.
7 Story of a Temperance Block.
8 Jack.
9 The Boy's Promise.
10 One Room in House Beautiful.
11 Phil's Pony.
12 The Boy's Victory.
13 Teddy.

Price, Per 100 - - - $ .15
" " 1,000 - - - 1.00

Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill...

Two Mince Pies, equal to our Grandmother's, from each package of None-Such Mince Meat, without the worry and work. For sale by all Grocers.

MERRELL-SOULE CO.,
Syracuse, N. Y.

Publisher's Notes.

Young Women.

New Series Oak and Ivy Leaf...

Official Organ Young Women's Christian Temperance Union.

12 Pages. - Published Monthly. - 50c. a Year.
JENNIE A. STEWART, Editor.

★

A welcome change has taken place in our Y paper during the year. Enlarged and improved it is an attractive paper for the general reader as well as the young folks within the white-ribbon fold. The new list of departments includes:

News of the Month (in temperance, religious, political and educational circles); Special Articles (biography, travel, interviews, etc.); Queen's Gardens (poems, stories and sermonettes); Worth Repeating; Editorial; Official (messages and hints from the leaders in Y work); College Corner; Kindred Societies; Have You Read——? Brothers of Girls; Good Times; Girls at Home; By Mail; Silhouettes; Y Round Table and Pearls and Feathers.

TERMS TO UNIONS.

★

Single copies, one year, each .....50c
Five copies on one order, one year, each, 40c
Any number of copies, for distribution, each..... 4c

★

TERMS TO SOLICITORS.

One copy, one year.....50c

For clubs of five or more, the solicitor may retain 10 cents of each cash subscription. After the first club is sent the solicitor's name will be entered, and ten cents may be retained for each subsequent cash subscription.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Young Women to one address, one year, $1.40.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

JUST WHAT YOU WANT. WHAT?

THE CRUSADE SPOON.
New Prices.

We are happy to give our patrons the benefit of the reduction in silver by offering the Crusade Souvenir Spoon at the following prices:

CRUSADE SPOONS.

| FORMER PRICE. | | REDUCED PRICE. | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Teaspoons, - - | $2 25 | Now, - - | $1 75 |
| " gilded bowl, | 2 75 | " - - - | 2 25 |
| After dinner coffee spoons, - - - | 1 50 | Now, - - - | 1 00 |
| After dinner coffee spoons, gilded bowl, | 1 75 | Now, - - | 1 25 |

These spoons will commend themselves to workers as especially fitting souvenirs, both of the birth and the "majority" year of the W. C. T. U.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

The subject for the
JANUARY BIBLE READING
is Pentecostal Preparation and is particularly suggestive as a starting point for the work of the year.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

QUIET MOMENTS,

A Series of Twelve Bible Readings by Hannah Whitall Smith

upon the following subjects:

| | |
|---|---|
| Service. | Yokes. |
| The Hidden God. | Thorns. |
| What is His Name? | Peace. |
| God's Thoughts vs. Man's Thoughts. | A Lesson of John 10. |
| The Feasts of the Lord. | Things that are Shaken. |
| | God our Fortress. |
| | Garments. |

These Readings, published in 1887–88, are every bit as valuable helps now as then. The paper on which they are printed may show signs of age, but the readings themselves are the Sword of the Spirit—they never grow old, never wear out. Indeed, the oftener they are used the keener the blade, the more burnished the weapon, the more thoroughly furnished the user unto every good work.

But just because the date upon them is 1887 and 1888, this valuable series of twelve Readings, neatly bound in paper, is offered at

Ten Cents Per Copy.

Workers, send for it!

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

The beautiful verses by Mary T. Lathrap,

"THERE'S A SHADOW ON THE HOME,"

with music by Lucy Rider Meyer, are arranged as a "Battle Song of the Y's," an alto or bass solo, with the chorus,

"We are Coming to the Rescue."

and are found in the collection of songs compiled for the Y. W. C. T. U. by Anna A. Gordon. To meet the general demand we publish the words and music in leaflet form for convenient use in the

Memorial Services

to be held by unions throughout the country in loving memory of our promoted leader.

PRICE:

| | |
|---|---|
| Single copy.....$ | 1 |
| 50 copies ..... | 40 |
| 100 copies..... | 75 |
| 500 copies..... | 3 00 |
| 1,000 copies ..... | 5 00 |

No orders filled for less than ten copies.

This is a most fitting time also to circulate leaflets written by the peerless prohibition orator, now passed from our sight. Unions would do well to order a supply. They are:

National Leaflets.

No. 1. The National W. C. T. U.
No. 65. After Twenty Years.

Of the "Timely Talk Series," No. 17 contains two "Talks":

1. On Which Side Are You?
By Frances E. Willard

and

2. The Seen and the Unseen.
By Mary T. Lathrap

PRICE OF NATIONAL LEAFLETS:

| | |
|---|---|
| Per package of 10.....$ | 10 |
| Per 100 ..... | 90 |
| Per 1,000..... | 7 50 |

PRICE OF TIMELY TALKS:

| | |
|---|---|
| Per 100 .....$ | 30 |
| Per 1,000..... | 2 50 |

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

BIBLE READINGS

JANUARY—"Pentecostal Preparation."
Miss Anna Downey
FEBRUARY—"Power from on High."
Mrs. Anna M. Palmer

PRICE:

| | |
|---|---|
| Single copies, per year.....$ | 12 |
| 10 copies, per year, to one address... | 1 00 |
| Numbers published prior to January, 1895, per 100 ..... | 25 |

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

RESPONSIVE READINGS

JANUARY—"Prohibition Cross Fire."
D. D. Tower
FEBRUARY—"The Children's Paper."
Miss Ada M. Melville

PRICE:

| | |
|---|---|
| Single copies, per year.....$ | 10 |
| 13 copies, per year, to one address ... | 1 00 |
| Numbers published prior to January, 1895, per 100 ..... | 25 |

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Weak Mothers

and all women who are nursing babies, derive almost inconceivable benefits from the nourishing properties of

Scott's Emulsion

This is the most nourishing food known to science. It enriches the mother's milk and gives her strength. It also makes babies fat and gives more nourishment to growing children than all the rest of the food they eat.

Scott's Emulsion has been prescribed by physicians for twenty years for Rickets, Marasmus, Wasting Diseases of Children, Coughs, Colds, Weak Lungs, Emaciation and Consumption.

Send for pamphlet on Scott's Emulsion. FREE.

Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All Druggists. 50 cents and $1.

WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL

Price 35 cents.

Best collection of songs yet published. Secure one by sending one new subscriber for THE UNION SIGNAL.

★ ★ ★

.....GLIMPSES OF FIFTY YEARS.....

Price, cloth .....$2.25
Half morocco, gilt edge .... 3.00
Full morocco, gilt edge .... 3.75

Over 50,000 of this autobiography of Miss Willard's have been sold in America, and a leading firm has now brought out an English edition, under the title "My Happy Half Century." We have still on hand a large supply of "Glimpses," and agents will find it one of the most attractive books offered to the public.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
The Temple, Chicago

Signal Notes.

ALL the police judges of Madras, India, are professed Christians.

A NEWSPAPER in Helsingfors, Finland, is edited and managed entirely by women.

THE Annual Register of the Scottish Temperance League for 1895 has recorded: Adult members, 9,133; juvenile members, 2,438. Total membership, 11,571. Affiliated societies and Templar lodges, 421.

THE Indian appropriation bill provides for a committee of five members of Congress to investigate before December next all Indian expenditures by the government, and embody its conclusions in the form of a bill.

BEER as well as spirits cannot now be sold in Christiania between the hours of five p. m. Saturday and eight a. m. Monday. Exceptions are made in favor of some cafés and restaurants "where no abuse (!) is feared."

THE anti-opium delegation in England, consisting of Mr. Bautch, Mr. Man Sukh Lal and Mr. Kanaga Ratnam, of India, have been everywhere well received. Rev. Mr. Dyer, whose health was greatly shattered by his confinement in the India prison, is slowly convalescing.

CHICAGO'S investigation of public schools has exposed a sad state of affairs in some buildings, while others are beyond criticism as regards sanitation and fire escapes. The Haven school was reported to be surrounded by saloons, six in the block on which it fronts and one within two hundred feet of the entrance.

AN attempt to open hotel bars this year has been defeated in the Island of Guernsey where Sunday closing has been in effect for twenty-five years. Ere another quarter of a century elapses, the inhabitants will awaken no doubt to the desirability of closed saloons every day of the week.

NORMANDY'S law against intoxication is that on the third conviction for public drunkenness, the offender is liable to the following: 1, Loss of his vote; 2, May not be voted for; 3, May not serve on a jury; 4, May not exercise any administrative faculty (such as acting as executor of a will); 5, Loses the right to carry arms.

THE New Zealand legislature, founded on co-citizenship, is taking some advance steps as might have been expected. The lower house has prohibited the sale of intoxicants at its bar and has adopted a time limit for debates. The latter fact moves the Review of Reviews to remark: "It is a curious comment upon the various proverbial saying as to 'female loquacity,' that the first Antipodean session in which women had a voice, should have a drastic time-limit upon the chatter of Parliament."

FINLAND long ago decreed local option and under its enforcement the country has changed from being given over to drink to a condition of practical total abstinence. It was supposed in other times that in cold countries it was absolutely necessary to take spirits, but that fallacy which fed the liquor traffic has been put away with many others of similar character; indeed, the development of science and invention have been the two worst foes of the drink delusion.

THERE are now nearly three hundred young men and women in training at the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago. Every night witnesses their presence in a large number of missions in different parts of the city, while many lowly homes are made more cheerful and bright by the systematic visitation of the young ladies of the Institute, who spend their afternoons in house to house visitation, carrying the glad news of a Saviour born, a Father's love, and a Christian sympathy for the lost. Of those who formerly attended the Institute, one hundred and fifty-three are pastors or pastors' assistants in sixteen denominations; sixty-nine are home missionaries; sixty-seven are foreign missionaries; twenty are secretaries in Young Men's or Young Women's Christian Associations; twenty are employed by Sunday-school boards; ninety are evangelists; twenty-five are superintendents of city missions; fifteen are teachers in educational institutions, and one hundred and forty are pursuing their studies in theological seminaries and medical schools for home and foreign work. Thus there are, with those now at the Institute, nine hundred and two men and women at work night and day the year round. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman has become vice-president of the Institute.

BRONCHITIS. Sudden changes of the weather cause Bronchial Troubles. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" will give effective relief.

CURE OF PAIN

Is certainly the most important object of medicine.

Dr. J. H. McLean's Volcanic Oil Liniment

Gives instant relief in cases of Scalds, Burns, Wounds, Bruises, Sprains, Aches, Chilblains, Itch, Frostbites, Sore Nipples, Cramps, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, etc. Easily applied.

SOOTHING AND PENETRATING.

For sale everywhere. Price, 25c., 50c. and $1.00 per bottle.

THE DR. J. H. McLEAN MEDICINE CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

"A disease known is half cured."

If your house is dirty

Buy a cake of SAPOLIO. It is a solid cake of Scouring Soap used for all cleaning purposes except the laundry. Try it.

You are judged by your house just as much as by your dress. Keep it neat and clean and your reputation will shine. Neglect it and your good name will suffer. Do not think that house-cleaning is too troublesome; it is worth all it costs, especially if you reduce the outlay of time and strength by using SAPOLIO.

SCOTT'S ROSES with a record of forty-six years, will give better satisfaction than cheap, forced plants from unknown houses. Our Catalogue this year, though handsomer than ever, is an exponent of the times. Gardens fairer than ever, at less cost, are made possible by its Special Features of Premiums, Discounts, Club Offers, and Low Prices on the BEST PLANTS, SEEDS, and BULBS. Write for it to-day—it is free.

ROBERT SCOTT & SON, 19th and Catharine Sts., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1895

"The Leading American Seed Catalogue."

A handsome book of 174 pages with many new features for 1895—hundreds of illustrations, pictures painted from nature—it tells all about the BEST SEEDS that grow, including rare novelties that cannot be had elsewhere. Any seed planter is welcome to a copy FREE. Send your address to-day on a postal.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Seed Growers, PHILADELPHIA.

QUITE THE BEST WOMAN'S PAPER IN GREAT BRITAIN.

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL

EDITED BY

LADY HENRY SOMERSET

AND

ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH

Is a weekly review of woman's work in philanthropy and reform, and the OFFICIAL ORGAN of

The British Women's Temperance Association

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL is thoroughly abreast of the times, and an authority on the advanced movement now everywhere occupying the mind of thinking women. It contains interviews with prominent women; serial stories by well-known authors; Books Worth Reading, by Lady Henry Somerset; social sketches contributions from Miss Frances E. Willard, and, in all, comprises a timely up-to-date journal for thoughtful women.

Subscription $1.58, postpaid, per annum, to any address within postal union.

Foreign and Colonial Subscribers will please remit by Money Order, payable to ALLIE ROSSETER WILLARD, Business Manager, 33-34 Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, London, E. C., England.

COCKLE SHELLS AND SILVER BELLS.

A charming collection of short poems by Mrs. M. F. Butts, known to white-ribboners everywhere by her contributions in prose and verse to THE UNION SIGNAL. It is a little volume which, with its nursery rhymes and lullabys, and its sunshiny verses about roses and posies, and birds and babies, will delight the little ones.

Price, board covers, 50 cents.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

LETTERS FROM THE PSALM COUNTRY,

By Mary A. Lathbury,

Which was published in THE UNION SIGNAL of August 30, has been issued as a Department Leaflet (Evangelistic) No. 76.

It comes to one's soul like a breath from the hills of God. Buy it for all your friends.

Price, per 100 ..... 15
" 1,000 ..... 1.25

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO...

We still have on hand a limited supply of these beautiful art portfolios. If you have not seen them, by all means send for Part I, and we are sure you will want Parts II and III. A dainty and appropriate souvenir for white-ribboners to present to their friends at any season of the year.

...SEND FOR A COPY...

PART I

CONTAINS PICTURES OF

Frances E. Willard,
Lady Henry Somerset,
Mother Thompson,
Madam Willard,
Mother Wallace,
Mary Clement Leavitt,
Margaret Bright Lucas,
Mother Stewart,
Hannah Whitall Smith,
Neal Dow,
Clinton B. Fisk,
John B. Gough,
Mary Allen West

PART II

Matilda B. Carse,
Mary A. Woodbridge,
Helen M. Barker,
L. M. N. Stevens,
Clara C. Hoffman,
Letitia Youmans,
Josephine E. Butler,
George W. Bain,
Ella F. M. Williams,
Kate C. Bushnell,
Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew,
Jessie A. Ackermann,
Alice R. Palmer and General John Bidwell

PART III

CONTAINS LARGE EVANGELINE PICTURE OF

Frances E. Willard,
Esther Pugh, Caroline B. Buell,
Mary T. Lathrap,
Louise S. Rounds,
Susan S. Fessenden,
Mary T. Burt,
Margaret A. Sudduth,
Katharine Lente Stevenson,
Harriet B. Kells,
Jennie A. Stewart,
Caroline F. Grow,
Ruby I. Gilbert,
John G. Woolley.

WHITE RIBBON ART PORTFOLIO
...COUPON...

Send this coupon, together with 75c., to this office, and you will receive Parts I, II and III of our White Ribbon Art Portfolio, or with 25c. and this Coupon any one number you may designate.

Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXI.—No. 5.] CHICAGO, JANUARY 31, 1895. [Price $1.00 Per Year in Advance.

Mrs. Ursula D. Hetrick 1029 Tenth St. Evanston

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

How shall I secure a subscriber?

Give THE UNION SIGNAL your best thoughts; fill your mind with the fact that no W. C. T. U. woman can work effectively without its inspiration, and go to the next meeting of your union so enthused yourself that you can enthuse your neighbor, and the result is sure. A young woman came into our office on Wednesday, her face aglow, and, before the door closed, our own was shining, too, for she said: "I've just handed in a new subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL, and how do you suppose I got it? By reading to our union the Polyglot Petition and Mrs. Hoffman's address. I was tired, and I didn't feel the least like going to our meeting, but I thought of that Polyglot Petition, and I said the day is drawing near, and there's no time to be lost; so I went, read the Petition and Mrs. Hoffman's address, and we had such a good meeting. When it was over a new member of our union said to me, 'What paper did you find that in, and what is the price per year?' And I came away with her dollar for a year's subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL, and have just handed it with her name into the office." That's the way, dear friends. Try it, and let us report your success in "The Business Outlook."

* * *

Here's another example worthy of following. A lady from the sunny South writes: "Inclosed find $1.50; this is for my new subscriber and five copies of Miss Willard's annual address. There are women who will not buy it, but I am determined they shall read it, so I buy it for them. I want one copy sent to Mrs. ——, wife of a Presbyterian minister. They are entirely uninterested in W. C. T. U. work, are intelligent and great readers. I sent to this lady the five DAILY UNION SIGNALS; that will get her started. Then the annual address will educate her, and I hope the weekly will keep it up, and when I next visit them I will organize them—if they are not already organized." This is what we call systematic seed-sowing. We shall watch for a bountiful harvest.

* * *

Our attention has been called by a hard-working W. T. P. A. representative to a notice in one of the state papers, urging "subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL to send their subscriptions to state headquarters, as the discount allowed goes into state treasury to help with the work." While we can, of course, place no restrictions upon the manner in which the discount on UNION SIGNAL subscriptions shall be used, it was our hope that this offer would enable the local unions, through their superintendents, to develop the work and increase the number of their subscribers, and that this discount would provide a fund for distribution of free literature. It would seem hardly just to increase the fund for state work by discounts obtained from our regular subscription list. Superintendents of literature who use the percentage in car-fares, correspondence, and in "hunting" up new subscribers, encouraging the tardy, and "those who think they cannot renew" should not be discouraged by having such an appeal made for the work of the state. Out of consideration for W. T. P. A. agents, we ask that the discount on THE UNION SIGNAL be spent for disseminating more widely our temperance literature.

* * *

One faithful representative writes: "I have worked so hard to encourage the poor, weak unions that have so little money to work with, and to show the superintendents that with twenty per cent and good management they could, by getting a number of subscribers, save their commission and receive in return supplies of literature. Last year the money saved was returned to me in literature, which I divided among weak unions."

We believe a fund for free literature to be the crying need of the hour, both for state and National work, and we trust these self-sacrificing workers will be encouraged, and not disheartened. CAROLINE F. GROW, Bus. Mgr.

LAST CALL FOR PETITIONS.

All Petitions should be sent at once to Mrs. Rebecca C. Shuman, 2130 Sherman Ave., Evanston, Ill., so that they may be attached to the great roll before it is presented to the government at Washington, February 15.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

A variety of plans to solve the currency problem have been presented to the Senate.

A bill making the United States guarantor for the Nicaragua canal project has passed the senate.

Nebraska has appropriated fifty thousand dollars to the relief fund for its needy farming population.

Judge Church, of Jefferson, Ia., has enjoined all saloons in Calhoun county from operating under the mulct law.

Senor Saenz Pena has resigned the presidency of the Argentine Republic to Senor Uriburi, former vice-president.

South Dakota legislators, moved by brewery interests, have favored resubmission. The vote of the people must now sustain the prohibitory law. A letter from Mrs. Cranmer, our leader in the battle for home protection, came too late for insertion in this issue. It will appear next week.

WE would call special attention to the important communication on page 13 from Washington, relative to the white ribbon rally on February 15. The District of Columbia is sparing no pains to make this meeting a success.

THE Cleveland federation of unions has done a generous deed in voting to give the Temperance Temple at Chicago one hundred dollars, the hospital, for Cleveland room, fifty dollars, and Mrs. Skelton, the organizer, fifty dollars. This is from the fund left over from Convention expenses. Twelve unions comprise this federation.

BY unanimous vote of the state executive, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin has been elected to fill the office of state president of Michigan, made vacant by the lamented death of Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, until the annual meeting in May. The place of the convention has been changed from Petoskey to Battle Creek. Surely Mrs. Lathrap's mantle has fallen upon worthy shoulders. Mrs. Benjamin is not only a parliamentarian of renown, but a speaker and leader of great ability, and for many years the personal friend of Mrs. Lathrap.

CHICAGO was favored last week by the helpful presence of Dr. C. H. Parkhurst and Mrs. Maud Booth. The latter came in the interests of a rescue home for erring women and quickly raised three thousand dollars for the purpose. Her address to business men exclusively, in Willard Hall, was pronounced a remarkable one. Mrs. Booth's earnestness and refinement are powerful levers in her great work. Dr. Parkhurst whom everybody knows for his work's sake, is practically a stranger outside of New York, where he has given three years' brave and successful opposition to Tammany. After many urgent invitations, he finally came to Chicago to tell how the partial victory had been accomplished in Gotham and to modestly suggest some methods for the electric city. He impressed every one as a great leader, who knows exactly what he talks about. His closing sentence is indicative of the boldness and hopefulness of the entire address: "You certainly have no harder task before you here than we have had in New York. The accomplishment of it is not a matter of numbers as it is a matter of a few trusty souls combining with one another in singleness of purpose, untainted by considerations of preferment, committed in a sacrament of affectionate devotion to your city, and prepared to serve until the time ripens and the victory comes."

MEMORIAL services for Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap are to be held in Willard Hall at 3 p. m. Sunday, February 3. Mrs. Stevenson will preside and Mrs. Barker will make the principal address. Brief addresses will be made by Mrs. Carse and the presidents of the second, third and fourth Illinois districts which center in Chicago, while Mrs. Waddell, of the first district, will conduct the devotional exercises. Mrs. S. G. Johnson and her two daughters, who have become so well known in the temperance field, both as speakers and singers, are to have charge of the music, and one of Mrs. Lathrap's own poems, "Comrades Two" is to be recited by a member of one of the Chicago unions. Large delegations from all the city and suburban unions are expected to be in attendance, and the gathering will be, we trust, such an one as shall fitly honor her great name.

IT will be remembered that in several Canadian provinces the people showed by splendid majorities in the famous plebiscites of last year their ardent desire to be rid of the legalized liquor traffic. In view of this, the announcement just made by the supreme court of Canada, that the legislatures of the various provinces have no right to enact Prohibition comes like a blow in the face. There are six of these judges and two dissent from this opinion. Four men, "dressed in a little brief authority," have had the power to adjourn the question and to deny "home rule" to the provinces of Canada. This business of putting an injunction on the people is getting a little galling to the average freeman. The "dead hand" of the dead legislator and the living grip of the political judge seem to be the upper and nether millstones between which the grist of the liquor traffic and corporation is getting handsomely ground. But we must remember that evil tends to its own cure and whets the edge of its own decapitation. Let them pile their decisions one upon another; the steady tramp of the people's legions will pass over them as if they were but mole-hills, for the people only shall rule and the promised land of their inheritance shall be possessed by them, and that far sooner than hopeless hearts believe.

THE presentation of the Polyglot Petition to representatives of the United States government will take place on the evening of February 15, in Convention Hall, Washington, D. C. An all-day meeting will be held on that date, also on February 16, and a mass-meeting on the evening of the 16th. Another mass-meeting will be held on the evening of Sunday, February 17, probably addressed by Lady Henry Somerset. It is important for every white-ribboner to notice that through the courtesy and kindness of Mrs. Rachel Foster Avery, president National Council of Women, the date of the National W. C. T. U. on the program of the Council has been changed from the 28th to the 19th, so that we shall have the presentation of our work on that day and in the evening. This will greatly accommodate all white-ribboners, as it puts the exercises in which they are specially interested within a briefer compass. The change is also a great accommodation to our two chieftains, who must go to Canada, previous to the departure of Lady Henry Somerset for England, which occurs about the first of March. It goes without saying that all the officers of the National W. C. T. U. will participate in these exercises. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens is not only vice-president of the W. C. T. U., but treasurer of the Council. Other speakers will be Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Miss Belle Kearney, Miss Anna Gordon, and Miss Frances Ensign. Our Canadian sisters have also been invited. Their president, the indefatigable Mrs. Ella F. Williams, treasurer of the World's W. C. T. U., has suffered for several months from illness, but will, we hope, be able to attend. Be sure to read the official invitation on page 13 of this issue.

FOUND.

BY SARA LOUISA OBERHOLTZER.

[Translated from Johann Wolfgang von Goethe.]

Went I to the forest
On a pleasant day,
Thinking, seeking nothing
In an aimless way.

In the shade I sat me,
Near a flower stood,
Luminous its forehead,
Eyes that fairly wooed.

Reached I out to break it,
But it spoke and said,
"Shall I to the world then Thus be lost and dead?"

Carefully I dug it,
With its rootlets all,
Carried to the garden
Of a handsome hall.

There again I planted
In the stillest place,
Grows and blooms it always
With the brightest face.

Berlin, Germany.

LIFE ETCHING.

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY.

She was neither young nor beautiful, and it seemed as if the good things of life had missed her.

There is no poetry in farming, except to the summer boarder, who is not obliged to rise at dawn, and work till bedtime. The same routine, day after day. Skimming the milk, churning, getting the breakfast, serving rough, uncouth men, who banter each other with rude jokes, then the house to put in order, and dinner to get. Just a glimpse of sunshine, a scented breath from fields of clover, while she gathered the vegetables, or weeded the little garden, a sense of something beyond, in the remoteness of the world of flowers, the freedom of the bird's song.

Somehow she had never felt the irksomeness of her life as she did this morning for there seemed now no purpose in it.

Her deft hands accomplished their duties aimlessly. It had not always been so. One absorbing, soul-stirring passion comes to all of us sooner or later, thank God. It had moved the surface of her life, it had moved its depths.

She lived with memory to-day, in the long ago. Jean had been there all summer, he was going away to-day. He came up the garden walk hat in hand, his hair thrown back from his handsome face, all aglow with his artistic love of bloom and beauty. His face brightened to see her, then a shadow crossed it.

"It is dreadful to see you work like this; the slavery, the drudgery of it oppresses me. Think over what you have said again. Take back the words you said last night. Who will thank you for a life sacrifice? There is no use vowing eternal fidelity, men and women change with the years. Time paints new images on their hearts with new scenes. Go with me now. Think of a life away beyond this. Think of the emancipation of it."

As if she hadn't thought of it. Hadn't she dreamed of it all summer? Wouldn't his going leave her life desolate? Not as it had been before. No, that could never be. The memory of a love is often all the color in a landscape of a life, and hers had caught the glory in passing and fixed it on the canvas forever. But there was an invalid mother, a stern, fault-finding father, the law of whose life had been the bending of all energies and purposes to his uses. His wife, his child, as his men and horses, were subservient to his will and wishes. He could not spare her then. It never occurred to her to rebel, to think she could swerve from the hard duty of giving him her life service.

So much are we creatures of habit, so accustomed do we grow to our fetters and our treadmills, only once in long intervals does some eagle soul cleave through circumstances to light and freedom.

Now how long ago that time seemed. The grass was green over her mother's grave. Her father's new-made one piled with gold brown turf shone through the trees, and she was alone with her life and herself.

A man reined in his horses at the gate and handed her a letter.

"I thought as I would bring it over from the office for you," he said, a touch of sympathy in his voice.

It was from Jean, the first in four years. Her heart gave a great bound, her fancy was let loose, she trembled so she could not open it. She sat down to calm herself, and dream and hope. She lived over the old life in a few moments, she lived all her future, compressed into one grand dream of happiness. It is possible to condense the joy or misery of a life in a few minutes. Duty would be rewarded, love could be true, hope not in vain. The intense joy of it made her face radiant. Then she opened and read.

MY DEAR MARY:—I must tell you of my success. Wealth and even fame have come to me. You are to me what Agnes was to David Copperfield. Nothing is complete till you share it. I return soon to America. I want my wife and baby to see you and love you and the old farmhouse. We will be there almost as soon as the letter.

JEAN.

And when they came, she met them with the old, sweet heroic patience, and Jean wondered why he had never noticed before how her soul shone in her lustrous eyes.

Pittsburg, Kan.

REV. DR. LUNN AND THE W. W. C. T. U. TOUR ROUND THE WORLD.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

It now seems probable that the crusade round the world will not take place until 1896, in consequence of the commercial depression which prevails in the United States at the present time, but a few facts respecting the Rev. Dr. Lunn, who has undertaken, at the request of Lady Henry Somerset and myself, to organize this party, may be of interest to our readers.

Dr. Lunn is well known in England as an active colleague of the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, of the West London Mission, and the literary collaborator and friend of Mr. W. T. Stead, editor of the Review of Reviews.

Born in 1859, in a quiet country town, Dr. Lunn is still a young man, and the variety of his experiences and the magnitude of some of his undertakings might be supposed to be more characteristic of one of our own countrymen than of one of the ordinarily sober and staid Englishmen.

At twenty years of age he was accepted as a candidate for the Wesleyan ministry, and after having taken the theological course at one of the Wesleyan colleges, decided to go to India as a missionary of that denomination. With this object in view, he entered the medical school of the Dublin University, and was present in Dublin during the height of the Home Rule agitation. Being a strong sympathizer with the policy of Mr. Gladstone, he joined a number of ardent university spirits in organizing the Irish Home Rule Association, and crossed over to England to represent that association during the January election. In eighteen days he traveled some three thousand miles, and addressed meetings from London to Inverness and from Lincolnshire to the lake district. This unusual action on the part of a young Wesleyan minister first brought him into contact with the English Wesleyan party, and into personal acquaintance with Mr. Price Hughes. An effort was made to postpone his ordination on account of his political action, but this endeavor on the part of some of the Tory officials of Methodism was defeated after an animated debate.

Several other incidents combined to make Dr. Lunn's university course one of very special interest. The purity crusade was then at its height, and he threw himself with all possible vigor into that crusade, becoming president of the University Purity Society, and defended the action of Mr. W. T. Stead in an address delivered before that society. The combined effect of his action on the Home Rule question and the purity question, was to bring down upon him the anger of the rowdy Loyalist section of the 'Varsity students. This feeling was further intensified by the fact that at the same time Dr. Lunn was president of the University Society. A party of students, well primed with Irish whisky, broke into Dr. Lunn's rooms during his absence at a Home Rule gathering, held a characteristic "Loyalist" meeting in his rooms and destroyed his furniture, cutting up the bed and bedding, breaking the chairs and ruining the pictures.

This was, however, the attitude of only a section of the students, and Dr. Lunn's university course was marked by several distinctions of a most gratifying character. He was awarded the oratory medal of the University Theological Society, an honor never previously gained by a nonconformist student. He was also awarded the president's prize for an essay on John Wesley, and when the time came for him to leave for India, in spite of political differences with a large number of his fellow students, Dr. Lunn closed a university career which had been at once interesting, varied and honorable. In addition to the distinction gained in the divinity school, he graduated in arts, medicine and surgery, and left for India in the summer of 1887.

His career as an Indian missionary was cut short by repeated attacks of fever, and after twelve months' residence in the Madras presidency he was compelled by medical orders to return to England. During that brief stay he had, however, made many friends amongst the natives of India and had gained the acquaintance of several leaders of the Indian National Congress and other prominent men.

On his arrival in London he was at once appointed colleague to the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, on the West London mission, and a few months after his return wrote a series of articles on Indian missions in general and the Wesleyan missions in particular. In these articles he contended for the three following principles:

1. That money contributed for the evangelization of non-Christian nations should not be expended in educating the aristocracies of those nations in philosophy, political economy, mathematics and other secular subjects.

2. That education is an essential part of missionary work, but that it should be the education of Christian converts with the object of raising up a powerful Christian class amongst non-Christian nations.

3. That subject races will not be rapidly evangelized by missionaries who are identified in social position with the ruling caste of the conquering race.

The articles roused an amount of bitterness on the part of official Methodism in England which Dr. Lunn had never anticipated, and after a long struggle, into which it is not possible to enter here, Dr. Lunn severed his connection with English Methodism and became a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church of America.

In the statement which he issued at that period he said:

"So long as I remained a Wesleyan Methodist minister, 'responsible,' as the minutes of the conference expressed it, to the chairman of the second London district in all matters 'that relate to his standing as a Wesleyan minister,' it was possible for any representative of officialism to raise some personal issue, which would imperil the peace of the church and successfully prevent the proper consideration of any great questions of policy. I can now devote myself systematically and persistently to the enunciation of these great principles of missionary policy until such time as the Wesleyan Methodist Church as a whole shall come to recognize the truth of the three principles for which I contend, and shall insist upon their adoption by the Wesleyan Methodist missionary committee.

"'With a great sum obtained I this freedom.' It is no light matter to sever one's self from one's environment in mature life, but I shall consider that a great end has been gained at a comparatively small cost, if by the sacrifice of my ministerial standing in the Wesleyan Methodist Church I have paid the price which was necessary before our church could be brought to adopt that statesmanlike and evangelistic policy which has been so successful in the Indian missions of its sister church, the Methodist Episcopal Church of America."

He became acquainted with Bishop Vincent at the second Grindelwald conference and was received by the bishop into the Methodist Episcopal Church, at the Italian conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Dr. Lunn's position in England is best indicated by the fact that when he accepted Bishop Vincent's invitation to join the Methodist Episcopal Church, he was invited by Archdeacon Farrar to go to Westminster as his assistant, and was offered ordination by two English bishops. It was no doubt a very important factor in the development which events took at this point in his career, that Bishop Vincent was the originator of work on this side of the Atlantic similar in character to that of which we will now speak, by which the name of Dr. Lunn has become known all over the world.

In 1892 Dr. Lunn projected the first reunion conference which was held at Grindelwald, a lovely valley situated in the heart of the Bernese Alps. To this beautiful resort Dr. Lunn invited religious leaders of the most diverse schools of thought. The Bishop of Worcester, Père Hyacinthe, the Rev. Charles Berry, who was invited to succeed Dr. Henry Ward Beecher, Mr. Hugh Price Hughes, Mr. W. T. Stead, Mr. Percy Bunting and other eminent men gathered together under the shadow of the Alps to discuss the question of the differences which at present divide Christendom, and the possibility of healing some of these divisions. These gatherings proved remarkably successful. Over one thousand persons attended the Grindelwald conference of 1892.

In 1893 Dr. Lunn developed a literary and scientific section, somewhat on the lines of our American Chautauqua, whilst considerable attention was again given to the question of Christian reunion, and the number rose to 1,650. During this last summer the conference again showed a tendency to large development, and has been attended by over 2,500 persons. In the Chautauqua section Sir Robert Ball, Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, Mr. Edmund Gosse and others have taken part, whilst the reunion discussions have been attended by some of the most eminent dignitaries of the Established Church and some of the foremost men of English nonconformity. So striking have been these discussions that, at the instance of Dr. Lunn, who occupies the presidency of the Grindelwald conference, the different religious denominations in England have set apart Whitsunday as a day of special prayer for reunion of Christendom, and pastorals to their clergy in support of this observance of Whitsunday were issued last May by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Durham and other prelates, and by the moderator of the Church of Scotland and other nonconformist leaders.

Dr. Lunn has been greatly assisted in the work that he has undertaken for the furtherance of Christian unity by the fact that he is editor of the Review of the Churches, a religious review on similar lines to the Review of Reviews, which was started by his friend, Mr. Stead.

During 1890 and 1891 Dr. Lunn collaborated with Mr. Stead in writing a weekly letter for a syndicate of papers on the "Churches of the World," and when Mr. Stead's Review of Reviews was started he decided to publish a similar review of the religious work of the world, and secured as his co-editors in this task, Archdeacon Farrar, representing the Anglican church, Mr. Percy Bunting (editor of the Contemporary Review) as Methodist editor; Dr. Clifford, as Baptist editor; Dr. Donald Fraser, as Presbyterian editor, and Dr. Alexander Mackennal, as Congregational editor.

Dr. Lunn has also held another inter-denominational position which has given him a valuable platform for work of the character indicated. He is chaplain to the Polytechnic Young Men's Christian Institute, which has over ten thousand men students and over three thousand women students on its roll.

We have said enough to indicate briefly the importance of the work which Dr. Lunn has in hand, but he feels that it is so vital to secure America's coöperation in the Grindelwald conference that he has arranged to spend some weeks in visiting in this country, with the object of describing at meetings of ministers and others, the nature of these Swiss gatherings. At the same time he hopes to make special arrangements for a large party of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union to travel from America to England for our annual Convention in London, and then to proceed to Grindelwald. Dr. Lunn has already arranged to preach for Dr. Lyman Abbott, of Plymouth church, and to give an address at Harvard University, and we have no doubt that many of our friends will have the opportunity, before the end of February, of hearing something from the doctor's own lips of the work he has done, and of the way in which he hopes to assist the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union in its work as a world's force on behalf of sobriety.

Boston, Mass.

THE NEW REFORM.

BY J. S. HUGHES.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE AND WHITE STAR PLEDGE.

Half a century ago a mighty wave of reform swept over this country. It was the total abstinence pledge. It viewed but a single point. That point was negative and it was entirely personal in aim and end.

Those who abetted the movement were those who saw and felt the growing evil of drinking and drunkenness, and believing it to be the first enemy to society launched against it one of the mighty movements of history. That movement left the churches of America with a new standard of Christian morals, as total abstinence became the general rule in all the more spiritual churches.

The sentiment received some artificial invigorating by those who sought its aid to divert public attention from the growing slave power, but the war being ended the liquor dealers read their destiny in the manners and temper of the people toward wrong which roused their caution and excited their jealousy.

The result was, the National Liquor League or Protective Association. The attempt at prosecution of liquor dealers under old laws was found more and more difficult as time went on till active temperance workers discovered the iron hand of a new order of American savagery, organized under the innocent looking name of Protective Association. They soon saw that it was not even for the protection of so great a curse but was a system of aggression and the laws of Congress were made to favor the business; the laws in the states were weakened, their penalties modified and the courts grew so partial as to make convictions almost impossible.

Then followed what at first was chiefly meant for a protest—the organization of the Prohibition party. It was designed to meet the new situation. The liquor traffic had entirely changed situations; it had become a national liquor power, had organized for political purposes, having reference both to the protection and promotion of its interests.

The Prohibition party was bitterly denounced and opposed. The old temperance cause was entirely a moral suasion movement, and the new party was made to appear as an illegitimate heir of this grand old cause of brotherly love. It was made to seem that the new party was trying to do by coercion what had been taught to be done by love and what should be finished and consummated in the spirit of love and moral suasion.

But what was the wisdom of that total abstinence movement that was fraught with so many blessings and became parent of all the movements that followed, including the Prohibition party? It was this. Those good men and women recognized in the increase of drink our nation's chief menace, and therefore organized one of the mightiest of moral and religious forces of the world to meet and counteract this one single thing.

What wisdom does this suggest to us? That we do likewise now. And what is that greatest danger? It is not that more drinking is done in the aggregate than then. Neither is it that the liquor traffic is organized into the mightiest and wickedest monopoly that ever cursed a nation; nor that it manifestly corrupts all our municipal governments and influences legislation at Washington. Bad as all this is, a surer, nearer curse lies at the door of church members and professed reformers and patriots.

The lust for drink is wedded to the lust for gain in the dealer and the lust for political place and self has been forced to cast in its fortunes with the great power that has risen to sit on the very throne where King Cotton once ruled and nearly ruined the nation.

Wedded close to these other three lusts is that lower, deadlier, stifling worship of party. The party spirit is the bitterest of the brood and there is now the white lipped pulpit and the pew that regards the safety of business above all. Fear of business loss, fear of being in any way identified with a cause that is sworn to have defeated a great and beloved party, has penetrated to the core. The menace, the immediate danger and threat is this, that in the place whence moral soul should come forth there is a dreadful blank. This is the great, chief, nearest, deadliest enemy of the hour. Not drunkenness, nor the national infamy, but cowardice in the name of religion united to lust to keep silence.

THE REMEDY.

A new reform. A reform that without changing a single consecrated vote or hurt a righteous party a hair's breadth shall meet this new, this single, greatest curse—meet it by a total abstinence pledge, one that shall make our outward relations as sweet and strong as the old pledge made of our inner self. A pledge that shall bear upon one great elementary principle beyond cavil and reproach. Integration will follow with a conscience and a principle that shall make all national deformities impossible and all reforms certain.

For one, I have already begun to obtain signers at my meetings. Here is the pledge.

WHITE STAR PLEDGE.

Whatever abridges human life or degrades human character shall not be licensed in government, transported in commerce, nor fellowshiped in the church, and to this declaration I do hereby pledge my conduct, God helping me.

Name.....

P. O.....

This pledge recognizes that government, commerce and religion are the three great factors with which we have to do. It recognizes that they are all designed to protect, to bless and to redeem man. It declares that one and the same standard of morality shall apply to all. Its motive is the brotherhood of man.

It meets all great questions from the Christian, humanitarian standpoint.

It is nonpartisan and unsectarian and cannot hurt any good institution.

It will uncover to view many who are hiding away.

It will awake many who are asleep.

It will prove whether the church members are sound in moral character.

It will meet and counteract the present greatest danger of the world.

It comprehends all the great outward relations that connect so many with the leagued powers of evil of the day and pledges dismemberment and independence of them.

May heaven bless and prosper the new total abstinence movement until it stirs the ocean to its bottom and the waves roll over the chariots of the oppressors.

Hundreds have already signed it. Thousands and thousands of thousands wait to do so. Its agitation will open out many old questions on broader and newer grounds. Its benefits must have prime bearing on the present stagnation. The time was never more propitious; no principle more broadly stated nor circumstances more favorable to a great campaign.

Englewood, Ill.

CO-OPERATIVE HOMES FOR WOMEN.

BY MRS. C. B. HOPKINS.

In New York, in the winter of 1893, a young girl from a hospital, without employment, without money and homeless, simulated approaching maternity in order to procure shelter in a home for the dissolute. Later, when taken ill and carried to the hospital, the physicians discovered the deception and found her to be absolutely chaste. Dr. Parkhurst is authority for the statement that during the present winter virtuous women have become intoxicated that they might be admitted to shelters provided for the fallen; they knowing none for the pure. Not long ago New York was shocked by the story of a gentle and refined woman who, left in direst poverty to earn her own living alone among strangers, threw herself from her attic window, preferring death to dishonor. "I would have done any honest work, even to scrubbing," she wrote. drenched and starving, after a vain search for work in a driving storm. She had tramped the streets for weeks on her weary errand, and the only living wages that were offered her were the wages of sin.

A lady whose time is given to the unemployed writes: "There are four places within ten minutes walk of my office, where dissolute women may be sent and cared for without charge until they can be put in permanent situations where they may earn an honest living. But there is not, to my knowledge, one place in New York city where respectable women out of employment may be sent on the same conditions." These facts serve to illustrate the truth that while much is being done to reclaim the fallen, but little or no effort is being made to help the true, plain, threadbare, struggling, starving, working girl. This is the situation in New York and is much the same in all large American centers of population.

With such a condition generally prevailing, any attempt to ameliorate the trials or rescue the deserving, struggling poor should receive the most thoughtful attention. A particularly successful experiment along this line is that of the Coöperato, a coöperative home in New York city, for self-supporting and self-respecting women, who, because of small compensation or misfortunes, find it nearly impossible to secure comfortable and safe boarding houses.

The Coöperato grew out of the necessities of the winter of 1893–4, and was founded by Rev. J. A. B. Wilson, D. D., pastor of the Eighteenth Street Methodist Episcopal Church. It has been open now about a year and nearly one hundred women have had a home in it. It is in no sense denominational, nor is it reformatory in character.

The present home is located at 301 West Eighteenth street, and has accommodations for sixteen boarders. The terms are two dollars and a half and three dollars per week, with the privilege of doing their own sewing and laundrying without extra expense. With the exception of furniture and rent the receipts meet the current expenses. As many as possible are taken who are without money and looking for employment.

The coöperation appears in the girls caring for their own rooms; and where their wages are insufficient to enable them to pay their bills in cash, they may make up a part of their expense in work. Those with neither money nor position do the work of the place and are allowed sufficient time to seek regular employment. By this method they do not become objects of charity, with its attendant pauperization. It also prevents them from contracting debts, which are hard to pay out of their small earnings afterward.

As girls advance in business to comfortable salaries, they are encouraged to look for good boarding houses elsewhere that the women of meagre support may have this advantage. Beside, this is not intended to be a competitor of boarding houses, upon which hundreds of good people depend for a living.

The founder of this home contemplates procuring further accommodations upon the same idea as fast as funds can be raised. Eight hundred dollars will pay the rent for one year, in New York, and furnish rooms for sixteen girls with absolutely no other expense. When once furnished each house can be maintained and sustained by simply meeting the rental; the receipts from guests defraying all other expenses. The purpose is not to open one large place, but many small ones, where no timid person will be lost in the crowd. Motherly supervision and advice is needed for these unprotected and often tempted girls. It will be the duty of the homekeeper to know and feel a personal interest in every one of them.

From this outline it is easy to see that the plan of these coöperative homes is a very simple one. Experience has demonstrated its practicability. Beyond a doubt the present year will see several of these homes started in New York, and, in all probability, this system of coöperation will become thoroughly established. There is no reason why this same method may not be applied to the solution of like problems that exist in other crowded centers of population.

New York City.

HOW TO HELP NEBRASKA'S POOR.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—It has been brought to our attention by letters received from eastern unions, that the reports of need and suffering caused by drouth and failure of crops in Nebraska have been denied and the impression created that Nebraska could care for her own needy.

The state W. C. T. U. is well organized for relief work, and doing all they can. Other organizations are also doing good work. But the effect of this hard year is greatly felt in every part of the state, and the best we can do will surely be inadequate to the needs of the large population who have lost everything, having nothing whatever to depend upon for themselves or their stock.

Our state president, Mrs. Walker, has visited in some parts of the state, not the worst, and reports actual destitution and almost starvation in many instances coming under her observation. Some of the newspapers of the state, fearing for the "credit of the state," make little mention of this, even denying it sometimes. But it does exist, and in such measure that help from outside the state will be very gratefully received. Unions in the East desiring to send assistance, may feel perfectly safe in sending relief supplies to the following women: Mrs. Margaret C. Happersett, Indianola, president tenth district; Mrs. Nettie Doty, Wauneta, president eleventh district; Mrs. L. H. Blackburn, Atkinson, president sixteenth district; Mrs. Abby Gay, Dustin, postoffice Dustin, railroad station Stuart, and Mrs. Jane L. Goff, Hazard, Sherman county, president local unions.

These will carefully distribute and send to needy points in their various districts. If cash collections can be sent to these ladies to pay freight when re-shipped, it will facilitate the work.

We are very grateful for what you are doing for our suffering ones. In the brighter days to come we hope to do by you as you are doing by us.

Yours in the bonds of Christian work.

MRS. S. M. WALKER, State Pres.
MRS. MARY M. LANTRY, Vice-Pres.
MRS. DORA V. WHEELOCK, Cor. Sec.
MISS ELLA M. WATSON, Rec. Sec.
MRS. E. M. COBB, Treas.

A TEMPERANCE TRIO.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Effective decorations, fine music, a cultured audience, in which prominent divines and well-known citizens figure, with addresses by Dr. Parkhurst, Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard, made the Carnegie Hall meeting, January 18, given under the auspices of the Loyal Legion Temperance Society of New York, a great success.

Dr. Thompson introduced our own Mrs. Barnes, president of the society, who said: "Our society believed that at this critical time New York needed this meeting to help the community as well as our organization, which by educating the future voters of this city is helping solve the vexed questions of capital and labor and temperance." She introduced Dr. Parkhurst as "the Christian hero of New York." He paid a fine tribute to the society's work, and said: "I love pure, simple, unadulterated boys. I wish half my audience were boys. They are so open to good impressions, bright and accessible. They have consciences, too. I used to think all men had consciences, but have changed my mind. Some have only a moral hole, an ethical niche, where the conscience ought to be. I feel so intensely the necessity we are under in this city to teach the boys to be citizens. We must have the patriotic fibre wrought into the boy's nature."

Lady Somerset was greeted with applause and delighted her audience as she spoke on the watchwords of our nation, "Liberty, Equality and Fraternity." "I came to this country as a learner, not with a mission. Once, for a single moment, I thought I had a mission. An Episcopal bishop once said to me, 'You have a great mission in this country.' For an instant my heart beat with a pardonable pride, until he added, 'You can teach the American women to modulate their voices.' This is a government of the people, by the people and for the people, but we must remember that the people still means the men people. Over the door of a library in the University of Oxford, I read, 'Women and dogs not allowed here.' Still, England leads on this question and has given her women the municipal ballot. It is a loss to the nation that the high standard of right erected for woman should not have expression in its political life. As I for the first time beheld the beautiful statue of Liberty in your harbor, I could not help remembering that as Liberty holds aloft her torch, the birds of the air dash themselves against that marble statue and are killed. So, how many have come to these shores with a great longing for liberty, to be destroyed by the perils of the saloon. Unless this great question is faced by the men and women who love their homes and their, country that liberty dear to you and to every one who loves humanity, will be destroyed. It is the true fraternity of the soul which is needed to settle disputes between capital and labor. In loving each other we are heaping to ourselves God's best gifts."

Miss Willard was warmly greeted and spoke of the time when this work was first started in New York, when Mrs. Barnes used to write her somewhat discouraged letters, signing herself, "Your little atom of temperance dust in whirling Gotham," and of how that atom had attracted others, until the result could be seen in this great meeting. She said, "I read in one of your city dailies, 'we shall have to have Sunday opening for saloons. Our working men must have places where they can talk and gamble over a glass of liquor.' I thought of the poor mothers in these homes. When the working man finds the saloon his club, the wife is apt to find it her club, too, though in a different sense. If we could multiply reading rooms, such as this organization has opened, it would be a Christian way of settling this difficulty, but to open the saloon is an atheistic way out."

New York City. FRANCES H. ENSIGN.

A W. C. T. U. MISSION.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—Permit me, through your columns, to say a word regarding the Bethesda Mission, of Chicago. It has been my pleasure recently to preach several times in this gospel life-saving station, thus affording an opportunity for more closely observing its specific usefulness as a means of grace. As is known to many of your readers the mission is situated in one of the darkest, most sinful parts of Chicago, yet the power of Almighty God manifested through consecrated humanity is continually making it the oasis that breathes forth hope and sunshine to many wayworn, discouraged travelers to eternity. I have never seen anywhere such intense desire to learn more about the great, loving, tender, compassionate Christ than that exhibited by a class of people who many think are beyond all akinship to higher aspirations than the saloon and idle, dissolute, maybe criminal lives.

It is an error to suppose that these people are beyond hope of redemption. God will do His part if we will unselfishly do ours toward them. As an instance: Last Sunday night a man publicly arose and gave this testimony: "Last week I was released from the bridewell. I wandered around the streets for several days in search of work because I had determined to live an honest life hereafter, if possible. But I met with failure on every hand. The weather was cold, I had no place to sleep and little to eat, and finally my good resolution forsook me, and I determined to commit another crime that I might be arrested and returned to prison which was preferable to walking the streets hungry and half frozen. Friday night I was passing the doors of this mission on my way to rob a man or burglarize a house as an opportunity presented. It was early and I came in here to get warm. Something was said by the preacher that started me to thinking and caused me to see what a great sinner I was before God. Then a voice distinctly came to me that said, 'Jesus will help you if you try.' Something, I don't know what, kept urging me to believe what the good man in the pulpit said, and I went forward and told the Lord He could have me if He wanted to. I felt a great burden lifted from my soul, and now, God helping me, I intend to live a better and a Christian life."

The writer is told that instances of this kind are numerous and act as a great incentive to the superintendent, Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, and her assistant, Miss Thomas, with their efficient corps of workers, to push forward in the work at whatever sacrifice. It is certainly a grand and glorious labor—one that must be doubly pleasing to our blessed Master, who hath said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these ye have done it unto me."

In these later days, when all evidences point so strongly to our Lord's near approach, oh, may we get closer to the cross, understand more clearly the real meaning of Gethsemane and Calvary, and endeavor, without respect of persons, to win a soul from death.

To my personal knowledge, there are a number of loyal men and women in this city, who, comparatively unnoticed, are going outside the church and into the highways and byways after sheaves who will, in the great beyond, greet them again with redemption's song, and the smile of Him who was Himself once a "Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." R. H. SMITH.

Chicago.

ANIMAL VS. VEGETABLE FOOD.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have recently heard a lecture entitled "Animal Food," by Dr. Susannah Dodds, dean of the Hygienic College of St. Louis.

The doctor gave eight reasons why it is not advisable to use meat. First, there is the anatomical argument. Human teeth more nearly resemble those of grain eating animals. Man has not the sharp teeth, widely separated, peculiar to carnivorous beasts. Also the whole digestive apparatus is more like that of grain and fruit eaters.

Next is the economical argument that would of itself eventually settle the question of meat eating for the entire world, as it has already settled it for a large fraction of it. The grain that is used to fatten an ox would support a man's life twenty times as long as would the meat of the ox.

A third argument is that meat is largely stimulating rather than nourishing. No stimulant can nourish. All animal flesh contains matter that has once been used in the vital organs of the creature from which it is taken and cannot be so used again. It is the debris of the animal, and this is what constitutes the stimulant. It cannot be used, it simply arouses the system to throw it off as refuse matter. All food should contain the vital principle unimpaired.

Vegetables and fruits that have passed a certain period are not healthful. As soon as they have begun to deteriorate, to go backward towards disorganization, they have lost their greatest nourishing power. For the same reason meat, which always contains deteriorated material which has lost entirely its vital principle, is objectionable. Also the flesh fluids are not equal to fruit fluids as nourishers.

Another argument is that a very large proportion of the meat in our markets is diseased and therefore dangerous. The Jews reject nineteen-twentieths of it as unfit to eat.

The last argument is moral. The eating of meat makes necessary a business which is debasing in its influence. If women had to kill the animals there would be but little animal food eaten.

Many are familiar with the history of Jesse Pomeroy, the boy murderer, whose mother, in the months before his birth, was a constant visitor at a slaughter house. From infancy he manifested a disposition to take life.

An incident was also referred to of the moral influence of meat eating upon the consumer. A father who had an unmanageable boy called in his minister to ask his advice as to the best method of treatment. The advice given was that the boy's diet should be changed and meat entirely eliminated from it. The experiment was tried with satisfactory results. A decided change took place in the child's disposition and behavior.

The doctor called attention to the fact that three-tenths of the people of the world are vegetarians and that many of the finest looking people and many leaders of thought have not been meat eaters. She considers the matter of correct diet as of the greatest importance in its relation to the temperance reform and other reforms. We cannot expect anything but intemperance, she says, "so long as we pave the way for it by stimulating diet of meat and highly seasoned food."

As a matter of fact we know the taste of but few of the natural products of the earth. The flavors of our grains and vegetables and fruits are concealed under a strong seasoning of salt and pepper and sugar and spices. We shall never get the full enjoyment of our food until we have the rich natural flavors unimpaired, and the digestive organs uninflamed by strong, pungent seasonings.

With all the sickness we see in the world, general debility, chronic ailments and acute diseases, it seems to a thoughtful person high time we were all beginning to study the laws of life with greater interest and in a more scientific way.

Very few persons can claim that they have perfect health, while there is an alarming increase of certain diseases, and there was never such a supply of patent and other remedies. We can but think it is the way of wisdom to heed the words of those who preach the gospel of a truer physical life. We shall accomplish little in the struggle for a higher moral and spiritual condition until we learn how to direct the physical side of our life according to nature's laws.

It may be that much of the converting of the world to better life may depend somewhat upon converting the farms from cattle ranches and pastures into orchards and grain fields, and upon our learning that vegetable products in their natural state, with the least possible of artificial preparation are at the same time the most delicious, the most healthful and the most convenient to use. We have been aroused pretty well during the last quarter of a century about the "drink problem." There is no question but that the "food problem" is coming to be recognized as one of the great problems of life, and we of the W. C. T. U. household can see very quickly how closely they are related. We can also see how any radical reform will have to battle with the conservatism that clings to what is. Right here may have to come one of our greatest struggles. Impurity and intemperance are two vices that come from abnormal physical appetites. That the food we feed our children upon has much to do with developing their natural appetites cannot be doubted. Here is a good subject for thorough investigation in our mothers' meetings. (REV.) MARY TRAFFARN WHITNEY.

N. Cambridge, Mass.

DEAR COMRADES:—If our labors for God and Home and Native Land had accomplished no better thing for us than to make us diligent students along the varied lines of our proverbial "forty departments," its mission would still have been a blessed one. But for the local union and its needs how many of us would have been pushed out from our home retirement to inquire into prison and jail work, scientific temperance instruction, the work for railroad employés, soldiers and sailors, lumbermen, miners, the laws (or lack of laws) touching Sabbath observance, relation of temperance to labor and capital, and the balance?

---

I am much touched by a recent appeal to Mother Experience that reads thus: "I am anxious to learn something about the and how to keep well. My own life is wrecked by not knowing how to take care of myself." The sister goes on to state that she has given her children every care and consideration, faithful nursing in illness, good education in moral and mental needs, but they have not inherited good constitutions.

LAWS OF HEALTH

There are so many helps in the way of books that it is hard to recommend any one work on health and hygiene. Every woman, however, should make a business of learning the laws that govern the "fearfully and wonderfully" constructed human body. If she has no wise friend to consult as to appropriate and reliable books to read, an honorable physician will gladly advise, or one may readily examine standard works in bookstores.

This, however, may be noted: The Creator has put at our service an unfailing source of knowledge of broken laws, namely, the voice of pain. An aching foot or ankle, means a tight shoe. A "stitch" in side or back means often tight bands or lacings. A headache means a worried mind, an overtaxed stomach, a sluggish liver. Cold feet—a form of pain—mean poor circulation.

To live naturally is the great secret of "how to keep well." Early hours for retiring and rising, simple diet—largely composed of fruits and vegetables, dress that impedes in no way the fullest expansion of the various organs, regular habits, a mind and conscience at rest, a generous amount of exercise in the open air, plenty of sunshine, and a life busy in good work, these are ill-health's most potent enemies and conquerors.

---

It is often from the unions spoken of as "small" that there come the most suggestive reports of practical work. Hearing of a union that was the proud possessor of a

READING ROOM

I wrote for particulars concerning how it was started and maintained, and am glad to give the following extract from a letter written by Mrs. Beatrice Cooper, Ravenswood, West Va. She says:

"Our town is small and our union weak in everything save grace and a determination to do the very best we can under every circumstance. We were organized with ten members, but decided at the very first that we must have a reading room, a pleasant and safe refuge for our boys who are on the streets in great numbers every night. After finding a suitable place, we secured the rent by each lady pledging herself for a certain amount each month. Those who could not give money gave time and labor. Then we contributed what we could from our homes, and in this way furnished the two rooms very comfortably. The smaller one we call our lunch room, and here we entertain the young people who do not care to read. We have a fine supply of good magazines and papers, and hope soon to fill our shelves with books. We first opened our rooms to the public on the day of our town election. Part of our members served free lunch there, while others canvassed the town and received many contributions for the room, while we all labored unceasingly for the no-license ticket. We were defeated in this last effort, but felt that our labor was not in vain."

If these energetic sisters will give a book social—suggested once before in this department—it will help fill those waiting shelves.

---

We are delighted to welcome our Chieftain in the LOCAL UNION in the following valuable suggestions:

One of our New York city local unions has voted to prefix the always honored and now hallowed name of Lathrap to its W. C. T. U. We are glad of this and suggest that the names of Woodbridge, West and Lathrap, with those of any other leaders they may choose, would often lend an added interest and individuality to the local auxiliary. This is no new thought, but has for years been made practical by our workers.

In this connection let it be remembered that any women in any city, town or village or hamlet, who feel a call to organize a W. C. T. U., have a perfect right to do so. It sometimes happens that the old society is made up of a group of workers who have become wonted to each other and women who would gladly work according to our methods do not feel quite at home with them. When this is the case it is well to form a new group and we believe it would quicken and strengthen the work in a thousand localities if this were done. So, good women, if you don't like the "parent society," the "old union," set to work at once and form one that you do like and be an example of good words and works to those that went before.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

---

"Has a woman a right to act as delegate in convention of district or state, for any union except the one to which she belongs?"

A woman has no right to act as delegate in convention for any union except the one by which she is appointed. It frequently happens, however, that the quota of delegates for a district or state is not made up by regular appointed delegates, and it is then the custom to fill the delegation with members who may be in attendance as visitors.

---

"We have organized a

PEACE AND ARBITRATION DEPARTMENT,

what shall we do next?"

Mrs. H. J. Bailey, our World's and National superintendent, answers in the following valuable suggestions:

"The work of our peace department is of necessity largely educational. Our golden dream is to sometime witness an international court of arbitration, but woman being denied the ballot, can do nothing directly to bring about this much desired court. All we can do at present is to educate, and to have the satisfaction of knowing that our teachings along the line of peace will do much towards influencing the present, and particularly the coming voter—the boy of to-day.

"After a peace department has been organized by a local union, its superintendent should make it a constant rule to keep posted on the peace movement. The National peace department issues a great deal of literature which is helpful.

"The local superintendent should next seek to post others. She can do so by sending peace clippings and original essays to local papers, by having the same read aloud, at regular or at public meetings, by preparing peace scrap-books to place in public places and to circulate among the members of her own union. She can get up peace concerts, peace socials and can invite the pastors of the place to preach in the interest of the cause. She can distribute the department tracts and can obtain subscriptions to the department papers. She can introduce the same into public reading-rooms, and place them in the station wall-pockets. She can form Peace Bands for the children, or induce Loyal Temperance Legions, and other juvenile organizations to make Peace Bands auxiliary to these societies. She can use her influence against the Boys' Brigade and the military drill in schools, also against the indiscriminate use of fire-arms and against toy pistols. Finally, she can pray for wisdom from on high which shall unfold to her her special work for peace."

---

"Is there any leaflet giving an outline of the forty-two departments of our work?"

There is. It is the Annual leaflet of the National W. C. T. U. It contains names and addresses of the general officers, the presidents, secretaries and treasurers of states, outlines the origin and objects of the W. C. T. U., and gives the whole department plan, with names and addresses of all National workers and their associates therein. This leaflet can be obtained from National Headquarters for cost of postage only—two cents.

---

"Should the president of a W. C. T. U. tolerate the relation by an 'honorary' of vulgar

BARBER-SHOP STORIES

to the union while in session?" is the somewhat puzzling question which comes next in the list—puzzling, not so far as an answer is concerned, but puzzling in the effort to imagine what possible combination of circumstances could give rise to such a question. Perhaps the inquirer wants something in black and white with which to meet the offender, but I refrain, knowing that the spirit of the white ribbon has, all untaught, settled greater questions than even this.

---

"A calm before a storm is commonly a peace of man's making; but a calm after a storm a peace of God's."—May the God of peace send us His calm!

MOTHER EXPERIENCE.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine? There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger. And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way: thy faith hath made thee whole.—Luke 17:17, 18, 16.

The Wheel! THE WHEEL! THE TEMPLE WHEEL! Who knows but hidden away in the circle of its twelve spokes lie the hidden treasure that is to set the Temple free? The majestic Mississippi, on whose broad bosom rides a thousand crafts laden with the commerce of the West, is fed by ten thousand little streams that have their spring in the fastnesses of the far-away mountains, and these again are fed by millions of snowflakes and raindrops. Don't let us, therefore, despise the day of small things. The aggregation of ten million of dimes make a million dollars. If one-half the inhabitants of Chicago would fill a Wheel the Temple would be paid for. The thing for the white-ribboners to do is to get all their friends to take a TEMPLE WHEEL. Tell them about it; they will be glad to do it when they know that beside helping us to pay for the Temple they will get a nice premium. Introduce it into all the Sabbath-schools and L. T. L's. The children will all be delighted to take hold of it, and will be glad to work to secure the Educational Game of Checkers, or the game of Pixies, either of which they can earn by getting a Wheel filled.

***

At last the TEMPLE WHEEL is perfected and ready to be mailed to our friends. We have sent on to Washington to secure a copyright. We felt that this was necessary for we are sure other organizations will want to adopt our little invention as it is an admirable method to raise money for any philanthropic undertaking. The Wheel in itself is so pretty and it is an exceedingly patriotic wheel as its colors are red, white and blue. Already it is taking wonderfully. Very large orders came in for Wheels both yesterday and to-day. The beauty of it is that it is a project that rich and poor, young and old alike can take hold of; the invalid as well as the most robust. We have added since we last presented the matter—premium number 6, the Temple silver souvenir tea-spoon—to all persons who fill four Wheels, and any one who wishes to work a little can easily do that. The Wheel is not like the mite-box. You can fill it in a day if you want to, as I saw a young lady do to-day, and send it in at once.

***

The Bazar Bulletin, the organ of Butler and Bloomingdale counties W. C. T. U., has the following to say editorially: "We wish every white-ribboner who has not already done so, would cultivate an interest in the Temperance Temple at Chicago. It is the National Headquarters of our organization. The woman who does not feel proud that such a structure stands, confesses herself either deplorably ignorant in regard to it, or lacks true interest in that which is for the advancement of the temperance cause. The founder should receive the practical sympathy and prayers of every W. C. T. U. woman. Subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL and learn about the Temple and the grand, sublime work that is being done every day in Willard Hall."

***

Miss Willard writes that she is anxious that the name of Mary T. Lathrap should be placed in Willard Hall and pledges $5 towards it. Who next desires to honor the memory of Michigan's great leader?

***

Our friends must not think because we give so much prominence to the Temple Wheel that we have given up our old stand-by—the mite-box. Not at all. As we said in our last issue, to all who send a two-cent stamp for a mite-box for 1895, and place in it what amounts to a penny a day during the year, we will give one of our beautiful Temple souvenir tea-spoons. Those who took boxes for 1894 must send the contents by the first of February if they expect to get a spoon. All who have old boxes and intend refilling them, should notify us, so as to have their names entered for the spoon. All letters pertaining to the Temple, orders for mite-boxes and the Temple Wheel should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

WHAT MEANS THIS STONE?

BY MARY T. LATHRAP.

[Written upon the laying of the Temperance Temple foundation stone in 1890.]

Along the misty stretch of time,
A million bells peal out their chime,
A million bells of every clime
And silver tongue;
They ring from steeples tall and fair,
They sound from turrets carved and rare,
And over altars steeped with prayer
For ages long;
Till at this shrine a vanished time
Thrills into song.

The world has reared its temples old
In ages dim and days of gold,
And evermore in rev'rence wrought
Its highest faith, its deepest thought,
Its strongest love and sacred pain,
In marble white of holy fane.
Then ring, sweet bells of olden years!
With joyous tone;
A morning breaks, a promise cheers,
A newer temple Woman rears
For God and Home,
And, as the world's slow vision clears,
Comes to her own.

Upon the years that are to be,
There glows a radiance fair to see;
There dawns the coming century
Of truth and right;
The clouds are lifting from the skies,
From valleys dim the mists arise,
Before the morn the midnight flies,
And all is light.
The gate of hope now softly swings,
Above its arch a great bird sings,
The shackles fall, of might and wrong,
And all the world breaks into song.
Ring, temple bells, from steeples gray
In gladness ring!
Love's golden day is on the way,
And Christ is King!

Between the darkness and the dawn,
The days to come, the cycles gone,
The age of love and age of brawn,
Is laid this stone;
On which shall rise a temple set
Like jewel in a coronet;
In purpose high unrivaled yet
By shrine or throne.
Its walls rebuke the blighting shame
That, sheltered by a legal name,
Now dims a nation's fair renown
And tears her holiest altars down.
Our ensign here in faith we rear—
Henceforth this place is battle ground.

From fair foundations wide as love,
To slender turret far above,
Shall into stone and arch be wrought
The glory of prophetic thought;
And throned upon the graceful height,
Its emblem true shall stand in light
Serene and fine—
A woman's figure, calm and fair,
Outlined against the upper air,
With hands uplifted as in prayer.
Who builds this shrine
Saw age divine
Come swiftly on to humankind.

Beyond the shadows long and dim,
Upon the future's golden rim,
We lay the stone and raise the hymn
Prophetic, grand.
Abide in strength, O jeweled stone!
For thou art set for God and home,
For feet that stumble, hearts that moan,
In all the land.
Abide in strength before the gates
Where God's eternal promise waits.
We give thee to thy mission sweet,
With lavish wealth of love complete,
Nor count the sum.
Who knows but on this altar-place
May shine the glory of His face,
When Jesus comes!

MARY T. LATHRAP.

BY REV. H. F. SNOW.

Another stone has been removed,
Well fitted neath these earthly skies,
And placed into that temple fair,
Where all is peace, where come no sighs.
Another leader of a host
Of valiant women not a few,
Has in God's chariot gone up,
Her long expected home to view.

She's left the radiance of her life
To shine in glory ever bright.
She walked by faith, serene and calm,
Through all the sorrows of the night.
Champion for truth and equal rights,
For all assailants was their peer,
Undaunted mid the battle's smoke,
To all white-ribboners most dear.

She worked with will, she worked with love,
She spoke in eloquence the best;
She gave her song that vibrates on,
While now she has been called to rest.
"What means this stone?" she called aloud,
Its meanings she did well divine;
And all along the stream of time,
This star-song will most brightly shine.

Servant of God, we part with loss,
But keep the influence thou hast left;
We bow in reverence at the cross,
While now we are so sore bereft.
Father in heaven, wilt Thou draw near,
To help us in this hour of need?
Our loss is great, our hearts are sad,
Renewed baptism we now plead.

Oh, help us well our part to do
In planting righteousness and peace,
Faithful like her who's from us gone,
Till we, like her, shall find release.
Then, in Thy temple firmly built,
In glorious majesty on high,
There may we meet our sister gone—
The storms and death of earth defy.

A PERSONAL TESTIMONY.

BY EMMA HARRIMAN.

In the great number and diversity of our departments lies one great source of our strength. Some lines of our work appeal to one, some to another.

There have been several in any one of which I could have worked with enthusiasm, and now there are two more in which I have a fresh interest.

One came about in this wise. A dear friend was very ill. The doctor said he must have wine. The wife answered: "No, we do not believe in it."

The sick man overhearing the conversation, said: "I will not touch it. If I must die I'll die as I have lived, a sober man."

"You hear that," said the wife. "Now, I say he shall not be compelled to take it," and the doctor acquiesced. But when he came the next day he brought something he called by another name, something that would "strengthen and be better than the wine." The wife gave it unsuspectingly; her husband grew worse and died. Later she found that she had been deceived, and now with anguished heart we remember that a man who all his life had never tasted liquor of any kind had died at last partially under its influence, in spite of his protest.

And so I say, may we "lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes" of the department of "non-alcoholics in medicine."

The other freshened interest came through a young girl at work in the kitchen. She was not brilliant, on the contrary disease had made her positively dull but she was determined.

"They all use wine and beer at home," she said. "Susan gives it to her children. I have great arguments with them."

It was puzzling where she had learned such arguments, coming from such a home. It was all explained one day.

"I believe I should have drank some wine one day," she said; "I was visiting where they all were drinking and laughed at me. But when I was almost ready to take it, I remembered what my teacher wrote on the blackboard once, 'Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.' I told them that and didn't drink."

There was the secret. She had never even heard of scientific temperance instruction and could not understand it till it was explained in the simplest language. But she had remembered the text in a time of temptation and used it as the smooth pebble in her sling to slay the demon.

That teacher may have grown discouraged and thought sometimes that she was accomplishing nothing, but the text she had written on the blackboard that day, possibly in great weariness, had been carried out by the dull scholar to the mountain home and to the wine drinking friends in the city.

Along the devious ways of life we meet many men, some clean-souled, pure-hearted, their frank eyes meeting one as if there were nothing to conceal. But oh, so many more with hard lines on their faces and the scent of tobacco or liquor on their lips. What object lessons for the little boys, sweet, innocent little souls, playing in the sunshine, ignorant of danger. How soon they learn that there is less expected of the men than of the women.

"I don't like Susie," said one, "she is just as bad as a boy."

"Just as bad as a boy."

He was from a home where they believed a boy should be just as good as a girl and taught him so. Yet he, not long out of kilts, had begun to learn his lesson from the world.

But he had a good father that anchor to a boy so much overlooked, and one day when some one made some remark in his presence deploring the wickedness of men he cried out indignantly, "What makes you say men are bad? My papa isn't."

The time is coming on when more boys can say that, when home influence shall be more surely for good and outside influences shall count less for evil. The influence of a good father is so little valued by society at large. The time comes in every boy's life when it counts for more than almost anything else.

I once had a class of boys in Sunday-school, well up in their teens. The question came up as to whether men in general would do a dishonest thing for money. Only one boy in that long pew full thought they would not. He was positive in his position. I was a stranger in the town at that time, but I said to myself, "That boy has a good father." Later I knew him. An upright, honest, God-fearing man whom the people were glad to place in a prominent position of trust, certain that he would not "skip" with the funds.

That boy's heredity was good, on both sides of the house.

He might be tossed about in the world anywhere, in any society, but he never would get away from the influence of that good father.

May God strengthen the hands of those who are working to make men understand that it is their business, too, to be good.

Los Angeles, Cal.

RIGHTEOUS SKIPPING.

It used to be considered a bad habit to skip, when one was reading a book. But times have changed; opinions, prejudices, codes of ethics, standards of conduct—almost all the old things have suffered more or less from that transforming process which always follows the sudden access of more light. It is no longer a sort of breach of morals to skip whole paragraphs and pages of books. Indeed, it has become the finest art of reading to skip wisely! What scholar nowadays reads a book doggedly, mechanically through, and then draws a sigh of satisfaction at the close, because he hasn't skipped a word? The modern reader must skip, ought to skip. There is at least an intellectual obligation upon him to do so. The art is, to know what to skip. When one skips wisely in his reading, he develops mental judgment, adds to his store of knowledge, wheat unmixed with chaff, and saves something of God's most priceless gift—time.

So there is a certain virtue in skipping portions of books. That is one kind of righteous skipping—but only a small part of the whole.

There is a moral obligation resting upon us to skip certain records of experience—"forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto the things which are before." Skip the old depressing thoughts—drop them out of memory—lighten the wings of the spirit, seeking higher levels of life and hope. Don't carry a dummy of the burden which Christ has taken off your shoulders. Sing on your upward pilgrim path—don't sit down to mope. Skip the memory of old, forgiven, conquered sins and faults. It is righteous skipping.

Skip old sorrows. What good does it do to weep over them? If they have brought you any living inspirations or lessons, dwell on these. If you must needs keep your bottled tears, keep them where the sunshine may paint rainbows in them.

Skip temptations, skip impure thoughts, skip complainings, skip the angry thought and word, skip everything that you are better without. What a good thing skipping is! How strange that people do not count it more of a virtue, as well as an accomplishment. There is a good deal more righteousness than we have thought, perhaps, in that simple, negative thing—a hiatus.—Zion's Herald.

THE SPELLING MATCH.

Ten little children, standing in a line,
"F-u-l-y, fully," then there were nine.

Nine puzzled faces, fearful of their fate,
"C-i-l-l-y, silly," then there were eight.

Eight pairs of blue eyes, bright as stars of heaven,
"B-u-s-s-y, busy," then there were seven.

Seven grave heads, shaking in an awful fix,
"L-a-i-d-y, lady," then there were six.

Six eager darlings, determined each to strive,
"D-u-t-i-e, duty," then there were five.

Five hearts so anxious, beating more and more,
"S-c-o-l-l-a-r, scholar," then there were four.

Four mouths like rosebuds on a red rose tree,
"M-e-r-y, merry," then there were but three.

Three pairs of pink ears, listening keen and true,
"O-n-l-e-y, only," then there were but two.

Two sturdy laddies, ready both to run,
T-u-r-k-y, turkey," then there was one.

One head of yellow hair, bright in the sun,
"H-e-r-o, hero," the spelling match was won.

—Bombay Guardian.

ONE OF THE STORIES TOLD AT THE CHILDREN'S FAGOT PARTY.

Vincent's Story of Saint Willard's Pool.

BY MRS. ALBERT L. PRITCHARD.

The day on which Miss Frances E. Willard was expected at her cottage, "Eagle's Nest," in this Twilight Park, quite a number of people, my aunts among the rest, were busy at the cottage getting it ready for a sort of festive reception of Miss Willard. Cousin Lillian was there assisting, and they let me help, too. In the midst of the work four large, lovely jardinieres were sent in, and Lillian filled them with mountain flowers and tall ferns; the cottage soon began to look like a greenery nest dotted all over with blossoms. Miss Willard was not expected until afternoon, and just as they were about ready to hoist the flag she arrived with Miss Gordon.

Up in the woods overlooking the Eagle's Nest a party of picnickers was spending the day. A young girl belonging to the party watched all the doings going on at Miss Willard's cottage, and saw her arrive. The tears came into the girl's eyes, but they were not sorry tears. She knew all about Miss Willard but had never seen her before this day, when she got just a glimpse of her. A brother of hers had both seen Miss Willard and heard her lecture; he had been a wild boy, much with bad company, and used to be tipsy at times from drinking beer with them, when one day the papers said Miss Willard was to lecture in that town. This girl persuaded her brother to attend the lecture, and when she heard him come back and go up to his room she followed.

"Oh! how did you like Miss Willard?" she asked.

"First rate," her brother said, and he kept right on whistling as if he didn't care much after all and was just saying it to please her.

"Now see here," he said, as his sister waited, "you go down stairs and 'tend to mother," their mother was an invalid, "and don't you ever worry about me any more."

She never could get another word out of him about it, but from that night he took no more beer, and after awhile he got to work again and was steady as steady could be.

Well! as this girl kept on watching all the pretty things and flowers which were being sent in to Eagle's Nest, she began to wish that she had something to send in memory of the time that her brother gave up beer and went to his work again. She tried and tried to think of something, she wanted it to be something that would mean in her own heart that she was grateful to Miss Willard, and so she sat up in the woods away from her party and thought and thought, and by that time Miss Willard had arrived and been received down at the cottage. Then all of a sudden the girl jumped up and laughed aloud, she felt so happy. She said to herself, "I've thought of just the right thing," and she began rummaging in her satchel.

She took out of the satchel a little pitcher carefully wrapped up in soft, white paper. She had bought it that day at the drug store in the park, where they keep all sorts of pretty things, you know. She looked at the pitcher with a smile. "I didn't dream what I should do with you," she said. She put her satchel and lunch basket under some boughs in the woods. No one was in sight; the party she was with for the day had gone on to Buttermilk Falls, and from there intended to extend their walk to Wild Cat Ravine. It was sometime yet before they would get back to the point where they had left her.

She started with the pitcher for the Santa Cruz brook, it was in plain sight and she soon reached it, and began to search for a place that had depth, and looked cool and bright. When she found the spot she wanted, she dipped in the little pitcher deep, filling it to the brim with the clear sparkling water. Then she went down to a cottage not far off from Miss Willard's and looked about and waited. Soon a lady came out of the cottage and took a seat on the veranda. The girl thought she acted as if she lived there, so she walked up the steps of the veranda and then stood still, glancing towards the lady.

"Can I do anything for you?" the lady asked.

"Oh, yes, you can, if you only will," the girl said.

She was so earnest it pleased the lady, who got up and walked towards her.

"It's this pitcher of water," she said. "I want Miss Willard to have it. Do you think you could carry it down to her cottage for me?"

"Why, certainly I will," the lady said, "and what shall I tell Miss Willard?"

"Please say it's a drink of water fresh from the Santa Cruz brook."

"It will please Miss Willard very much," the lady said, "and I don't know of anything that would gratify her more as a welcome. I will go right down now with your pitcher to Eagle's Nest."

"Oh! thank you very much," the girl said, delighted, "and good-bye, for the party I'm with will soon be in sight; we are only here for a day, picnicking in the Twilight Park woods."

The girl ran back very fast to the brook, and tugged away at some big stones until she had got them into place, round the spot where she had dipped up the water in her pitcher for Miss Willard.

"Why! what a pretty pool these stones make of the water!" she said. "I'll call it Saint Willard's Pool, for I'm just certain Miss Willard is a saint!"

"So that is the story, and this is the pool," Vincent said in conclusion.

The children all jumped up to press close and take another look, for they felt this was very interesting, indeed.

"I say, Fred!" Holstein exclaimed, "every summer when we come to this Park, let us see that these stones are kept in place!"

"Yes, make them historic." Fred said, "that will be fine!"

New York city.

JAMIE had caught cold in some way, and is very stiff in consequence. "I think when I had my bath yesterday," he said, "somebody must have put starch in the water."

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

383.

CROSSWORD ENIGMA.

My first is in temple but not in church.
My second is in shake but not in lurch.
My third is in money but not in gain.
My fourth is in practice but not in train.
My fifth is in gladness but not in joy.
My sixth is in girl but not in boy.
My seventh is in army but not in fight.
My eighth is in shining but not in light.
My ninth is in can but not in try.
My tenth is in purchase but not in buy.
My whole is called a very good work.

TOM MACDONALD.

384.

NAME DEFINITIONS OF PROHIBITIONISTS.

1, A small bird. 2, Like the covering of sheep. 3, The abbreviation of a certain political party, an interjection and quiet. 4, To bend and half of window. 5, To bequeath and to fatten. 6, A season of the year and to be still.

385.

HIDDEN ANIMALS.

1, Do good and then do it again. 2, The ox ends work at five. 3, I met her at noon. 4, I saw Lionel skating. 5, Fred and Sarah are going. O. K. EVANS.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED JANUARY 10.

374.

N n E w p e A r l
N E A L D O W
s a D l y
n O w
W

375. "So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man,
When duty whispers low, 'Thou must,'
The youth replies, 'I can.'"

376. Buffalo.

Correct answers: Minnie Schmidt; Angeline F. Mahan; Mrs. H. M. Wilder; Ethel Moyer; Elmer L. Stannard; O. K. Evans; Bertha Hendricks; Mae Hussong.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Have you ever thought what Cozy Corner's mail must be like and wished that you could be really at my elbow some day just after the postman had left a bunch of letters? I would enjoy sharing my budgets every one, as I do a great many through the type in Cozy Corner.

Would you like me to tell you just what becomes of your letter when it is placed in my hands, so that you can imagine its reception and just where it is put? Here comes Mr. Postman with the mail now, so you may have your wish. Taking up the top letter of the pile he has left I notice first—what do you think? The handwriting, of course! By that I know whether the contents will be interesting. Sometimes, too, I smile at the varied ways in which the letters are addressed. Here is one bearing only the words, "Cozy Corner, The Temple, Chicago." Some are marked "Puzzle Editor," "Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner," "Cozy Corner Editor," etc. Others, already opened in the business office, were addressed to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and now have "Aunt Jane" in blue pencil across the face. As I slip the sharp point of my letter opener in the corner of the envelope, I never fail to notice the postmark, and as I open the letter I look at once to see whether the address is written there. If it isn't I write it down at once, for what would a Cozy Corner letter be worth without an address?

Then I read the letter through and write something in the top left-hand corner. What do I write? Ah, that depends entirely on the letter, you see. Then folding the creases smooth I lay the letter safely away in a big, brown, bulging envelope, which is marked on the outside, "Cozy Corner Letters, to be published."

I expect some of you think it is a long time before your letters are printed. But I'll let you into a secret—write something different from that which the others have written, and then see what happens.

Affectionately, your

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

My sisters and I belong to the L. T. L. One is twelve, and the other is seven years old, and I am nine. My father is a Prohibitionist, and my mother is a W. C. T. U. woman. I like to read the Children's Page. I am going to try to be a temperance girl.

Elgin, Ill. GLADYS A. DERR.

And you will be if you try, God helping you, little niece.

I would like to become a member of the Cozy Corner. I belong to the L. T. L. Every child should be a member, and try to do all they can to keep people from being drunkards. We have meetings every Friday, and I try to go every time I can. I got two people to join temperance, and am trying to get more. With love to all

Patterson, La. DELLA NORGRESS.

Such an earnest little worker will find many friends in Cozy Corner.

Our L. T. L. thought it would be nicer to give than to receive this Christmas, so each member brought an apple or orange. Some brought both. We had over five dozen apples and oranges. Our teacher took them to the Home of Industry, which is a home for discharged prisoners.

MIRIAM MCCONNELL.

Darby, Delaware Co., Pa.

Was it not a very happy Christmas, Miriam?

I am a little temperance boy nearly twelve years old. I have no brothers or sisters. I have signed the pledge, and want to be a member of the Cozy Corner. My mamma and papa belong to the Sons of Temperance, and I shall when I get old enough. Mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U., and takes THE UNION SIGNAL, which I think is very nice. I am an L. T. L. boy. When I get old enough to vote I will vote for temperance.

Pulaski, N. Y. JOHN B. SNOW.

P. S.—I would be very glad to receive some letters from the nieces.

Your letter shows that you are "right in line," John, and we greet you as a Cozy Cornerer.

I am ten years old. I belong to the L. T. L. I have three brothers and two sisters. My mother belongs to the W. C. T. U. RUTH E. BREWER.

Berlin, Mass.

And now you belong to Cozy Corner, too.

I wish to call on Cozy Corner just long enough to tell you that I am seven years old and have two sisters named Turol and Brownie, age four and five, and my mamma is president W. C. T. U. of Clinton county, and my papa doesn't drink or swear. Mamma said she would like to see your real picture in Cozy Corner.

Ovid, Mich. LELIA MINORE.

We have enjoyed your "call," Lelia, and invite you to come again.

THE UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD, LL.D.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President. MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, London, Eng.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Chicago.
MME. LOUISE DEMOREST, New York City.
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MRS. E. B. INGALLS, St. Louis, Mo.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK ..... 1
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Found. By Sara Louisa Oberholtzer ..... 2
Life Etching. By Emma Playter Seabury ..... 2
Rev. Dr. Lunn and the W. W. C. T. U. Tour Round the World. By Frances E. Willard ..... 2
The New Reform. By J. S. Hughes ..... 3
Co-operative Homes for Women. By Mrs. C. B. Hopkins ..... 3
CORRESPONDENCE:
How to Help Nebraska's Poor ..... 4
A Temperance Trio ..... 4
A W. C. T. U. Mission ..... 4
Animal vs. Vegetable Food ..... 4
LOCAL UNION ..... 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS ..... 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, What Means this Stone? By Mary T. Lathrap ..... 6
Poem, Mary T. Lathrap. By Rev. H. F. Snow ..... 6
A Personal Testimony. By Emma Harriman ..... 6
Righteous Skipping ..... 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, The Spelling Match ..... 7
One of the Stories Told at the Children's Fagot Party. By Mrs. Albert L. Pritchard ..... 7
Soft-Shelled Nuts ..... 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER ..... 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
What Shall we do with "the Shirks in Politics?" ..... 8
One Way Out ..... 8
Missionary Temperance ..... 8
To the London Convention, June, 1895 ..... 9
A Request to Pastors ..... 9
THE WATCH TOWER ..... 9
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Massachusetts—Minnesota—Michigan—Missouri—Virginia ..... 10, 11
News in a Nutshell ..... 11
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Sunday-school Department—Evangelistic Department ..... 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES ..... 12
TREASURER'S CORNER ..... 12
National Temperance Hospital ..... 13
The Polyglot Petition ..... 13
White Ribbon Rally ..... 13
ORGANIZERS' CORNER ..... 13
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.
OUR LIBRARY TABLE ..... 14
SIGNAL NOTES ..... 16

A father of the fatherless, ane a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation.—Ps. 68:5.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH "THE SHIRKS IN POLITICS"?

It probably requires no argument to convince people that the above mentioned citizens are responsible for a great many of our political troubles, and yet very little thought apparently has been given to any method of dealing with them. The only remedy we have ever seen suggested, that of compulsory voting, is dismissed as soon as mentioned.

Obviously, the first thing to be done is to discover the cause which produces shirks. Why is it that so many, and that of the better class of citizens, are too indifferent to take the trouble to vote except when a crisis in affairs or great public excitement arouses them to action? We think the answer is that it is because, first, they have no adequate appreciation of their responsibility as voters, and, second, they despair of accomplishing anything by their vote.

Talk with the average shirk, the man who passively allows his city to be ruled by a dishonest ring, and he will tell you that it is of no use for an honest man to try to do anything, that politicians of the worst class have taken possession of all parties, and it is only a question between bosses whichever party succeeds. As a rule he is right. Yet again and again we have had it proved before our eyes that when the better elements of society attack the problem in earnest, when they organize and begin with system and energy the task of municipal house-cleaning, the results are such as to satisfy the most fastidious housekeeper.

Those of us who have only reached middle age can remember very well when New York dealt with the Tweed ring and every one drew a breath of relief, feeling that a decisive victory had been won for pure and honest city government. But long before we have begun to think of dying, New York is forced to face the same issue. Another fierce battle and Tammany is ingloriously defeated; Tammany, beside whose stealings and general wickedness those of the Tweed administration dwindle into insignificance! These and similar cases prove that the intelligence and morality of society can rule if it chooses; why does it so seldom choose?

Why, instead of these spasmodic uprisings to put down corrupt government, do not honest citizens, by the right use of their privileges of citizenship, maintain an upright government? We do not propose to enter into a philosophic disquisition on the attributes of human nature involved in the problem. Neither shall we at present urge the necessity, so clearly set forth by Dr. Bashford in his sermon before the late National Convention, of divorcing municipal from national politics. This must be done before a permanent reform can be effected in our municipal government. But, back of everything else, we believe, lies the necessity of educating our citizens to a sense of their responsibility and a knowledge of their power, a knowledge that in this land the best part of society can rule if it is determined to do so.

The mothers of the land will be quick to appreciate that the place to begin is with the prospective voters, the boys and girls of to-day. We therefore suggest that the study of the responsibility of citizenship be made a part of our public school curriculum. As a nation, we long ago recognized the necessity of educating our people. We have established throughout all the land an excellent system of free public schools, and many of the states make attendance at school compulsory. Civil government is quite generally, though not universally, taught in the schools. In short, the nation recognizes as an indisputable truth that, in a government like ours, the citizens must be intelligent.

But, in our judgment, the established system falls short in the one important particular, that it fails to impress upon citizens a sense of their responsibility. We have acted upon the assumption that the right of franchise was so great a privilege that every one would gladly avail himself of it. Events have proved that this is too frequently not the case. It is time to begin to teach the voters of the land that there is no exception to the rule that duty and privilege go hand in hand; that the right of voting involves also the duty of voting. It is not enough that the coming voters have an education which shall enable them to cast their ballots with a fair degree of intelligence, nor is it enough that they acquire a knowledge of our institutions, indispensable as this is; there should also be definite instruction along the line of the duty of every citizen to use his right of franchise for the public good, and distinct teaching, drawn from past experience and from the established character of our people and institutions, that if he do so he may have the assurance that, in the long run, his vote will not be thrown away.

Could the thought of the coming citizens be thus early turned to the problem of good government, we might confidently expect that the next generation of voters would scorn to permit the worst elements of society to reign triumphant with never a protest beyond a weak lament over the hopeless corruption of politics; that these voters would not only use conscientiously and energetically all present means for the overthrow of evil in high places, but that they would also address themselves to the task of so amending the present system as to make it as easy as possible for the best people to control in the affairs of state. When this end is reached, a great forward movement in the government of our cities as well as in all politics in general, will be a foregone conclusion.

ONE WAY OUT.

"New occasions teach new duties." We are devotedly in favor of pledge-signing as a method of temperance work, but we find that the age is advancing so rapidly toward the sober second thought of teetotalism as the best method of living for financial, scientific and ethical reasons, that tens of thousands of good people who have never signed the pledge are nevertheless teetotalers today. Total abstinence is in the air; it is getting about; it is based on rendered reasons; it is sure to grow in geometric ratio into a world-habit as the true inwardness of alcoholic poisons becomes better understood.

For this reason, while we always rejoice when we hear of a pledge-signing crusade, we cannot help believing that the oblique line of approach might yield larger results in the present crisis. We therefore suggest that without asking for a pledge and without any personal exhortation whatever it would be well and wise if white-ribbon women and temperance people generally would approach the wage-working class with the following proposition:

You wish to carry your ideas into custom and law. You believe that a fair proportion of the results of the labor they perform is not enjoyed by the hand workers of this and other countries. You wish to carry your measures by means of agitation, education and the ballot box from which shall come laws and executive officers who are in harmony with the views you hold. You are obliged to pay large assessments as members of the trades unions, which are daily increasing in numbers and power, and will no doubt come to be the arbiters of destiny in England and possibly in America within the next ten years. Now, is there any one thing that you could do which would help on the trades unions so solidly as to put into their treasury in addition to your assessment the amount which you spend each week for beer and other alcoholic liquors? With such a fund added to the power already beginning to be wielded by you, the success of your movement would be absolutely certain. Do you not think that to strike against the saloon, boycott the saloon-keeper and bring the money that he now enjoys into the treasury of your own unions, would be the best strategic move that you could make?

We strongly feel that if that great leader, John Burns, should issue an open letter to the wage-workers of the world pointing out the incalculable value of this action, not specially from a temperance point of view, but as a strategic expedient, he might be able in conjunction with the united influence of other wage working leaders to arouse such an enthusiasm and awaken such an esprit de corps as would result in a wave of sentiment and action, the effect of which in minimizing the power of the liquor traffic would be such as the world has never seen. We wish that every one who is a true friend of the wage-working people would add the increment of his influence to work up and condense the sentiment requisite to make this movement a success. If some stalwart leader in a single city could demonstrate the possibility of bringing about such a stroke as that, such a result would receive continent-wide attention.

The boycott of the brewers in Berlin has produced a profound impression throughout the world. We have had described to us great gatherings of thousands of working men in Berlin who took mineral waters and soda water rather than beer, and continued to do so for weeks and months—nay, for all that we know are doing so now. The reason of this boycott was that the great breweries in Germany, with their well-known greed, declined to employ workers who belonged to the trades unions because they could get others for less wages. Now if, to the well-known unfriendliness of the entire liquor interest to the well-being of the working class, and the carrying out of its purposes in law, there should be added this motive of building up the trades unions treasury, there would be two confluent motives tending to separate into entirely different and antagonistic groups the honest working man and the dealer in intoxicating drinks. We are perfectly aware that no such plan could be carried out unless there were a general movement, led by the most influential and persuasive of the wage working chiefs; but this plan (by no means new) has been presenting itself to us so often and so urgently whenever we have thought (as we do most of the time) on the twin subjects of temperance and labor, that we must deliver our souls by putting forward the thoughts that dwell in brain and heart, passing them along to our brothers and sisters of a common sorrow and a common hope,

"Like bread at sacrament."

MISSIONARY TEMPERANCE.

The missionary women and the temperance women locked hands in a great meeting at Berkeley Temple, Boston, January 16. It was the occasion of the annual meeting of the woman's board of foreign missions in the Congregational churches of New England. Happily, our temperance interests are always cared for in this great body of women by Mrs. Joseph Cook, who was appropriately appointed to introduce our English leader, Lady Henry Somerset. In her address of welcome, Mrs. Cook said:

It is often said that the English-speaking race has become the missionary army of the world; but while in some small measure we have carried the gospel to non-Christian lands, we have also carried other gifts for which the native races owe us anything but gratitude.

Commerce has gone with Christianity—sometimes in advance—and has taught nations of practical total abstainers the Anglo-Saxon vice of strong drink and, for purposes of gain, has pushed the opium traffic with an indifference to the bodily and spiritual ruin of their victims which seems positively fiendish.

In view of these facts, it is not surprising that rum-cursed Africa and opium-cursed India and China, not discriminating between Christianity and commerce, for both are represented by white men wearing European dress, should in the bitterness of their souls cry out to us, "Is this your Jesus way? Then we want none of it!"

The Woman's Board of Missions has the high honor and privilege of welcoming to its platform this afternoon the distinguished leader of hosts of British women who are banded together in a holy war for the abolition of alcohol and narcotics. The president of the British Women's Temperance Association has also high official position in the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union—that splendidly aggressive organization, which has sent seven missionaries around the world teaching abstinence from alcohol and narcotics, and in behalf of social purity. You know what two of our brave American women did in India in unveiling the secret haunts of vice in connection with the British army. Lord General Roberts, commander-in-chief of Her Majesty's forces, claimed to be ignorant of this defiance of British law, but these American women, under the auspices of the World's Union of Christian women, and proceeding with the skill of practiced detectives, brought forward abundant proof of the existence of legalized vice in the army—and Lord General Roberts, who had doubted their word, was obliged to make them a public apology!

Thank God we have lived to see the day, when the world is so open, and Christian women are so alert, that it can now be said that there is no closet so remote that the skeleton of any woman's wrongs can be hidden from the search-light of this noble army of women! We who are more directly engaged in the education and evangelization of the non-Christian races, know what it is to have our work hindered by just the vices which our sisters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union are fighting to overthrow.

Lady Henry Somerset has already achieved great results in this wide field of reform. In her anticipated tour around the world new doors will open before her into ever widening fields of usefulness. As one manifestly chosen of God to be a leader in the establishment of His kingdom on earth we, who are working in our various ways for this supreme result, are happy to bid her most hearty welcome and Godspeed.

Lady Henry's reply was listened to with great attention. In part it was as follows:

Women across the sea began to organize long after this society was formed, and the most hopeful sign of this hopeful age is their deep and profound interest in the uplifting of human beings, and it all points to that wonderful object, the betterment of the world. Life seems hardly worth living unless it brings blessing to this old world of ours.

The women are the great home guard to whom the call is going out. I pray that the women who have so marvelous a chance may never fall short of fulfilling the wonderful mission that is theirs in their time.

The white-ribboners are linked with the missionary society, which has carried out the idea of the pure life and the clean brain as a part of Christ's religion. It seems to me that every day the conviction grows clearer that the great work you have at heart—to plant the banner of Christ on the heights of every country—can never be done until our countries exemplify the creeds they profess.

In my own land, we send missionaries to the uttermost parts of the earth, wherever the English flag waves; and we take the opium traffic to China, the liquor traffic to countries that never knew of it before, and legalize vice to other lands, and we need to set our own houses in order.

As nations we should be bowed in shame to think that we have brought such a curse on the world. Every woman must be a missionary at home. Until woman cleans the home governments and the morality that directs those governments, she will not be doing her whole missionary work.

The idea that government and politics can be on one side and religion on the other is false to the teachings of Christ. This is the message we need in my own country. I heard a bishop say that in Africa the pews in one of the churches are made of rum kegs. I think those countries would have been better without those churches. I do not wish to minimize the efforts of the heroes and heroines who have worked in the far-off mission fields, but there are hearts looking for greater service who are bound to their homes, who cannot leave their duties; and there is a field for organized womanhood which shall determine that Christianity shall exist in government, and that the spirit that dominates the nation shall be in harmony with the spirit of Christ and with the Golden Rule.

TO THE LONDON CONVENTION, JUNE, 1895.

REMARKABLE TWO HUNDRED DOLLAR TOUR.

It will be remembered that during the Convention at Cleveland last year a telegram was received from Lady Henry Somerset, saying that she had just arranged with Dr. Henry Lunn, who is so widely known across the Atlantic as the president and organizer of the Grindelwald Conference, to carry out a splendid series of tours for our members and their friends. Dr. Lunn arrived in New York by the steamship New York of the American Line, on Saturday morning. He preached for Dr. Lyman Abbott on the 27th inst., on the following Sunday at Tremont Temple, Boston, visiting Buffalo and Toronto en route for Chicago, completing his American tour by a series of sermons and addresses in Washington, where he will be when the Petition is presented to the President on February 15. We accordingly took the earliest opportunity of securing from Dr. Lunn the following account of his program.

In reply to the question as to the general arrangements he is making for our members, Dr. Lunn replied: "I have always made a great point of securing excellent hotel accommodation everywhere, relying for my economies upon the concessions obtained from railway and steamship companies. I have chartered specially for this party the steamship Berlin of the American Line, which boat will sail from New York on June 5. The sum of two hundred dollars will include saloon passage by the steamship Berlin with the right to return by any of the great steamers of that line up to July 15, without extra payment, or after that date by an extra payment of fifteen dollars, which should be made at the office of the American Line, 6 Bowling Green, New York, or 3 Cockspur Street, London, England. The two hundred dollars will also include six days' hotel accommodation in London, railway traveling in the following tour, a week in Grindelwald, two days in Lucerne, and two days in Paris."

What kind of a place is Grindelwald that so long a time should be spent there?

"It is one of the most magnificent and truly typical Swiss valleys surrounded by the gigantic mountains of the Bernese Oberland, the Jungfrau, the Wetterhorn and other famous peaks. It abounds in splendid excursions across glaciers and mountain passes, and has long been a great center for members of the famous English Alpine Club. It has, however, during recent years, taken on another character, having become the center for the meetings which I have had the privilege of organizing, known as the Grindelwald Conference. This is a gathering somewhat on the lines of Chautauqua and was attended last year by two thousand five hundred persons, in 1893 by one thousand six hundred persons, and in 1892 by about nine hundred persons. The growth in numbers is the best proof I can give of the increasing interest felt by the public in these gatherings."

Can these arrangements be modified to meet individual tastes?

"Certainly. That is the strong point in all my arrangements. Any one who wishes to stay an extra day, two days, or a week, to diverge at Lucerne, to visit some other part of Switzerland, can take special tickets which I get at reduced rates, and can also have coupons at fixed prices for the hotels. The same is true of making a prolonged stay in Paris. My three watchwords are elasticity, economy and excellence of arrangements."

How does the two hundred and fifty dollar tour differ from the two hundred dollar?

"Simply by taking the passengers on the outward journey through Paris so that they break the journey for a night and thereby lessen the strain of traveling somewhat and by giving them a much more extended tour in Switzerland, taking them from Lucerne to Berne, Berne to Geneva, and then, giving them the right to go from Geneva to Chamonix, for which places coupons will be provided."

What is the three hundred dollar tour to Switzerland and Italy?

"That is a complete tour through Switzerland to the places already named with a prolongation through the Mont Cenis tunnel to Rome. The option is also given of making further extensions into Italy at certain economical rates."

What are the arrangements for booking?

"In all these arrangements I have secured the invaluable coöperation of Dr. Albert Shaw, and my secretary will stay at his office from now until the tour closes. All letters of application should be addressed to The Pilgrimage Secretary, Review of Reviews, 13 Astor Place, New York, and should be marked in the top lefthand corner, 'Pilgrimage Bureau,' and a preliminary booking of five dollars should accompany the application."

A REQUEST TO PASTORS.

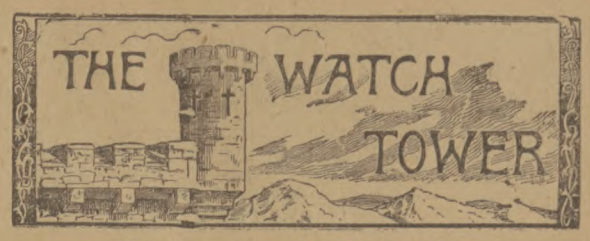
In order that the presentation of the Polyglot Petition to a committee from the Senate and House of Representatives, at Washington, on February 15, may have full weight as an object-lesson of the growing temperance sentiment of the nation and world, we earnestly request all ministers of the gospel in sympathy with us in this work to preach upon the Petition on the Sabbath following its presentation, February 17. Will white-ribboners please emphasize this request to their own pastors?

FRANCES E. WILLARD.
KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

IT is but just to Lady Henry Somerset that we call attention to the fact that the advertisement of her photograph in her own paper, The Woman's Signal, in which it is stated that she will in person present her photograph, etc., was inserted without her knowledge or consent. It comes from the B. W. T. A., and while it is not an unsuitable advertisement for them to put forth to the local auxiliaries, it was unfortunate that it should appear in Lady Henry Somerset's paper. This is, however, a part of the price that leaders must pay and we take this opportunity to reiterate that any use made of photographs or autographs and any expressions of praise relating to our leaders in the press generally, are made by those who feel that they are thereby doing a service to the cause, and that for such expressions the leaders are in no wise responsible.

A LARGE variety of temperance literature has been created by our National superintendents. It is getting to be a necessity for each superintendent to publish a brochure on her department. Such a book has just been issued by Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood, called "Hints and Helps for Evangelistic Workers." It is in attractive form, and its thirty-six pages are full of suggestion to the evangelistic worker, be she a superintendent or an individual Christian seeking for more spiritual helps.



If we knew whose feet were standing
Close beside the silent stream,
If we knew whose eyes were closing
In the sleep that knows no dream,
We should be so kind and tender,
Lightly judge and gently speak—
Let us act as if our vision
Saw the links that swiftly break.

—Mary T. Lathrap.

***

Terence said in classic phrase, "Whatever touches humanity touches me," and white-ribboners can truly say that whatever touches women touches us. The efflorescence of women's clubs in this country is a joy to our hearts, and many of our members are prominently connected with these clubs of bright, devoted workers whose mission is preëminently to the minds and manners of themselves and sisters; but it is a delightful fact that many of these constantly multiplying clubs have a philanthropic section—this is, perhaps, most notable of all in the Chicago Club, Miss Ada Sweet, president. There is hardly an evil in that great metropolis that the firm kind hand of this club has not helped to check nor a good that it has not conserved and developed. Our own president of Delaware, Miss Margaret Hillis, tells me that the New Century Club in beautiful Wilmington has founded an industrial school for girls, and in its committee on current events the report is regularly made of the progress of the temperance reform, so that the good women who compose the club are becoming more and more interested in the enterprises to which we are devoted. An article in their by-law relates to intoxicating liquors, and declares that "their use as a beverage shall not be authorized or allowed on the premises under possession or occupied by this club," and it further declares that "this by-law shall not be annulled, changed, altered or amended excepting by the concurrent vote of all the stockholders." I wish that our women in every locality would endeavor to secure such a declaration from every woman's club, and to bring into the program of the club the news and doctrine of the temperance propaganda so far as may be practicable.

***

One of the professors in a certain New England college, having been cured of his conservatism on the woman question by the remarkable scholarship of the young women under his care, has given it forth as his belief that "the coming woman is a man!"

***

Colonel Higginson is famous for the aptness of his impromptus. On leaving Mrs. President Hayes, after a delightful interview, he said: "My dear madam, when you die it will be from excessive graciousness."

***

It is said that some missionaries made the remark, "more in sadness than in anger," that at the recent Parliament of Religions when they were announced to speak "everybody got up and left," but when a heathen was "put forward" the crowds flocked like doves to their windows. Of course our missionary friends know that if there is any truth beyond the pleasantry of these words it was not based upon the preference in the minds of the thoughtful and kindly home-folk audiences that characterized the great Exposition, and made Chicago streets look more American than they had ever done before, but it was for the reason that the audience was willing to hear the other side from the lips of some of its most famous exponents. We believe that the outcome of the Parliament of Religions will be an ethical impulse, that will prove of incalculable value, illustrating the words of the great Apostle, who said that those who profess the doctrine of Christ should be "careful to maintain good works." We learn that one of the leading priests of an Oriental religion made this declaration: "Before I saw Chicago I used to think that the Christian religion would do better for my country than the one in which I had been trained, but since I have walked the streets lined with public houses, open on Sunday and every other day, visited the gambling houses that the mayor permits to run riot and haunts of shame that he declares cannot be closed, I think we are about as well off with our religion as we should be if our nation adopted that of the Christians." Undoubtedly, this dark-browed witness touched in these words the weakest link in the chain of the Christian argument, for seeing is believing, and so long as Christian countries continue to exhibit the unbridled abominations that are the principal feature of Chicago, the most characteristic city of modern civilization, we must not wonder if the heathen repudiate that apathy and fling in our teeth the saying of the Master: "By their fruits you shall know them." ON DUTY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

MASSACHUSETTS.

A ROYAL WELCOME TO A NOBLE GUEST.

Music Hall, Boston, was gay with flags and bunting and white ribbon on the eve of January 3, 1895—Massachusetts' "at home" to Lady Henry Somerset. The reception was all that could be desired, and the recipient was her own appreciative, beautiful self. It was a picture long to be remembered—our Massachusetts president, who is fair to look upon, and on each side, at the platform table, our English Somerset and American Willard, the two whom we do not think of now apart. "Two heads in council," especially two wise ones, are universally conceded to be better than one, and the great work for humanity is the "single thought" of these noble souls. The leaven of their presence in Boston is permeating everything, every society and organization organized for a high purpose. To-day it is perhaps to espouse the cause of the Haverhill strikers; to-morrow, in some more aristocratic or scholarly circle to discuss the social problem. Temperance, missionary, social and rescue workers, all and more, feel the vital touch of hands that are warm and spirits that are kindled at heavenly altars.

This may seem a digression from the subject of this letter, but it is not. It was a banquet of ideas, else the good things to eat would have been a poor tribute to a noble woman. I shall only give you the menu of the first, and this only in a limited way.

"The New Aristocracy" was the theme around which Mrs. Livermore clustered her words of greeting. It includes the great servants, Garrison, Phillips, Lincoln, and evidently in her thought "the Americanized English lady, or Anglicized American," Lady Henry Somerset. "We hope," she said (and so say we all), "to keep her here half the time, at least, and let her stay in England the other half."

Rev. Arthur Little, D. D., of the Second Church, Dorchester, responded to the "New Order of Nobility," of which the guest of the evening was an eminent example; "A woman whose rank and title and estates and privileges are nothing excepting in so far as they contribute to the development of her own character, and are used for the welfare of humanity and the advancement of Christ's kingdom on earth."

Louise Chandler Moulton contributed the following rondel:—

Fair Lady whom we joy to greet,
Thy gracious presence warms the day,
Defeats the reign of cold and sleet,
And turns the winter into May.
What kindly star showed thee the way
Our eager welcome here to meet—
Fair Lady whom we joy to greet,
Whose gracious presence warms the day?

Thy name our happy hearts repeat,
And all of us make haste to lay
Our loving tributes at thy feet,
Dear Queen of Hearts from far away—
Fair Lady whom we joy to greet,
Whose gracious presence warms the day.

It was one of the disappointments of the evening that Prof. J. H. W. Stuckenberg, of Germany, for fourteen years the genial, scholarly pastor of the American church in Berlin, was unable to be present and give his word of greeting. He, too, belongs to the new order of men, and brings to the great humanity problem a power of thought and vigor of expression, ranking him among our foremost thinkers and workers. For the workers are not simply the men and women in the factories and mills and on the farms. Lady Henry Somerset says, with apparent pride, "I, too, am a working woman." Substituted for Professor Stuckenberg, Christian Endeavor Francis E. Clark was most interesting as he spoke of the round-the-world W. C. T. U. workers in whose steps he had followed.

Mr. Samuel B. Capen, one of the philanthropic business men of Boston, exalted the privilege and opportunity a great municipality has in making the best external conditions for all its homes.

Dr. Ramsay's subject was "Old and New England, the Tie that Binds," and was handled in a sympathetic, appreciative way.

Prof. Ellen Hayes, of Wellesley College, was most cordially received as she spoke on the "Woman of the Future." "The new woman is going to have a new dress," she said, "and will have a respect for her physical self she hardly dreams of entertaining now." God hasten the fulfillment of this prophecy! "She will wear the yellow ribbon beside the white," i. e., a symbol that she is free. "There are signs for one who can read, of

"'One God, one law, one element,
And one far-off divine event,
To which the whole creation moved.'"

Rev. I. J. Lansing, pastor of the famous old Park Street church, and whose work is a power in social reform, dwelt very happily on "The Intellectual Life of Women." He also claimed that women must and will have a new dress. She can never attain the highest in her expansive skirts so full of physical limitation. He did not say just this, but evidently the wonder was to him that women, in all their voluminousness of dress, could accomplish so much. He was unsparing in his appreciation of what they have already attained.

No one was listened to with greater interest than Mrs. Amie Hicks, of London, a leader in the labor movement in England. "Lady Henry Somerset," she said, "needs no words to tell her how much we love her. To-night I want to appeal to the cultured, refined women of America for their sympathy in behalf of labor; for the thousands of honest, sober, thrifty workers who can now with difficulty make a subsistence. If we are followers of Christ, if we wear the white ribbon, we must help them."

But the time had come to hear from President and Doctor Frances E. Willard, and this is always a moment of supreme satisfaction. One cannot look at her without a feeling of gratitude and love for the dear English comrade who took her in a crucial hour and fostered her life back again into all its richness and fullness. "Only the Golden Rule can Bring the Golden Age," was her text of tribute and how beautiful and genuine it was. [This speech was published in full in THE UNION SIGNAL of January 17.—EDS.]

Lady Henry Somerset who had borne bravely all this meed of praise rose to the occasion in her closing words, "Not unto me," was her opening refrain, "but all for the cause, the work and the workers I represent." She dwelt upon the inspiration received from America, the freedom of women, the rights of labor. The great audience listened with vivid interest to such words as these:

"The old order changes. Thank God it does. The immense landed estates of my country cannot much longer be kept up. And we should be willing to stop the undesirable immigration to which you object so much if only you would spare to send us any more millionaires like William Waldorf Astor to buy our castles and try to keep up the doomed old order.

"I am an advocate of temperance, but there are two other things which I am also in favor of—the political freedom of women and the rights of labor. I say 'rights.' To live means to live a joyous, holy life, and we live here on earth in order that others may live. To say that all poverty springs from intemperance is to say something which cannot be substantiated. I pray you as temperance women to meet the great social problems which look temperance people in the face.

"In you are the hopes of England. Keep that great word liberty emblazoned on your banner."

LOUISE C. PURINGTON,
State Reporter, Dorchester, Boston.

MINNESOTA.

A BREEZY LETTER.

Delavan union recently reported that they are taking The White-Ribboner for their entire membership of thirty-two. They have a column in the local paper which they keep filled. Rev. J. M. Young, of the Free Baptist church, preached a Crusade anniversary sermon, December 23, to a crowded house, and Rev. Mr. Josylin, of Wells, was engaged to preach a temperance sermon early in January. They intend to keep the subject before the people in such a way that saloons shall be voted out in the spring.

Edgerton union took particular interest in a recent wedding in Peru, Ind., for the groom, Rev. C. E. Hawkins, is the Methodist minister of the former place, and a working honorary member of the union. Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins were given a hearty welcome by Edgerton people upon their arrival there. Edgerton union is fortunate in having the sympathy and help not only of the ministers, but also of the principal of the public school, Professor Ham, and with the aid of these and other good brothers, the union expects to be able to keep that a no-license town. The Edgerton Enterprise also lends a hand, giving occasional space for temperance news, and the press superintendent is hoping to have a regular column ere long.

The reporter for the Redwood Falls union writes: "Like some experiences in a Methodist class meeting, 'I've nothing new to say, but we're still going on in the old way, which never seems old' because of the constantly added interest." The first meeting of each month is a mothers' meeting, and at each of the other meetings some time is spent on one or more departments of work. A marked improvement is seen in the conduct of the meetings and the amount of work done in a given time, the president insisting upon strict parliamentary observance; a copy of Roberts' Rules of Order is brought to every meeting, and the two-leaf card of rules is furnished to the members for ready reference. The members of the union have united with others interested in the public welfare in holding a series of weekly five-cent entertainments, consisting of music, recitations and reading, and occasionally a magic lantern exhibit or something similar, the object being to provide entertainment for the children and youth of the town. They have thus far proved very successful.

Montevideo union is doing good work under the supervision of the president, Mrs. Moyer. All through the summer they supplied two ice water barrels, and in the fall when two members called upon the business men to aid in the expense incurred they met with a ready response, collecting over twenty dollars. Conductor Lyon gave a lecture under the auspices of the union, and several entertainments have been given. The L. T. L., Mrs. Wells, superintendent, gave an entertainment which netted fifteen dollars for the treasury. Several hundred leaflets have been distributed at these various meetings. Scientific temperance instruction is taught in the schools, most of the teachers being conscientious Christians and gladly doing this work. Each teacher is supplied by the union with Monthly Advices.

Wood Lake union is doing aggressive work under the leadership of Mrs. Coghlan, a devoted, cultured Christian woman, working along despite difficulties and discouragements, having the assurance of the reward promised the faithful. The union has held one Demorest medal contest, a decided success. Aside from this they have had no public meeting, but make it a point to get a good deal of temperance matter into the programs of Children's Day, Christmas and other special occasions, always getting a better hearing than they would at a regular temperance gathering.

The members of the Granite Falls union "are all alive—twenty of them, and ready for work," writes Mrs. Barnes, and have money in the treasury ready to pay state dues on February 1. This union pays the expenses of one delegate to the state convention every year, and thinks it money well spent. A large roll of fresh reading matter is sent each week into the logging camps. Suffrage receives considerable attention and all are agreed as to its necessity.

Litchfield union has a new president, Mrs. C. L. McClure, who is studying to show herself approved so that she need not be ashamed, and judging by the good things planned she will succeed. They have a column in the local paper, have had two public mothers' meetings, and are planning for another to discuss ways and means to keep the boys from the saloons. They have been discussing heredity and the influence of alcohol on the health with special attention to alcoholic insanity.

Wright county union, through the county president, Mrs. A. M. Davis, has placed the school Physiology Journal in all the schools in the county, thirteen in number. Letters have been received from some of the principals stating the help derived from its use and their appreciation of the interest shown them by the W. C. T. U. The county press superintendent writes: "Press work has become an easy pleasure now; our six county papers are all so willing to admit articles, and even consider the temperance column a help to their papers. Suffrage sentiment is no longer obnoxious, fully one-third of the matter sent this last quarter has been on suffrage, good and strong, too." Special mention is made of the Annandale Post and its new editor, W. A. Clements, late of Waseca, who is always willing to help in all reform work; also of the Delano Gazette and Eagle, both very kind and accommodating.

Minneapolis unions are steadily working. Our new state president, Mrs. Fry, was recently in the city speaking to the women and encouraging them. A reception for Mrs. Fry was held in the home of Mrs. James M. Pye, giving the women of the city an opportunity to meet the new leader and become acquainted with her. Mrs. Fry also visited St. Paul and addressed the workers there and also in Hamline. Hamline union, by the way, recently held a Demorest medal contest, the contestants being six boys about fourteen years of age. Well done, Hamline! This is their third contest since last June.

Cover union, Stillwater, is only seven months old, and numbers thirty-one members. Every member is very much interested in the work. They have held three special meetings and carry on sixteen departments. Sunday-school work is carried on in the mission Sabbath-school of over one hundred pupils. Press work is another interesting feature, many little items of interest being reported in the paper, with "W. C. T. U." in large letters for a heading. Several poor families were made happy at Thanksgiving and New Year's, and eight large comforters have been made for poor families. The White-Ribboner is taken by the entire membership. Fifteen members attended the last district convention, and the next one is to be held in Stillwater. The union has raised over forty dollars, and the corresponding secretary recently received a letter from Jasper M. Thompson, of Omaha, Neb., informing her that he had sent by express twenty-five dollars as a New Year's gift for Cover union, in memory of his late sister, Mrs. George Welstard.

The Y's of Duluth have a beautiful calendar giving date of the meetings for a year, and topics. Every other meeting is in the afternoon, and the alternating one in the evening, the latter being more of the nature of a social and literary entertainment.

MRS. AMY A. GREEN,
State Reporter, Minneapolis.

MICHIGAN ETCHINGS.

January,—into this month has come our great loss. Mary T. Lathrap, our state president, has been "called home." In her last prayer at state convention in June, was voiced this plea—"Comfort those who stay." A comrade, Mrs. Kate R. Hill, who has herself felt the need of this comfort the past year in the loss of a beloved daughter, thus writes for us:

Ah! that prayer rings out to-day,
"Dear Lord, comfort those who stay."
Mute the lips that breathed it then
Yet while swells earth's full "amen"
To the tender, pleading words—
Sung by memory's blessed birds—
Seem those lips to thrill and hold
All the reverent faith of old,
And yet lovingly to pray
Dear Lord, "comfort those who stay."

Memorial services are to be held by districts as requested by Miss Willard. Two have already been held in Detroit, at which citizen, clergymen, local worker, all testified to the ability and worth of Mrs. Lathrap. The work goes on in the state as in the nation, and we of the Michigan would not be loyal if we did not join hands and look forward and upward in this crisis.

Our state paper came out in a joyful dress this Christmas, and the Bible reading it contained was headed, Christus Natus Hodie, and was by Mrs. B. B. Hudson. Our L. T. L. superintendent speaks of a new Loyal Temperance Legion in Menominee county, by name Palestina; all plans of Mrs. Rice are given and urged carrying out

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N.Y.

by Michigan. In a paper read by Mrs. Charles Kyle at eighth district convention was the sentence, "We must take time to accomplish results. Remember when Christ finished His career on earth a small upper room was sufficient to hold all His followers."

Mrs. E. N. Law, organizer, has had sixteen appointments in first district.

In second district at Hillsdale county convention were two new features, a contest of written work on Sabbath observance, prize awarded to Mrs. Dora Archer, and a narcotic contest of written work by three ladies, prize obtained by Mrs. Cook. A novel way of collecting county dues was adopted. Unions neglecting to pay same forfeit their vote at election of officers. A special resolution on death of Mrs. Woodbridge was adopted. Mrs. E. N. Law gave a spirited evening address. Cambria bespeaks its activity and progression in programs for 1895. Petersburg served dinner and supper upon election day. Lambertville and Little Lake also. We flung "Old Glory" to the breeze outside our tent, and inside the bannerette of the W. C. T. U.—Welcome!

Lansing in sixth district is doing grand work. They still continue Sunday afternoon meetings and are securing new members. They had Daily Union Signal read at meetings and are scattering prohibition literature at public meetings, churches and elsewhere. Best of all, in one church at least, Congregational, the sacred cup is water. Mrs. J. G. Baldwin, of Livingston county, reports a new L. T. L. at Osceola, a Y of forty members at Howell, a W with thirty members and three honoraries at Fowlerville and successful mothers' meetings.

Clinton county has held a convention called by the district president, Mrs. Shepherd, and is now thoroughly organized. The convention was a success, with Mrs. Benjamin as speaker and for parliamentary drill.

Seventh district: Berlin and Port Sanilac are holding regular meetings; franchise is gaining ground. Pastors of churches give them a temperance sermon each month, and they have a course of lectures to include one upon temperance. Sanilac county reports two new unions, Downington and Carsonville. State superintendent of lumbermen's work is out with circular and blanks, giving twenty-four reliable addresses to which literature may be sent. Their missionary, Mr. J. R. Marshall, a "God called" man, goes this week. Let your prayers go with him. He gives up lucrative work for less pay in the Master's vineyard. Mrs. Howard, the faithful president of the eleventh, is at Eureka Springs, Arkansas, called there by illness of a son.

Mrs. Lillian Hollister, for so many years our Y superintendent, is now lady commander of the Maccabees, but still helpful to us. She has written a leaflet, any one holding a convention using this, "The Convention—How," will have a perfect success.

Ninth district fell into line with the other annual meetings this year at Manistee. The first day was occupied with the reports which were very encouraging. Five new unions have been added the past year. Mrs. A. S. Benjamin gave a drill upon parliamentary usage each day, and one strong temperance address. Several fine papers were given upon the following subjects: "The Relation of the W. C. T. U. and the Church," "We Women," "Franchise." One upon "Physical Morals" brought before us the thought that we sin just as truly when we abuse our bodies as when we break the Ten Commandments. Lake City union reported booth at county fair and three cash prizes awarded for the best temperance recitations given by children under fifteen years of age. Shelby has reorganized its L. T. L. The new union at Cobmoosa reports growing interest. Bear Lake and Onekama have both had a public lecture on narcotics by Mrs. Magoon. The convention visited the Evelyn Industrial Institute, conducted by Mrs. Emma Obenauer. Some thirty-five girls are now in this institute being trained for lives of usefulness. The delegates were also favored with a pleasure excursion on the lake in the yacht of Captain John Bowie. President Ella S. Hopkins' address was a broad outlook over the field and a plain setting forth of individual responsibility.

Holton union notified the township board saloons must be closed on election day and no liquor sold, with very satisfactory results. Oceana county unions held a school of methods at Hesperia, Mrs. Evans, of Ludington, giving the closing address upon prohibition.

Evart union has employed James Dunn for a series of temperance meetings. Four hundred signed the pledge. This union has organized a mercy department for mission and relief work. Reed City is also employing Mr. Dunn.

My own union, Flint, North Side, gives every alternate Friday to mission and relief work among our own poor. We have six families on our hands now. A Christian woman, Mrs. Wilson, has given us her parlor as a place to receive and disburse. Much good is being done, many helped spiritually and physically. At our last meeting we had present Mrs. Hancock, from Mandelay, Burmah. Her account of her work there and receiving at her own house all the workers, beginning with Mrs. Leavitt, was a feast. Sisters of the nation, pray for all workers in Michigan for faith, for courage, that we may, like one of old, do and say "When my soul fainted within me I remembered the Lord."

MRS. C. H. JOHNSON,
State Reporter, Flint.

MISSOURI.

FOR MORE MEMBERS.

Increase of membership is the slogan for the new year, and we hope that every union will enter upon an aggressive campaign, and report results to ye correspondent. La Belle W. C. T. U. increases in membership and interest, and on election day gave meals to the hungry, and has recently cared for a poor, destitute girl who drifted into the town without money or friends, and also for a deserted woman and child. A candy pull at the college to raise funds for the state pledge is the latest endeavor.

Craig union sent wood and baskets of food to all the sick and needy in the town on Thanksgiving day, with the compliments of the W. C. T. U. The members observed the eighty-second birthday of the oldest member, Grandma Price, by presenting her with a silver cream pitcher, sugar bowl, spoonholder and sugar shell. Parlor meetings are very popular in this union, which is a thriving one.

Adrian W. C. T. U. writes of business meetings well attended and full of life. The Prohibition club of this town recently held a meeting to which they invited the union; they went in a body and all wore their white ribbons. The president of this district was a candidate on the Prohibition ticket for recorder, and if the women people could have voted she would have been elected. The Adrian L. T. L. recently gave the Mother Goose entertainment, which netted them sufficient to buy needed books.

Butler union has had a large increase in membership as a result of the labors of Rev. J. B. Culpepper, and is busy circulating suffrage and anti-cigarette petitions. They "are hopeful spiritually, strong numerically, and are working for a solid financial basis." How much is condensed in that one brief sentence.

A suffrage contest held in Austin recently was a decided success, as was also an entertainment on the eve of temperance Sabbath. This union has paid its state pledge of fifteen dollars and is accordingly happy in consciousness of duty done.

Good news comes from Bosworth through the district president, Miss Whiteman. The way was prepared for later work by an excellent temperance sermon delivered by Rev. Collins; on the Monday following she organized an Anti-cigarette League of eighty-seven members in the public school, and the next day a W. C. T. U. of sixteen members, with the addition of five honorary members at the evening public meeting, which was addressed by Rev. Collins, one of the citizens and the district president. Welcome to the new union, and may their numbers increase.

Monroe city writes of a successful meeting addressed by Mrs. Millie Lewis. The members of Holden union recently held their annual reception and banquet for the purpose of raising their pledge for state and district work. The music was appropriate, and the annual paper by Mrs. Golladay admirable. The attendance was large, and the full amount desired to meet the pledge was added to the treasury.

The Neosho union is actively engaged in circulating literature, placing much reading matter on the subject of narcotics in the hands of the teachers and pupils in the public schools, also distributing the same in young people's societies. Their superintendent of social purity work took the agency of a book in order to visit the homes of the people; she interviewed thirty mothers in their homes, and has given out a large number of purity leaflets. Two socials have been held, the aggregate collections amounting to twelve dollars. The superintendent of press work writes up everything of interest for the local papers and in this way the work is kept before the people.

Knob Noster union, while small in membership, is doing faithfully the work at hand. A copy of the cartoon, the Mill or the Still, has been placed in the postoffice; the Polyglot Petition and literature circulated. During the Christmas season supplies to the amount of eight dollars were ordered from the W. T. P. A., and since the reorganization of the union last May they have ordered over sixteen dollars' worth of books, leaflets, etc. The reporter of this union writes that she believes no better work can be done by a W. C. T. U. than to canvass their town or neighborhood in the interests of the W. T. P. A. in general, and for the books, "A Great Mother," and "Unanswered Prayer," in particular. The only saloon in the town recently closed, but the rum fiend has not departed because of that fact.

At the regular meeting of the St. Louis Central union a committee of three was appointed to assist Rev. Gott in a crusade against Sunday liquor peddling, and selling liquor to minors. The question for the day was, "On what topics should women be well informed in order to cast an intelligent ballot?" The discussion was opened by a brief but very clear statement of our national banking system, followed by a plea for justice in taxation, and in favor of Henry George's theories of the land tax.

Election frauds were considered and the means by which women would eradicate them. Benevolent institutions and their management was the next phase of the subject discussed, which was succeeded by a talk on distilleries and breweries and their management.

The young women of the Y's hold a conference in February; among those who will participate are the Misses Parrish, Kearney, and Carter.

CONTEST ITEMS.

Grange Hall union has been very successful in contest work and has a circulating library of one hundred volumes purchased from the proceeds; they now hold one gold and eight silver medals and recently held another silver medal contest. Magnet has five silver medals and High Creek union three, making a total of one gold and sixteen silver medals in the township. Adjoining school districts are taking up the work, and lasting good will be the result.

A gold medal contest lately held at Adrian was well attended and the proceeds were fourteen dollars and seventy-five cents. Our state president has been recuperating at Hot Springs, but we expect her home soon.

The fifth district has sent to headquarters a list of five hundred and forty signatures to the equal suffrage petition besides the petitions sent by individuals.

LILLIAN WOOD,
State Reporter, Maryville.

VIRGINIA.

WORKING UNIONS.

Norfolk district W. C. T. U. held its quarterly convention in December, and all are cheered by the encouraging reports. Only one church in Newport News continues to use fermented wine. Newport News Y. W. C. T. U. obtains the use of the opera house free of charge. Mothers' meetings are regularly held. Each teacher in sixth ward is supplied with the Scientific Temperance Instruction monthly journal. Norfolk W. C. T. U. recently had a gold medal contest, which was presided over by Rev. Sam Small. The medal was won by Miss Susie Elam, of Port Norfolk, and the W. C. T. U. presented each of the other contestants with a souvenir silver spoon.

Loudoun county W. C. T. U. also held its quarterly convention in December. The three Y's and three W's of the county all had interesting reports of good work done. One very pleasing feature of this convention was a paper on "The Duties of Honoraries," by an honorary member of the Lincoln Y, Henry B. Taylor. A condensed report of the National Convention was read. It broadens our workers so much to keep in touch with the World's and National unions.

"O wad some power the giftie gie us" to get all our white-ribboners to become careful readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, their state paper, the state and National Minutes. There is great rejoicing in this county now over the recent local option election in which the saloon was voted out of the last wet district, and after May 1 there will not be a licensed saloon in the county. The one distillery will be closed, too, before that time—thanks to some of our good Prohibition brothers.

Neapolis W. C. T. U. (North Danville) organized last September by Miss Kearney, is going steadily forward, adding new members to their numbers at every meeting. Mr. Roberts, whose wife is president of this union, is having a building erected for their headquarters. Would that more of our unions had such generous friends.

Our state organizer went into Montgomery county after the state convention and organized six unions and the county president has organized one since. This result is largely due, no doubt, to the faithful working in medal contests. During the past year the Christiansburg union held forty silver and three gold in this county. Moral: Local unions should go to work holding medal contests, thus educating public sentiment, so it will be ready to crystallize into organization when our speakers come around.

A white-ribboner from Roanoke writes that the work has been steadily progressing

Cuticura

Skin Remedies Are Pure Sweet Gentle And Most Economical

Because so speedily effective. Sold throughout the world. British depot: FRANCIS NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

Captivating Songs.

"SONG ALBUM."

By Martin Roeder, 18 Songs of the highest order for soprano, mezzo-soprano, and tenor. A valuable collection for good singers. $1.50, postpaid.

"BOOTT'S ALBUM OF SONGS."

A new collection of splendid lyrics, showing rare treatment in musical setting and accompaniment. An important addition to the highest class of modern song albums. $1, postpaid.

"SIX LOVE SONGS."

By Frank E. Sawyer. Exquisite musical settings of Heine's tender, passionate love lyrics, with effective piano accompaniments. Sheet-music size, 75 cents, postpaid.

"Robert Franz's Album of Songs."

Two volumes of Franz's most admired compositions. An inexhaustible store of beautiful songs. English and German text. Vol. 1, 55 numbers; Vol. 2, 52 numbers. Each, heavy paper, 50 cents. Boards, $1.25; Cloth, $2.

"FROM GERMAN POETS."

Twelve delightful songs from translations of Heine, Gunther, Walling, Goethe, etc. $1, postpaid.

"SONGS OF SLEEP."

By Clayton Johns. One of the daintiest small collections extant. It is not a child's book. The songs are for mezzo-soprano voice. 50 cents, postpaid.

"SONGS FOR CHILDREN."

By Frederick H. Cowen. Eight simple, delightful songs with easy accompaniments, making an exceptionally pleasing collection. 50 cents, postpaid.

Send for descriptive circular of novelties in vocal and instrumental music.

LYON & HEALY,
Chicago, Ill.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, BOSTON.

Other Folks' Husbands speak well of Tokology. Does yours? Perhaps you have not tried it.

Mrs. A. W. Phelps, Tillamook, Oregon, writes: "My husband says money could not buy our Tokology if we could not get another."

And W. S. Craig expresses the opinion that "No husband who is considerate of his wife's happiness can afford to be without Tokology."

Prepaid $2.75. Send for sample pages and agents terms.
ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO, 277 Madison-st., Chicago.

Make Money

quickly by illustrating your lectures with a STEREOPTICON.

Long list of Slides on TEMPERANCE and kindred subjects

McINTOSH BATTERY and OPTICAL COMP'Y,
521 to 531 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 4 | FOOT DESK, | | $16 |
| 4 1-2 | " | " | 18 |
| 5 | " | " | 20 |

AMERICAN DESK CO., 270-272 Wabash-av., Chicago

AGENTS SAVE THE WOMEN work and worry by selling the Arnold Steam Cookers and Coffee Pots. Free outfits; most liberal terms.
Wilmot Castle & Co., 59 Elm St., Rochester, N. Y.

A $1 Magazine for 30c.

Send 30 cents and names of 6 people who might subscribe, and we will send you THE ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE a full year. The price of the magazine is $1 a year. A sample copy for 6 cents. Address

ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE 2819 OLIVE ST. ST. LOUIS, MO.

MILLER'S HOTEL. New York City, 39 West 26th Street. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths.
Address CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

LADY AGENTS, Rubber Undergarment. Quick sales, big profits. Catalog free, Mrs. N. B. LITTLE, Chicago and the unions building up since the state convention there in the fall. Manchester W. C. T. U. has a flourishing L. T. L. under the leadership of Mrs. J. Riley Grim. They recently held a very successful silver medal contest.

Upperville union, Fauquier county, organized last May by Mrs. Newton, state organizer, and Palem union, organized by Miss Kearney, in September, have each just held a silver medal contest, thereby arousing much interest in their work. Richmond Central union has started a series of health lectures to be continued at intervals during the winter. The first was on "Air and Hygiene," by Dr. Tefft, of Hartshorn Memorial College. The Richmond unions and Y's do a great deal of work in the penitentiary and Soldiers' Home.

Our state paper, The Virginia Call, comes out the middle of each month, and is a welcome visitor in many households.

We deeply mourn the loss of Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Lathrap.

MRS. HOWARD M. HOGE,
State Reporter, Lincoln.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MISS WILLARD addressed the Club of Collegiate Alumnæ at the Hotel Bellevue, Boston, January 14.

MISS JESSIE ACKERMANN has felt the necessity of canceling her engagements for the present, and spending her time quietly on a farm, as she strongly realizes the need of absolute rest.

A LATER letter from Miss Ensign, whose correspondence from New York will be noted on page 4, tells of an important omission in her account of the New York meeting—that Mrs. Mary H. Hunt presented her work in a stirring five minute speech.

A GREAT social purity meeting, from which hundreds were turned away, packed the Music Hall, Boston, January 13, and was addressed by Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard and "Mother Prindell," of the Florence Crittenton Midnight Mission, New York city.

A Y CONFERENCE will be held in St. Louis, Mo., February 8 and 9, with a reception at one of the large hotels the evening of February 7. A number of National Y organizers will take part in the program. Y's and W's are invited by the St. Louis Y's to come to this feast of young people. As the arrangements are in the capable hands of Mrs. Ingalls, a successful result is assured.

THE unique entertainment, consisting of a lecture on India, illustrated by "living pictures" in the various costumes of the country, is to be given by our own Mrs. J. G. Hauser for the benefit of the W. C. T. U., Hope Scandinavian mission and reading room, Tuesday evening, February 5, at the People's Institute, corner Van Buren and Leavitt streets, Chicago. This rare opportunity should be embraced by all who desire to aid a laudable enterprise, and at the same time enjoy an intellectual and æsthetic feast.

MRS. AMIE HICKS, who leads the women's trades unions of England, and sailed for home on the City of Paris, January 15, has been in Boston with our two chieftains most of the time since she came over, and has spoken at many important meetings with them and otherwise. Many of the most philanthropic and influential women in Boston have become deeply interested in Mrs. Hicks on account of her high character and unmixed devotion to the interests of the laboring people. She believes in conciliation, arbitration and the peaceful methods of the ballot-box, and strives to enforce these upon public consideration.

MRS. FRANCES BARNES, the beloved General Secretary of the Y. W. C. T. U., set sail January 22 for a rare and delightful trip as chaperone to a party of young women, an opportunity which came to her suddenly and unexpectedly. During a three months' absence she will visit the Azores, the Madeira Islands and points along the Mediterranean coast including Cairo, Jerusalem and Constantinople. The trip will bring renewed health and inspiration as well as afford an opportunity to carry the white ribbon into historic ports. Mrs. Evans and Miss Ensign, assistant secretaries, will hold the Y fort during Mrs. Barnes' absence.

Official Communications.

EVANGELISTIC DEPARTMENT.

DEAR SUPERINTENDENTS:—The weeks since the Cleveland Convention have been very busy ones with the National superintendent in spite of an attack of la grippe. The call to prayer, previous to the World's Convention next June, has been sent to presidents and journalists abroad and to every state president, superintendent and hundreds of editors in our own country. But the special matter in which I desire to interest you is a little volume which I have just issued, entitled "Hints and Helps for Evangelistic Workers." Its design is to meet the difficulties and answer the many questions, which for seven years have come to me daily from all over our own country and across the sea.

Although less than forty pages, it treats of the following among many topics: What the Evangelistic Department has Done, The Object of this Department, Preparation Needed by the Individual Worker, Preparation for the Local Union, Communion Circles, Bible Readings, Our Devotional Hour, The Evangelistic Department and the Church, Work Among the Masses, Co-operative Evangelistic Work, Gospel Missions and Conferences, Wayside Service, Duties of Local, County, District, State and National Superintendents, The Mother's Band of Prayer, Helpful Literature, How to Report, etc. Many of these topics I have treated in annual circulars, but the constant change of workers and formation of new unions makes a permanent form desirable.

Assured that this little book will be a help, it is my desire that a copy be placed in the hands of every local evangelistic superintendent. Copies have been sent to each vice-president of the World's union, all state presidents, all state evangelistic superintendents, evangelists and organizers, but beyond this we cannot scatter it "without money and without price." Although twenty-five cents a copy would not cover the expense of the first edition, the price has been fixed at ten cents each and postage, that it may come within the reach of all. If local, county and district evangelistic superintendents will notify the state superintendent, she can order from the National superintendent copies sufficient to supply all needs.

The thoughts embodied have reached few local unions, and may, with the blessing of God, result in a much more intelligent, spiritual and systematic evangelistic work in the future. In her annual address at Cleveland Miss Willard said: "It is my fervent desire that each and all of us may cooperate with Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood in the heaven-inspired plans that she has put before us for the constant deepening and extension of power in the evangelistic work."

This little book, widely circulated, will, I believe, answer this desire of our leader, and give an impulse to our great organization by permeating all parts with the evangelistic spirit, which is the Holy Spirit.

ELIZABETH W. GREENWOOD,
Evangelistic Supt. World's and National W. C. T. U.
151 Remsen St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—Our UNION SIGNAL will convey to you my first words of greeting in the new relation which I sustain to you. I cannot describe to you my feelings as I contemplate the change in our Sunday-school department. Our beloved Miss Kimball and her associate, Mrs. Bidwell, have wrought so wondrously for the National department, and have endeared themselves to us all. I cannot hope to fill their places in any sense, yet our women are loyal and I believe that they will be kind and charitable to me as I take the first steps in this new field of labor.

Because I believe in the guiding hand of God, I have consented to undertake the work, trusting not in my own strength but remembering that "His strength is made perfect in weakness."

I earnestly ask your coöperation in the work before us. Will you not aid me, my dear sisters, in maintaining the present status of the Sunday-school work and in taking some aggressive steps in the year before us? We desire to push the work along all lines, emphasizing pledge work, special observance of the quarterly temperance Sunday, Sunday-school temperance rallies, mass-meetings and the distribution of literature.

The London Sunday-school workers are endeavoring to secure the observance of the fourth Sunday in November as temperance Sunday throughout the world. We desire to coöperate with them and with other leading Sunday-school workers in this effort. We urge, therefore, that all state, county and local superintendents will seek to introduce suitable resolutions at Sunday-school and W. C. T. U. conventions, conferences and denominational assemblies, to the end that there may be a widespread endorsement of this work, and a universal observance of November 24th of this year as Temperance Sunday. Let it be understood that this effort in no way detracts from the significance of our regular Quarterly Temperance Sunday which should be extensively observed in the Sunday-schools, but that it provides opportunity for additional effort once a year in other departments of church work, such as temperance sermons in the morning, special programs in the Sunday-school, a veritable temperance prayer-meeting for the young people, and a union platform meeting, or other exercises, for the evening. The value of concerted work along this line on the part of the churches cannot be overestimated.

The new Plan of Work Leaflet is now ready for distribution. It is designed for local workers and should be sent to every union, local and county superintendent and temperance secretary. Price 35 cts, per 100 postpaid.

March 24 is the first quarterly temperance Sunday of the new year. We desire to make it a day of special Sunday-school visitation. I have prepared the following suggestive outline, hoping therewith to aid in systematizing the work. This is issued in the form of a circular, and samples will be sent free to state workers. In quantities, 25 cents per 100. Order large numbers for committee use.

SUNDAY SCHOOL VISITATION.

TEMPERANCE SUNDAY.

Object:—(a) To meet pastors, Sunday-school superintendents, teachers and officers.

(b) To observe the extent of temperance effort in the Sunday-school.

(c) To secure the appointment of a temperance secretary.

(d) To recommend Sunday-school temperance papers.

(e) To introduce pledge work into the Sunday-school.

(f) To obtain items of information pertaining to the work.

Committee:—To be appointed by the union and composed of a visitor for each Sunday-school with local superintendent as chairman.

NOTE.—Large cities should be districted according to the number of unions so that each may know its own territory.

Equipments:—Each visitor should be supplied with sample copies of Young Crusader and other Sunday-school temperance papers; sample copies of W. T. P. A. lesson leaflets; catalogue of approved Sunday-school temperance books; department leaflets; pledges to circulate and a pledge roll of honor to present to the Sunday-school (see list of Sunday-school helps in leaflet and W. T. P. A. catalogue); note book in which to record the name of school, the names and addresses of pastor, Sunday-school superintendent, temperance secretary, chairman of temperance committee, if any exists, and the items of report, viz.: Total membership; number of pledged members; names of lesson helps and Sunday-school papers used (examine them); number of temperance books in library; number of pages of temperance literature used during past quarter; methods of observing temperance Sunday by pastor and Sunday-school. Record results of observation and inquiry for future reference. Report to the union.

We would urge our state and county workers to begin immediately to arrange for this special work on March 24. Let committees be appointed, fully equipped and drilled by the chairman for the Sunday-school visitation. Will you not push this effort and make it yield the department a harvest of information and inspiration all along the line?

Praying God's richest blessing upon you all and asking that each day at noon-time you will tarry with me at the mercy-seat that we may receive a new baptism for our work, I am

Ever your willing servant,
STELLA B. IRVINE,
Nat'l Supt. Sunday-School Dept.
300 The Colonnade, St. Paul, Minn.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

From a personal letter from Mrs. Grubb, I cull the following breezy item:

"I am flitting off to Washington this week to try to induce Secretary Carlisle to change his views in regard to beer not being 'intoxicating' and therefore germane to the prohibitory law pertaining to Ellis Island. It has done so much damage to the cause of good morals there that all who are desirous of good order, whether temperance people or not, lament its re-introduction. Then I shall spend a few days at the Island to see the practical operation of our missionary work."

From Mrs. H. E. Chreibzberg, corresponding secretary of South Carolina, comes a note of cheer which I regret I have not space to give entire. She says:

Sisters of the W. C. T. U. host, rejoice with South Carolina. The black veil is lifted from our fair state. Through the faithful labor of Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin our legislature has been induced to pass the bill "To provide for the teaching of physiology and hygiene in the public schools." South Carolina has made long strides in the right direction in the last four years. Clemson College, the state agricultural college, is in its second year of successful operation, where from six hundred to one thousand boys, under military discipline, are trained in agricultural and mechanical arts.

The Girls' Industrial and Winthrop Normal and Training School is nearly completed. From present indications it is hoped that institution will, before the end of 1895, be launched in the

THE ELEVENTH EDITION.
WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS
Has just been issued. This song book is certainly the most popular collection of Temperance Songs
ever published. The melodies are unusually pleasing and the words are right to the point. It covers a wide range of themes, expressing all the varied emotions, from the comic to the pathetic. Get it, and your young people will bless you, and your old people will praise you.
Price 35c.
Order direct of the author,
FLORA H. CASSEL, Hastings, Neb.

PRIZES ON PATENTS.
How to get $100 and Perhaps Make a Fortune.
We secure patents and to induce people to keep track of their bright ideas we offer a prize of one hundred dollars to be paid on the first of every month to the person who submits to us the most meritorious invention during the preceding month. We will also advertise the invention free of charge in the National Register, a weekly newspaper, published in Washington, D. C., which has an extensive circulation throughout the United States and is devoted to the interests of inventors.
NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.
The idea of being able to invent something strikes most people as being very difficult; this delusion the Company wishes to dispel. It is the simple things and small inventions that make the greatest amount of money, and the complex ones are seldom profitable. Almost everybody, at some time or another, conceives an idea, which, if patented, would probably be worth to him a fortune. Unfortunately such ideas are usually dismissed without thought. The simple inventions like the car window, which could be easily slid up and down without breaking the passenger's back, the sauce pan, the collar button, the nut lock, the bottle stopper, the snow shovel are things that almost every one sees some way of improving upon, and it is these kind of inventions that bring the greatest returns to the author.
The prize we offer will be paid at the end of each month, whether the application has been acted upon by the Patent office or not. Every competitor must apply for a patent on his invention through us, and whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a valuable patent.
THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
JOHN WEDDERBURN, Gen'l Manager,
618 F. St., N. W., Washington, D. C.
P. S. The responsibility of this company may be judged from the fact that its stock is held by about seventeen hundred of the leading newspapers of the United States.

DEAFNESS
and head noises relieved by using WILSON'S COMMON SENSE EAR DRUMS. Entirely new, scientific invention; different from all other devices; the only safe, simple, comfortable, and invisible ear drum in the world. Hundreds are being benefitted where medical skill has failed. No string or wire attachment to irritate the ear. Write for pamphlet.
THE DRUM IN POSITION
WILSON EAR DRUM CO.
132 Trust Bldg. LOUISVILLE, KY.

DENT'S CORN GUM
Cures Corns, Warts, Bunions, etc. So easy to apply—it sticks fast. Ask for Dent's; take no other. Sold everywhere, or by mail 10 cents. C. S. DENT & CO. DETROIT, MICH.
Try Dent's Toothache Gum.

High Arm
Warranted Ten Years
MY HUSBAND Can't see how you do it.
$60 Kenwood Machine for - $23.00
$50 Arlington Machine for - $19.50
Standard Singers - $8.00, $11.00
$15.00, and 27 other styles. All attachments FREE. We pay freight ship any where on 30 days free trial, in any home without asking one cent in advance. Buy from factory. Save agents large profits. Over 100,000 in use. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write at once. Address (in full), CASH BUYERS' UNION,
158-164 West Van Buren St., B 30, Chicago, Ill.

SHOEMAKER'S POULTRY ALMANAC
Contains 80 pages; over 70 illustrations in colors. Sure remedies and recipes for all known diseases in poultry; also valuable hints on poultry raising. Full information and prices on all leading varieties. Finest descriptive Poultry Book ever issued. Sent postpaid for 15cts. to any address. C. C. SHOEMAKER, Freeport, Ill. U.S.A.

HOME STUDY Success in Business Life is within the reach of all who take a thorough Business College course at Home, by Mail. It will pay to investigate. Cat. free. Trial lesson 10c.
BRYANT & STRATTON, 77 College Bldg., Buffalo, N.Y.

SALESMEN WANTED to sell our goods by samples to the wholesale and retail trade; sell on sight to every business man or firm; liberal salary, money advanced for advertising and expenses. Permanent position. Address with stamp, KING MFG. CO., A 55 Chicago, Ill.

CANCER permanently cured. No plaster. No knife. No poison. No
JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my Invisible Tubular Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Warranted to help more cases than all similar devices combined. Helps ears as glasses do eyes. Sold by F. Hiscox only, 853 Br'dway, N. Y. Send for book of proofs FREE interests of woman's educational elevation and placed on a broad and substantial basis. To Mrs. Chapin much is due in setting in motion the forces now culminating in the Girls' Industrial school.

There has just come to my hand "Hints and Helps for Evangelistic Workers," by Miss Greenwood, evangelistic superintendent for World's and National W. C. T. U. It is an ideal hand-book and will prove invaluable to workers in this vital department. It contains sketches on what has been accomplished, as well as plans for future unfoldment, lists of available leaflets, outlines of Bible study, and is in every way fitted for its purpose. Send ten cents and postage to Miss E. W. Greenwood, 151 Remsen street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Miss Greenwood expects to be in Mifflin county, Pa., and would like to make engagements en route.

The program for the Washington meeting will be printed in full in next week's issue, if possible. The meetings are to be held in the Metropolitan M. E. church, and among the delightful features may be mentioned a solo by Miss Katharine Willard and music by the Moody quartette. So many speakers are turning their faces Washingtonward that we feel sure unions in that vicinity and en route will be glad to avail themselves of their propinquity for public meetings.

Mrs. Hoffman has a few open dates before the Council, which may be secured by writing Mrs. Horning. Mrs. Barker also would be glad to make an engagement or two. She goes to South Carolina directly from Washington. I have planned to give a few dates during and after the Council to West Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and Pennsylvania, and will be very glad to hear of any point where my services may be desired.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner.

☞Take note,—Miss Willard's addresses are all gone. Don't order any more. The address in full is printed in the Minutes and they are furnished at fifteen cents, which barely pays the postage. So you get the address with all reports and minutes of Convention for five cents additional.

Again, don't send to W. T. P. A. for Minutes. They have nothing to do with them.

Don't send subscriptions for THE UNION SIGNAL to the National treasurer, but direct W. T. P. A., Temple, and make your order to W. T. P. A. Every one in Chicago knows what those letters mean.

Birthdays are looking up. A dear old lady ninety years old, living at Wood Lawn, Md., sends her gift, and Mrs. Abrahams, president of Cecil county, supplements with another making $1.55. This gift brings vividly to the treasurer a very pleasant convention held with these good women last September. They are doing good work for Cecil county. Mrs. Martindale, treasurer of county, sends some words of cheer and wisdom. Mrs. Snow, of Cornish, Me., sends $1, part as birthday gift and "balance as a thankoffering for blessings received during past year." Mrs. S. M. I. Woodin sends her 73 shining pennies for her years so full of good works and the balance for a blessing, making 100. She also sent a list of names to Polyglot Petition "gathered in a sick room." She writes: "I hear from Mrs. Fullen, to whom I send THE UNION SIGNAL occasionally, telling how much good it does her and that she passes it on to other readers." That is a bright sick room because the "light of the world," Jesus, fills it. That dear woman is doing more good in her "shut in" activity than many who are well and abroad, but indifferent. Blessings upon you, my sister. Mary D. Tomlinson sends $1 also. From the executive mansion, Madison, Wis., comes a royal birthday gift of $5 from the gifted first lady of the state, our superintendent of work among lumbermen, Mary C. Upham. She is preparing a paper for one of our popular magazines upon the work of her department. Would we had more such governors and more such governor's wives. Mrs. M. J. Dygart sends a self-denial gift of $2.40 from Ann Arbor W. C. T. U., and from Baltimore Willard Y, comes $1.40 for same fund sent by Bessie Carmichael. One dollar from the girls does us more good than two from the W's, because we think of their longer years of service in prospect, and their better preparation. Anna E. De Golier sends $1.30 from Northport, Mich. Mrs. L. M. Barnard, Oskaloosa, Ia., $1.95. Mrs. L. Melbourne, Covington, Ky., 25 cents, and Mrs. Susanna H. Bartlett, Kingston, Mass., $2.

Grand old Illinois sends in the largest amount of dues received in the first quarter of this best year of our work (we trust) $200. New York also sends in dues thus early. This is an improvement on last year and helps us out splendidly.

HELEN M. BARKER.

WHITE RIBBON RALLY IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

DEAR COMRADES OF THE WHITE-RIBBON ARMY:—Our National Capital, and especially the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia, will ere long be honored by the presence of our chieftains, Frances E. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, with other officers of the World's and National W. C. T. U., the occasion being the presentation of the "Polyglot Petition" to the United States government on February 15, 1895. We are arranging for a convocation of white-ribboners at that time, and hope the results will be to give a new impetus to our work, and an unlimited quantity of fresh enthusiasm for our workers at this national center of politics and society.

Desiring the widest possible good to accrue to our common cause, we hereby extend a cordial invitation to all members of our National W. C. T. U., and other friends of prohibition, to assemble here and enjoy with us the wise counsels of our leaders. Let all the people come!

We sincerely wish our homes were large enough (as our hearts certainly are), that we might offer to you all the hospitalities of our own firesides, but as that cannot be we give below the list of hotels and boarding-houses. Our secretary, Miss L. S. Weightman, will also do her best to give any additional information to any one addressing her at 1918 15th street, N. W.

Yours for the cause we love.

MARY E. GRIFFITH,
Pres. W. C. T. U. Dist. of Col.,
LOUISA S. WEIGHTMAN, Cor. Sec.

HOTELS.

Ebbitt, F and 14th Sts., N. W. $4 per day; top floor, $2.50.

Riggs, G and 15th Sts., N. W. $3 per day; two in a room.

Cochran, K and 14th Sts.. N. W. (N. W. cor.) $4 per day, two in a room; $25 per week.

Hamilton, K and 14th Sts., N. W. (N. E. cor.) $2.50 per day, two in a room; $2 per day, one in a room.

Arlington, Vermont Ave., bet. H and I Sts., N. W. $4 per day.

Willard's, Pennsylvania Ave. and 14th St., N. W. $3 per day, two in a room, Wormley, H and 15th Sts., N. W. $2.50 per day, top floor.

Randall, Pennsylvania Ave. and 15th St., N. W. $2 per day.

Fredonia, H St., bet. 13th and 14th, N. W. $2 per day, one in a room; $1.50 per day, two in a room.

Oxford, New York Ave. and 14th St., N. W. $2 per day, two in a room, Elsmere, 1406 H St., N. W. $2.50 per day, two in a room.

Clarendon, H and 14th Sts., N. W. $2 per day, two in a room.

St. James, Pennsylvania Ave. and 6th St., N. W. (S. E. cor.) $2 per day, two in a room.

National, Pennsylvania Ave. and 6th St., N. W. (N. E. cor.) $2.50 per day, two in a room.

Metropolitan, Pennsylvania Ave., bet. 6th and 7th Sts. $2.50 per day.

Lincoln, H and 10th Sts., N. W. $1.50 per day; $8 to $10 per week, one in a room; $16 per week, two in room.

Temple, 9th St., bet. F and G Sts. $2 per day; $10 per week, one in a room; $1.50 per day, $8 per week, two in a room.

BOARDING HOUSES.

Litchfield, 14th St., bet. I and K Sts., N. W. $2 per day, one in a room; $1.50 per day, two in a room.

*La Fetra's, G and 11th Sts., N. W. $10 to $15 per week, one in a room; $8 to $12, two in a room.

Gramercy, Vermont Av., bet. H and I, opposite Arlington Hotel. $2 per day, two in a room.

Buckingham, 918 15th St., N. W. $2 per day, two in a room.

Ingleside, 1547 I St., N. W. $2 per day; two in a room.

Ardmore, 13th St., near F. $1.50 per day; $13 to $15 per week.

Strathmore Arms, 1101 K St., N. W.

Mrs. L. K. Devendorf, 717 10th St., N. W. $2 per day; $12 per week, one or two in a room.

Mrs. H. G. Watts, 1202 K St., N. W. $1.75 per day, one in a room; $1.25 per day, two in a room.

Mrs. Van Dyke, 1301 K St., N. W. $2 per day, two in a room.

Mrs. Lawler, 1307 K St., N. W. $2 per day, two in a room.

Mrs. Higgins, 1400 K St., N. W. $2 per day, four in a room, private bath.

Miss Snow, 822 Connecticut Ave., N. W. $3 per day, two in a room.

Mrs. C. L. Case, 2027 I St., N. W. $1.50 per day, two in a room.

ROOMS ONLY.

*Dr. Caroline B. Winslow, 1 Grant Pl., N. W. $1 per day, two in a room.

Mrs. Burnham, 32 Grant Pl. $1 per day, two in a room.

Mrs. Rogers, 708 11th St., N. W. Two in a room, 50 cents each.

*Wimodaughsis, 1328 I St., N. W. $1 per day, one in a room; 75 cents per day, two in a room.

*Crosby's, 248 3d St., N. W. $1 per day to W. C. T. U. women.

N. B.—Those marked * are strictly temperance houses.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

Responses to the appeal made by the board of trustees are beginning to reach us, but many, many more are needed during the trying period now before us. Let every union and every friend of the cause contribute their mite; and those who have gathered together small amounts for Hospital work forward the same at once. "Many a little," you know, gathered in one place, will amount to a very useful sum in relieving the suffering of the needy. The cash contributions so far received in response to the call are from Nebraska and Minnesota. The other and wealthier states will be heard from in due season. The emergency is now, and what is done should be done quickly.

Next to cash contributions, eggs, apples and potatoes would be most welcome. How many unions will gather small donations in these staples and ship by freight (in refrigerator cars to avoid frost) to 1619 Diversey Avenue? In many places two dozen eggs can be bought for the price of one in Chicago, while many have them without buying. Here is an opportunity for the unions in the country to help.

While the board of trustees of the Hospital is always glad to receive and help W. C. T. U. workers, care should be exercised in sending so that no case of incurable disease will cause expense where relief is impossible. Several times in the history of the hospital cases of this kind have been sent, expense has been incurred and labor lost, only to determine that help was impossible. Not only is this a burden and expense to the hospital, but it is exceedingly trying to the patient. Do not send applications for this class of cases.

Miss Belle Braham, superintendent of L. T. L. work for Pennsylvania, is now an inmate of the hospital, receiving the best of care.

The bath-rooms have been renovated and put in sanitary condition, and two new bath tubs added to the conveniences heretofore somewhat inadequate.

Donations in kind for December and January will be acknowledged in our next communication. PRESS COMMITTEE.

POLYGLOT PETITION.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

| Names. | Residences. |
|---|---|

Quaker Oats gives children good digestions, good teeth and rosy cheeks—then good tempers.

Sold only in 2 lb. Packages.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, bilious headache, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, loss of appetite, sallow skin, etc., when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

Go by the book. Pills 10¢ and 25¢ a box. Book free at your druggist's or write B. F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

City Folks

can grow D. & C. Roses as well as other folks. They are on their own roots and will grow in a pot as well as anywhere. How to select them—get them—grow them, is told in the New Guide to Rose Culture. This book treats of all other flowers as well and contains many attractive special offers. If you so request we will send it free and a sample copy of our floral magazine, Success With Flowers.

Dingee & Conard Co., West Grove, Pa.

ASK FOR THE
NEW JAPANESE PERFUME
MAT-SU-KI-TA

THE CROWN PERFUMERY CO.,
of 177 New Bond Street, London,
Have much pleasure in introducing to their American clientele their latest perfume MAT-SU-KI-TA.

This delightful scent differs in odor from anything heretofore produced. It has been called "an incomparably delicious perfume." We heartily commend it to all lovers of the celebrated Crab-Apple Blossoms AND Crown Lavender Salts, so popular all over the world.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

The Natural Body Brace

Cures Female Weakness, restores Health and Vigor.

After wearing your Natural Body brace for nine months, the most extreme and painful female weakness has vanished. MRS. JESSIE FISHER. Spruce Creek, Pa.

I have been afflicted with falling of the womb for 23 years, and have never had anything do help me like the Natural Body Brace has. I could not stand up long enough to wash dishes before wearing it, and now (after wearing it 3 months) I am cooking for a large family. I also help wash and do all kind of work. MRS. LUCINDA FIELD, Oscar, Tex.

Money Refunded if Brace is not Satisfactory. Send for full information.

Natural Body Brace Co., Salina, Kan.
HOWARD C. RASH, Manager.

At ¼ Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc, List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address, C. J. MASON, Box, 519, New York City, N. Y.

MARKED REDUCTION ON BIBLE READINGS

Issued Previous to January, 1895.

Price of Bible and Responsive Readings published previous to January, 1895, 25cts per 100.

Send to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Kernels.

A PEACEFUL dog may not fight, but he often does that which is worse—he watches where the other dog hides his bone.

EVERY bird pleases us with its lay, especially the hen.

A CHILD being asked, "What is the plural of forget-me-not?" answered "Forget-us-not."

GOING TO CALIFORNIA?

The Burlington Route is the only railway running "Personally conducted" excursions via Denver, Colorado Springs, Salt Lake, Ogden, Sacramento, San Francisco, Stockton, Merced, Fresno, Bakersfield and Los Angeles at the lowest rates. Pullman Tourist Sleeping Car through without change. Leave Chicago every Wednesday. Write or call on T. A. Grady, Excursion Manager, 211 Clark St., Chicago.

A BOSTON man, reading that there were four thousand Poles in New York, exclaimed "What a splendid place to raise beans!"

HE who plants a melon patch too near the public highway can scarcely be regarded as a promoter of public morals.

THERE is a "best" to be got out of everything, but it is neither the best of place nor possession nor the chuckle of the last word. —Mrs. Whitney.

MORE THAN 90,000,000 PASSENGERS

Have been carried by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Ry. during the past twenty-five years. Very few were able to find any fault. The rest were delighted. One of them recently said: "For several years past I have made from two to four trips each month between Chicago and New York, and am almost always accompanied by from one to three or four others. I believe (as I am informed by your conductors) that I have made more trips between Chicago and New York than any other one man during the past few years. I have always traveled over your road in preference to any other, because by careful comparison with others I have found not only that the road itself is far superior, but the table and the service are in every respect the best of any road I have ever traveled on. The conductors, stewards, waiters and porters I have found to be uniformly courteous and attentive, adding greatly to the comfort of those who are obliged to travel as much as I am." Trains leave Chicago as follows: 8:00 A. M., 10:30 A. M., 3:25 P. M., 5:30 P. M., 8:45 P. M., daily and 11:30 P. M. daily except Sunday. F. M. BYRON, C. P. & T. A., 66 Clark St., Chicago. C. K. WILBER, W. P. A., Chicago.

"OH, mamma, to-morrow we're going to study dismal fractions!" exclaimed Willie King, to whom decimal fractions were unknown.

"WHY, Norah, how dusty the chairs are!"

"Yes, mim. There's nobody sat on them this morning."

OF INTEREST TO ADVERTISERS AND PUBLISHERS.

Mr. E. R. Blaine has resigned the position of Business Manager of the Cosmopolitan Magazine and associated himself with The Procter & Collier Co., 127 Walnut St., Cincinnati, O. Mr. Blaine is a practical printer and has published a country newspaper. During two administrations he was a deputy collector of internal revenue in one of the most important districts in Kentucky, under his brother, Mr. J. E. Blaine, now of the Globe Company, Cincinnati. For the past few years he has been with "The Cosmopolitan," first as cashier, then as advertising manager, and lastly as manager of the entire business department. The Procter & Collier Co., while not the largest advertising agency in the United States, have the finest line of customers, as they place advertising for The Addyston Pipe & Steel Co.; The John Church Co.; The Cincinnati Milling Machine Co.; The Cincinnati Dessicating Co.; College of Music of Cincinnati; The Duhme Co.; Fillmore Brothers; The Globe Co.; The Home Life Insurance Co.; The John Holland Gold Pen Co.; Houston, Stanwood & Gamble; Langdon Branch of the United States Baking Co.; The Keim Wall Paper Co.; The Robert Mitchell Furniture Co.; The Musical Festival Association; The Procter & Gamble Co.; The Peerless Freezer Co.; Putnam, Hooker & Co.; Rookwood Pottery, Technical School; The United States Printing Co.; United States Court of Appeals; The Dueber Watch Case Co., Canton, O.; T. G. Hawkes & Co., Corning, New York; Harper & Brothers, New York; North American Review, New York; Kenyon Military Academy and Harcourt Place Seminary, Gambier, O.; The Goshen Sweeper Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., etc., etc.—The Cincinnati Tribune, Jan. 1. 1895.

Organizers' Corner.

I very gladly respond to the request of the chairman of our board of organizers and fill the space allotted to me in issue of January 31.

I desire first to express my hearty appreciation of this new favor. The one report I sent last year was a wonderful help to me in planning my work, for it brought numerous letters of inquiry concerning my chalk-talking and L. T. L. organizing, as well as orders for my outline charts, one set going to Burmah for their National Convention. So I know our women are keeping an eye on our Corner, and I am disappointed each week if I find it vacant.

I find great enthusiasm in New York in Senior grade L. T. L. work, as well as in Junior. Their L. T. L. convention was a new inspiration to me. The young state president, Fred D. L. Squires, is now responding to invitations to organize Seniors over the state.

Since the National Convention I have filled dates, most efficiently arranged by either the county president or L. T. L. superintendent, in the counties of Oneida, Livingston, Sullivan, Rockland, Orleans, Oswego and Dutchess, of New York state. I have spoken almost continuously, organizing a number of L. T. L's, with the promise of many Senior grades to be added soon.

I leave for Pennsylvania January 30, giving one week to Bucks county. February 7 I am to address an Episcopal Sunday-school in Philadelphia. February 10 is engaged by R. S. Murphy, a private secretary of John Wanamaker, for chalk-talks to be given his "Boys' Brigade" and "Boys' Christian Endeavorers" in Bethany church. Mr. Murphy was one of the young men converted during our crusade in Williamsport, Pa., twenty-one years ago. I also spend several days with the L. T. L's of Philadelphia.

February 14 and 15 I hope to be in Washington, D. C. February 16 I open my work in Delaware county by an address before the Teachers' Association to meet at Chester. Many of these public school teachers have organized L. T. L's in their schools, and it is hoped others will follow.

February 20 I chalk-talk at the Columbia county, Pa., L. T. L. convention visiting other points in that county, arranged by Mr. Geo. B. Richards, of Millville, Pa. Farther dates in Pennsylvania are being arranged as follows: Bryn Mawr and Suplee; in county of Westmoreland, by Mrs. Mary T. Warden, Mt. Pleasant; in McKean county, by Mrs. Ida W. Chapman, Bradford, and in Warren county by Mrs. Douty, Corydon, Pa.

Upon my return to New York state in March arrangements are already made for work in Elmira, Dansville and Geneva. A series of appointments is being arranged in Monroe county by Mrs. G. H. Harris, Mendon Centre; Oswego county, Mrs. A. G. Fulton, West Eighth and Lake streets, Oswego, and in Fulton county by Mrs. E. V. McDermid, Vail Mills, N. Y. New Jersey hopes to arrange systematically for me to work in every county during the spring or summer months, Mrs. E. C. B. Hardenburg, Vineland, having the work for that state in charge. We hope to hold an L. T. L. conference in each county as I go.

I am glad to report everywhere a growing interest in the L. T. L. department.

When I return to the West I am to visit Trumbull county, Ohio, several points in Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa. My address for the winter and spring and possibly later will be

MRS. ELLEN A. DAYTON BLAIR,
Clinton, N. Y.

A correspondent writes: "What a blessing if every mother in this country could read THE UNION SIGNAL. I can think of no other literature that would have such an uplifting power. Egotism and selfishness, under the light of its lamp, ought to shrink and shrivel out of every reader's life."

JUST WHAT YOU WANT!
A NEW ENTERTAINMENT.

Our Illustrated Authors...

JUST PUBLISHED.

A splendid social and instructive game FOR OLD AND YOUNG.

Suitable for a Small or a Large Company...

W. C. T. Unions, Y's, Christian Endeavorers, take notice.

Fifty illustrations, complete directions, cards and key, all included in a box.

Price only Fifty Cents, postpaid. Can be used any number of times.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

NEW PREMIUM OFFERS.

Our former premium offers are still open to all who are willing to work Now for THE UNION SIGNAL, viz.: For ONE new subscriber, one copy

White Ribbon Hymnal.

For TWO new subscribers, one copy of

David Douglas and his Wife.

For FIVE new subscribers,

Childhood: Its Care and Culture.

These are premiums which appeal largely to mothers, but we have this week a tempting offer for the L. T. L's. It is an entirely new book for boys, one which has received favorable comment from college professors, principals of educational institutions and ministers of all denominations. Read what some of them say:

PUSHING TO THE FRONT;

Or, Success Under Difficulties.

By Orison Sweet Marden. Price $1.50.

"No other book in the English language contains such a variety and multitude of fresh, living truths. The young will peruse it in preference to the story or the novel, as it tells the experience and struggles of real life. I certainly never read a book of the kind which approaches it in the intrinsic merits of its contents or the possible good that will flow from its wide-spread reading. —THOMAS W. BICKNELL, Providence, R. I.

"The book is unique in its character, and lofty in its aims. It must be an inspiration and help to both old and young.—A. H. CAMPBELL, Ph. D., Principal State Normal School, Vermont.

"To the poor, struggling boy, the book will come as an inspiration and revelation. It will inspire a brighter hope, a quicker zeal, a braver heart. New life will course through his veins as he realizes the possibilities open to him. Public speakers and teachers will find the book a storehouse of apt illustrations and stirring incidents from life."—WILLIS L. HAND, Kearney, Neb.

Boys, girls, members of the Loyal Temperance Legion, we offer this premium to you because "our chieftain," Miss Frances Willard, whom you all love, expresses the opinion that when the worn, weary mothers are so overworked that they cannot go out to obtain new subscribers, if the interest of the Loyal Temperance Legion can be awakened, "busy little feet will be running for us all through the country," getting new subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL, Young Women and their own organ, The Young Crusader.

We offer this wonderful book to you, with its twenty-four fine portraits, many of them taken from original sources, and you can get it if you make the effort for five new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL at $1 each. "Pushing to the Front" is published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., of Boston, and is one of the new books of the season.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

CANNOT DO WITHOUT IT.

A Canadian gentleman writes: "I have for a long time been a reader of THE UNION SIGNAL, but had never subscribed to it, as my business is such that it would be impossible for me to get it regular; however I feel I cannot do without it, even if it is a few months old when it reaches me. Every union member in the world should take it, and if this could not be done, then every union in the world should have at least one copy, and such arrangements made that every member of that union would have an opportunity of reading it. In this way all would be kept posted with the work the world over; as it is, some members know very little about the work outside of their own local union. I have met some that did not know there was a week set aside this year called Self-Denial Week. Now our work is a Christian one, and it means sacrifice, and surely every member can sacrifice enough to pay for THE UNION SIGNAL, which costs only one dollar a year, or a quarter of a cent a day. Is any member so poor that she cannot sacrifice this small sum? I do trust your list of subscribers may be very largely increased during 1895. It should double, and could if every member of a union would secure a new subscriber."

HUSBANDS APPRECIATE IT.

"Enclosed please find two dollars to pay for THE UNION SIGNAL, this year and the coming year. We appreciate THE UNION SIGNAL so much; think it is the best paper we have. My husband says he would part with all other papers before he would part with THE UNION SIGNAL."

Publisher's Notes.

To every local superintendent of literature who would like suggestions of

HOW TO WORK

we commend Department Leaflet No. 23,

Seeding Down the Field.

In fact, state superintendents would do well to order a sufficient supply to place in the hands of every local superintendent in her state. No method of seed-sowing is, in proportion to the amount of money and effort invested, so effective in bringing a swift and abundant harvest for our cause as the systematic circulation of temperance literature, and now is the time to

Prepare for Spring Campaigns.

The first step for a superintendent of literature to take is to send for (1) our catalogue of publications, and (2) the

Bound Sets of Leaflets.

These last are sample copies of leaflets in convenient form for reference, those of each series stitched together in brown paper covers. Absolutely indispensable for workers.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Timely Talks | $ .15 |
| Signal Lights | .05 |
| Gospel Lights | .05 |
| Total Abstinence | .05 |
| Teachers Series | .05 |
| Suffrage | .07 |
| Temperance and Labor | .05 |
| Mothers' Meetings (Purity) | .05 |
| Home Leaflets | .20 |
| Social Purity Series | .25 |
| White Cross Series | .25 |
| Loyal Leaflets | .15 |
| Evangelistic Series | .08 |
| Y. W. C. T. U. Series | .08 |
| L. T. L. Series | .08 |
| Local Union Helps | .08 |
| Picture Leaflets | .03 |
| Little Folks | .03 |
| Busy Day | .03 |
| Department Leaflets | .12 |

It often happens that the eye is a more potent medium for education than either the voice or the printed page. A picture is often a wonderful seed-sower. This has been the record of the famous cartoon,

The Mill and the Still.

It has spoken eloquently for temperance in the past. It speaks eloquently still, and as long as the drink demon stalks abroad in our land it will continue to speak eloquently. It is printed in colors, and may be suitably exhibited in stores, depots and all places where public notices are displayed. More of them should be in use.

Price, each .....$ .10
Per dozen ..... 1.00

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A WONDERFUL BOOK.

TOUCHING INCIDENTS AND REMARKABLE ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

As Related By

| | |
|---|---|
| John Wesley, | Bishop Bowman, |
| Chas. G. Finney, | T. DeWitt Talmage, |
| Bishop Simpson, | John Knox, |
| John B. Gough, | Martin Luther, |
| B. Fay Mills, | D. L. Moody, |
| George Muller, | C. H. Spurgeon, |

and many others.

This new book is meeting with universal favor, and is already having a large and rapid sale.

Over 3,000 Sold in Less Than Three Weeks.

Read a few of the good things said of it:

Western Christian Advocate: "It is simply wonderful. No one can read the book without having his faith in prayer greatly strengthened."

THE UNION SIGNAL: "Its high religious tone, its fascinating spirit, and the high rank of its contributors, make it a strong faith tonic and an inspiration to prevailing prayer."

B. Fay Mills: "A wonderful book—an excellent book."

Chaplain C. C. McCabe: "This book will remind the reader that there are Elijahs still upon the earth."

Bishop Wm. Taylor: "True to its title."

Bishop Thos. Bowman, D. D., LL. D.: "I have read your book, 'Touching Incidents and Remarkable Answers to Prayer,' with much interest and spiritual profit."

Price $1.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ASK Your Grocer for

NONE SUCH MINCE MEAT

Two Mince Pies, equal to our Grandmother's, from each package of None-Such Mince Meat, without the worry and work. For sale by all Grocers.

MERRELL-SOULE CO.,
Syracuse, N. Y.

Publisher's Notes.

Young Women.

New Series Oak and Ivy Leaf...

Official Organ Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

12 Pages. - Published Monthly. - 50c. a Year.
JENNIE A. STEWART, Editor.

★

A welcome change has taken place in our Y paper during the year. Enlarged and improved it is an attractive paper for the general reader as well as the young folks within the white-ribbon fold. The new list of departments includes:

News of the Month (in temperance, religious, political and educational circles); Special Articles (biography, travel, interviews, etc.); Queen's Gardens (poems, stories and sermonettes); Worth Repeating; Editorial; Official (messages and hints from the leaders in Y work); College Corner; Kindred Societies; Have You Read——? Brothers of Girls; Good Times; Girls at Home; By Mail; Silhouettes; Y Round Table and Pearls and Feathers.

TERMS TO UNIONS.

★

Single copies, one year, each .....50c
Five copies on one order, one year, each, 40c
Any number of copies, for distribution, each..... 4c

★

TERMS TO SOLICITORS.

One copy, one year.....50c

For clubs of five or more, the solicitor may retain 10 cents of each cash subscription. After the first club is sent the solicitor's name will be entered, and ten cents may be retained for each subsequent cash subscription.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Young Women to one address, one year, $1.40.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

---

QUIET MOMENTS,

A Series of Twelve Bible Readings by Hannah Whitall Smith

upon the following subjects:

| | |
|---|---|
| Service. | Yokes. |
| The Hidden God. | Thorns. |
| What is His Name? | Peace. |
| God's Thoughts vs. Man's Thoughts. | A Lesson of John 10. |
| The Feasts of the Lord. | Things that are Shaken. |
| | God our Fortress. |
| | Garments. |

These Readings, published in 1887–88, are every bit as valuable helps now as then. The paper on which they are printed may show signs of age, but the readings themselves are the Sword of the Spirit—they never grow old, never wear out. Indeed, the oftener they are used the keener the blade, the more burnished the weapon, the more thoroughly furnished the user unto every good work.

But just because the date upon them is 1887 and 1888, this valuable series of twelve Readings, neatly bound in paper, is offered at

Ten Cents Per Copy.

Workers, send for it!

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

---

THE WHITE RIBBON BIRTHDAY BOOK

Will Make a Splendid Gift

to a W. C. T. U. woman, or to any other woman. It contains a selection for each day from the best writers among women, and on the opposite page spaces for autographs.

Edited by Anna A. Gordon,
and
Illustrated by Mary A. Lathbury.

This is the first Birthday Book composed, compiled, illustrated and published solely by women.

Bound in appropriate and attractive form.

Price $1.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

---

The beautiful verses by Mary T. Lathrap,

"THERE'S A SHADOW ON THE HOME,"

with music by Lucy Rider Meyer, are arranged as a "Battle Song of the Y's," an alto or bass solo, with the chorus,

"We are Coming to the Rescue,"

and are found in the collection of songs compiled for the Y. W. C. T. U. by Anna A. Gordon. To meet the general demand we publish the words and music in leaflet form for convenient use in the

Memorial Services

to be held by unions throughout the country in loving memory of our promoted leader.

PRICE:

| | |
|---|---|
| Single copy.....$ | 1 |
| 50 copies ..... | 40 |
| 100 copies..... | 75 |
| 500 copies..... | 3 00 |
| 1,000 copies ..... | 5 00 |

No orders filled for less than ten copies.

---

This is a most fitting time also to circulate leaflets written by the peerless prohibition orator, now passed from our sight. Unions would do well to order a supply. They are:

National Leaflets.

No. 1. The National W. C. T. U.
No. 65. After Twenty Years.

Of the "Timely Talk Series," No. 17 contains two "Talks":

1. On Which Side Are You?
By Frances E. Willard

and

2. The Seen and the Unseen.
By Mary T. Lathrap

PRICE OF NATIONAL LEAFLETS:

| | |
|---|---|
| Per package of 10.....$ | 10 |
| Per 100 ..... | 90 |
| Per 1,000..... | 7 50 |

PRICE OF TIMELY TALKS:

| | |
|---|---|
| Per 100 .....$ | 30 |
| Per 1,000..... | 2 50 |

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

---

A GREAT MOTHER

Too much cannot be said of the value of this book, not only to the mothers of the present day, but to mothers of the future. It is dedicated to the

White Ribbon Women of the World, their Husbands and their Children,

and is destined to live as one of the marked books of the "woman's century." This biography of Madam Willard is the work of her daughter,

Frances E. Willard,

and her kinswoman,

Minerva B. Norton,

and the introduction is written by

Lady Henry Somerset.

Bound daintily in gray and silver, and beautifully illustrated.

Price $1.50.

---

BIBLE READINGS

JANUARY—"Pentecostal Preparation."
Miss Anna Downey

FEBRUARY—"Power from on High."
Mrs. Anna M. Palmer

PRICE:

| | |
|---|---|
| Single copies, per year.....$ | 12 |
| 10 copies, per year, to one address... | 1 00 |
| Numbers published prior to January, 1895, per 100 ..... | 25 |

Are You Fortified?

When you are in a low state of health, and on the verge of illness, there is no nourishment in the world like to restore strength. Scott's Emulsion nourishes, strengthens, promotes the making of solid flesh, enriches the blood and tones up the whole system.

Scott's Emulsion

TRADE MARK.

For Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Weak Lungs, Consumption, Scrofula, Anæmia, Loss of Flesh, Thin Babies, Weak Children, and all conditions of Wasting.

Buy only the genuine! It has our trade-mark on salmon-colored wrapper.

Send for pamphlet on Scott's Emulsion. FREE.

Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All Druggists. 50 cents and $1.

CHILDHOOD: ITS CARE AND CULTURE.

Price, Cloth, $3. Given for five new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL. Bound in cloth, marble edges.

"If I could have but one book besides the Bible to help me in bringing up children, I would by all means choose this."—Madam Willard.

.....GLIMPSES OF FIFTY YEARS.....

| | |
|---|---|
| Price, cloth | $2.25 |
| Half morocco, gilt edge | 3.00 |
| Full morocco, gilt edge | 3.75 |

Over 50,000 of this autobiography of Miss Willard's have been sold in America, and a leading firm has now brought out an English edition, under the title "My Happy Half Century." We have still on hand a large supply of "Glimpses," and agents will find it one of the most attractive books offered to the public.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
The Temple, Chicago

Signal Notes.

JANUARY 31 is the day of prayer for colleges.

IN Germany women cannot or do not belong to any organization which seeks to influence legislation.

DURING the past year 2,743 waifs have been picked up by New York's police, 183 of whom have never been claimed.

ACCORDING to Mr. Bramwell Booth's statement published in "Work Done in Darkest England" during 1894, London has 100,000 paupers, 33,000 homeless adults, 35,000 wandering slum children and 10,000 new made criminals every year.

MRS. MARY R. SCHAUFFLER who passed away January 10, at the advanced age of ninety-three, at New Rochelle, N. Y., went sixty-eight years ago to Smyrna as the first unmarried lady missionary sent forth by the American board.

IN the London postoffice a notice was issued by the medical department containing suggestions for preserving health. The following words were printed in large type: "It cannot be too distinctly understood that dangerous qualities of water are not obviated by the addition of wines or spirit."

CHRISTIAN Endeavor societies number, according to the latest enrollment in the Golden Rule, 37,002 societies, of which 30,662 are in the United States, 2,347 in Canada and 3,993 are in foreign lands. The grand total of membership is 2,223,800. This shows the catching power of young Christian zeal.

WARDEN GEORGE, of the Frankfort, Ky., penitentiary, makes the thought-stirring statement in his annual report that of the five hundred convicts received during the last year, more than four hundred claim to have been drunk when they committed their offense. Comment is unnecessary in the face of such an object lesson.

A PUBLIC temperance meeting has been held every week in the Bethel, a mission church of Duluth, Minn. Large numbers have signed the pledge and the superintendent says the meetings are well attended and have been helpful to the religious services which are held every evening. The Bethel is also a well appointed coffee house and a big success in this line.

THE legislature of Norway adopted a bill on July 24, 1894, whereby all men and women twenty-five years old are entitled to vote on the question of license or no-license of the legal liquor traffic. Conservative as they are concerning the action of women in public life, the sturdy Norwegians have found that without the help of women they cannot carry forward their temperance work as they desire. When will American men rise to a similar level of statesmanship and appreciation?

THE annual summing up of crime in the Chicago Tribune was food for the thoughtful reformer. During the year suicides increased in number to 4,436, which was 600 more than the previous year; there were 9,800 murders in 1894, an increase of 3,185 over 1893, and 190 lynchings. The contemplation of such a dreadful aggregate should spur anti-saloonists, Christian citizens and municipal reformers to the highest pitch of effort, that the dreadful shadow of crime and misery be lifted from the land in 1895.

THE Woman's Health Protective Association of New York was organized ten years ago by a few women of upper New York, who were greatly annoyed by a nuisance maintained in the immediate neighborhood of their homes. Their united effort brought such pressure to bear upon the municipal health department that the nuisance was abated and a permanent organization was the result. The Outlook now logically urges the admission of men as associate members, and thinks a committee of 50,000 none too few to have the city's health in charge.

THE Red Cross society has a record extending over twenty-nine years in Europe and eleven in the United States. In this country the constitution of the society contains an article not to be found in any other of the thirty-nine nations in which it has life. This is a provision to supply aid in cases of great national calamities, such as flood, fires, cyclones, famine, pestilence and earthquake. Twelve times the Red Cross society has given its aid in such distresses. Miss Barton's private fortune furnishes the means for headquarters and much of the necessary expense is borne by this self-sacrificing heroine.

A COUGH SHOULD NOT BE NEGLECTED. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are a simple remedy and give immediate and sure relief.

BACKACHE.

WHY? Because your Liver and Kidneys are out of order. For years and years housewives all over the country have used with best results

Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver AND Kidney Balm.

Try it, and you will agree with the thousands who say it is the "PEERLESS REMEDY" for curing ailments of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, Female troubles, Rheumatism and Bright's Disease. For sale everywhere at $1.00 per bottle. THE DR. J. H. McLEAN MEDICINE CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

A SENSE OF DECENCY

Constrains many people to hide the dirt of their kitchens. They make the kitchen a secret chamber, into which it is forbidden to enter; but half the trouble which they take to hide the dirt and the disgrace which it entails, would keep the kitchen clean, and all its pots and pans bright as a dollar, that is, if they use

SAPOLIO

THE HOLLY SPRINGS ROUTE OF THE ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. TO

FLORIDA

is a new, quick and direct line (effective Dec. 2,) from Chicago, via

HOLLY SPRINGS BIRMINGHAM AND ATLANTA

to Jacksonville and all Florida Points, and such principal points south as Birmingham, Ala., Atlanta, Augusta, Macon and Savannah, Ga., and Charleston, S. C. By it one can leave Chicago at 1.35 p. m., daily, and arrive Birmingham 2.50 p. m., Atlanta 8.50 p. m. the next day, and at Jacksonville 9.55 a. m. the second morning after leaving Chicago, and can make the journey for the entire distance in a Pullman with but one change, and that at a seasonable hour on the train en route, to a reservation in a through Jacksonville car, which reservation can be made through from starting point. Ask for Special Florida Folder of I. C. R. R. issue; they, as well as tickets and full information, can be obtained of your Local Ticket Agent, or by addressing A. H. HANSON, G. P. A., Chicago, Ill.

SLEEPING CAR FROM Chicago to Jacksonville

FREE A fine 14k gold plated watch to every reader of this paper. .... Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address, and we will send you one of these elegant, richly jeweled, gold finished watches by express forexamination, and if you think it is equal in appearance to any $25.00 gold watch pay our sample price, $3.50, and it is yours. Write at once as we shall send out samples at this reduced price for 60 days only. Mention in your letter whether you want GENTS' OR LADIES' SIZE.

THE NATIONAL M'F'G & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

Mother! Mother! Mother!

SET YOUR CHILD TO WORK.

The Young Crusader

will send a

PRIZE

to the boy or girl securing largest number of subscribers before

APRIL 1.

Send for January CRUSADER and read the particulars. Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

You will find the "White Ribbon Hymnal" a great help in temperance meetings and song services. Price 35c.

Publisher's Notes.

HEALTHFUL WOMANHOOD AND CHILDHOOD.

From the Evanston Press, June 9, 1894:

DR. HEMENWAY'S NEW BOOK.—A new book by an Evanston author has come to our table this week, "Healthful Womanhood and Childhood," by Dr. Henry B. Hemenway. As the title indicates, the work is a treatise on the health of women and the care of young children. The work is intended for non-professional readers and was prepared with a view of taking a place which had not yet been filled, that of a strictly scientific work, perfectly reliable in all of its statements and at the same time put in language which a person unfamiliar with medical terms can readily understand. The volume is illustrated with eighteen plates which are put in a pocket on the inside of the cover.

The physical life of woman, from childhood to old age, is very fully treated upon. The statements are made in a very concise manner and yet no important subject is passed without consideration.

One of the most useful and instructive chapters in the book, and one which will find much favor with readers, is the chapter on infant feeding. This subject has been very thoroughly investigated by the author, and his conclusion should be of great assistance to the mother anxious to know with what to satisfy the appetite of her child.

The book is a 12 mo. volume of 290 pages. It is printed in clear, large type and will be sold at $2.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

COMPETITIVE STORIES.

The prize-contest for readers of Young Women has been extended in time until March 1.

Five dollars is offered for the best short temperance story.

Three dollars for the second best.

Two dollars for the third best.

Conditions.

1. The writer must be a subscriber to Young Women.
2. The story must be from 600 to 1,000 words in length.
3. The manuscript must be received on or before March 1, 1895.
4. The three prize stories, and any others which are worthy publication, will appear in Young Women.
5. No manuscripts will be returned unless stamps sufficient to cover postage are enclosed.

WALTER BAKER & CO.

The Largest Manufacturers of PURE, HIGH GRADE COCOAS AND CHOCOLATES On this Continent, have received HIGHEST AWARDS from the great Industrial and Food EXPOSITIONS In Europe and America.

Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or other Chemicals or Dyes are used in any of their preparations. Their delicious BREAKFAST COCOA is absolutely pure and soluble, and costs less than one cent a cup.

SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE.

WALTER BAKER & CO. DORCHESTER, MASS.

Publisher's Notes.

RAILROAD RATES.

Presentation of the Polyglot Petition, Washington, D. C., Feb. 15, 1895.

White-ribboners will appreciate the interest of Mrs. Rachel Foster Avery, who has had in mind the convenience of the National W. C. T. U. in the negotiations with railroads for reduced rates and an extension of time, allowing them to be in Washington a few days earlier than the date on which the National Council of Women convenes. Those intending to participate in the historic meeting to be held in connection with the presentation of the Polyglot Petition, will please note the following arrangements:

Reduced Rates.

Those desiring to participate in the presentation of the Polyglot Petition, can secure the one and one-third rate for the round trip to Washington, D. C., and return, by buying their tickets to Triennial Session of the National Council of Women, to convene in Washington, February 18, 1895.

Time.

The Southern Passenger Association makes the reduced rates good from February 13 to 19 going, and good until March 15, returning.

The New England Passenger Committees make their rates good between February 14 and 21 going, and good to March 5, returning.

The Trunk Line and the Central Traffic Association make rates good from February 13 to 28, going, and good to March 5, returning.

The Western Traffic Association, it is believed, will concede the same rates that the others have done, though definite information has not as yet been received by those in charge of railroad rates for National Council of Women.

LATEST INFORMATION.

Just as we go to press we have received from Mrs. Avery the following important information. To secure one and one-third fare you will pay full fare going to Washington, but your station agent will give you certificate which will secure you one-third fare returning.

Provided,

you get this certificate signed in Washington by Miss Lucy E. Anthony, who will be at the Bureau of Information from

9 to 10 A. M., 7:30 to 8 P. M. } Feb. 20, 21, 22, 26, 27, 28

Also from 7:30 to 8 P. M., Feb. 19 and 25

Please cut this out for reference, and remember, without certificate you cannot obtain reduced fare.

The subject for the

JANUARY BIBLE READING

is Pentecostal Preparation and is particularly suggestive as a starting point for the work of the year.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S — FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 — AND EVERY LAND — WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXI.—No. 6. CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 7, 1895. [Price $1.00 Per Year, in Advance.

Mrs. Leslie D. Herrick
1139 Lath St
Newton

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

A query has been addressed to us this week, which we confess ourselves unable to answer, and as we wish to make this column valuable to the various departments of work of the W. C. T. U. as well as to the W. T. P. A. we ask some of our intelligent women for a reply from the standpoint of active organizers, lecturers and workers.

* * *

If a white-ribboner is able to take only one paper, which shall it be: The National or the state organ?

* * *

From a "business outlook" we should say emphatically: "THE UNION SIGNAL, the official organ of the National W. C. T. U."; but as this might seem a biased opinion, we take a neutral ground, and leave the question of duty where it belongs, with the individual conscience.

* * *

We believe, however, no better use could be found for National and state funds than to place in the home of every poor woman who wears the white ribbon both the National and state papers. We do not wish in magnifying the importance of the National organ, to underrate the value and influence of the state papers as a means of familiarizing the state workers with state interests, but the resolution of the Ohio women has the true ring: "In order to secure the most effective effort, every worker must be in touch at the closest range possible with other workers, and with the whole. It is only through the National and World's organ that this touch can be felt."

* * *

As the state to the nation, so seems to be the relative importance of each; THE UNION SIGNAL, the mother of all, not more important, more powerful, more influential than the various state organs, only as the nation is more powerful, more influential than the state. What intelligent citizen dwarfs himself politically by studying only the politics of his own state? What intelligent white-ribboner satisfies herself with the development of the work in her own state, to the neglect of the larger, broader work of the nation "For God and Home and Every Land."

* * *

The treasurer of the National W. C. T. U. requests the W. T. P. A. to inform its patrons that each and every individual ordering a copy of the Annual Minutes should send fifteen cents direct to Mrs. Helen M. Barker, treasurer National W. C. T. U. Please kindly note also that Mrs. Barker wishes her own money, but not ours, and send all orders for THE UNION SIGNAL, and all the publications of the W. T. P. A., direct to office, 1110 The Temple, thereby insuring promptness, and avoiding needless complications.

* * *

Letters from our patrons go astray, and orders are delayed in reaching us by not being properly addressed. All strictly business communications should be addressed plainly, Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple, Chicago. Letters intended for the Business Manager only should be marked "Personal," and addressed Mrs. C. F. Grow, W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago. A letter containing money has been for several weeks delayed by being addressed to one of our clerical force.

* * *

We are anxious to be of service to any of our correspondents, but if you are asking a favor of us which does not pertain to our business, will you not kindly inclose stamped envelope for reply? If your letters do not receive prompt attention do not hesitate to write again.

* * *

We wish to call attention of all white-ribboners to reduced railroad rates, to be found on page 15, for those wishing to be present at the presentation of the Polyglot Petition in Washington and the triennial meeting of the National Council of Women.

CAROLINE F. GROW, Bus. Mgr.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Mexico is preparing for war with Guatemala.

Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, died February 1.

Senator Coon, of Illinois, has presented a bill for municipal suffrage for women.

Ex-Queen Liliuokalani has been arrested for complicity in the Hawaiian rebellion.

The President has asked Congress to issue one hundred million dollars' worth of three per cent fifty year bonds, payable in gold, to relieve the national finances.

Judge Shauck, of the Columbus circuit court, has decided that the Ohio school suffrage law is constitutional. The question will undoubtedly be approved by the supreme court in time for the spring elections.

The National Woman's Suffrage Association, with Susan B. Anthony presiding, and seventy delegates present, held its twenty-seventh annual convention in Atlanta, Ga., last week. A full report will be given next week.

A great ocean disaster was the loss of three hundred and thirty-four lives, through the sinking of the German steamship, Elbe, which went down in the North Sea twenty minutes after being struck by the steamship Crathie. A court of inquiry at Bremen will investigate.

BAY CITY, Mich., furnished a remarkable example of Christian unity last week, in the form of a joint meeting of Protestants and Catholics. On the platform were six Catholic priests and twelve Protestant ministers, besides a hundred representative citizens of many creeds and denominations. The meeting opened with the repeating of the Lord's Prayer and ended with the singing of "America," and the object of determining the possibility of Christian fellowship and harmony seemed satisfactorily obtained in the delightful fraternal spirit that prevailed.

MISS ALICE R. PALMER arrived in New York on the steamship Paris, February 1, after a nearly three years' absence during which she has built solid work for the temperance cause into the villages and towns of South Africa. She has given our point of view to a great many women, and we have heard with joy that they wear the white ribbon, observe the noon hour, have signed the Polyglot Petition and are singing

"All round the world the white is twined,
All round the world the Crusade light hath shined."

But these have been only the outward signs of an inward grace, and their countrymen are quick to tell of the devoted help in every good cause freely given by the white ribbon women of the Tropics, to whom our sturdy Indiana representative carried the broad and tender spirit that actuates the women of her own state and has always characterized her work for the W. C. T. U.

THE whisky trust is wrestling with internal dissensions and dishonesty. Upon representation that the trust was insolvent, receivers were appointed in the persons of the president and secretary. Indignant stockholders, distillers and brewers flocked to the city and demanded an injunction, which was granted. Then followed an investigation which shows such criminal recklessness of expenditure and self-aggrandizement that even the liquor men are startled. It was found, for instance, that all the directors drew handsome salaries, voted by themselves, and that the president drew the equivalent of "four fat salaries." Notwithstanding this unparalleled extravagance and dishonesty, there was a surplus of one million dollars on hand last December. The natural profits of the business must have been enormous to have accumulated such a sum in such distressing financial depression, and emphasize the fact that money which should have gone into bread and meat and fuel for the poor man's family has been consumed by him in fiery drink.

AN earnest friend in Minneapolis sends a valuable suggestion for a day of prayer previous to or at the time of the presentation of the Polyglot Petition to the national government at Washington. The letter says: "While it seems as though thirty miles of signatures is a strong influence in itself, still without God's special aid the work is powerless. I would ask the pastors to explain the Petition to their people and all unite with us in holding an afternoon and evening meeting in the churches to humble ourselves before God, confessing our national sins, and beseeching Divine help." Miss Willard feels that so many days of prayer are called that it would be well to have this one unofficial, and for those only who have a heart to meet at the time mentioned, the day of the presentation, February 15. Let us pray that our Great Petition may make a deep impression on the minds and hearts of our national legislators and of the people of this country, who are the real fountain of power, and the medium through which we are to influence those who are "dressed in a little brief authority."

WE urge our state officers to remember that it was agreed at the Cleveland Convention that a committee should be appointed in each state and territory to report as to the condition of things at its capitol building in respect to the presence of intoxicating liquors as a drink. Doubtless the officers of the W. C. T. U. in each capital will be made by the state a special committee to report on this subject, and we shall be glad to publish in a symposium the results of their examination. We sadly fear that there is not a capitol from ocean to ocean outside the Prohibition states in which the smirch of alcohol is not the most unwholesome and disgraceful feature. If we are mistaken we shall be rejoiced to learn that fact. Word comes to us that the Populist senator of Nebraska has moved an inquiry into the condition of things at the United States Capitol. We hope our sisters in the District of Columbia will spare no pains to aid in the reform that the senator hopes to inaugurate. A petition against a bar in the Senate or House of Representatives would seem to be in order. Let it be signed by men and women and presented at an early date.

ON the morning of January 27, Rev. Dr. Isaac J. Lansing of Boston, preached before the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. There was a large attendance of the white-ribboners, and in the pastor's pew sat the founder of the World's W. C. T. U., the president of the British Women's Temperance Association, the presidents of the Massachusetts and the Boston W. C. T. U's, also the superintendent of the world's juvenile work and the pastor's wife herself, who is at the head of the Y's in Boston. The text was that wonderful declaration made by Christ at Nazareth: "The spirit of the Lord is upon me because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." The subject was the W. C. T. U. as a consoler of humanity, and Dr. Lansing took the ground that if its aims and purposes could be carried to completeness the gospel commission would be largely fulfilled. He believed the mission of Christ was the keynote of the Crusade and of the systematized movement that followed it and had now spread into all lands. So far as we know this is the first time that a pastor has dedicated the morning service on Sunday to the white ribbon movement. The occurrence is of more significance because Park Street church, Boston, is the center of that Christian city, and Dr. Lansing is in the foreground of every righteous reform. We hope that other great and good pastors will find his example attractive and that it may become contagious.

MY DESIRE.

BY O. E. W.

To be like others, or to be
All thou couldst love, dear Lord, in me.
Thy mind, thy spirit and thy ways
Fulfilled in me shall bring thee praise.

To be like others—pattern poor,
To be like thee, my heaven's sure;
Not only heaven after life,
But heaven within amid its strife.

Thy way, though I'm not understood,
I take, dear Lord, and count it good;
And secret satisfaction find
In knowing that I have thy mind.

If no one else should know but thee,
It matters not, 'tis naught to me,
For thou art all in all, my Lord,
In thee my all's fore'er assured.

India.

THE YELLOW PASSPORT.

A True Tale of Russian Tyranny.

BY VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

My pupil, a Russian Jew, had been very taciturn from the beginning, carrying always an air of reserve which could not be wholly accounted for by diffidence in using a strange language. But to-night as he sat in my study, there was a perceptible relaxation of the rather stern brows and a beautiful smile hovered now and then around his half-feminine mouth; such a smile, I fancied, as his mother must have loved to watch as he lay asleep in her arms years ago. I couldn't help wondering what had happened; one always experiences such a delightful curiosity to share another's smile, even that of a stranger passing in the street; and how much more that of one you feel to have suffered much but who has always warded off your sympathy with a mantle of pride.

So it happened that I did not rise from my chair as usual when the lesson was finished, but sat on talking discursively of this book and that, which he would find it profitable to read later on, when he should have mastered the language sufficiently, till gradually we exchanged attitudes in the conversation, he becoming the instructor and I the willing listener. For I have found that an excellent way to approach the heart of an exile is to drift through the channel of translated literature to that which still remains in the crystal of its native tongue, all the dearer to its people because it speaks of scenes and characters not to be marketed on the shelves of the great American booksellers, because too simple, too homely, too unaffected to be a saleable commodity in the "world market."

As his memory reverts to the old far-off days, the old far-off faces, his eyes glisten, his voice vibrates, and all the deep-lying patriotism which outlives tyranny, persecution and banishment leaps into his face. So it was with my pupil, when, after discussing Turgenieff's "On the Eve," he seemed to be floating away among a sea of pictures, quoting rapidly, one after another, passages from the exquisite fantasies of Lermentoo, the heart touching appeals of Nekrassoy, the fiery, though melancholy, Nadson; passing from these to the character paintings of the heart-searcher, Dostoyevsky, to the mocking Berlinsky, and gliding more and more from the masters to the teachers of the masters, the people, the poor, ignorant, wretched, sympathetic, faithful Russian peasants, describing their dress, their manner of working and living, their folk-lore, their folk-music, even singing snatches of their pathetic airs. He seemed to create about himself living presences in whose faces he smiled that beautiful smile of memory and affection.

At last I found room to say: "It must have been very hard for you to leave all those familiar scenes, all your friends and all your old ways of living to come to America. How could you make up your mind to do it?"

"For surely it was very 'ard," he replied, with a quick glance, "but in fect I 'ad to. Ve vere sent out from Pettersburgh-gh, but anyhow, vould I stay dere, dey vould make me for a soldier."

"And you did not wish to be a soldier?"

"No, mem; it is so a terrible life to be a Russian soldier det you 'ave no idea! Besides I was not strong-gh enough; may I could feex it det I had not to be one, but it's cost much money, five 'undred roubles an' acquainted of me pay."

"So it is possible to escape even the Russian laws if you have money enough?"

"Oh, yes, mem; det is, per'aps—but not so like as 'ere in America. Here for five dollars or for ten dollars you can buy an official; but dere its cost much more."

"But how then did you get your passport to leave the country? I thought every one had to have one, stating his age and occupation and all that. And if you were of age to be a soldier—"

"Det vas it, v'y it was so 'ard," he interrupted, rubbing his pencil nervously between his palms; "dere vas a party, about ten or twelve of us, but only two det must go soldier. De odders could get passports, but ve ought to get over de—'ow is it you call it, de--de—aidge, v'ere Germany comes vit Russia togeder?"

"The frontier?"

"Det is v'ere, not only Germany vit Russia, but v'ere any countries, j—j—join, I guess you say? You call dat de frontier? Vell, ve ought to pass de frontier vit'out passports. Bot' of us pay a men twenty-five roubles for a kerriage, 'e should take us over de frontier."

"Without passports? How did he dare do it?"

He smiled in evident amusement at my innocence. "Oh! dere are many, many w'o make business like det."

"And you got over safely?"

"Det vas it, ve didn't. Ven ve vere about eight miles yet ve ought to go, ve learn det dere vas an all party of officers just in our—in our—part of de vay, I don't mind myself how you call it, v'ere is de kerriages going. So ve had to get down from de kerriage and was running t'rough de snow, oh, my! I remember. It vas in de winter time and vas dark very ear-rly, and de snow vas 'igh, so 'igh. Ve could not go by de pat' because dere vere de officers; so ve vere running t'rough de fields in de 'igh snow. Our feet vere slipping and de last t'ree miles I vas losing one of my rubbers. And den, ven de pess de line, ve find out det we could nit go to de 'otel; dere vas a very little town vit only one 'otel, and dere vas full of officers, too, and dey vould ketched us and take us back. I vas so tir-red det I lie down in—'ow do you call it, a place by de street, by de side of de street, v'ere de vater is running. I lay down dere and sleep vit my feet in de vater. Ve didn't 'ad v'at to eat from dinner, but ve did not dare to get somet'ing, but I t'ought I'll get it in de morning. But den ve 'ad to go all togeder in de car and vere locked up. You know det in Germany is de emigrance cars very bed. Dey didn't let us to get anyt'ing for de cars vere not stopping long-gh enough. So ve vere riding a day and a 'alf, vidout eating-gh. I vas 'ongry like enimals!"

"I can well believe it," was my exclamation, as he stopped at the last word, with an expressive tightening of the lips. "I should think you would have been sick."

He laughed a little musical laugh pleasant to hear.

"If it vas at 'ome I tink I could get seech, but dere vas no time. Ven ve arrived at Amburg-gh, I ought to find some friends dere; my cosin was dere leeving, and it 'appened det I did find 'im vitout much trouble although I could speak not one vord of German."

"Didn't you feel terribly lonely when you realized that your native land was gone from you?"

"So," he mused reflectively, "I vas tinking always to use go differenge. You see I did not, 'ow you said it, realize, ven it vas gone, my country. I pass de line in de dark, in de 'igh snow, and vas so tir-red and 'ongry det I vas not tinking at all. But afterwards, ven I stood up stairs on de sheep, ven ve vere leaving for America, den vas it lonely! I vas so miserable det I vas tinking to t'row myself on de vater. And sometimes since I am here I am sorry v'at I did not do it," he added reflectively.

"Has your exile been so bitter, then?" I inquired, rather by way of continuing the conversation with the hope of turning it from its gloom-growing drift, than eliciting information. The fervency of the answer somewhat astonished me.

"So bitter det sometimes, many times, if I 'ad to do again, I rader vould go to de soldiers and be shot."

I reproached myself for having made matters worse instead of better but there was no help for it now. "So you do not like America?" I asked, feeling like a surgeon probing a wound.

"America? Oh, it is a very fine country but not for us. Ve are too 'ated det ve are foreigners. Ve are like a dumb, w'o 'as no pow'r-r to speak; ve 'ear ourselves spoken wrong of and ve 'ave no vords to answer; ve are like in de old leg-gend, I guess you do know it, of de vandering Jewy w'o makes vit his feet a cross v'erever 'e is going. Ve are not used to 'ard vork, because dere in Russia must a Jewy be a business man; and v'en ve come 'ere ve must do de 'ardest vork. And because ve ought to vork to leeve,—ve ought or ve 'ad, which is right English? Ve 'ave? Because ve 'ave to vork to leeve, and cannot speak de language, dey make us vork for not'ing; dey can buy us and sell us and ve cannot know; or if ve do know ve cannot or dare not say anything!

"Certainly ve 'ad money in Russia. I kept dere a store of clot' goods; but ven I come out I 'ad only a veek to sell de stock; and I did not get not one-twenty part v'at it is vort! And so is de traveling cost much and I know det ven I come 'ere I must to vork and I must take vat dey are giving me. So is it vit' 'undreds and t'ousands of Jewys, and derefore de American workingman do 'ate us, because ve vork for so little. Neider can I say det dey are wrong, but ve are not wrong too."

"Yes," I returned vainly trying to shake off the contagion of melancholy, "it is too true that those who have common interests often strive against each other through ignorance. But I am sure you will be strong and patient to conquer these ugly prejudices; they can't last always, you know," trying to search for a bright side.

He looked at me with an expression in which I rather suspected pity for my lack of ability to appreciate facts, but made no reply.

"And are you quite alone here? Have you no friends, no near friends in America?"

How glad I was to note the pleased smile creeping back.

"Till now I vas alone, but I 'ave a letter to-night det in six months, or per'eps five, some friends of my vill come. Dey are vaiting only det deir daughter, w'o is studying, shall pess de examination. Det vill be in four months, suppose. Dey vould come now only but for 'er; she wishes to graduate, or I don't know, to finish, per'eps."

"And they are dear friends, warm friends?"

"I vas leeving vit dem togeder four year-rs; certainly I like dem very much."

He put his hand to his breast pocket as if to take out something, but evidently changed his mind, rose with a slight flush on his pale face, and offering his hand, after the Russian style, politely bade me good-night.

Andover, Mass.

(Concluded next week.)

THE WOMAN MOVEMENT IN GERMANY.

An Interview.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Rev. Dr. Stuckenberg, for fourteen years chaplain of the American Church in Berlin, and author of many important books on sociology and cognate themes, has returned to this country and is now settled with his family in Cambridge under the shadow of Harvard University. Dr. Stuckenberg is a German by birth but an American by education and wore the blue during the civil war. Almost his entire life has been passed in scholarly pursuits and he comes as near being a philosopher as any man that can be named in this country at the present time.

It was my good fortune to dine with Dr. and Mrs. Stuckenberg at the home of our mutual friends, Dr. Louise C. Purington and Miss Ella Ives, in the delightful Boston suburb of Dorchester soon after Christmas. On this auspicious occasion I set about transferring from the doctor's brain to my own some salient facts concerning several social questions now at the front in the German capital.

The doctor is a teetotaler and has had to defend his position in many a group of cultured Germans who looked upon the habit as little short of fanaticism. But he was able to cite Professor Bunge, of Basle, Switzerland, Professor Forel, of Zurich, Professor Gaule, of the same university, Professor Fick, of Wurzburg, and many other authorities whose standing could not be denied in favor of the scientific position he has taken up, namely: that alcoholic drinks are not only of no service but are actually harmful to men of sedentary habits.

He was much interested in the boycott of the union breweries in Berlin which began last May and continues till the present time. Some of the laborers in one of the breweries kept the first of May as a socialistic holiday, though warned that it was at the risk of losing their places. When they returned to work they were not received, and the other breweries formed a solidarity with this one in refusing them work. The socialists took the part of the discharged laborers, ordered a boycott of these breweries, and seriously injured their trade by refusing to drink their beer. When beer from other breweries could not be obtained the men were urged to drink soda or seltzer, but on no conditions to touch that beer, or to patronize any establishment that sold it.

At one of their great meetings held in the interest of this boycott he saw a German woman presiding over three thousand men, for the socialistic democracy places women side by side with men in every line of life. He said this woman perfectly understood her duties as chairman, evidently had the good-will of those present, and handled the somewhat turbulent audience with rare tact and generalship. He said that the documents of the socialists are largely circulated by women and children, and that at the recent election for parliament the socialists in Berlin cast over twenty thousand more votes than all the other parties and elected five of the six representatives of that city.

In answer to my query as to why women are at such a discount in Germany, except, to use the words of the irrepressible young Emperor, "when they are for the church, the children and the kitchen," Dr. Stuckenberg referred to the well-known saying of Tacitus, that the ancient Germans counseled with their women on the important subjects, and said he thought one of the chief causes why the position of women had not improved was the interpretation given to the sayings of St. Paul, for while Catholicism bars women from the ecclesiastical circle it admits her to the throne, canonizes her as a saint and puts the woman at the very center of its system of popular admiration and worship. The concept of the mind during centuries of the prevalence of such customs must aggregate favorably upon the position of women.

In Germany women are debarred from the throne, they are overshadowed by an immense militarism which makes the ideal of the country one of physical force. Woman is again overshadowed by what may be called "the aristocracy of intellect," for there are no such expert scholars in the world as in Germany, and no woman is admitted as an official to their guild. In addition to all this, the fact that the great mass of able-bodied men are obliged to be gathered into an army puts heavy physical burdens upon women and makes it a matter of course that they shall be bowed down with manual labor to a degree unknown in some other civilized countries.

But there is a movement in their favor. Fraülein Lange, a cultivated lady in Berlin, is working hard to secure the establishment of a gymnasium for women, and she has the strong sympathy of some of the ablest men. The Berlin University is not open to women, nor is it to men unless they have passed a preparatory period of nine years in a gymnasium. It is true that—men—students come from America and other countries to attend lectures and are allowed to do so, but they are not admitted to examinations which prepare them for official or professional positions in Germany. Now and then a learned woman is permitted to listen to the lectures of some great specialist through his personal kindness, but this is a rare exception. Women were admitted to the University of Leipsic, but the frivolity and boldness of certain Russian women have caused them to be excluded. It was unfortunate that the first ones who attended were not such women as to make their admission advantageous in the eyes of the conservative professors.

As an evidence, however, of the progress made in the estimate of woman's intellectual ability, Dr. Stuckenberg said: "The school authorities of Berlin selected an eminent specialist in education, Professor Bertram, to visit the Chicago exposition and study the educational system of the United States. He was most deeply impressed by the intellectual advantages enjoyed by the women of our country. On his return to Berlin I asked him for the result of his inquiries. He spoke with enthusiasm of the schools for the higher education of women and in one striking sentence condensed his impression: 'Woman is the support of the culture of the nation.' Never have I heard a statement which shows so fully what a weight of responsibility rests on our American women. The statement is the more remarkable when we consider the prejudice against the higher culture of women in the environment of its author, and it is so weighty because it comes from a specialist in education and is the result of careful personal investigation."

Boston, Mass.

THE FRATERNITY OF REFORMS.

IV.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

THE PURITY CRUSADE.

I have before me, in response to a request, a letter from brave Mayor Weir, of Lincoln, Neb., with a speech of his just delivered, both relating to his recent complete suppression of brothels in that city and the rescue of one hundred and fifty-three of the fallen women by the rescue society of noble women which was formed to coöperate with the mayor in this movement. One of the most notorious of these places has been remodeled for the use of a leading club and the others are occupied for residences and other useful purposes, except such as are vacant.

This victory has been achieved in spite of the usual cowardice of politicians in spite of the usual greed of merchants, more afraid of losing money than anxious to prevent the vast moral losses involved; in spite of the usual atheistic talk about "necessary evils," in spite of the unfriendliness of the press. Even respectable merchants accused the mayor of losing the state fair to the city by cutting off the "accommodations" desired in such cases, for lack of which at Lincoln it was said the authorities had placed the fair in Omaha. Such a mayor stands out in striking contrast to the mayors of other cities, who are mostly bad or goodish or goody or good for nothing, sworn to be executors, but foresworn to be executioners of the laws.

Lincoln should now be an attractive place to Christian families seeking morally safe homes in which to bring up their children. It has honored itself, as Toronto and Alleghany had previously done, by showing that brothels are not "necessary evils" but may be wholly suppressed. The sin to which they cater will, of course, continue in some measure as long as human nature is what it is, but the public traffic by which it is multiplied can be, for it has been, suppressed.

Purity gets an awful significance from heredity. Although Weismann's recent declaration that acquired mental characteristics are not inherited is moderating the extravagant claims made in behalf of heredity when it was a new science, so that training is seen to be much more influential upon character, there is no question as to the inheritance of physical characteristics, including especially the results of vices. "To the third and the fourth generation" rolls on the corrupt parents' echoing curse of his children.

It is to be regretted that the White Cross movement, which started with so much promise, has not found some fit leader to give it the full strength of a consecrated life. Such a leader, by lectures, might arouse such interest in imperilled purity as would lead to the suppression of corrupt pictures on theater bill boards, and of corrupt "living pictures" in the theaters themselves, and of erotic novels on the railroads and news stands, and of corrupting fashions in "society." In the lack of a special prophet giving his or her whole time to preaching such a crusade, dependence for this work must be placed chiefly on Christian women, who have already done much, but might and should do more, especially in the work of prevention, in protecting the eyes of the young against all pictures of impurity, even though they are called "art."

Conver's "Marriage and Divorce," commenting on the increase of divorces in our country more than twice as fast as the population, more than twice as fast as in Europe, notes the fact that most of the divorces, good and bad, are obtained by women, and so declares that this is a woman's question and that reform must wait on woman's activity.

The "age of consent" legislation also needs woman's mighty protest. Only Kansas and Wyoming, where women vote, make it eighteen, while Delaware is still disgraced by keeping it at seven. Before that age rape is a felony; after it, only a "misdemeanor."

It is not encouraging, but it ought to be arousing to find one of our most reputable publishers, of a Methodist family, publishing a corrupting story, which to the dishonor of our people is having a large circulation, larger than either the Frenchy author or the American publishers expected. If mothers would not have the error repeated, they should write their courteous protest to the publisher, and again in every like case. Miss Willard's suggestion we indorse, that white-ribboners use their pens as persistently as the single-taxers, who make every public reference to it an excuse for a letter.

We hear much of "the power of the press" and "the power of the pulpit," but the power of the mail might be as great as either if the wonderful art of writing and the marvelous facilities of the mail were used to the utmost by the great host of good people who have not learned to use the press or platform. President Cleveland's touch of a button at the Chicago Fair, which put all the machinery in motion, is less wonderful than the far-reaching results often achieved by touching a mail box with a Christian letter.

Clifton Springs, N. Y.

THE POSITION OF WOMAN IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

It is my cherished belief that in the twentieth century there will be no artificial restrictions placed upon women by laws which bar them out of certain employments, professions and careers, or by that public sentiment, stronger than law, which now practically closes to them many paths of usefulness for which they seem to me to be specially adapted. All that the most progressive pioneers have ever dreamed of asking is that, in the case of women as in that of men, they should not be hedged about by barriers made by the privileged classes, who, in politics, ecclesiastical, professional and business life, have secured the power to say who shall come in and who shall stay out.

This power has crippled the efforts of men to develop according to the utmost of their possibilities, but it is now universally conceded among intelligent people that men are fast coming to their own in the sense of being free to make the most of themselves in any direction to which their bent of mind has predisposed them. The same will be true of women in the twentieth century. I confidently expect that they will win their greatest laurels in the realm of government. Many of the great statesmen of the future will be women; many of the most successful diplomatists will be women; many of the greatest preachers will be women.

The world has lost incalculably by the senseless prejudice that has silenced the potent voices of the mothers of the world in aisles of prayer and halls of legislation. The tact of woman would have been of incalculable service to the people in the settling of disputes. From the beginning a mother has been both statesman and diplomat in the home; from morning until night it has been her work to settle disputes, reconcile opposing forces, put down rivalries; in short, to administer justice tempered with mercy. It has been well said that probably the greatest loss humanity has suffered is from the fact that half the wisdom, more than half the purity and more than half the gentleness of humankind have been missed from the mart, the camp, the court.

We want the survival of the most as well as of the fittest, the survival of others as well as of ourselves, and we shall never have this principle carried to its complete conclusion until every child that is born, whether boy or girl, shall from the first drink in the inspiration of knowing and feeling that "the world is all before them where to choose."

Boston, Mass.

INDUSTRIAL TRAINING AS A MORAL FACTOR.

BY CARRIE E. KING.

The many years of effort to uplift the fallen has been productive of rich results that promise well for the future, in that the workers have learned the need and power of organization and the relation of cause and effect. Thus the impurity of our social life is seen to be a festering sore whose cause lies deep-seated in the life within and which no surface treatment can cure. It is repressed in one place only to break out in another.

One cause lying deep in social life as well as embodied in civil law, has been the unequal standard of morality for men and women. The demand for an equal standard of morals and that of a far higher type than heretofore, has been the basis of a large share of work accomplished, aside from rescue work. It has repealed the contagious diseases acts and prevented their passage where not established; it has worked to raise the so-called age of protection and in other ways sought to lessen the evils of the present systems and in its doing has elevated the standard of morals among the people to a corresponding height. For the laws of a land are a correct index to the degree of civilization attained by its people.

Various other causes have been recognized and met with counteracting forces, but the fact that a large percentage of the unfortunate ones who subsist by the wages of sin, are those whose hands have not been trained to any degree of skill in any industrial occupation by which they may earn a livelihood, has not received the attention which the importance of the subject demands. These lack not only hand skill, but also its accompaniment, a mind trained to application, to patience and to accuracy, which tends directly to truthfulness. They miss the mental and moral stimulus which comes from a conscious sense of being a useful member of the society of which they find themselves a part.

Bread-winning forms an important part of our lives in this work-a-day world. To the "submerged tenth" it becomes a painful necessity.

It seems from statistics that the women who are criminals come almost entirely from the non-industrial classes. "An examination was made of the two hundred and eighty inmates in the girls' department of a house of correction in New England. All were under eighteen, and but two could make a dress and only three a loaf of bread. A similar report of the prisoners on Blackwell Island, a few years ago, made but a little better showing. At the last prison congress held in this country there was embodied in the resolutions a conviction that industrial training should be had in our public schools and less of letters.

After the priceless years of early youth are gone by forever and there is exemplified the truth of the old adage that an idle brain (and hand) is the devil's workshop, then we build costly reformatories for the young lives undone, style them industrial schools and begin the work of instruction that should have been done in early childhood.

"With small exception, all the wealth of the world is the creation of human labor, the product of muscular exertion." Yet the vast machinery of our public schools has been set to train the intellect, quite ignoring, until of late, the equal need of training the hands.

It is a fact worthy of notice that whereas the first claims put forth for the introduction of industrial training into our public schools were for its value in the industries and to the wage-earner, the result of hand training on the mental development has been found so beneficial that it has become one of the chief reasons with the educators of to-day for urging its adoption. A teacher of six years' experience in an industrial school says: "It is as good for morals as for mind and body in doing away with the idleness, loafing and dissipation so apt to claim the evenings, Saturdays and vacations of city bred boys." Of the work in Sweden it is said: "In the beginning the economic conception of manual training was generally adopted. Everywhere it was looked upon as the means of preparing the children of the common people to earn their living. . . . It came to be considered as an educational process for the complete moral, physical and intellectual development of the child."

Workers in the social purity reform, who long ago saw the imperative need of financial independence for women, surely cannot fail to recognize the quick and ready aid in this direction which the general introduction of industrial training into the public schools of our cities and larger towns would surely give. The great uplift, also, to the dignity of labor is a matter of no small importance. And only in free public schools can the highest ideals in this direction be attained, and the saving power of the gospel of honest and faithful toil be wrought out. Private effort at the best can do comparatively little, and in the homes of those who most need instruction there is usually an entire lack of the necessary material and knowledge.

The question of how manual training may be introduced into our city schools, has been ably treated by H. W. Compton, superintendent of Toledo schools. He says: "In my judgment it is of little importance to begin to talk about teachers, shops and courses of study for this branch, until the people are aroused and instructed and are in a more compliant attitude of mind, and are as willing to furnish the means for instruction in industrial drawing, wood and metal work, sewing and cooking, as for arithmetic, grammar and algebra. I do not wish to be understood as saying that the masses of the people are opposed to manual training. I do not believe they are, so far as my experience and investigation go. I think they are rather favorably inclined to it. It is more indifferentism and lack of knowledge as to what it is and what it will do for them than active opposition."

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with its extensive organization and its many years of varied experience, is in a position to do much for industrial training, and we have long wished to see it recognized by the social purity department as an important preventive measure. Being a fundamental need, it naturally follows that it holds vital relations to many questions of the day and deserves the thoughtful attention of every philanthropist.

It may be that all the causes of the social evil as yet found are but minor ones, leading, step by step, to the one chief cause where the hardest battle of all is to be fought, yet none the less must we be true to the every work and inspiration of to-day. When God's time was fully come, Abraham Lincoln wrote the Proclamation of Emancipation and in a few moments was consummated the prayers and toil of years. So in His own good time may some hand write that which shall set free the people from this worse than African slavery.

CORRESPONDENCE

DAKOTA'S RE-SUBMISSION BILL.

Dear Union Signal:—The re-submission bill, introduced by Mr. Russell, of Yankton, passed the legislature of South Dakota, January 24. This bill provides for an amendment to the constitution by a repeal of Article 24, entitled "Prohibition," and will be submitted to a vote of the men-people in November, 1896.

The vote in the House was forty-nine to thirty-one, and in the Senate twenty-four to nineteen in favor of the measure. We believe this is a greater calamity to our state than drouth or the defalcation of our state treasurer. The liquor element is jubilant, and high carnival will be held by this class throughout the state, while there will be sorrow in thousands of homes.

Re-submission has been brought about and a campaign forced upon us because of the lethargy and indifference of those who voted for Prohibition; because of whisky ballots dropped from the hands of Christian men; because the election of a United States Senator was pushed to the front, and many opposed to re-submission, on account of party idolatry, voted for re-submissionists without seeming to realize the result. Re-submission could not have carried had it not been for the votes of the legislators who are members of churches!

The legislature is overwhelmingly Republican and, of course, responsible for the measure. There are fourteen Populists in the House, and five voted for re-submission; while in the Senate five out of ten Populists voted for the measure.

Mrs. Anna Simmonds, vice-president of the W. C. T. U., and the writer, have been upon the ground from the beginning, and have fought the measure at every point, scarcely taking time to eat or sleep. Petitions have been introduced in both branches against the passage of the bill. Yesterday petitions from thirty-one counties were read in the Senate, and some six thousand signatures, against the measure, and a number from other counties were read to-day.

Last Sunday night a temperance mass-meeting was held in the Hall of Representatives addressed by the president and vice-president of the State W. C. T. U.

. . . . . .

A moment ago I paused in my letter to go with my husband to see a man down in the basement of the hotel at which we are stopping. We found him lying on the floor, his face close to a hot steam pipe, in a dark room, unconscious of his surroundings—dead drunk. Bending over him were a number of re-submissionists. A match was struck and I then saw it was a member of the House two years ago. He had taken the Keeley cure two years before his election and was trying to lead a Christian life. During those two months fiends in human form persuaded him to drink and he fell.

At one time they took him to a neighboring city, determined, by fair or foul means, to secure his vote. He returned the night before the vote was taken. Two white-ribboners arose early in the morning and going down to the hotel office asked if Mr. S. stayed there last night. The clerk replied: "There he is, in the cloak room."

He had on his coat ready to go to his re-submission friends. It was before breakfast, but he was urged to go to a private parlor for a conference. He went and on bended knees those women prayed with him. When he arose to go he said: "I am going over to tell them they cannot have my vote." And when the roll was called that afternoon he voted for the home, and victory was ours by just that one vote!

We have not seen him from that time until to-night and as I gazed on his swollen countenance and thought of the hard struggle he had passed through to be a man, and of the little prayer-meeting in the upper room, I could not help crying out to those standing by, "That is what we are trying to fight."

As we returned to our room my soul cried out in anguish: "How long shall the wicked, how long shall the wicked triumph?" Emma A. Cranmer.

Pierre, S. D.

THE COMING CONVOCATION AT WASHINGTON.

Dear Union Signal:—Friday morning and afternoon, Saturday morning, afternoon and evening, and the Sabbath following, February 15–18, will be full of the best talking ever done in our city, we hope, not excepting the eloquent sermons of our city pastors and the ceaseless flow of logic at the capitol.

Can any one be more persuasive in argument, more winsome in exhortation than Frances Willard or Lady Henry Somerset, and they with many other gifted women of the World's W. C. T. U. will be with us at that time. Friday night the great mass-meeting in our largest hall will be under the auspices of the World's W. C. T. U.

My own pastor has most cordially offered his pulpit for some of our leaders to occupy Sabbath morning and evening, and doubtless many other pastors will do the same.

Our convocation committee is making every possible arrangement to secure the success of the convocation. Metropolitan M. E. church has been secured for the meetings of Friday and Saturday, and the parlors of the First Congregational church for a reception to be tendered our guests by the District W. C. T. U., as it was decided that no private parlors would accommodate the crowds desiring to attend. A warm welcome awaits all our white-ribboners who can be with us at that time.

Mary E. Griffith.

"TEKEL."

Dear Union Signal:—The reform mayor of New York city has been weighed in the balance and is found wanting. The Christian men and women who last fall worked day and night for his election, now write in righteous indignation their "Tekel" against the first lines of his official record, while they bow their heads in shame.

The feeling of the reform forces of New York in regard to the mayor's attitude in favoring the opening of the saloons from 2 to 11 o'clock p. m. on Sunday, and his consultation with the saloon-keepers in reference to the framing of an excise law agreeable to them, found expression January 20 at the protest meeting held in Chickering Hall, under the auspices of the American Temperance Union, Joseph A. Bogardus presiding. The occasion called for strong language and it was freely given. No wonder that the welkin rang when men such as Revs. J. A. B. Wilson, C. H. Mead, Stephen Merritt, English, Mingins, Stryker and the dusky representative of an once down-trodden race, Rev. Granville Hunt, let fall the sledge-hammer blows of protest against the betrayal of the best interests of the community and the nation—blows rendered all the harder by the approval and applause of the large audience, and the ringing resolutions adopted. No wonder American womanhood and the work of the W. C. T. U. were given a well-merited recognition when represented by so able spokeswomen as Mrs. Mary T. Burt, Mrs. E. B. Grannis and Miss Julia Colman. And the echo of those protests will reach the mayor's ears by other means than the newspaper reports, as can be seen by the last of the following resolutions, unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That we, the citizens of this great metropolis, in Chickering Hall assembled, declare ourselves opposed to the opening of the liquor saloon on the Sabbath day, as we firmly believe such a course would be detrimental to the best interests of our city and tend to destroy the sanctity and usefulness of our Christian Sabbath.

Resolved, That the attitude of Mayor Strong toward this question is such as to call forth the righteous indignation of every moral and Christian person in our midst.

Resolved, That there has been no more humiliating spectacle witnessed in this city through the many years of its corrupt administration than that which is now shown in the person of our reform mayor, whose elevation to office was largely accomplished by the coöperation of our best citizenship, standing as the avowed advocate against the Sunday saloon.

Resolved, That Mayor Strong, in his recent interview with the liquor dealers, has shown his entire subserviency to their wishes and behests, and we enter a most emphatic protest against his calling into his counsels the most notorious law-breakers in our midst and requesting them to assist in framing laws to govern their nefarious business.

Resolved, That a committee of twenty-five be appointed by the chairman of this meeting to wait upon Mayor Strong to convey to him the sentiments embodied in these resolutions.

To say that Mayor Strong was condemned for hobnobbing with law-breakers and patting them on the back, describes only faintly the intense disgust with which the once supposed reformer now is viewed. What a bitter pill for the reform element to swallow after carrying him on their shoulders to victory! And yet, it is usually the bitter pills that effect the cure. No permanent good can ever come from a compromise with evil. The election of Strong was a compromise. The saloon element knew his views on the questions affecting the business and therefore the opposition was not as vigorous as it might have been. Now they demand their reward and Mayor Strong stands by his colors in favor of the saloon. As Stephen Merritt said, the reformers have "sown the wind and are reaping the whirlwind." The men, who, to quote the words of another of the speakers, "voted the Prohibition ticket as it came from the press," and the only ones who to-day can face the world without a blush of shame and mortification.

But this is not the only meeting of protest; there have been others and there will be more. A petition "against the sale of liquors during any hours of the Sabbath day" is being circulated and has already been signed by thousands and meetings are planned all over the state. Three of the Swedish churches in this city, the Methodist, Baptist and Evangelical, at a union meeting Saturday evening entered an indignant protest against Sunday opening of the saloons and this protest was conveyed to the mass-meeting yesterday by one of the pastors.

What will be the result of Mayor Strong's action? More prohibition votes next election. Kate Lunden.

New York City.

POLYGLOT PETITION MEETING.

Dear Union Signal:—The presentation speeches of the Polyglot Petition will be given on the evening of February 15, in Convention Music Hall. This hall is in a fireproof structure at the corner of New York avenue and Fifth street, and is accessible by the various lines of street cars. It is heated by steam, lighted by electricity and well ventilated. Its seating capacity is more than four thousand or as much as three of our largest churches combined. The floor has thirty-five hundred numbered chairs. The platform has fifty chairs for our distinguished guests besides the desk for the speaker. Back of the platform three hundred elevated seats will be occupied by the Moody choir, a distinguished body of singers. We pay two hundred and fifty dollars for the use of the hall one night. This is the lowest figure possible. A benevolent gentleman of the city assumes fifty dollars of this sum. The rent includes heat, light, ushers, doorkeepers, tickets, and all routine and attendance necessary to our comfort and satisfaction. The local committee of arrangements are deep in plans for the success of the convocation.

Our friends in Congress will assist us with suggestions as to best method of placing our petitions before the government.

We wish to follow out the suggestions of our leaders and secure more signatures to the Polyglot Petition. Twenty-five of the rank and file have volunteered to bring it before the churches or carry it around the streets.

Mrs. Clinton Smith,
Sec. Com. of Arrangements.

Washington, D. C.

DEAR YOKE-FELLOWS:—Before I begin the varied task of answering the questions sent to Mother Experience, I want to quote from a leaflet before me, a stirring reveille sounded by John Willis Baer in an address recently delivered by him before a Christian audience:

"Men have said to me,—and they have never known the serpent's sting, 'You are too rabid, Mr. Baer; the saloon is not what you claim it is. You have had no experience.' Would to God I had not. But for five years in my earlier years I was in and out of the saloon, and my life has its soot-marks and I know whereof I speak; and I speak of the saloon only to curse it. I hate it and I ask God to give me more intense hatred for the saloon business. I want my boys to live and grow up in a community that will not tolerate a saloon. Come, men, fathers, I appeal to you, vote to protect my boys. Will you? I'll vote to protect yours. Come, mothers, throw your influence, as always, upon the right side and protect my home. I'll protect yours. Come, young men, I appeal to you tonight in my selfishness, vote to protect my home and your father's roof-tree. Young women, I appeal to you; tell that young man who sees in you all that true manhood sees in true womanhood, that if he values your respect and affection, you expect him to cast his vote to protect you, and that it is as much of a crime before God for him to sell his vote as it would be for you to sell your virtue. Up, everybody! Young men and maidens, old men and women—up, and to arms! Strike palms in this battle for home and humanity. I appeal to all, white and black, foreign-born and American-born, Protestant and Catholic, believer and non-believer. Yes, I appeal to loyal American citizens, whether you espouse my religion and faith or whether you do not. Catholic, let me remind you of the stand against the saloon that many of your leaders in high authority have taken. Fellow Protestant, let me remind you that this is a time for awhile to forget whether we be Episcopalian, Baptist or Presbyterian; Methodist or Congregationalist, Universalist or Unitarian, but shoulder to shoulder, let us present a united front to the enemy that shall even now, before the day of battle, be prophetic of success for ourselves and a portent of disaster to the saloon business, not only for next year, but for every succeeding year. I have enlisted for the whole war and shall continue in it without fear or favor, please God."

---

UNION IN A GOOD CAUSE.

Miss Willard wishes to state that when in her New Year letter to the local unions she urged them to invite good men of both the new parties to meet under their auspices for the purpose of trying to express, in words, the harmony of purpose that exists between them she did not mean to debar members of the two old parties. If they feel drawn to do so, let them come with the rest for the purpose of uniting in an earnest plank for Prohibition, the woman's ballot and the wage-workers' interest, on which all could stand together, and which should be incorporated in the platform of the coming party of the people.

---

Now for a series of questions coming from the four points of the compass and bearing upon many phases of the W. C. T. U. endeavor.

These queries show two things to be true: (1) Questions are born of activity—a lazy or stupid person seldom inquires. (2) The oneness of our work, since we meet the same lions in the way whether we are in a union of ten members in a remote country district, or in one of two hundred members in a great city. Then blessed be

SPECIAL DIFFICULTIES!

1. Is it necessary for a union to vote to have a money order drawn every time the treasurer of the union has to send dues to the district or state?

Our National treasurer answers as follows:

"Whenever dues, appropriations or salaries have been voted or ordered by the union or the executive committee, the treasurer is at liberty to pay them, as ordered, the minutes of such order being her authority. But when no such vote has been taken she must have a written order from president and secretary. The constitution provides for payment of dues to state, and that amount should be set aside as local dues come in and forwarded at least quarterly."

---

2. What would you do in a community that looks upon the W. C. T. U. as only another name for the Woman's Suffrage Association, and, in consequence are not willing to have anything to do with it?

The situation is unfortunate, and the community needs educating. This question comes from a W. C. T. U. which, as a state organization, does not embrace woman's suffrage, and it might not be a difficult task to convince the prejudiced public of that fact. There is nothing that commends a union to the community in which it is established, better than Christian activity along reform and philanthropic lines. Prejudice will soon be transformed into praise and patronage when drunkards are turned from their cups, foolish girls won to good lives, little children gathered from the street, and taught to use their active fingers, feet and tongues against King Alcohol. This is how sentiment in favor of the white ribbon is created. The suffrage idea will follow in favor without a question. "What is to be done?" perplexed and pained comrade? What you evidently have been doing,—keeping-at-it-on-this-line if it takes all the days of all the years. And then—"having done all, stand!"

---

3. Should persons who are not Christians join the W. C. T. U.?

This might well be met by a counter-query: "How would you judge concerning the applicant's Christianity or otherwise?"

Certain it is that the union cannot invite to its ranks persons of known obliquity of character, for such could not consistently march under the banner whose leading inscription reads "For God." Neither could such a person sign the pledge whose opening words are, "I hereby solemly promise, God helping me." Certain it also is that beyond this we, as white-ribboners, are not qualified to go. Many a woman not confessedly a Christian, yet a woman of pure purpose, a woman whose life is in accordance with the moral law, has been, through association with workers whose heart showed a deeper spiritual life, led to this better experience herself.

On the other hand, every union should exercise conscientious care regarding the reinforcement of its ranks, since no chain is stronger than its weakest link, and a union weighted down by women who cannot fall in line with their distinctively Christian activities, and echo in her own life their Christian spirit, may be hindered by her more than it can help her.

---

4. What shall we do for a common pronoun? It is becoming a necessity to our language in these days of fast coming political and legal equality. Thus: Each voter must stand in his or her place till he or she can pass in to cast his or her ballot.

That is clumsy! Personally, I like our own "feminine" pronoun whenever it can be used; we have been ignored so long or included in "him." However, there seems no way out until the Samuel Johnson or Noah Webster who may this minute be wrestling over the problem in some little red school-house, has grown up and brought it to a successful issue.

---

5. Will you through THE UNION SIGNAL give us the meaning of the word "altruism"?

The Standard Dictionary gives the definition thus: "The theory that inculcates benevolence to others in subordination to self-interest; interested benevolence, as opposed to disinterested; also the practice of this theory. A term coined by Comte and used by his translators."

---

6. Does signing the National W. C. T. U. Enrollment Tablet and paying dues into a local union qualify a woman to sit as delegate in county, district, state and National conventions?

The National Enrollment Tablet was issued by the National originally for use in public W. C. T. U. meetings, it being understood that those who signed at such time, virtually promised not only to keep the pledge and pay their dues, but to become members of the local union in that place, and as such, would be eligible to election by the union as delegates, on the same basis as all local members.

---

7. Does the heat in baking a cake or pie with alcohol the flavoring destroy the power of the alcohol?"

That depends. The alcohol in a half a teaspoonful of vanilla extract in a large cake would hardly be perceived. But I do know that the brandy in a pie is not eliminated by the heat. Else, why was it put in? Before I became a convert to the W. C. T. U. principles I ate many such pies, and it was the brandy that made them "tasty" and rendered the pies of my early temperance days "flat" to a perverted taste. Aside from my own testimony I read recently a very scientific statement proving the presence of alcohol after cooking. The best rule is, when you are in doubt—don't do it.

---

To close let me take my turn and ask you one question: Has the Great Petition been presented to the pastors in each church in your town?

Yours for the coming abolition,

MOTHER EXPERIENCE.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

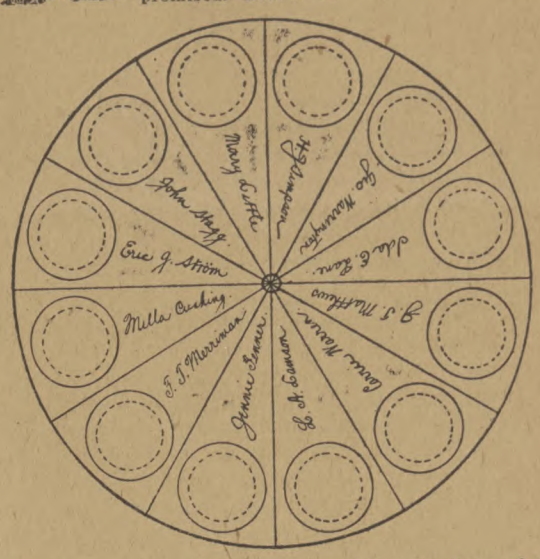
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised.—Heb. 10:23.



Miss Frances E. Willard is noted for her love of the wheel. It is not strange, therefore, knowing her loyal support of the Temple, that she takes kindly to the Temple Wheel. In a few days a bugle blast will be sounded by our Chieftain that will reach from Maine to California, calling, not alone to our white-ribboners to give the Temple Wheel a whirl, but to members of the church militant, who long for the reign of temperance and righteousness. Surely we give temperance but lip service if we profess to be its strong adherents and yet are not willing to do the small service of sending for a Wheel and getting twelve friends to put a dime apiece in it. Don't say, "The sum is too small; it is not worth the doing." All great things are but an aggregation of the littles. The great ocean is formed of drops of waters. A great wind storm of sand on the desert which often buries beneath it man and beast, is formed of infinitesimal grains of sand. Many a staunch ship has been wrecked on a coral reef, whose builders were tiny marine zoophytes. The great cathedrals, schools and charitable institutions of the Roman Catholic church in this country, it is said, have all largely been built from the small earnings of servant girls.

***

The saloon has caused a chain of violence and blood to encompass the land. Let the temperance people form a chain of Temple Wheels that will embrace every state in the Union as an antidote to the saloon evil. It may be asked, "How can this be done?" By the reader of these lines sending at once for a Temple Wheel and getting twelve friends to write their names and address in full on the Wheel when they deposit their dimes. If they know nothing in regard to the Temple, the picture presented to them of the building, with its history on the back, will deeply interest them. Then when we receive the Wheel with their addresses we will send each of them one to fill accompanied by a letter from Miss Willard asking them to help the white-ribboners pay for their "House Beautiful," to the extent of filling the Wheel. Thus the chain will be extended. We have now five thousand in readiness; when they are all filled and returned to us, it will multiply the chain by twelve times, increasing it to 60,000, and so it will go on until we put 1,000,000 persons at work for the Temple—that means entire ownership.

***

Mrs. Huldah W. Nye, Hudson, Wis., is one of our aged saints whose health is so feeble that she feels almost as though her feet had touched the waters, and she stands waiting for the boatman to row her across the stream that divides the seen from the unseen. But this brave soul is not waiting idly. She received the Temple spoon and sent it to her little granddaughter as a Christmas gift. As she has had strength she has been working to complete a full Baby Band which she has accomplished and for which we have received $10.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Bicknell, of McGregor, Iowa, both of whom have reached their three score years and ten, send a gift to the Temple of fifty shares of W. T. P. A. stock, amounting to $1,200, on which we are to pay them six per cent during their lives. Mrs. Almira E. Hurd, of Rockford, Ill., an aged saint eighty-three years old, has sent $50 on a pledge of $100. Miss Dora M. Harris, Ypsilanti, Mich., sends $25 which completes a pledge of $100 to place the name of her loved mother, Jane R. Harris, on a tablet in Willard Hall. Miss Harris asked for two years to pay it in, but by dint of working and denying herself many things, she raised the money in one year. She writes: "How earnestly I wish every one of our white-ribboners would feel the responsibility of the Temple debt resting on their shoulders and do what they could." Amen, and amen, say we. Mrs. A. P. Everson, Rose, Kan., sends a check for $100, to place the name of her husband, John Everson, in Willard Hall, and promises conditionally to send a like amount for her own name.

***

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

SHOWERS AND SUNSHINE.

BY DOROTHEA DAVIS.

A little flower grew beside my door,
Cheering me often in my lonely mood;
Sturdily upward growing day by day,
Taking from earth and sunshine daily food.
Sunshine had been the lot of its short life,
With nothing harsher than the dews of night,
Till near the close of one hot summer day
Black thunder-clouds shut out the sunset light.
The winds like angry wolves sprang quickly up,
Bending the trees and scattering leaves about;
My little flower lay prone upon the earth,
A sight to touch a heart however stout.
"What hast thou done, O tender little flower,
What fault in thy white life to merit this?"
God answered by withdrawing wind and storm,
And sunshine stooped the little flower to kiss,
Then upward turned the sweet and tearful face,
The bright, warm rays helped it to stand again,
Cleansed from all earth dust, bright and new,
Prizing the sunshine more for hours of pain.

A little maiden dwelt beside my door,
Cheering me often in my lonely mood;
Sturdily upward growing day by day,
Taking from love and sunshine daily food.
Sunshine had been the lot of her short life,
With nothing harsher than the dews of night,
Till near the close of one hot summer day,
Black clouds of grief shut out her cheering light.
Despair, like angry wolf, sprang quickly up,
Shaking her faith and scattering hopes about,
The happy life lay prone upon the earth,
A sight to pain a heart, however stout.
"What hast thou done, O gentle little maid,"
My foolish love cried out, "to merit this?"
God answered by withdrawing wind and storm,
And sunshine stooped the grieved heart to kiss,
Then upward turned the sweet and tearful face,
The bright warm rays helped her to stand again,
Cleansed from all earth dust, bright and new,
Prizing the sunshine more for hours of pain.

WHITE-RIBBON HEROISM.

BY SOPHIE F. GRUBB.

[Our readers will welcome the following chapter from the life of Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, so touchingly narrated by her comrade. The fact that Mrs. Woodbridge was by nature quite timid when on the streets at night, unless accompanied by a friend, throws even a brighter light upon another side of her character, which ever presented a dauntless front when going forward in the name of right.]

The following are incidents of Mrs. Woodbridge's trip through Kansas eight years ago. She came to my house the day following the events narrated, and I received from her a full account of them at that time. We talked them over again when she was my guest a year ago. They are a fine illustration of her heroic devotion to duty, and illustrate the splendid character of Kansas men represented in the conductor.

Mrs. Woodbridge had an engagement to speak before the M. E. Conference, then in session in C——. In order to meet that engagement she was obliged to take the train to a small station, a mere stopping point, and from there depend on a private conveyance for the twenty miles yet to be traveled. When she showed her ticket to the conductor he hesitated, and then said, "I think you would better not stop there. The train does not reach the place until about midnight. There is no station, and it is probable there will be no one there."

But Mrs. Woodbridge replied that she must stop as she could reach C—— in no other way and it was absolutely impossible for her to break her engagement. The young man seemed troubled but went on. He afterward returned and said to her that unless there was some one at the train who could take care of her, he could not consent to leaving her. With indomitable courage our Mary replied, "I must stop." When the station was reached a man with a lantern was seen, and the conductor gladly hailed him and asked him to take the lady to the "hotel." The man replied, however, that he was going on business to the next town and it was impossible for him to stay. "Then," said the conductor, "I will wait my train and take her at least a part of the way myself." He explained to her that the only house where she could stay was more than half a mile away, but that he could take her to where he thought she would be safe. They proceeded for about a quarter of a mile, then giving her his lantern he charged her to hold it low, to walk in the ditch (dug for a railroad) which she was on no account to leave.

She saw from his manner that he had some special cause for anxiety and this added to her feeling of loneliness and even alarm. He told her as he left her to be sure and let him know of her journey and giving her his address he bade her good-bye.

Mrs. Woodbridge told me that she had never known so long a journey as that was (little more than a quarter of a mile) but she talked to the Lord and felt His arms about her. Finally she reached a small house and knocked on the door. A man answered her and told her the tavern was farther on but to her great relief a woman's voice came from an inner room, like one addressing a tired child and trying to comfort it, "Never mind, my husband will go with you; will take good care of you. Never mind."

The man ascompanied her a few rods further and stopped at a rough building called by way of custom, "the hotel." They were here admitted by a man who asked Mrs. Woodbridge to take a chair by the stove. She mentioned that she had a trunk where the train stopped, and he said immediately, "Then we must go down and get it." She protested that it would do in the morning, but he called his son and said they must get it now. They left her, and she found when her eyes had become accustomed to the dim light of a turned down lamp that there were some dozen or fifteen men sleeping in beds ranged round the large room. Heads were raised and inquiries made, and she felt that some action must be taken. Rising she said, "Gentlemen, I am a temperance lecturer obliged to fill an engagement at C—— to-morrow. I am a mother and grandmother. I am doing, as I believe, the Lord's work, and now, as you loved and honored your mothers I beg of you not to address me again." Not a head was raised, not another word spoken that night.

The man and his son returned after nearly an hour's absence, and he then explained that a railroad was being built and there was a large company of Italians camping between there and the station and it was necessary to be very careful. That explained the conduct of the conductor and his anxiety for her safety. As the host was speaking to her a woman's voice at an inner room asked her if she were not tired, to which she emphatically assented.

"Well, come right in here and lie down." The only place for this welcome rest was by the woman's side "where my man sleeps."

Mrs. Woodbridge put her large shawl over the bed, lay down and knew nothing more until at nine o'clock the next morning, she found as nice a breakfast as one could desire, awaiting her. The host had hunted up a comfortable conveyance and was ready to take her across to C——. She said their kindness and civility almost made amends for their unfavorable surroundings and quite made her realize that good and true hearts abound in all the world. She reached me at two o'clock that day with the feeling that she had found an oasis in a dreary desert, but with gratitude toward the conductor and her other new-found friends. She told me afterward that Miss Willard wrote one of the most appreciative letters to the young man she had ever known her to write.

One might infer from this incident that Kansas was a wild waste, but it was only a chance combination of circumstances by which Mrs. Woodbridge was thrown into this railroad building camp, for in eight years' residence I have known no such wild adventure.

But how rare a devotion to duty was exhibited by that timid, delicate woman in filling her engagement under such unfavorable circumstances. No wonder she died in the harness! "She is not, for God took her."

Kirkwood, Mo.

FEAST DAYS AT HOME AND IN THE KINDERGARTEN.

BY FANNY C. PARDEE.

Amid the tide of cares which call for full armor and ready sword for mothers and busy women, holidays seem to throw out to our paths the allurement of resting weapons. But while "resting" is for many of us only some change of the busy career, let us enthusiastically welcome each holiday as a bright oasis upon our paths, and find joy in bringing joy to others, if for no more important people than the little folk, whom kindergartners and mothers believe to be the most important, for upon their peace depends their own!

The month of February brings two holidays for the home and kindergarten, which, if rightly anticipated and observed, may be made the means of much joy and profit. The kindergarten year gleans much from fête days, and gladly it welcomes each day or season which may be made the means of teaching sentiment, bravery, patriotism or kindred virtues.

Our first holiday in February, St. Valentine's day, has lost much of its legendary sentiment through vulgar and extravagant foolishness, which has helped to pervert many childish hearts. The immature ideas of sentiment so wrongly awakened no doubt have bad influences. These heart fancies may seem odd and cunning in very tiny folk, but mothers dread to discover them in their older girls and boys. Let us then redeem the day by bringing back anew good St. Valentine and confining the loving greetings so far as possible to the home circle—to dear papa and mamma and kind, thoughtful grandma, fostering the sweet, innocent home love as long as possible, with our influences for thought and speculation lingering close to bird life—the mating and nesting of birds being among the first and most beautiful harbingers of spring. Nothing touches little hearts more fully than the joyousness of bird life and love.

In the kindergarten we will celebrate the day with our usual bird party. Our practical helps will be a bird skeleton, showing the light hollow bones, which may be wafted so high in air. We may have live bird visitors (the children being invited to bring their pet birds to the kindergarten). We also have a collection of bird feathers, among them a feather from old Abe, the famous war eagle of Wisconsin. Many pictures of birds, a collection of nests and eggs. We can sing bird songs and play bird games and have a bird story. To supplement this will be the completion of the little valentines of kindergarten work for loving ones at home.

On the 22d of February, how the sentiment enlarges from the home circle to the length and breadth of our land! Next to our Christmas celebration must we observe the birthday of the father of our country. Let it be a day when flags wave and drums beat in the kindergarten, when our national hymn is sung with eagerness to visiting friends. It should be made a day of martial festivity, allowing the little boys to bring their drums for the grand march as they sing:

"Washington, the soldier true,
Who won our land for me and you,"

all being uniformed with kindergarten George Washington caps made of bright colored red, white and blue papers, obtained in large sheets from kindergarten supplies and made accordingly.

The story of Washington's childhood and noble manhood is new to succeeding generations and appeals to young hearts still.

Children easily learn to admire our brave men, and as Washington's portrait is wreathed in green by them on this happy day, try to instill into their hearts the desire to one day do loving brave services for their fellows.

Pittsburg, Pa.

GUARD THE LITTLE BOYS.

BY HELEN L. MANNING.

"I've tried to take good care of my girls, and instruct them in what they ought to know; but it is not so necessary with the boys. They will be sure to find out things, anyway," said a mother with a laugh.

"Yes, but how do the boys find out?" I returned earnestly. "Can a slimy stream pour forth pure water? Can you safely trust your hired men or your boys' playmates to give instruction which you alone have the right to give?"

"But boys are so different from girls. It does not seem to make so much difference what their heads are filled with and what they do."

Many, alas! are of the same opinion as this poor, misguided mother, and it is a sad fact that the double standard of purity is established in our homes in dealing with the children of a family. Mothers are lax with regard to the morals and manners of their boys, little thinking of the irreparable wrong which they are thus doing, not only to those of their own blood, but to society at large. Further than this, boys are often counted rough and unfeeling and naturally cruel, the real truth being that they are made so by the way they are educated. Boys have just as warm, tender hearts as girls, and it is the duty of parents to keep them in an atmosphere just as pure, and to shield them just as carefully from evil. If they are laughed at for giving a school fellow a caress, because "boys don't do such things," they will soon learn to hide and repress their real feelings, and gradually reach the state of indifference which at first is only assumed.

But both boys and girls often receive the first blot upon the virgin purity of mind and heart by the lies which are told them concerning the beginnings of life. "Dare to be true; nothing needs a lie," says Herbert Spencer, and never is truth inviolable needed so much as in the unfolding of the child's mind. He sees about him in the plant and animal kingdoms occurrences which are full of mystery to him, and with the loving trustfulness which characterizes childhood—oh, would that he were helped to retain it!—he runs to his mother with eager, innocent questions, naturally believing with all his little heart that she who is to him the personification of wisdom will surely enlighten him. Mothers, as you value the purity of your child's soul, dare to answer him lovingly and truly, in terms within his comprehension. Your refusals or equivocations may suffice to keep him from "bothering" you further about such matters, but rest assured that they have not satisfied him. He will go to some one who will talk with him, and the distorted tale which may be poured into his young ears will leave a stain never to be effaced.

Maternity will never be the subject of coarse jest to the boy who has his first ideas of the origin of life in a loving, sympathetic way from either parent. The child's love for his mother is increased a thousand fold when he knows that he is a part of her very life. Mothers who feel at a loss how to tell the story of the origin of life as it should be told to little ones can find much help in books and pamphlets printed for this very purpose, and ought to make it a matter of duty to seek all the instruction and outside aids possible to perform well this task, if they value the purity of their boys and girls.

Boston, Mass.

DID HE UNDERSTAND?

BY MRS. G. R. ALDEN.

"For unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment."

"Why, yes," said grandma, with her finger on Rollo's verse, and her eyes tender with old memories, "I remember a story about that verse, and it is a story which I think likely I shall remember in heaven."

"Let's hear it right away, if you please," Ralph said, and the others settled into quiet as soon as possible.

"It wasn't so very many years ago, not more than fifty-five," began grandma, and then Rollo nudged Harold and chuckled, and Marion looked with grave, astonished eyes at a woman who thought fifty-five years was not a long, long time! But grandma took no notice of them.

"Yes," she said, "it is just about fifty-five years ago. There was a pretty little boy whom I knew; he had yellow hair and the bluest eyes, and he was a dear, bright little fellow. One day he went visiting out to a nice old lady's who lived near his father's old place. While he was there who should come along but two trim little girls who were out getting signers to the total abstinence pledge. We called it the teetotal pledge in those days. There was quite an excitement about it in town. A man lectured every evening, and had meetings for the children in the afternoons, and gave them each pledge books, and the one who got the greatest number of signers was to have a medal with his name on. It wasn't a gold medal, but it shone, and had a nice blue ribbon to put around your neck; and the children all liked it.

"Well, these two had come to Aunt Patty's door and asked for signers. Aunt Patty invited them in, and got out her quill pen, which wasn't used very often, and she and her eldest girl, Prudence, put down their names. The little fellow stood looking on; he wasn't four years old yet, but he lived where he saw a great deal of writing going on, and behold he wanted to sign his name. Aunt Patty laughed and tried to explain to him that he was too young; but he said not, he 'writed' his name once when 'favver' held his hand! and he wanted to do it again. That was true enough. One day his father bought him a picture book and guided the pencil in his hand and let him put his name in it. After a good deal of coaxing, Aunt Patty sat down and took him in her lap, and held that old quill, guiding it as well as she could, and he did get what looked something like his name in the book. It was very queer writing," said grandma, stopping to laugh at the thought of it, with that same tender look in her eyes, "but the little fellow was just as proud of it as could be. He told of it the first thing when he went home, but his mother—oh! you don't know how badly she felt."

"Why?" interrupted Marion and Rollo. "Wasn't she a good mother?" asked Marion. "Didn't she believe in temperance?" asked Rollo.

"Oh, yes, she believed in temperance, but she had some very strong notions about promises. She wanted her little boy to know all about it whenever he made one, and then to keep it as he would the eighth commandment; and she said he was too young to take a pledge, that he could not understand what it meant, and he would think that signing his name to a paper was a light thing, just for play. Why, children, she felt so badly about it that she just sat down and cried."

"Ho!" said Rollo, "I think she was foolish. I dare say he understood."

"Go on, grandma," said Marion.

"Well, while the mother was crying the father came home and wanted to know all about it, and he thought as Rollo does, that the boy understood, or could be made to. He took him on his knee, and they had a long talk all about drinking, what a dreadful thing it was, and about pledges, and then what should he tell him but this old story of the Rechabites, how they kept the promise made to their father, never forgetting it once, and how God was pleased and rewarded them. Then he made the little fellow hold up his hand and say after him—'Unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment.' Then he explained that the paper the child had signed was a promise that he would obey his father's command and never touch liquor. 'I won't, favver,' the boy said; 'I'll 'member.' And he looked very earnest. But in two or three minutes he was playing with the cat, and his mother couldn't feel that he really understood much about it.

"It was three years afterwards, and the little boy was seven years old—a beautiful child. One winter his mother was very sick; every one thought she would die. She was so low that she didn't know her own little boy, and she couldn't bear the least noise. So her boy was taken to his auntie's, and stayed there for weeks. One evening he was in the parlor with his uncle. There were three or four gentlemen there, and pretty soon cider was brought in. The little boy sat beside a gentleman who offered him a drink of cider from his glass. The boy refused politely, and the gentleman, thinking he was timid, coaxed him. Then his uncle spoke up. 'That young man has never tasted cider, he tells me.' At this they all laughed. It was a very unusual thing in those days to find a child seven years old who had never tasted cider. It sounded almost as strange as it would to say now that one had never tasted water.

"The gentleman said that accounted for his not wanting some; that he did not know how good it was; so he urged him to just try a swallow, and kept coaxing until at last his uncle said, 'Try it, my boy; if you don't like it you need not take any more.' 'No, sir,' the boy said, 'I don't want to try it.' Well, then, his uncle thought he was rude and disobedient, and ought to be made to mind; so he said, 'I command you to take a swallow of it, my boy, and I am to be obeyed, you know.' What did that little seven-year-old baby do but get up in the middle of the floor, with his eyes flashing and his cheeks glowing, and shout out in a loud, strong voice, 'Unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment,' and I don't neither. I promised, I did; and I never will; not if you whip me to death.' Then he burst out crying, and ran out of the room."

"Good for him!" said Rollo.

"Oh, hurrah!" said Harold.

"I am so glad!" said Marion. "I wonder what his mother thought then, if she ever heard of it. Did she get well, grandma?"

"Yes, she got well, and was a proud and happy mother when she heard the story. But that is only the beginning of it. I saw that boy when he was a young man and came home from college as handsome as a picture, and I heard his father say to him: 'Well, my boy, they tell me most of the young men use liquor more or less; how do you get on with them?'

"And he looked around with his bright laughing eyes and said:

"'I'm all right, father; to this day I drink none, but obey my father's commandments. That pledge of mine ought to be printed in gold on my tombstone when I die, for it has held me in the midst of many temptations.'

"And there his mother thought he was too young to understand!"

And Grandma Burton actually wiped the tears from her eyes, though she was smiling yet.

"Grandma," said Marion, "what was that boy's name? You haven't spoken his name once."

"I guess something," said Ralph eagerly. "Wasn't his name Mott, grandma?"

"Robert Mott Burton, that was his name, my darling."

"Our own Uncle Mott!" said astonished little Sarah.

"Then that's what makes him such a red hot temperance man now, isn't it?" said Rollo. "Didn't he begin early, though?"—Montreal Witness.

---

A LITTLE girl somewhat noted for quaint and original sayings, said the other day at the breakfast table that she "had got a piece of bread-head first down her cough pipe."

---

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

386.

BIOGRAPHICAL PUZZLE.

He was born in Kentucky, February 12, 1809, and moved to Illinois when young. His parents were very poor and he went to school less than a year. But his earnest desire for knowledge led him to borrow and study all the books in the neighborhood. He read them at night by the light of a log fire. He studied law, supported himself at the same time, and became a congressman and afterwards president of the United States. He was killed on April 15, 1865. There is no name more beloved in the United States, for he was a good man and always did his duty. Thousands of human beings owe their present happiness to him.

387.

HEADS AND TAILS.

Behead me and the present time I'll be;
Curtail me and denial you will see.
Complete, oh, how the children welcome me!

388.

PI.

Ersicond het selili fo eth dielf, owh eyht wrgo, hyte iolt otn, retihen od yhet inps, ety I ysa otun uyo tath neev lomSono ni lal shi oyrgl swa tno yaerdra keli eon fo esteh.

EVA C. PAGE.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED JANUARY 17.

377. LICENSE, SILENCE.

378. "Look thou not upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright."

379. S-t-on-e.

Correct answers: Ruth T. Elliott; Mary L. Fishburn.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—A good W. C. T. U. auntie comes to us this week with a suggestion and a request. I give it to you in her own words:

DEAR EDITOR COZY CORNER:—I see many pretty pictures of boys and girls advertising cigars, tobacco and cigarettes. I dislike very much to see pictures of innocent children nicely dressed and with pretty, plump faces, advertising cigars, when 'twould seem more appropriate to have a picture of a man with a disfigured face, tattered clothes and smoke ascending through a battered old hat. Pictures of nice looking young ladies are also put on boxes of cigarettes. Cannot you write up a petition for the children and young people to sign, protesting against the use of faces of children and young ladies, these petitions to be signed and sent to the legislators, asking for a law prohibiting the use of such pictures?

MRS. M——.

What do you think of this, boys and girls? Would you all sign such a petition? But wouldn't you like to say something in it against the manufacture and sale of the bad cigarette?

I have other interesting letter this week. Edward P Smith, of Excelsior, Wis., encloses some good clippings which show he is an observing reader. One of these is the following on whisky:

Hold a mouthful of spirits—whisky, for instance—in your mouth for five minutes, and you will find it burn severely; inspect your mouth and you will find it inflamed. Hold it for ten or fifteen minutes and you will find the various parts of the interior of your mouth have become blistered. Then tie a handkerchief over the eyes and taste, for instance, water, vinegar, milk or senna, and you will find you cannot distinguish one from another. This experiment proves to a certainty that alcohol is not only a violent irritant, but also a narcotic. Can you believe that the still more tender and important internal organs of the body can be less injuriously affected than the mouth?

We'll take Dr. McCulloch's word for it and not burn or blister our mouths with the deadly stuff. Knowing these things we wonder how any one can think of swallowing the burning liquid in any form.

Frances Hart, of South Branch, Minn., is a little Cozy Cornerer who wants to know how many cousins are intending to fill a Temple wheel. She has sent for a wheel and is going to work for the Temple, she says.

Some of the Cozy Corner cousins have been carefully scanning the list of books to read. Mabel Dodge, Wilmot, S. D., asks where she can get "Little Women" and the price. Any book store will send it postpaid for $1.50, or it can be ordered through the W. T. P. A. Mabel also asks, "Have any of the boys and girls read 'Grandfather's Chair,' or 'The Story of Columbus'?"

Speaking of reading makes me think of the story of a very noticing little girl who takes great interest in everything she reads. The other evening she had carefully pored over the advertisement which generally appears on page 10 of THE UNION SIGNAL. When she knelt down to say her prayers she said, "Dear Lord, make me pure!" Then with an added thought, "Make me absolutely pure, like baking powder!"

Affectionately your

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

John B. Snow, New York.
Jean Howard, Miriam McConnell, Grace L. Hess, } Penn.
Edward P. Smith, Wisconsin.
Helen T. Plummer, Della Keim, } California.
Mabel J. Dodge, Inez Aldrich, Benedicta M. Lewis, } S. Dakota.
Mary E. Woolsey, N. Dakota.
Lulie Rae Bryant, Maine.
Della Norgress, Louisiana.
Gladys A. Derr, Cleveland Miller, } Illinois.
Lelia Minon, Mildred Miller, } Michigan.
Lela Montgomery, Ohio.
Angie Quick, Nebraska.
Nina Burt, West Virginia.
Bethel W. Robinson, Frances I. Hart, } Minnesota.
Homer Henley, Indiana.
Ruth T. Elliot, Massachusetts.

May I be your niece and step into your Cozy Corner? I am a girl ten years old. I have no brothers nor sisters. Papa is a Prohibitionist and mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL. There are no saloons in our town. Please will some of the cousins write to me? Yours truly,

BESSIE LA FEVRE.

Piru City, Cal.

Here's another happy place in which to live. May their number grow more plentiful every year.

---

On our birthdays papa gave us each a new half dollar. We want to send it to help pay for the beautiful Temple, and we will keep the beautiful souvenir. Mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I read the Cozy Corner letters every week. We want to be your nieces.

BERTHA AND ETHEL SMALLEY.

Remington, Jasper county, Ind.

Such generous nieces will be a valuable help in our Cozy Corner, and so we bid them a warm welcome.

---

My mamma is a worker for the W. C. T. U. and takes THE UNION SIGNAL. My papa is teaching me to write on the typewriter.

MAUDE WEAVER.

Bloomington, Ill.

Your typewriting is very good, little niece.

THE UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD, LL.D.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President. MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, London, Eng.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Chicago.
MME. LOUISE DEMOREST, New York City.
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MRS. E. B. INGALLS, St. Louis, Mo.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK ..... 1
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, My Desire. By O. E. W ..... 2
The Yellow Passport. By Voltairine de Cleyre ..... 2
The Woman Movement in Germany. By Frances E. Willard ..... 2
The Fraternity of Reforms. IV. By Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts ..... 3
The Position of Woman in the Twentieth Century. By Lady Henry Somerset ..... 3
Industrial Training as a Moral Factor. By Carrie E. King ..... 3
CORRESPONDENCE:
Dakota's Re-submission Bill ..... 4
Convocation of National W. C. T. U. at Washington ..... 4
The Coming Convocation ..... 4
"Tekel" ..... 4
LOCAL UNION ..... 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS ..... 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, Showers and Sunshine. By Dorothea Davis ..... 6
White-Ribbon Heroism. By Sophie F. Grubb ..... 6
Feast Days at Home and in the Kindergarten. By Fanny C. Pardee ..... 6
Guard the Little Boys. By Helen L. Manning ..... 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Did He Understand? By Mrs. G. R. Alden ..... 7
Soft-Shelled Nuts ..... 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER ..... 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
The Immigration Problem ..... 8
The Failure of Prohibition ..... 8
A Remarkable Symposium ..... 8
Official Announcement ..... 9
THE WATCH TOWER ..... 9
WORLD'S W. C. T. U.:
World's W. C. T. U. Directory—Mexico—Bulgaria—World's Wave Crests ..... 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Ohio—West Virginia—News in a Nutshell ..... 11
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Official Correspondence—Narcotics ..... 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES ..... 12
TREASURER'S CORNER ..... 12
The Polyglot Petition ..... 13
ORGANIZERS' CORNER ..... 13
OBITUARIES ..... 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE ..... 14
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT ..... 15
SIGNAL NOTES ..... 16

Is there no balm in Gilead? is there no physician there? why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered? —Jer. 8:22.

THE IMMIGRATION PROBLEM.

Among the vital questions which in these latter days are pressing upon the attention of the American people, that of immigration may be regarded as one of the first magnitude. The marked change in the quality of the alien population which has come to us in the past few years, brings us face to face with dangers which this nation is all unprepared to meet—dangers which seriously menace the stability of the Republic itself.

Statistics show that the percentage of the "undesirable classes" is increasing to an alarming degree. Previous to the year 1890 the bulk of immigration was from Great Britain, Germany and Scandinavia—peoples closely related to and therefore easy of assimilation with Americans. Since that time it has chiefly been from Austria-Hungary, Russia, Poland and Italy. When it is known that during the year ending May 31, 1894, the number of immigrants averaged 850 per day, it may be readily seen how our present immigration policy imperils the safety of our national standards, and may in a short time change the entire character of our national organism.

When it is known also that persons of foreign birth and parentage, constituting a little over one-third of our population, furnish more than one-half of our criminals, two-thirds of our paupers and two-thirds of the inmates of our reformatories, the necessity for prompt action on the part of this government is seen to be imperative.

The chief cause for alarm is to be found in the illiteracy of our foreign-born element. In every hundred foreigners over sixteen years of age, the proportion of illiterates is, according to recent statistical information, as follows: England, ten; Ireland, eight; Wales, six; Scandinavia and Denmark, less than one; Germany, two; Russia, twenty; Hungary, twenty-eight; Poland, fifty-six; Italy, sixty-six. These figures, together with the fact that four-fifths of all our criminals come from the uneducated classes, are highly suggestive and serve to indicate one of the lines along which reform must come.

The immigration problem is one which belongs to the realm, not of politics but of patriotism. Nay, like all questions involving the relations of man to man, it belongs to the broader realm of humanitarianism. There are two standpoints from which to view this subject: First, that of competition, or the law of self-preservation; second, that of coöperation or the standard of the Golden Rule. Popular arguments for restriction are, it is to be observed, mostly based upon the former and it is from that point of view that we are now considering the subject. Its discussion from the higher and more Christian standpoint we must defer to another occasion, only remarking here that to our mind the application of the Golden Rule to this problem points, as does the application of the more primitive law of self-preservation to the adoption, under existing conditions, of more drastic measures for the restriction of immigration.

An evil thing always becomes worse by being "regulated." Immigration is one of the many good things—things sound in principle—which become better by being regulated.

Political parties, old and new, agree upon this point, that our present laws are entirely inadequate to stem the tide of dangerous immigration which is pouring in upon us with steadily increasing volume, and in order to secure further legislation in this matter an organization known as the Immigration Restriction League has been formed, in whose membership are to be found men of all political creeds from all over the country. It is working to "arouse public opinion to the necessity of a further exclusion of elements undesirable for citizenship or injurious to our national character." Any information upon this question at the disposal of the League will be gladly sent to those interested if they will send their names to the secretary, Mr. Charles Warren, 428 Exchange Building, Boston.

We would emphasize the fact that of all the political parties the Prohibition party is, by reason of the two planks in its platform which are distinctively its own, best equipped to carry out a reform in this direction. No one can doubt that national prohibition of the liquor traffic would serve as an effectual check upon the depraved and vicious classes of the would-be American immigrants. Those of us who have had any experience with local Prohibition can testify to the advantages of that policy as a restrictive method. Woman suffrage, too, is a measure which would add immensely to the efficiency of this government in dealing with those foreigners not excluded by its laws. Prohibition and woman's ballot, though by no means the only remedies, are among the reform methods which the law of self-preservation, no less than the Golden Rule, would suggest as effective in dealing with the momentous question of immigration.

"THE FAILURE OF PROHIBITION."

It cannot be claimed that the question, "Does prohibition prohibit?" is refreshingly new; yet, so long as liquor papers continue to discuss it, temperance papers must perforce do the same. The latest, though not specially recent investigation (?) of the effects of prohibition is a tour made by a representative of the Boston Herald through the state of Maine. His report is of perennial interest and never grows old because, in substance, it is being constantly reiterated by the press of the country. The result of his investigations is published in the above paper with glaring head-lines which inform the reader that Portland has "about four hundred rum-shops," Lewiston "from four to five hundred liquor sellers," etc.

It is never safe to confine our reading of newspapers to the head-lines. If we do, we shall surely get a very extreme view of the condition of all mundane affairs in general, special movements in particular. The present instance is no exception. The reader to whom the "four hundred rum-shops" of Portland have presented themselves in the various characters with which he is familiar, from the magnificent, palatial institution which lays its snare for the rich, down through the various grades which end in the vilest den known to our cities, experiences a feeling of sudden collapse when he learns that the reporter was obliged to "inquire their whereabouts" in order to find the "four hundred rum-shops" of Portland and actually "doubted his ability to get into them, if alone" and accomplished the feat by first procuring "an introduction to a young man who has the reputation of knowing his way about." Would that it were thus with Chicago saloons!

A similar condition of things is described in other cities in the state of prohibitory law. In Lewiston, for example, "the hotel bars are in retired spots, behind locked doors, and no liquors are kept in them, the person officiating as barkeeper bringing bottles of the stuff called for from some other room." In Augusta they have a still more original and unique plan. "A man goes about with a bottle and a glass in his pockets" and when he finds a customer, the two retire to some secluded spot away from the observation of persons who are given to interfering with other people's business, and—a practical illustration is given of the failure of prohibition to prohibit. This plan is certainly ingenious, but to our mind it has its difficulties. It would seem that great care must be exercised on the part of the vender lest he chance to offer his wares to some "temperance fanatic," with unpleasant consequences.

This account of the Boston Herald's reporter agrees substantially with that of many other people who both officially and unofficially have examined into the workings of prohibitory laws in Maine and elsewhere. The important truth which these facts demonstrate is that under the Maine law the saloon has become a mere supplier of a demand, and a most insistent demand at that. When we can drive the saloon to the position it occupies in Portland, every temperance worker knows that the end is in sight. The worst feature of the saloon, as ordinarily conducted, is that its chief business is the fiendish one of drunkard-making. The gilded palace, with its light, and music and social enjoyments, allures homeless clerks from the country and the pleasure-loving sons of the wealthy inhabitants of the city; lower haunts with light, warmth and a "free lunch" entice the half paid and poorly clothed working man. Could these places be driven into obscure "back rooms," whose whereabouts strangers could discover only with the difficulty with which the Boston Herald reporter found the saloons of Portland, the battle would be more than half won. We might safely leave "moral suasion" and temperance instruction to do the rest.

It is now pertinent to suggest that some enterprising paper investigate and report to the interested public to what extent "prohibition prohibits" murder, highway robbery, etc. The suggestion is enough to make manifest its absurdity. Every one knows that all of these crimes continue in the face of absolute legal prohibition. These crimes, too, have the advantage of the one of liquor selling in that, as a rule, the authorities have an honest purpose to execute the laws against them. Stealing alone may be said to be a partial exception, as it has been shown repeatedly in our great cities that frequently the municipal authorities are interested only in putting down the lesser stealings in which they do not themselves participate; and yet the very persons who raise such an outcry against the prohibition of the liquor traffic, because "prohibition does not prohibit," never hint that even in "the large cities," where prohibition of stealing so frequently fails most wofully to prohibit, licenses should be issued to allow people to steal under specified conditions.

The Zion's Herald, with commendable zeal, has written to fifty-two reputable citizens of Maine for refutation or confirmation of the Herald's charges. While many of the replies admit that liquor is sold in some places in violation of the law, they declare that the people of Maine have not lost faith in prohibition, nor do they intend to have it repealed.

"Does prohibition prohibit?" Let this most inane question be forever relegated to the debating societies in idiot asylums! Of course it does not. When the legal prohibition of any crime actually prohibits that crime, it will be time to "order our ascension robes," for the millennium is upon us. But prohibitory law restricts crime and nothing else does. The extent to which it restricts it depends upon several things, chief among which are the character of the law itself, for there are prohibitory laws and prohibitory laws, and public sentiment. But, other things being equal, prohibition is the best restrictive measure yet tried. In a community, if such exists, where prohibition of any crime is utterly null and void, any other law against such crime will be equally null and void; in any community where any restriction of crime, be it liquor selling or what not, is possible, absolute prohibition will restrict more effectually than any system of license.

A REMARKABLE SYMPOSIUM.

The Woman's Journal of January 26 contains a remarkably interesting symposium entitled, "Why Southern Women Desire the Ballot." Almost the entire paper is given up to this question, and yet many contributions to the symposium are left over for another issue. Of the thirty-seven contributors twelve are prominent leaders in the W. C. T. U., and it is probable that many more are members of our organization. It is plain to be seen that the cause of equal suffrage has greatly advanced, when from the most conservative parts of our country come such terse, logical reasons as these:

"Equally with men, women are parts of a whole, and suffer and enjoy the results of all good or bad conditions, whether in family, home, society or government. They should have an equal share in all that pertains to the regulation of the same."—(Mrs. F. C. Swift, Georgia.)

"Women should have the ballot because, amenable to law, they should have a voice in framing the code under which they live; because the ballot means so much of power and influence as to cause a shameful disparity in wages for equal work by men and women."—(Miss M. L. Montgomery, Mississippi.)

"I have a pleasant home, the best husband in the world, two dear children, a charming circle of friends—and I could be very happy idling my life away after the pleasant duties nearest me were done. But, alas! my conscience gives me no peace. Every time my darling boy, a lad of sixteen, goes down the street to his father's office, he passes the saloons and the closing of our door brings the message to my brain, 'Drive that evil from your streets!' I have a little girl now ten years old. To me she is only a baby, but Alabama's law says she has a woman's judgment and that any man may ruin her who will. So I am in the fight, with the sword of the Lord and of Gideon, now and forever."—(Mrs. E. S. Hildreth, Alabama.)

"A very strong reason why women should be enfranchised in South Carolina is to get the best men of the state to vote. Things have come to such a pass that some of our purest, noblest men altogether decline to go to the polls. They say it is a waste of time to go under the present order, but when the seventy-six thousand women of the state, who are educationally qualified, are allowed to go to the polls, they will go with them."—(Mrs. Virginia D. Young, South Carolina.)

"Women can distinguish between virtue and vice and they possess moral courage—an admirable quality belonging only to intelligent human beings. Why should they not exercise their gifts for the public benefit?" —(Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick, Louisiana.)

"I believe women should have the ballot, because politics is the science of government, the foundation of the home, the basic rock of the social system, and the keystone of the structure upon which rests the happiness or unhappiness of the whole people."—(Mrs. Fanny L. Chum, Arkansas.)

"Women are needed in politics. Brewers antagonize them and Prohibitionists stand by them. What does that mean?"—(Mrs. Clara A. McDiarmid, Arkansas.)

"Women need the ballot, because self-protection is the first law of nature, and the ballot is the only weapon that can protect women's mental, moral and material estate." —(Mrs. Josephine K. Henry, Kentucky.)

"Women should have the ballot for every reason that can be assigned for giving it to men."—(Mrs. Lavinia S. Mount, Mississippi.)

"Woman should have the ballot because it is the only badge of equality, influence, honor and power within the gift of a Republic."—(Mrs. Lide Meriwether, Tennessee.)

"Citizenship is a natural right. It is the gift of God, and should not be man-bestowable. Human claims will never be vindicated, civilization will never be perfected, philanthropy will never be triumphant, until woman enters into her full heritage." —(Miss Belle Kearney, Mississippi.)

"It matters not whether women desire to be emancipated or not; that has nothing to do with the justice of the question. When a convict's term has expired, the law does not consult him as to his preference of liberty or imprisonment; he is set free." —(Helen Morris Lewis, North Carolina.)

"Because the world needs woman's vote." —(Martha Young, Alabama.)

"I want the ballot because I respect myself."—(Clara C. Hoffman, Missouri.)

---

MRS. J. K. BARNEY, of Rhode Island, is having remarkable success in her meetings in Great Britain. Large numbers of women of what are called the "upper classes" have become enlisted and have grouped themselves for work. The line of prison reform is less out of their line than some of the more radical methods advocated by other leaders, but it is not for this reason alone that our eloquent sister has had so wide a hearing in the mother country; it is for the reason, as everybody knows, that she is a remarkable speaker with a most happy art of putting things, and a pleasant mixture of humor and pathos, and she draws upon her various experiences with great skill and wisdom. Few white-ribboners have ever won to themselves and to the cause so large a circle of the truest and best, and Mrs. Barney has done this because the Spirit of the highest is upon her and she is mellow-hearted toward each and all.

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The General Officers have been forced to send the following through the medium of the Associated Press:

The National W. C. T. U. has the unwelcome duty to announce that Mrs. Joseph Bellah, in the past supposed to be a worthy member of our society, has proved untrustworthy in financial matters, and all should be careful in their dealings with her.

FRANCES E. WILLARD,
KATHARINE L. STEVENSON.

---

WHEN John Burns had a hundred thousand men under his orders during the strike, he counseled them to organize trades unions, establish food depots, and preach patience; and when the deadlock went on week after week until about half a million persons were without work, he still held them in check, until the best thought of England was aroused, and the penny that the men had struck for was more than realized; for the nation saw that if labor were organized as a voting power it would be simply irresistible, and the leaders of opinion became ready to use the weapon of conciliation—that keen weapon whose tempered edge is far finer than the edge of the sword. Among the many achievements of John Burns we may enumerate the shortening of the working day of men, raising of wages, improving the sanitary ordinances, improving the sewage works, building workmen's dwellings, municipal lodging-houses, extending the park system, providing outdoor amusement for the poor, carrying the eight-hour law to a successful issue and establishing to a great degree, the principle of a "living wage," that is, the principle that the man who works shall receive sufficient compensation to maintain himself and family in a home worthy of the present civilization. One of the strong points of John Burns is that he has never sought the companionship of the great, but keeps himself in the company of those for whom he works. He lives in the simplest way; his wife does the work of the home. They have no children. The workingmen in his neighborhood have clubbed together and they pay him the same amount that he would receive if he had gone on as a workman. This is very moderate, and it is absolutely necessary for him to be thus taken care of, because, as is well known, no salaries are paid to members of the House of Commons.

---

IN response to many questions we would thus define our understanding of the term "socialist": A socialist is distinguished from an anarchist as a reputable person who believes in law and order, in peace and arbitration, in agitation, education and the ballot-box as the proper channels through which to express the people's discontent and to embody the people's progress. So much confusion exists in the public mind at present concerning the word socialist, that it might be well to use instead the term "collectivist"; that is, a socialist or a collectivist is one who through the methods just indicated would like to see municipalized instead of corporationized the railways, telegraph and telephone lines, electric light, waterworks, and little by little, as the people might determine, other departments that relate to the collective interests of the people. We understand that the definition of Nationalism is the same as the one we have given, only that it carries out the idea to the limits of a nation instead of the limits of a municipality. The Prohibition party occupies substantially the ground we have here indicated, and when one of our leaders recently avowed herself a socialist, she meant what we have stated. People in general are much more frightened by terms than they are by principles. Hence, it is well to guard the nomenclature, especially while the public is so mixed in its mind concerning these great issues.

---

AS FAIR a volume in fashion as has reached Headquarters this year, and as inspiring for contents, is one entitled "Two Decades." Its dress is white and gold; it is "A history of the first twenty years' work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the state of New York." Its authors, or compilers, are Mrs. Frances W. Graham, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Georgiana M. Gardenier, recording secretary of the state. It takes heroes to lay the foundations for stories of heroism, hence it is fitting that "Two Decades" should contain sketches of those heroic souls who "For God and Home and Native Land" enlisted in the bloodless war. First among these soldiers of the white-ribbon army is named Mrs. Esther McNeil, who in 1832 was identified with the Washingtonian movement, and in 1873 at the ripe age of sixty-one entered the list of Crusaders and joined the W. C. T. U. In the two decades there have been three state presidents, Mrs. Allen Butler, Mrs. Maria Hyde Hubbard and Mrs. Mary T. Burt. The latter has held the presidential chair for twelve years. The departmental work of the union is discussed in brief chapters, prominent among these being the one upon "Legislation and Petition," the results of various appeals, protests, enactments and petitions being given. It would give a beneficial stimulus to W. C. T. U. activities if every state union could place in its workers' hands a record such as this, of which New York may well be proud.

Mrs. Judge Thompson, of Hillsboro, Ohio, in one of her quaint letters written at the beginning of the new year to one of our leaders, says, "I tune my Crusade harp of one string afresh and say, 'While I live I will praise the Lord.'"

***

Many of the brightest innovations come from the Pacific coast. The latest I have heard of emanates from Los Angeles, and is a Sunday kindergarten attached to Simpson M. E. tabernacle. The children are brought to the church in the morning and left in a cozy room to the care of three graduated kindergartners and a trained nurse, while the parents attend services above. The idea was suggested to the pastor and his wife, Dr. and Mrs. C. C. McLean, by the creche in the children's building at the World's Fair. As thousands of mothers were enabled to see the Fair because of the helpful ministrations of the creche, so it is hoped that hundreds of mothers may attend divine services through this beautiful church kindergarten.

***

"A respect for the highest principles of temperance in regard to liquors is more deep-rooted in the editorial offices of the leading American magazines than many people know or might believe." Such were the encouraging words that met my eyes not long ago while reading an exchange. The article proceeds to give the experience of a noted author, who however, remains nameless, in submitting a manuscript to some of the best magazines. This author did not, it seems, "in any sense advocate drinking" but had given in narrative form a history of wines and the custom of drinking. The manuscript was only successful in its repeated returns to the author and now reposes in his desk "crowned with the distinction as being the only one he has ever had declined." There are many hopeful signs of victory for the final triumph of the total abstinence sentiment. The general literature of the day is much purer than it was a few years ago, wine and cigars seldom accompanying the social scenes depicted. It has been said that Satan makes the most elaborate flourishes of his weapons when he is nearest defeat. If that is true, taking into common consideration the victories we can see and the ostentatious thrusts of the liquor flag in our faces, hope may well grow more assured every day.

***

On Duty occasionally has tossed to her by the editors, a choice bit of a left-over or an incident that does not fit into the more formal departments of the paper. Here is one which was crowded out of the Daily Union Signal, and, though promised in the Convention number, was actually forgotten at the last moment! (That's a family secret, so don't tell the editors.) You know some of the most unexpected and delightful "happenings" at our great conventions often come right into the important business sessions. Well, this one walked in during the election of officers, and consisted of two little wooden gavels carried by Mrs. Light, of Monroe county, N. Y., who gave one to Miss Willard and the other to Lady Henry Somerset. The latter not being present, the former had to speak for both (which was no great hardship) as follows:

"You don't know about it, but this is one of the very loveliest things that ever happened to me. These two gavels are presented from the women of Churchville, my native village, near Rochester, N. Y., and the W. C. T. U. of Monroe county, and they are made out of a piece of wood from the little plain house in which my mother passed that sacred ordeal that gave me birth. I have always loved it, loved to go back to the little place, and now as I stand here with this gavel for the lady who has a castle of her own, and yet who will love the gavel that came from the little cot, and another gavel for me to pound with here, you don't know how it touches me to think what a circle we have rounded and got back to that little house. Ah, mothers, you are the necromancers, you are the workers of spells, and no child welcomed in the home ever feels so near as when something happens that brings back mother! You are a wonderful people gathered up as God's witnesses to the home in a day when the home has so many organized enemies, and it is because I did care for home, and mother taught me to, that I was attracted to you and you to me, because your mothers taught you to love the home above all else. God help us to deliver the home in America from every single foe that is leagued against it."

Now, wasn't that a pretty speech to hand to

ON DUTY?

World's W. C. T. U.

MOTTO: "For God and Home and Every Land."
OBJECT: To unify the methods of woman's temperance work the world over.
BADGE: A knot of white ribbon.
HOUR OF PRAYER: Noon.
METHODS: Agitate, educate, organize.
DEPARTMENTS: Preventive, educational, evangelistic, social and legal.
THE POLYGLOT PETITION has been circulated throughout the world and signed by representatives of over forty countries. It asks for the outlawing of the alcohol and opium trade and the system of legalized vice. The chief auxiliaries of the W. W. C. T. U. are the United States, Canada, Great Britain, Australia, South Africa, India, Japan and the Sandwich Islands.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. DIRECTORY.

Honorary President—Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, care of Kidder, Peabody & Co., Boston, Mass.
President—Miss Frances E. Willard, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large—Lady Henry Somerset, 25 Memorial Hall, Farringdon St., London, E. C., England.
Secretary—Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, 1115, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Assistant Secretary—Miss Anna A. Gordon, Evanston, Illinois, U. S. A.
Treasurer—Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, 55 Drummond St., Montreal, Can

AUXILIARIES.

| Date of Organizat'n. | PRESIDENTS. |
|---|---|
| 1874 | United States—Miss Frances E. Willard. |
| 1876 | Great Britain—Lady Henry Somerset. |
| 1882 | New South Wales—Mrs. Sara S. Nolan, Wesleyan Parsonage, 182 Forbes St., Sydney. |
| 1883 | Canada—Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, 55 Drummond St., Montreal. |
| 1884 | Hawaiian Is.—Mrs. Mary S. Whitney, Honolulu. |
| 1885 | New Zealand—Mrs. A. J. Schnackenberg, Auckland. |
| " | Queensland—Mrs. Elizabeth Brentnall, Coorparoo, Brisbane. |
| " | Victoria—Mrs. —— Press, Williamstown. |
| " | South Australia—Mrs. E. W. Nichols, Prospect, Adelaide. |
| " | Tasmania—Mrs. Blair, Launceston. |
| 1886 | Bulgaria—Mrs. Eleuka Nicoloff, Philippopolis. |
| " | Japan—Mrs. Kaji Yajima, Tokio. |
| " | China—Mrs. M. J. Farnham, 12 Rauge Ave., Shanghai. |
| 1887 | Siam— |
| " | Straits Settlements—Mrs. Rev. C. C. Kelso, Anglo-Chinese School, Singapore. |
| " | Burma—Mrs. Julius Smith, 33 Fraser St., Rangoon. |
| " | India—Mrs. Mary R. Phillips, 136 Dharmtolla St., Calcutta. Nat. Lecturer, Pundita Ramabai, Poona. |
| " | Cape Colony—Miss Theresa E. Campbell, Wellington. |
| 1888 | Madagascar—Mrs. Deborah H. Sibree, L. M. S. College, North, Antananarivo. |
| " | France—Miss de Broen, 205 Rue St. Honore, Paris. |
| " | Denmark—Mrs. Elisabet Selmer, Vesterbrogade 95 V, Copenhagen. |
| 1889 | Chile—Mrs. Esther L. Campbell, Colejio Americano, Concepcion. |
| " | Natal—Mrs. Fernie, Sydenham. |
| " | Orange Free State— |
| " | Sierra Leone—Miss Dr. Harris, Free Town. |
| " | Asia Minor—Mrs. J. E. Pierce, Bardezag. |
| 1890 | Corea—Mrs. B. S. Ohlinger, Seoul. |
| " | Bahamas—Mrs. Annie W. Dillet, P. O. Box 176, Nassau, New Providence. |
| " | Newfoundland—Mrs. J. E. P. Peters, St. John's. |
| 1891 | Egypt—Miss A. G. Thompson, American Mission, Cairo. |
| " | Madeira Islands—Mrs. Smart, Funchal, Madeira. |
| " | Spain—Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, San Sebastian. |
| " | Italy—Mrs. Menricoffre, Naples. |
| " | Greece—Mrs. Rev. Kalopothakes, Athens. |
| " | South African Republic—Mrs. Mary F. Gray, Pretoria. |
| " | Australasia—Mrs. E. W. Nichols, Prospect, Adelaide, South Australia. |
| 1892 | Argentina—Miss Mary L. Swaney, 949 Calle Commercio, Rosario. |
| " | Uruguay—Mrs. Marinda Greenman, 242 Calle Facuaramba, Montevideo. |
| " | Brazil—Miss M. H. Watts, Piracicaba, S. Paulo. |
| " | Norway—Ida, Countess Wedel-Jarlsberg, Christiania. |
| " | Jamaica—Miss Constantia Maddix, 17 Laws St., Kingston. |
| " | West Australia—Mrs. Justice Hensman, "Bishops House," Perth. |
| 1893 | Iceland— |
| " | The Netherlands—Mme. M. W. de Ranitz, Groningen. |
| 1894 | Austria—Baroness Laugenau, 1 Dorothea Gasse 12 Vienna. |
| " | Mexico—Mrs. B. B. Blachly, Hermosillo, Sonora. |

SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPARTMENTS.

Bible Readings—Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, 44 Grosvenor Road, Westminster, London, S. W., England.
Press Reporter—Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm, The Temple, Chicago.
Scientific Temperance Instruction—Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, 23 Trull St., Boston, Massachusetts, U. S. A.
Sunday-school Work—Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball, 644 W. Monroe St., Chicago, U. S. A.; Associate—
Penal, Charitable, and Reformatory Work—Mrs. J. K. Barney, Providence, R. I., U. S. A.
Fairs and Expositions—Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, 519 N. Penn St., Indianapolis, Ind., U. S. A.
Peace and International Arbitration—Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, Winthrop Centre, Me., U. S. A.
Juvenile Work—Miss Anna A. Gordon, Evanston, Ill., U. S. A.
Young Women's Branch—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 146 W. 103 St., New York City., U. S. A.
Promotion Social Purity—Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, Winchester, England. Associates—Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell.
Work Among Sailors—Miss Agnes Weston, Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth, England.
Work Among Policemen—Miss Catherine Gurney, Christian Policemen's Association, Strand, London, W. C., England.
Savings Banks—Mrs. S. H. Oberholtzer, Norristown, Pa., U. S. A.
Parlor Meetings—Mrs. Bowden, The Friary, Derby, England.
Petitions and Treaties—Miss Gwenllian Morgan, Brecon, South Wales, Great Britain.
World's Archives—Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.
Evangelistic Work—Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood, 151 Remsen St., Brooklyn, N. Y., U. S. A.; Associate—Miss Mary E. Green, Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands.
Evangelist—Mrs. J. K. Barney, Providence, R. I., U. S. A.
Franchise—Mrs. Eva McLaren, 3a Poets' Corner, Westminster, London, Eng.
Anti-Opium—Miss Jessie Ackermann, The Temple, Chicago, U. S. A.
Proportionate and Systematic Giving—Mrs. Esther Tuttle Pritchard, Kokomo, Ind., U. S. A.
Round-the-World Missionaries—Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, care of Kidder, Peabody & Co., Boston, Mass., U. S. A.; Miss Jessie A. Ackermann, Care THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell, Sherman Ave. Evanston, Ill., U. S. A.; Miss Alice R. Palmer, Indianapolis, Ind.
Organizer for Scandinavia—Mrs. Elisabet Selmer, Vesterbrogade, 95 V Copenhagen, Denmark.
*Deceased.

MEXICO.

THE NEED FOR TEMPERANCE.

I have written several letters to the W. C. T. U. workers trying to tell them of the terrible condition of the country and the people of Mexico; the universal custom of drinking, also of the dreadful superstition, ignorance, poverty, vice and crime. But I have utterly failed to give the faintest idea of the truth.

The people do not know what the word temperance means in any of its phases. They deem it no disgrace to use strong drink and have no knowledge whatever of its evils. There are not only several saloons here in Hermosillo but there is not one grocery store but sells liquor. Mr. Blachly says it is the same in other parts of Mexico where he has traveled. The percentage of the people who can neither read nor write varies in different parts of Mexico, probably from thirty to seventy per cent, and even those who are considered educated read very little for the elevation of their minds. We fail to get knowledge of any temperance textbooks in Spanish. Now we cannot expect these poor, ignorant liquor-loving people will do anything to help overthrow King Alcohol who is found in the ball-room, in the marriage, at the gambling tables, on the dining tables (if they can get it) and in fact is everywhere we go. Consequently whatever is done in this line must be done by foreigners until the people become educated to it. The laying of railroads, the building of factories, machine shops, electric plants, flour mills and all modern improvements are begun by foreigners and are generally carried on and completed by them too. Our first watchword is "agitate."

There is ample opportunity for doing a vast amount of good by distribution of tracts and books, not only by the Protestant ministers among their townspeople, but also by the fifty-two Bible colporteurs (of American Bible Society) who travel through all parts of the republic. Rev. H. P. Hamilton, the general agent of Mexico, lives in the city of Mexico. Notwithstanding the discouraging features of Mexico I have no intention of giving up trying to do something as long as I remain here. And I beg of you all to cease not to pray for this benighted republic.

MRS. B. B. BLACHLY,
World's W. C. T. U. Vice-President for Mexico.
Hermosillo, Sonora, Mexico.

BULGARIA.

TEMPERANCE WORK IN BULGARIA.

Some time ago I gave my resignation as Bulgarian National president, and have waited for a new one to be elected so that I could inform you of the change. But none has been elected for the reason that all the W. C. T. U's have united with the men's societies. Only the Philippopolis W. C. T. U. is independent yet, and counts itself a member of the World's W. C. T. U. Its president is Mrs. Eftenutza Gedikova.

There are signs of improvement, however. We should not be discouraged, God has not overlooked us. Those that are not Christians, who have not the love of God in their hearts, of course do not care about the suffering of humanity apart from self. If our women of the higher class could be Christianized, much good could be done. The two temperance organs, Vuzderjatel and Vuzderjatel no Znamé, are doing a good work; also much good is being done by the public meetings.

In the year 1888 five hundred million okas (one oka is equal to three pounds) of liquor were produced in Bulgaria. At twenty centimes this will bring one hundred million francs. The Bulgarians spend more than one hundred million francs for drink and four million for education. In Philippopolis there are more than four hundred saloons; the inhabitants number thirty-three thousand. In 1893 there were twenty-four thousand saloons in Bulgaria; the inhabitants number three million.

Last year was commenced social purity work, but as this is new work in our country and the workers are inexperienced there has not been as much success as desired. We know that God does not look and judge as men do, and he will help those who trust in Him. There is not much prison work done, only one of our preachers goes to visit the prison. Women are not allowed to go in.

ELLENKA NIKOLOVA.
Philippopolis, Bulgaria.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

THE new Premier of Canada, Hon. Mackenzie Bowell, is a pronounced temperance man, and the prospects for temperance are better than ever before, despite the recent supreme court decision that colonial prohibitory law is unconstitutional.

THE Hawaiian W. C. T. U. has issued its tenth annual report of work accomplished in the great cause. The pamphlet includes an account of the tenth annual meeting, a résumé of the ten years' work of the union by Mrs. Mary S. Whitney, president, and Miss Mary E. Green gives an interesting account of her mission to the Hawaiians. The society still enrolls twenty-two of the original band, and is planning to send its temperance missionary to other islands in the group.

THE Queensland, Australia, ninth annual convention held in Maryborough last fall was full of interest and encouragement. Mrs. F. Emily Ham, press superintendent, in giving her complete summing up of the excellent year's work, notes the progress of the various departments and the increase in membership—eleven new W. C. T. Unions during the year. All this has been accomplished under the wise direction of Mrs. Brentnall, Colonial president, now serving for the eighth time.

THE India White Ribbon for December and the Indian Witness bring most encouraging accounts of the progress of the W. C. T. U. work in India. Two new unions may be particularly mentioned as they have been organized in leading up country stations, where a year ago no English union was possible, because a senior missionary in each station was not a total abstainer. Temperance societies among natives were established and now follow the "leaders." The little White Ribbon, begun less than two years ago with barely seven dollars in the treasury, has since been enlarged; one thousand copies are issued monthly, and beside subscribers, there are forty-seven shareholders at five dollars each. Additional shareholders are earnestly solicited, as when two hundred are secured it will be possible to issue monthly a supplement in the vernacular for free distribution among the women of India. Shares of five dollars each, or subscriptions at fifty cents annually, may be sent to Mrs. J. G. Hauser, 1115 The Temple, Chicago, who will forward the amounts to India free of charge.

THE Social Purity committee of Calcutta, composed of European and native gentlemen, have rented a room in a portion of the city where fallen women congregate, and turned it over to the Pastors' Association and the W. C. T. U. Regular meetings are to be held there in the evening for men and in the afternoon by Christian women for women. Thus are missionaries adding a new burden to already overweighted hands and hearts, and again is their earnest call of more than a year ago for a W. C. T. U. deaconess for Calcutta brought emphatically home.

ABOUT six years ago the ladies of the Methodist and Baptist churches in the city of Mexico organized a W. C. T. Union and held meetings for about six months. During that time a law was passed prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to children, and the union sent a vote of thanks to the promoters of the law. Temperance work among the children of the schools and churches is hopeful. Pastors preach against pulque as a beverage and other intoxicants. But all Christian and temperance work in Mexico is necessarily slow, and our workers, isolated and lonely, often become disheartened.

THE Honolulu, H. I., union has held a memorial service for our late National and World's secretary, the well-beloved Mary A. Woodbridge. The president read the twenty-third Psalm and selections from THE UNION SIGNAL of November 1. Two or three members who knew Mrs. Woodbridge gave reminiscences of her life and parentage. The most interesting of these was by Miss Green, city missionary and temperance worker among Hawaiians. Mrs. Woodbridge's cheery, friendly letters have always been a help and inspiration to this little union in the mid-Pacific, as well as to many others around the world who voice their grief that a loved guiding hand will no longer assist in the peaceful war.

THE first convention of the W. C. T. U. in India was held in Calcutta December 8 and 10. Interesting papers were read, but much time was necessarily occupied in arranging details of work in so new an organization. The Indian Witness says of it: "This is the first convention, and the day of small things, but we consider that as a means of uniting forces of good against evil, of showing each other what is being done and hoped for, as a means of cheer and inspiration to earnest workers, it has been a success, and from the day of small things we expect great and mighty things to spring, which shall be a power for righteousness in this land." A committee was appointed to draft a resolution in memoriam for Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, rejoicing "that one more white-souled saint has entered upon a service that knows no limitations, no perplexities, no weariness and no end."

THE W. C. T. U. of Charters Towers, Queensland, meets every week with an average attendance of forty members. The number on the roll is about two hundred. A very prosperous Y union and branch is at Queenton. About seven different branches of work are carried on, hospital visiting, house to house tract distributing, railway work, cabs and bus work, Sunday-schools, scientific temperance instruction, hygienic dress, etc., and the principal local paper has written to the press correspondent asking for papers and offering a column for the union's benefit which the secretary keeps well supplied with articles on the different branches. Very successful open-air evangelistic meetings are held every Saturday evening, and hundreds of pledges have been taken during the eighteen months the meetings have been held. The union and members take THE UNION SIGNAL.

MRS. HARRISON LEE, of Richmond, Victoria, writes that the financial depression in Australia, while it is severely felt in every rank of life has, in some ways been a blessing in disguise. The drink bill for the Colony of Victoria in 1891 was £6,700,000, and this year it has dropped to £3,700,000. Every Colony has experienced a like declination in the liquor traffic. Deputations have waited upon Parliament with various degrees of success in requesting an extension of suffrage to women. South Australia seems to be very near a victory. Mrs. Lee also writes that W. C. T. U. work all over the colony is very prosperous, new members being added daily, and says that the visit of Dr. Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew marked an era in white ribbon history throughout the colonies. As legislative superintendent for Victoria she wrote to all the friendly societies to plead for the removal of wine from their banquets, and cordial responses were received from all. Mr. E. Tennyson Smith has been conducting some missions in Victoria resulting in the signing of thousands of pledges. Mrs. Lee adds that THE UNION SIGNAL is a highly valued friend in many a home.

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N.Y.

News from the Field.

OHIO.

NEWS OF THE WORK AND WORKERS.

Since early December a shadow has been upon the home of our beloved state president. Her daughter, Henrietta, for years state recording secretary of our Ohio union, and the strong right hand of our president in her state work and in the home, has been very ill, and as January draws to a close, is not improved. The hearts of all our white-ribboners are in earnest prayer that she may be restored to health, if the dear Lord be willing, and that the beloved mother, father and brothers may be sustained by grace divine in this great trial.

Our dearly beloved Mother Stewart has also hovered on the border of the eternal world, but for a little time has seemed improved and on the way to recovery. On the 18th of January, however, her husband, Hiram Stewart, Esq., while at the home of his son in Brooksville, Florida, for his health, was called from earth to heaven. This shock has severely prostrated Mother Stewart again. We hope this may not be permanent in its effect, but we pray that she may be spared to the work, and that her eloquent voice may do service to the Master yet many years.

Ohio mourns with Michigan the loss of her gifted president and with Prohibitionists everywhere, that that eloquent, convincing voice that pleaded so unfalteringly and with such effect for our great principle, is forever hushed to mortal ear. Mary Lathrap, Mary Woodbridge, how can we give them up, when our cause needs them so much! Yet, sisters, we have the God of Jacob for our leader, and He has promised us victory. We sorrow not as those without hope.

At the Cleveland monthly preachers' union meeting in December, the executive committee reported that they could find no one to take the negative in a proposed discussion of the question, should women vote! All the preachers were in favor of women voting.

How can I prepare to use the new privilege of school suffrage? is a topic of great interest to Ohio women just now, as we all expect to vote next April, unless before that time our newly acquired law is pronounced unconstitutional.

Our ever wide-awake state superintendent of franchise, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, has recommended a course of home study of suffrage literature consisting of three books: "The Subjection of Women," by John Stuart Mill; for recitations, "The Yellow Ribbon Speaker"; for general reading, "Common Sense Applied to Woman Suffrage," by Mary Putnam Jacobi. The above books can be secured from Mrs. Southworth for one dollar. Try this plan.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, of California, has lingered in Ohio since the National Convention and has been diligent in good works. She has spoken in many German churches in Cleveland, and made many efforts to inaugurate our work among the German women. She hopes before leaving Ohio to organize at least one German W. C. T. U. She has also organized three unions among American women, two in Cuyahoga county and one in Lake county, at Willoughby. May God speed her efforts.

The Delaware Y's assisted by the Somerset Y's of the Ohio Wesleyan University, held a very successful meeting at the First Baptist church, Sunday evening, December 9. The large audience room was crowded to its utmost capacity, and chairs were placed in the aisles. The music was furnished by a quartette led by Professor Blakeslee, an honorary member. The roll was called and active and honorary members responded by repeating a text of Scripture. A symposium on Y work, a recitation and five minute talks on "The Relation of the Y to the City," "Relation of the Y to the Church," "Social Purity," "Loyal Legions," and "A Plea for the Y's" composed the program. The Y's gained courage and new members.

NEW CONTESTS.

Delaware union organized a class of contestants, giving them the choice of suffrage, scientific temperance or the Sabbath question as subject, and they could either write their own orations or recite those selected, as they were to be graded only on delivery. The audience was to be the judge and all were given tickets upon which they were to write the name of the one they thought best. Professor Mitchell, of Delaware National Pen Art Hall, gave the union, to offer as a premium to the successful contestant, a scholarship in penmanship and bookkeeping. The class was composed of pupils from the high school. It was a fine entertainment. After the contest "Crow Hill Lyceum," a dialogue from the "Yellow-ribbon Speaker," was given. Fifteen cents admission was charged, and after the expenses (twenty-five dollars) were paid, they had forty-four dollars for their W. C. T. U. library. The subject that won the prize was "America's Grand Old Man" (Neal Dow).

Mrs. M. A. Davis, of Delaware, suggests that unions hold scientific temperance contests, offering a premium of some excellent book for the best paper or oration on this subject or the effects of narcotics, to certain grades in the schools, have an entertainment where these orations shall be read, with good music, and award the prize. This will draw out a crowd where Demorest contests will not. She suggests that "Ways of Working," that have proved a success be sent your state reporter, that the suggestions thus gathered up may prove an inspiration to others to try the same or similar plans. Mrs. Davis is district superintendent of parlor meetings, and has offered a banneret to the union of her district that will hold the largest number of parlor meetings during the year and by them gain the greatest number of new members.

Parliamentary drills are quite the thing in Ohio unions. No conventions or schools of methods are held without this feature on the program, and many locals are having a week's series of drills.

Mrs. Lilian Cole Bethel, author of the popular "Compendium of Parliamentary Usages," recently gave a week's drill in East End W. C. T. U. Hall, Cleveland. All attending were highly pleased, as the lessons were interesting as well as instructive.

The eighth district annual meeting is said by one thoroughly acquainted with such meetings as held in all parts of our state, to have been the nearest approach to a state convention of any district meeting ever attended. It was held in the M. E. church, Coshocton, of which Dr. Pope has been pastor the past five years, and the doctor and his wife came all the way from their new home in Steubenville to attend it. Mrs. Pope was musical director, in which capacity she excels. The church was decorated with beautiful palms, ferns and blooming plants. The officers were all seated on the platform.

The corresponding secretary's report was excellent, the treasurer's report type-written and in fine shape. Parliamentary usages were closely observed. The women were intellectual, cultured and worthy representatives of our noble organization. The district president's address was broad in scope, instructive and suggestive. The state president gave the address of the first evening, which was spiritual, strong, impressive and listened to with marked attention. The National treasurer was to have given the address of the second evening but was prevented by a railroad wreck. Particulars of this meeting are somewhat minutely given as only three years ago there was no union in Coshocton and none in that county.

Franklin county held its annual meeting in North Columbus. The president, Mrs. L. T. Snyder, gave so fine an address that a rising vote of thanks was extended to her. An impressive memorial service was ably conducted, parliamentary drills were given, strong resolutions passed, especially in favor of qualifying for school suffrage and of making diligent investigation as to whether scientific temperance instruction is given in the schools as it should be. Mrs. R. J. Trego gave the evening's address. This county holds two conventions and two schools of methods annually.

Clinton county held a school of methods of much interest, conducted by Mrs. Anna W. Clark, of Columbus. Thoughtful papers were read on important departments of the work. It closed with a lecture on woman's enfranchisement and a symposium on "Why I Believe in Woman's Ballot."

ANTOINETTE H. CLEVENGER,
State Reporter, Wilmington.

WEST VIRGINIA

IN LINE.

West Virginia is plowing deep, at least it looks so as the news comes in from over the field.

Loyal Temperance Legions are growing, Y work is active, Demorest medal contests are becoming more and more popular. Fairmont will hold another the last of this month. Miss Ensign will spend some time in the state in the interests of the Y's.

How long will it take to get prohibition working on the youth?

Dr. Harriet B. Jones, Mrs. I. Warren and Mrs. M. M. Love, are now in Charleston in the interest of a bill to provide an industrial school for girls in our state. The bill is an assured success. Dr. Jones seldom misses her mark, and with her able support our useless girls will soon have an opportunity to become good citizens.

Dr. Jones has also been giving a course of lectures in Wheeling to ladies, giving the proceeds to the Wheeling union.

The Wheeling union, gathering inspiration I suppose from Crusade Day, made a raid on a saloon opened on Sunday. Bar-keeper much surprised. Ladies ask permission to sing. Bar-keeper said it would not do; raise a disturbance and bring to the notice of the people the violation of law. They were allowed to pray. All the men promised to attend the Sunday afternoon gospel temperance meeting. Maybe the spirit of the Crusade is not dead.

Grafton, our railroad center, is doing good work under Mrs. Love's leadership. They have established an infirmary where are taken the homeless sick and those overtaken in an accident—and nursed back to health. The rooms are also used to gather into them the street Arabs and teach them.

Fairmont union has a most gigantic plan on hand, nothing less than the building of a home for their very own, to contain W. C. T. U. parlor, a public library, gymnasium, etc.; cost nearly eight thousand dollars. Much of the stock has been subscribed, contract let and only waiting for good weather to commence work. This union is also running a lecture course. Dr. Anna Shaw was here in January, she to our people was a tremendous success. The cause of woman marches on every time the clear, logical Anna Shaw pierces the gloom.

President Mrs. Morrow, in her New Year's letter to the local union calls on everybody to bend every energy to the increasing of our membership. Nothing less than five hundred new members this year will do for West Virginia. If anybody can do this our own president can. To this end we want the best National organizer there is, who is she?

Miss C. S. Burnett has broken ground in our state; twelve new unions organized by her, schools visited, public meetings held, house to house visitations, indeed, few women could do more or better work than Miss Burnett. In many places she visited she had her own meetings to bill and her crowd to drum up and with but few exceptions she succeeded every time. She is a most thorough worker. We recommend Miss Burnett to any state as a woman loyal to the cause and tireless in her devotion to work. The state officers feel hopeful of the work in this state. Sentiment is growing. Places have good unions now where heretofore a woman could do nothing. We have the saloon still with us in places where desperate efforts were made to uproot it. These scattering items are only to let the world of white-ribboners know we are in line.

KATE EBERT,
State Cor. Sec.

IOWA.

INCREASING MEMBERSHIP.

Mindful of our promise to Miss Willard at state convention to try and bring up our membership to 2,500 before November 1, our white-ribboners diligently sought new recruits.

We succeeded beyond our expectations, and were able to report 2,600 at the appointed time.

Better still, the good work is going right along, and if every one does her duty, Iowa will have 4,000 adherents, good and true, to our blessed National organization by the time another November comes around.

Mrs. Anna M. Palmer, state and National evangelist, is kept constantly in the field. She has visited and strengthened many unions, as well as organized new ones. She has recently spent two weeks in Villisca, holding gospel temperance meetings with excellent results. This union, a new one, gained thirteen members through her efforts, and now has a membership of over eighty. Several of the members have made wall-pockets, and hung them up in offices and Y. M. C. A. rooms. They also have opened headquarters, where a newly organized L. T. L. meets every week.

Mrs. S. E. Howe is having good success wherever she goes. She has organized unions at Fairfax, Montone, Ivoryville and Spaulding; has visited Bedford union, gained ten new members for them, and twenty dollars of them for state treasury, and done much other good work.

Col. C. J. Holt is now at work in the state a blessing to drinking men and a terror to their tempters. He added eighteen new members to the Dows union, caused the closing of the dives and cleared money enough for all expenses. He is to be at Burlington soon.

Colonel Holt spent eight days at Belmond, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. About three hundred signed the pledge. It was rather startling to find some professed temperance men who refused to sign a pledge never to vote for a saloon in Wright county. Those wishing to know more of Colonel Holt's work, or to secure his services, can address Mrs. M. J. O. Whiting, Belmond, Iowa.

Mrs. D. E. Voris and Mrs. L. A. Burkhalter went to Vinton and organized a union with twelve members, with Mrs. J. Watson for president and Mrs. Mat Goasch for secretary.

New unions have also been organized at Kellerdon, Stanley and Little Sioux. The last named has already taken up L. T. L.

THE SECRET OF BEAUTY of the complexion, hands, and hair, in thousands of instances, is found in the perfect action of the PORES produced by CUTICURA SOAP.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

Learn TO PLAY THE Organ

"Richardson's New Method."

Just published. The new edition. Revised, enlarged, embodying the latest ideas in teaching. New Amusements, New Annotations. Dr. Mason's famous system of touch and technics. 500,000 of the old edition sold. Price, American or Foreign Fingering, $3.

"MASON AND HOADLEY'S SYSTEM FOR BEGINNERS."

American or Foreign Fingering, $3.

"New England Conservatory Method."

The official book of piano instruction in this famous school. Three parts, each, $1.50; complete, $3. American or Foreign Fingering.

"Mason's Pianoforte Technics."

By Wm. Mason and W. S. B. Matthews. $2.50.

"PETER'S ECLECTIC PIANO INSTRUCTOR."

Over 300,000 of this standard work sold. $3.

"Bellaks' Analytical Method."

Paper, 75 cents; Boards, $1.

"Winner's Eureka Method."

Price, 75 cents.

Any book postpaid on receipt of price. Send for catalogues and bulletins of new and standard piano music.

LYON & HEALY,
Chicago, Ill.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, BOSTON.

Give Silver.

For Christmas presents there is nothing more suitable. Articles in silver plate are especially adapted for gifts, as the quality is so well known. In design and finish, this celebrated plate equals the best solid silver. And it wears.

Meriden Britannia Co's

On spoons, forks, etc., our trade mark is "1847 Rogers Bros."

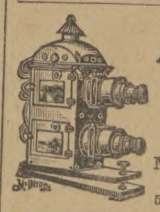
If you cannot procure these goods of your dealer, write us and we will give necessary information.

Meriden Britannia Co., Meriden, Conn.
New York, Chicago, San Francisco.

AMERICAN DESK CO.

4 FOOT DESK, $16
4½ " " 18
5 " " 20

18-20 E. Van Buren St., Athenæum Bldg., CHICAGO.



Make Money

quickly by illustrating your lectures with a STEREOPTICON.

Long list of Slides on TEMPERANCE and kindred subjects

McINTOSH BATTERY and OPTICAL COMP'Y,
521 to 531 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO

FINE BLOODED Cattle, Sheep, Hogs, Poultry, Sporting Dogs. Send stamps for catalog's 150 engravings. N. P. BOYER & CO., Coatesville, Pa.

work and opened a reading-room, and is urging Mrs. Dunham to come to Harrison county and organize unions in other places.

Our state president writes that there is scarcely a letter that comes to her that does not cause her to say, "Praise the Lord!"

One bright feature is the interest manifested in our do-everything policy by the appeals and reports of state superintendents of departments in the Iowa Signal.

The wide-awake Rock Valley union has the good-will of the people of that favored place. They have rented two rooms, one for reading and one for games; no card games are allowed. The public library of over two hundred volumes has been loaned to them and books, papers and magazines have been donated. The citizens, the Y's and L. T. L's have generously aided this beneficent enterprise. This union gave a delightful public reception in their rooms on New Year's eve. My informant, Mrs. C. W. Carter, closes her report with these cheering words: "Everything looks bright to us now."

Our state superintendent of L. T. L. work, and ye editors of the Iowa Signal, Miss Anna Brown and Miss Bertie Bowers, in a spirit of devotion to our cause, have decided to make a tour of the state in the spring, beginning probably in March, and will visit unions for two or three days, giving six lectures at each point. As their terms are very easy, simply collection and expenses, it is to be hoped that many doors may be opened to them.

Mrs. Marion B. Baxter is also planning to give us a few weeks' time if arrangements can be made.

Colorado has recently yielded to us two of her choice workers. Mrs. Catharine E. Beach, founder of the Cottage Home for unfortunate girls in Denver, and Mrs. Ella S. Stoddard, who is president of the enterprising Villisca union.

Now the "good" has been reported, but no good can be said of the mulct saloon which "squats like a venomous toad" within our borders. Once free Iowa now begins to taste the bitterness which this curse brings. Thugs, burglars, gamblers, evil women are holding high carnival in some parts of the state, and yet the Christian voter, whose ballot has helped bring in this reign of terror, sleeps on, serenely unconscious that he is in any way accountable. Ashtoreth, Chemosh and Baal no longer serve as idols. Political parties have taken their places.

CLARA P. WHITE,
State Reporter, Volga.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MR. J. R. MARSHALL, of Flint, Mich., has been employed as W. C. T. U. missionary to the lumber camps of the state.

REYNOLDSBURG, O., union has very interesting meetings and a good attendance. Every fourth meeting is a mothers' meeting, and the program is arranged by the superintendent of mothers' meetings. They have lately bought the book, "A Great Mother," to be read in the meetings, and it will also form a nucleus for a W. C. T. U. library.

"W. C. T. U. Pay Day" at Akron, O., was heralded by a note from the local officers, inviting friends interested in their "Noon Rest" to call on January 23. Chocolate and coffee, wafers and doughnuts were served, and besides the pleasant social enjoyed, new members were received and two hundred and forty dollars in money. The weekly meetings are growing in numbers and the union is in harmonious working order.

JUST before this paper goes to press comes this sad intelligence from Ohio, sent by the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Clevenger: "Miss Henrietta B. Monroe, daughter of our state president, died last night, January 30. This is the second daughter Mrs. Monroe has buried in the past three years, and is her last. Miss Monroe was for two years our state recording secretary, resigning that office when her mother was elected state president."

THE Rushford, Minn., W. C. T. U. held a parlor meeting in the home of Mrs. Rev. Wright, January 16, which was largely attended. Scripture and prayer by Rev. Wright, songs by quartette, a paper on National Temperance Hospital by Mrs. Weed, leaflet on mothers and the public school read by Mrs. T. Miller, remarks by Rev. Jones, refreshments and collection for the National Temperance Hospital made up the good program.

DURING three series of meetings recently conducted by Rev. A. Edwin Burrows at Fond du Lac and Antigo, Wis., and Marcellus, Mich., there were between seven and eight hundred persons who entered the Christian life. Many people who were addicted to intoxicants, tobacco and narcotics not only gave up the use of them, but found that their appetite and desire for such were fully removed by the grace of God. And many people were baptized.

THE Rib Lake, Wis., W. C. T. U. held an essay prize contest recently. The subject was "The Evils of Intemperance." There were nine contestants. Two prizes were given for the best essays written by persons over and under sixteen years. The prizes were the white ribbon birthday book. The unsuccessful contestants were each presented a card designed by Lady Henry Somerset, entitled "A Nineteenth Century Nativity." The receipts of the contest were eight dollars.

THE W. C. T. U. workers of the District of Columbia, at their quarterly meeting January 16, passed a resolution urging local unions throughout the country to use their utmost endeavors in returning men to Congress who are in sympathy with home protection, to the end that the traffic may be removed not only from the District of Columbia, which has no voice in its own government, but also from all the states in the nation. A copy of this resolution has been sent to every state president with an appeal for support.

MISS KATHERINE WILLARD is giving musical matinees in Washington under the auspices of Mrs. President Cleveland, and ladies of the Cabinet. Her audiences have been distinguished and appreciative, and the Washington Post says: "Miss Willard is entitled by virtue of the beauty of her voice, her skill and culture, to take front rank among American concert singers. She has evidently been instructed by good masters and her great talent and rare vocal powers have enabled her to convert herself into an artist of enviable possibilities. Her repertoire includes all the masterpieces of all the great modern composers." THE UNION SIGNAL congratulates this young white-ribboner, the daughter of a former editor, Mrs. Mary B. Willard, and the niece of the National W. C. T. U. president.

HARVEY, Ill., W. C. T. U.'s and Y's covered themselves with glory and made a good sum for their work in a recent edition of The Harvey Tribune, the local paper of largest circulation. This particular issue was given entirely into the hands of the Christian temperance women, young and old, who united to bring forth a most creditable journalistic production. Miss Lucy Gaston, as editor-in-chief for the day, (after seeing that the office floor was carefully scrubbed and the cobwebs of ages brushed from the walls) set her force to work. Stirring editorials (on reform topics, of course) bright, clean news items, in which those of church, school and home were most prominent, suffrage and kindergarten departments specially edited, a racy account of a visit to the city council chamber and a delightful Washington letter from Mrs. Alice Pickler, wife of the South Dakota congressman, were the reader's entertainment and profit. The result testified the worthiness of the confidence reposed in the women by the proprietors of the paper, who must be, as the whilom editors claim, supporters of the woman's cause forever after.

Official Communications.

WORK FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

SUPERINTENDENTS AND FRIENDS:—The New Year dawns upon us with new obligations and fresh opportunities. Some of us have toiled together for years, others are young in the service. This special branch of our organization has grown in interest and importance, with the years, and God has permitted us to gather harvests bountiful and comforting. Do we need stimulous for future action? Let us read the history of our past twelve years and see the good hand of the Lord our God upon us. In view of the glorious results of our labor are we tempted to revel in past joys?

In this spirit, encouraged, chastened, sympathetic, we shall go forward, with quickened steps "hasting, yet resting." "What shall we do?" you ask. Says one who represents many ardent souls, "The field seems so large to me, and my strength so small;" writes another, "I am awake at nights studying how to raise the money so needful to success."

The morning of New Year's Day I asked for a special motto or text. It came. "Without me ye can do nothing," and immediately followed, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." These blessed words I pass along to all my sisters of the W. C. T. U.

In answer to your sincere inquiry, "But what shall we do?" permit a few suggestions and recommendations. First, work along patiently on the same lines as formerly. Be content to plod and drudge, if need be. If you may not reach the multitude with large benefactions, give the bread of life to one shipwrecked sailor or wounded soldier; thus, by converting the sinner from the error of his way you shall save a soul from death and shall hide a multitude of sins. As we are trammeled for want of means in this time of general distress, we need not retrench on the spiritual side. Visit ships, visit ports, make acquaintance with the G. A. R., the Sons of Veterans, institutions, homes—national and state. But, you say, I have no money to buy literature or books, to furnish libraries as heretofore. No matter; carry the King's message from your own heart and the literature of the Book: "Freely ye have received, freely give." Get the minutes of the National Convention—the twenty-first of our existence; read the president's address and find inspiration. Note carefully the corresponding secretary's report and the reports of all the superintendents; study the methods and you will surely learn from these practical demonstrations.

Send to the W. T. P. A. for specimen samples of tracts and leaflets suited to the classes of men for whom you are interested. Write me once a month, criticising or commending, telling me in all loving candor wherein I fall short or in what respect the work can be advanced. This year I purpose to use every agency already established within our borders to help in giving greater efficiency to the department; for instance, I would enlist the new board of organizers and lecturers on behalf of our defenders by land and sea. If their duty calls them into a state where a Home for Veterans or Soldiers' Orphans exists, let them ask for an opportunity to speak and organize these, as Mrs. Bullock of New York has done. If in a town on the sea-coast, let one of these good sisters show her white ribbon to Jack Tar on his ship or at his Bethel, and receive such a hearty welcome as more refined audiences never show; let them find out the evils and temptations that beset our boys-in-blue everywhere; in the canteen sustained by government, in the saloon and brothel on shore, and denounce them in public, as our own Clara Hoffman does. Let the young women on the platforms arouse the imaginations of the girls and boys in stories of the romance of truth, in the thrilling histories of adventure by soldiers on the plains and sailors on the deep. All this is adapted to Sunday-schools; to the conservative women who attend parlor meetings; to the Loyal Temperance Legions. The best generalship, we are told, consists in directing the forces under command; but let none of us ever excuse herself from service in the ranks, least of all your sister,

SARAH A. MCCLEES,
National Supt.

321 N. Union Ave., Los Angeles, Cal.

NARCOTICS.

The narcotic department has taken for its motto this year, "The cigarette must go," and many good people are working to that end. A convention of the Anti-Cigarette Leagues of New York city was held a short time ago. They have forty thousand boys pledged. I can furnish constitution and badges for the Anti-Cigarette League.

The school board of St. Joseph, Mo,, have given their attention to the cigarette evil, and all the members voted for a resolution to expel any boy who smokes cigarettes, no matter whether the smoker is on or off the school grounds.

Bills against the cigarette have been introduced in the Texas legislature, and our people in some states are taking up the question of forbidding the manufacture and sale of cigarettes. Every W. C. T. U. ought to work for such a law. I hope our women will push the work against the cigarettes, but by no means neglect the opium habit. Particularly make known the dangers of using headache medicines, soothing syrups, etc. A crusade ought to be made in all cities where there are opium dens.

MRS. E. B. INGALLS,
Supt. Dept. Narcotics.

1019 Westminster Pl. St. Louis, Mo.

That's the sort of Bias Velveteen Skirt Binding you ought to have on your dress. Look for

"S.H.&M."

on the label, never mind what the clerk says—see for yourself.

For sale by all dry goods dealers.

Samples and booklet on "How to Bind the Dress Skirt," for 2c stamp.

The S. H. & M. Co., 131 Spring St., N. Y.

"S.H.& M." Dress Stays are the Best.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

NOTICE NAME THUS Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL. AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

New Chrysanthemum Seed

These charming new types of Chrysanthemum from Japan bloom the first year from seed. They embrace all styles, varieties and colors, including the exquisite new Ostrich Plume types, Rosettes, Globes, Fimbriated, Miniature and Mammoth. Sow the seed this spring and the plants will bloom profusely this fall, either in pots or in the garden. From a packet of this seed one may have a most magnificent show of rare beauties. Price 25c. per pkt., or FOR ONLY 50c. WE WILL MAIL ALL OF THE FOLLOWING:

1 pkt. NEW JAPANESE CHRYSANTHEMUM Seed.
1 pkt. BEGONIA VERNON, mixed, finest of all.
1 pkt. GIANT WHITE SPIDER FLOWER, new.
1 pkt. JAPANESE WINEBERRY, king of berries.
1 pkt. NEW SPOON GOURD, curious and useful.
5 bulbs NAMED GLADIOLUS, 1 each of White, Pink, Scarlet, Yellow and Variegated.
3 bulbs MAMMOTH OXALIS, different colors.
1 bulb VARIEGATED TUBEROSE, Orange flowers.
1 bulb ZEPHYR FLOWER, a perfect fairy-like gem, and our GREAT CATALOGUE with 9 magnificent colored plates and covers, and sample copy of the MAYFLOWER with two great chromo plates. These 5 packets of seed Novelties and 10 choice Bulbs (worth $1.35) will all flower this season, and we send them for 30 CENTS only to introduce our superior stock. 4 collections for $1.00. Catalogue will not be sent unless asked for, as you may already have it.

Order at once, as this Offer may not appear again.

Send us the names of 5 or 10 of your neighbors who love flowers and we will add a fine Novelty, FREE.

OUR CATALOGUE of Flower and Vegetable Seeds, Bulbs, Plants and Rare new Fruits is the finest ever issued; profusely illustrated with elegant cuts and colored plates. We offer the choicest standard sorts and finest Novelties. We are headquarters for all that is New, Rare and Beautiful. This elegant Catalogue will be sent for 20c., or FREE if you order the articles here offered.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N.Y.

RARE PANSIES FREE

Worth over $1.00

We have given away over 500,000 packets in the past two years and found it the best advertisement we ever had. To every reader of this paper sending us 10 cents, the actual cost of postage and packing, we will mail our famous Star Collection of Pansies, precisely the same as we are selling for $1.00. This collection consists of four regular size packets as follows:

Sensation, Rich red, new and scarce.
Swanley Blue, Light blue, very fine.
Beauty, Delicate fawn shade, rare.
Star Mixed, A magnificent mixture of named Pansies, including Golden Queen, bright yellow, Faust, deep black, Bronze Queen, mahogany shaded bronze, Snow Queen, white.
Petunia Moonlight Extra. Send 10 cents for the above Star Collection, and give us the names and addresses of three friends who buy seeds or plants, and we will add one packet of Moonlight Petunia (regular price 15 cents) and our 30c certificate.

LONGMOUNT, COLO. Sirs: Accept my thanks for the choice collection of Pansy Seeds you sent me in February for the small sum of 10 cents. I believe every seed came up, and I have one of the most beautiful "Pansy Beds" I have ever seen. Mrs. J. BLACKWELL.

Illustrated Bargain Catalogue of Seeds, Plants and Fruits free with every collection.

MAY & CO. SEEDSMEN AND FLORISTS ST. PAUL, MINN.

SEEDS Awarded World's Columbian Grand Prize Medal.

ALWAYS FRESH AND RELIABLE.

Most Attractive and Instructive buyers catalogue ever published; FREE to all intending purchasers. Address at once.

H.W. Buckbee, Rockford Seed Farms, ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS. Post Office Box 586

LOOSE BOTTOMS PERFECTION CAKE TINS

Delicate Cake

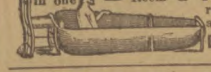
Easily removed without breaking. Perfection Tins require no greasing. 10 styles, round, square and oblong. 2 layer tins by mail 30 cts. Circulars Free.

Agents Wanted. Richardson Mfg. Co., 14 St., Bath, N.Y.



6 tubs in one BATH TUBS, Wholesale & Retail. For "Bath Room" & "Portable." Durable, many long used renewed, light, little water. Agents and others send for circulars.

E. J. Knowlton, Ann Arbor, Mich.

SENSIBLE MOTHERS } BUY { GOOD SENSE CORSET WAISTS for themselves and daughters.

BAKER'S COCOA ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Even the arctic weather with which for the past few days Chicago has been favored has not served to cool the warmth of our zeal at National Headquarters. True, the thermometer has been roaming around at unprecedented depths, but we have been too busy to realize that we were freezing, and doubtless in that fact, largely, has rested our immunity from cold. What do we find to do? I wish you might each one of you have a peep into one of our days. A constant influx of mail which must be promptly answered—letters averaging from fifty to one hundred each day—and often largely in excess of these figures; orders for Minutes to be carefully classified before the copies can be wrapped up and addressed, which is, in itself, no small matter; manuscripts to be prepared for publication and proof corrected; countless inquiries to be answered and innumerable orders concerning matters wholly outside our province to be turned over to the proper authorities; visitors to be entertained and miscellaneous interruptions galore, while all the time the mind is not only intent upon present duties but is projecting itself into future plans until it is hard sometimes to tell whether we are living in to-day or in next month. The position of a General Officer at National Headquarters is no sinecure, but it is a position whose duties are lightened by love and in which the joy and blessing of serving such a constituency in such a cause is never forgotten.

Just now the planning for the Washington meeting is engrossing so much of our time and thought that if letters are not answered as promptly as usual, please attribute it to that fact.

Dr. Mary Wood Allen, National superintendent of purity, has been one of our most welcome guests for the past week. Under her wise leadership the department is being greatly strengthened. Her latest plan is to issue monthly, for mothers' meetings, a little pamphlet called "The Mothers' Friend," giving in that form the help needed along the lines upon which there is now such general awakening. Each issue will be devoted to the discussion of a particular topic, and personal inquiries or statements of special difficulties will be met in this way. It will be furnished at the low rate of five cents for single copy, one year's subscription, fifty cents, while very generous club rates are offered. This is an excellent plan and I hope orders will go to Dr. Allen, 37 South Thayer Street, Ann Arbor, Mich., with great promptitude.

An opportunity has just been given me of examining the literature used by Mrs. Lovell in the department of mercy, and I am surprised as well as delighted by its varied character and exhaustive treatment of the subject matter. Surely the W. C. T. U. is bringing to the front a host of specialists of which any organization might well be proud. They are "fully equipped unto every good word and work." I am sure that no one, however indifferent hitherto, could read the literature on this subject without an awakening of heart towards "them that are dumb." Mrs. Lovell's special work this year is to be in the direction of inducing state unions to adopt the department, and L. T. L. superintendents to aid in the formation of Bands of Mercy. The importance of this cannot be overestimated, and I earnestly hope some woman may be raised up in each state and local union, whose heart is touched to a realization of the one tie which runs through all life, and to the fact that mercy cannot truly exist between man and man if it does not also exist between man and beast. Write to Mrs. Mary Lovell, Bryn Mawr, Pa., and she will tell you just what to do as "the next thing."

Do you remember the vision which Ezekiel had of the cherubim in the midst of the wheels, and the wheels within wheels? A somewhat similar vision has come to the president of the Temple Trustees, and she is full of faith to believe that the wheels she is now setting in motion will roll on till the last dollar of indebtedness is cleared from the Temple. All that is needed is that we should each one of us take the place of the "living creatures," whose presence is the motive power of the wheels. If each white-ribboner would fill one wheel and get three of her friends to fill one each, the money would be rolling in by the hundreds of thousands before the wheels should have made their sixth revolution. Try it and see.

I had hoped to give the entire Washington program in this issue of THE UNION SIGNAL, but there has been the unavoidable delay incident upon consultation with so many different persons, in such widely separated places. The sessions on Friday and Saturday are to be held in the Metropolitan M. E. church with the exception of Friday evening which will be held in Music Hall, and will be a benefit; tickets twenty-five cents; reserved seats fifty cents. The full program will be given next week. How I wish you might all be there!

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner.

The question comes to the Corner as to the best way of sending change to treasurer. Where one is near to a postoffice a money order for any small sum can be easily procured for three cents and is absolutely safe. If one is in the country, stamps can be sent with comparative safety and are always in demand at Headquarters. Dimes can be touched with mucilage and pressed upon a sheet of paper, folded in another sheet and will come safely. Hundreds of letters have been received with dimes and there has never been a complaint that one was lost. For all sums over one dollar, money order, check or draft should be sent, or if currency is sent it should be in registered letter. This requires eight cents in addition to the two cent postage.

More than 1,000 copies of the Minutes have been sent out already and less than 200 remain. All who are desirous of securing a copy should send at once for they will very soon be gone.

Remembrances from good friends are coming in. Mrs. C. S. Choate, of Erie, Mich., sends from the W. C. T. U. a donation of $1; Mrs. H. E. Culver, of Portland, Conn., sends a delayed dime offering, while Mrs. A. A. Bullock, of Jamaica Plains, Mass., sends a thankoffering of $5, and Mrs. Hastings, treasurer of Wisconsin, sends $3.04 self-denial from one of their unions.

Miss M. S. Lane, of Oxfordville, Ohio, sends to the National a birthday gift of $1. A little Ohio girl, Lucy Osborn, seven years old, sends ten cents as a birthday gift with a nice letter in which she says: "My mamma is the president of the W. C. T. U. and I mean to be one by and by. My papa is a Prohibitionist and so are four of my uncles. The three others of our family will send a birthday gift too."

No wonder little Lucy is a temperance girl with such surroundings. We trust every little temperance girl and boy will remember the National on their birthday this year and if father and mother will do the same, our beloved National will again be able to go up to next convention with a good surplus. The N. W. C. T. U. means to keep out of debt, but if it does this year our friends must help.

Two or three of our good friends have recently named the National in bequests. Why cannot our good temperance men and women who have means, and are thinking of making a will, remember the National, thus insuring it with means for enlarged work in the future? What society is doing a greater work? Where could money be placed where it would do more for humanity? Send for leaflet with exact form for bequest. Orders are coming for the annual leaflet. It will be ready to send out in a few days. Some resignations and appointments to fill vacancies have required time and caused delay. We hope it will be correct in all respects when finally ready.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Organizers' Corner.

Superintendent of the Department of Organization, Corresponding Secretary of the National W. C. T. U.

ORGANIZERS.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, 1105 Davis street, Elmira, N. Y.
Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, Port Jervis, N. Y.
Miss Frances E. Griffin, The De Soto, Chicago.
Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, Chautauqua, Wash.
Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, 1907 Bush street, San Francisco, Cal.
Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair, Clinton, N. Y.
Mrs. Maude L. Greene, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Baraga, Mich.
Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.
Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Ellensburg, E. Wash.
Miss Ida Clothier, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, Pacific Grove, Cal.
Mrs. S. C. Harris, Franklin, Va.
Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, 1006 Bainbridge street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.
Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.
Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.
Mrs. E. A. Kenyon, Townshend, Vt.
Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown, LL.D., Cincinnati, O., Lecturer.
Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, Vincennes, Ind.
Mrs. Sue V. Tomlinson, Charlotte, N. C.
Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, Roslindale, Mass., Lecturer.
Mrs. E. L. Calkins, 922 S. Rose street, Kalamazoo, Mich.
Miss Lilian Wood, Maryville, Mo., Lecturer.
Mrs. Ella A. Boole, A. M., West New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y., Lecturer.
Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, 27 Everett street, Cambridge, Mass., Lecturer.
Mrs. Addie Northam Field, Bedford, N. H.
Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, McMinnville, Ore.
For terms and date address as above.

After leaving Cleveland at the close of the National Convention, I took the train for Michigan and paid a visit to the old home farm where my dear mother lives just at the roast turkey and mince-pie (without cider) season of the year, and received the loving welcome I longed for. Since that time I have been in Indiana; had the pleasure of meeting and greeting old friends at Greensburg, but found the Y of a year ago disbanded. However, with the earnest girls who were its leaders, still loving the bit "of ribbon white," and still full of prayerful zeal for the cause, we have reason to expect the disbanding to be only temporary.

At Hope I was ushered into a very atmosphere of enthusiasm. A wide-awake, hard-working Y is there, under the efficient leadership of Miss Anna Rights, in whose pleasant home I was most hospitably entertained. They have made a success of flower mission and contest work, and have taken up Bible study by characters. Have had prizes for successful answers to Bible questions, and have made their meetings bright and entertaining—therefore popular. Now they are planning to open a reading-room, which means that they will accomplish it.

At Shelbyville I found a strong W and a new L. T. L. doing good battle for God and the home, besides many earnest workers. The audience was a very select and appreciative one. Now I am awaiting my work here in Fairbury, Ill., which is to be under the auspices of the Y, and for the benefit of their new reading-room, which is already a success.

I expect to go from here to Colorado where work awaits me under sunnier skies and amid the warmth and greatness of God's protecting mountains. Later, I may accept a call from the farther East, but of that more anon. I have only words of encouragement to bring from the field and my heart is full of praise for God's goodness and His keeping power.

MAUDE L. GREENE,
Nat'l Chalk-Talker and Organizer.

OBITUARY.

[Obituary notices of five lines or less are published free. Longer notices will be inserted at the rate of ten cents a line.]

MRS. HANNAH N. WRIGHT, member of Atoka W. C. T. U. and for three years territorial treasurer, died at her home in Atoka, I. T., Christmas night, December 25, 1894.

***

MR. A. F. BAKER, an esteemed honorary member of the Keedysville, Md., W. C. T. U., was thrown from a cart November 27, and instantly killed.

***

MRS. AGNES STEVENON, a member of the W. C. T. U. at Keedysville, Md., since its organization, 1886, died January 11, 1895.

***

MRS. MARY A. BRATT, of Oxford, Md., was called above, January 6. Among many noble works she has kept her church supplied with unfermented wine for twenty years. Many of her family are prominent temperance workers.

***

MRS. KATE MADDOX, wife of Rev. J. H. Maddox, died in Huntington, Ark., November 15, 1894.

MRS. PRINCELL and Miss Kate Lunden—both of them well educated and devoted Swedish ladies—have been appointed to work among their own people under the auspices of the pastors of their own nation in this country. Our general officers have sent them credentials, and we expect to hear encouraging reports of their faithful services. This item is inserted to help make a welcome for these earnest workers wherever they may appear. They go forward unsalaried, hoping to make their way and desiring only to be able to keep their heads above water even while they work.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, bilious headache, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, loss of appetite, sallow skin, etc., when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

Go by the book. Pills 10¢ and 25¢ a box. Book free at your druggist's or write B. F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

ASK Your Grocer for

NONE SUCH MINCE MEAT

Two Mince Pies, equal to our Grandmother's, from each package of None-Such Mince Meat, without the worry and work. For sale by all Grocers.

MERRELL-SOULE CO., Syracuse, N. Y.

PIMPLES

Freckles, Blotches, Ringworm, Eczema, Scald Head, Tetter, and all other skin disorders positively cured with

HEISKELL'S OINTMENT.

If you would have soft, smooth and healthy skin, free from all imperfections, use constantly

HEISKELL'S SOAP.

Price 25 cts. Send Stamp for Free Sample. JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., PHILA.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED.

BARLEY CRYSTALS

New Diuretic, Renovating Tonic Cereal; also Gluten Dyspepsia Flour, and Diabetes Flour.

Pamphlet and Cooking Samples Free.

Unrivaled in America or Europe. Ask Dealers, or Write Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N.Y., U.S.A.

(A Swell Affair.)

DENT'S TOOTHACHE GUM

STOPS TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY.

Ask for DENT'S; take no other. Sold everywhere, or by mail 15 cts. C. S. DENT & CO., DETROIT, MICH.

Dent's Corn Gum Cures Corns, Bunions, Warts.

NEAL DOW

HOME PROTECTION ARMY.....

Send 10 cents and get 10 Pledge Cards, and circular giving "Object and Work of the Neal Dow Home Protection Army," and 50 other leaflets and documents to help educate the people in favor of prohibition.

JOHN DANNER, - Canton, Ohio.

A $1 Magazine for 30c.

Send 30 cents and names of 6 people who might subscribe, and we will send you THE ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE a full year. The price of the magazine is $1 a year. A sample copy for 6 cents. Address

ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE 2819 OLIVE ST. ST. LOUIS, MO.

Purity and White Cross Literature.

THE PHILANTHROPIST, Monthly, 50 cents a year. BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, LEAFLETS, PLEDGE CARDS, &c. THE PHILANTHROPIST PUB CO., 39 Nassau St., New York.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my Invisible Tubular Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Warranted to help more cases than all similar devices combined. Help ears as glasses do eyes. Sold by F. Hiscox only, 853 Br'dway, N. Y. Send for book of proofs FREE

HOME STUDY Success in Business Life is within the reach of all who take a thorough Business College course at Home, by Mail. It will pay to investigate. Cat. free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 77 College Bldg., Buffalo, N.Y.

SALESMEN WANTED to sell our goods by samples to the wholesale and retail trade, sell on sight to every business man or firm; liberal salary, money advanced for advertising and expenses. Permanent position. Address with stamp, KING MFG. CO., A 55 Chicago, Ill.

CANCER permanently cured. No knife. No poison. No plaster. JOHN B. HARRIS, Fort Payne, Alabama.

At 1/4 Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc. List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address, C. J. MASON, Box, 519, New York City, N. Y.

LADY AGENTS, Rubber Undergarment Quick sales, big profits. Catalog free, Mrs. N. B. LITTLE, Chicago

Kernels.

A Brooklyn man has hit upon a happy expedient for getting rid of rheumatism. He crowded it down into two fingers, and then had them amputated.

Noble desires, unless filled up with action,
Are but a shell of gold hollow within.
—Roscoe.

Little boy—"Uncle George, may I drive your horse?"

Uncle George—"You never learned to drive."

"It's easy. You just pull his head which ever way you want him to go, that's all."

"But suppose he gets stubborn or scared, and begins to back?"

"Um—why, I'd back him around till he was backing in the direction I wanted him to go, and then let him go on backing."

In a Baker street car yesterday, remarks the Detroit Free Press, some men were talking about the nerve of William Tell in shooting an apple off his son's head. To vex an old lady who was listening, one of the men said: "That was Mr. Tell; but what did his wife amount to; why doesn't history mention her?" "I'll bet a hundred dollars," called the old lady in excited voice, "I'll bet a hundred dollars that she sat up half the night before patching that boy's trousers so he'd look decent to go out."

GOING TO CALIFORNIA?

The Burlington Route is the only railway running "Personally conducted" excursions via Denver, Colorado Springs, Salt Lake, Ogden, Sacramento, San Francisco, Stockton, Merced, Fresno, Bakersfield and Los Angeles at the lowest rates. Pullman Tourist Sleeping Car through without change. Leave Chicago every Wednesday. Write or call on T. A. Grady, Excursion Manager, 211 Clark St., Chicago.

One of them said, coming in from a walk, that he had found a new flower and gave as its name "sun of my soul"—but the little fellow meant Solomon's Seal!

At another time the same student of natural history was told that trees from which the leaves fell in autumn were called deciduous trees. Soon after he noticed Pussy's hairs on the sofa and immediately said, 'O, mamma, the cat is a deciduous animal, for here are her leaves!'

The editor said he thought some cuts
Would go well with my story:
I left it with him, feeling I
Had covered myself with glory;
When I for the pictures looked next day,
I nearly fell off the fence, ill:
That cruel man had made the cuts
With a horrid big blue pencil!

Miss Summerbord—"On what do you feed your chickens?"

Farmer—"Corn, ma'am."

Miss Summerbord—"And how do they eat it?"

Farmer—"Well, ma'am, as far as I can see they eat by the peck."

Mark Twain tells of a minister who took advantage of a christening to display his oratorical powers. "He is a little fellow," said he, as he took the infant, "and, as I look into your faces, I see an expression of scorn, which suggests that you despise him. But if you had the soul of a poet, or the gifts of prophecy, you would not despise him. You would look far into the future and see what might be. So this little child may be a great poet and write tragedies, or perhaps a great warrior wading in blood up to his neck; he may be—er, what is his name? His name is—oh! Mary Ann!"

MORE THAN 90,000,000 PASSENGERS

Have been carried by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Ry. during the past twenty-five years. Very few were able to find any fault. The rest were delighted. One of them recently said: "For several years past I have made from two to four trips each month between Chicago and New York, and am almost always accompanied by from one to three or four others. I believe (as I am informed by your conductors) that I have made more trips between Chicago and New York than any other one man during the past few years. I have always traveled over your road in preference to any other, because by careful comparison with others I have found not only that the road itself is far superior, but the table and the service are in every respect the best of any road I have ever traveled on. The conductors, stewards, waiters and porters I have found to be uniformly courteous and attentive, adding greatly to the comfort of those who are obliged to travel as much as I am." Trains leave Chicago as follows: 8:00 A. M., 10:30 A. M., 3:25 P. M., 5:30 P. M., 8:45 P. M., daily and 11:30 P. M. daily except Sunday. F. M. Byron, C. P. & T. A., 66 Clark St., Chicago. C. K. Wilbee, W. P. A., Chicago.

Our Library Table.

Spoon-River Dan. By Laura Everingham Scammon. A short story, in booklet form, written in weird fashion upon a weird subject. Dan is a "character" of the wild west—a "divine" (?) healer, a drinking, swearing, self-sacrificing, yet apparently hard-hearted old man, whose belief in ghosts led him to his death.

Hudson-Kimberly Publishing Company, Kansas City, Mo. Price 50 cts.

The American Citizen. By Charles F. Dole. D. C. Heath & Co., publishers, Boston.

Though not a recent publication, the above is a book that, designed especially for students, may well be carefully perused by those children of a larger growth, who, by reason of restricting circumstances, find themselves somewhat at sea concerning an intelligent grasp of the questions that face every American citizen.

Prof. Edward W. Bemis, of the University of Chicago, has made a careful investigation of the questions as to whether American labor organizations are opposed to trade instruction either through the apprenticeship system or by trade schools, and whether they are controlled by foreigners. The results of his work have been published by the American Academy of Political and Social Science in a monograph entitled, The Relation of Labor Organizations to the American Boy and to Trade Instruction.

American Academy of Political and Social Science, Philadelphia. Price $.25.

Otto's Inspiration. Mary H. Ford. Published by S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago. Price $1.

Otto is the child of a musician, and is left alone in the world during his early boyhood, possessing only his violin and his dog. The author evidently has a large share of the spirit of music in her soul, her expressions concerning it are so sympathetic. She touches the realm of spirits,—Otto always insisting that his "angel" inspired his wonderful music, and that he could see the beautiful being who looked like a "blue flame" of fire and whose face shone with a light beyond the lad's powers of description. The story is well written and the characterizations strong.

Songs In Prison. By Alfred S. Dyer, the hero and martyr of the Indian anti-opium movement. These beautiful and touching hymns were written behind prison bars by Alfred Dyer, a "surreptitious piece of lead pencil and the blank backs of twelve maps at the end of my Bible" furnishing the materials.

In this little volume are the portraits of Mr. Dyer's three missionary friends, Arthur W. Prautch, Man Sukh Lal, and Thomas M. Hudson, all "subjected to criminal prosecution, and condemned to imprisonment in consequence of our fidelity to righteousness and the interests of the people of India."

Dyer Brothers, Rose street, corner Paternoster Square, London.

The Raid from Beausejour and How the Carter Boys Lifted the Mortgage. Two stories of Acadie, by Charles G. D. Roberts.

The first of these two dramatically-told stories is full of intensity of plot. It is of the time just preceding the "Expulsion of the Acadians," revealing the hapless situation of the poor victims of a hopeless quarrel. Little Edie Howe, niece of young Lieutenant Howe, and her rescuer, Pierre Lecorbeau, are the heroine and hero of the thrilling story.

The second narrative gives a glimpse of the peaceful side of Acadian life.

Published by Hunt & Eaton, New York; Cranston & Curts, Cincinnati. Price $1.

Oowikapun. By Egerton Ryerson Young. This is a story of "How the Gospel Reached the Nelson River Indians."

Oowikapun, the hero, is a typical Indian. While out hunting he is severely wounded, and finding a trail followed it until he reaches the wigwam of Memotas, "the best Indian doctor in all that vast country," and also a Christian. Here Oowikapun hears about Christ. When healed he returns to his own wigwam. The narrative shows in a wonderfully interesting manner how Oowikapun tried to find healing for the unrest which took possession of him after leaving the Christian wigwam,—how he tried the dreadful devil dance, then the solitude of nature, then the agonies of torture, but all to no avail. At last, through the words of an Indian girl, he is set on the right track, goes to a mission, is converted, and his entreaties united with those of Memotas, for a missionary, are successful.

Published by Hunt & Eaton, New York. Price $1.

Blood Diseases

such as Scrofula and Anæmia, Skin Eruptions and Pale or Sallow Complexions, are speedily cured by the Cream of Cod-liver Oil. No other remedy so quickly and effectively enriches and purifies the blood and gives nourishment to the whole system. It is pleasant to take and easy on the stomach.

Scott's Emulsion

Thin, Emaciated Persons and all suffering from Wasting Diseases are restored to health by Scott's Emulsion.

Be sure you get the bottle with our trade-mark on it. Refuse cheap substitutes!

Send for pamphlet on Scott's Emulsion. FREE.

Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists. 50 cents and $1.

QUITE THE BEST WOMAN'S PAPER IN GREAT BRITAIN.

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL

EDITED BY

LADY HENRY SOMERSET

AND

ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH

Is a weekly review of woman's work in philanthropy and reform, and the OFFICIAL ORGAN of

The British Women's Temperance Association

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL is thoroughly abreast of the times, and an authority on the advanced movement now everywhere occupying the mind of thinking women. It contains interviews with prominent women; serial stories by well-known authors; Books Worth Reading, by Lady Henry Somerset; social sketches contributions from Miss Frances E. Willard, and, in all, comprises a timely up-to-date journal for thoughtful women.

Subscription $1.58, postpaid, per annum, to any address within postal union.

Foreign and Colonial Subscribers will please remit by Money Order, payable to Allie Rosseter Willard, Business Manager, 33-34 Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, London, E. C., England.

Publisher's Notes.

The beautiful verses by Mary T. Lathrap,

"THERE'S A SHADOW ON THE HOME,"

with music by Lucy Rider Meyer, are arranged as a "Battle Song of the Y's," an alto or bass solo, with the chorus,

"We are Coming to the Rescue,"

and are found in the collection of songs compiled for the Y. W. C. T. U. by Anna A. Gordon. To meet the general demand we publish the words and music in leaflet form for convenient use in the

Memorial Services

to be held by unions throughout the country in loving memory of our promoted leader.

PRICE:

| | |
|---|---|
| Single copy | $ 1 |
| 50 copies | 40 |
| 100 copies | 75 |
| 500 copies | 3 00 |
| 1,000 copies | 5 00 |

No orders filled for less than ten copies.

This is a most fitting time also to circulate leaflets written by the peerless prohibition orator, now passed from our sight. Unions would do well to order a supply. They are:

National Leaflets.

No. 1. The National W. C. T. U.
No. 65. After Twenty Years.

Of the "Timely Talk Series," No. 17 contains two "Talks":

1. On Which Side Are You?
By Frances E. Willard

and

2. The Seen and the Unseen.
By Mary T. Lathrap

PRICE OF NATIONAL LEAFLETS:

| | |
|---|---|
| Per package of 10 | $ 10 |
| Per 100 | 90 |
| Per 1,000 | 7 50 |

PRICE OF TIMELY TALKS:

| | |
|---|---|
| Per 100 | $ 30 |
| Per 1,000 | 2 50 |

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
The Temple,
Chicago, Ill.

You will find the "White Ribbon Hymnal" a great help in temperance meetings and song services. Price 35c.

PRIZES ON PATENTS.

How to get $100 and Perhaps Make a Fortune.

We secure patents and to induce people to keep track of their bright ideas we offer a prize of one hundred dollars to be paid on the first of every month to the person who submits to us the most meritorious invention during the preceding month. We will also advertise the invention free of charge in the National Register, a weekly newspaper, published in Washington, D. C., which has an extensive circulation throughout the United States and is devoted to the interests of inventors.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

The idea of being able to invent something strikes most people as being very difficult; this delusion the Company wishes to dispel. It is the simple things and small inventions that make the greatest amount of money, and the complex ones are seldom profitable. Almost everybody, at some time or another, conceives an idea, which, if patented, would probably be worth to him a fortune. Unfortunately such ideas are usually dismissed without thought. The simple inventions like the car window, which could be easily slid up and down without breaking the passenger's back, the sauce pan, the collar button, the nut lock, the bottle stopper, the snow shovel are things that almost every one sees some way of improving upon, and it is these kind of inventions that bring the greatest returns to the author.

The prize we offer will be paid at the end of each month, whether the application has been acted upon by the Patent office or not. Every competitor must apply for a patent on his invention through us, and whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a valuable patent.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
John Wedderburn Gen'l Manager,
618 F. St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

P. S. The responsibility of this company may be judged from the fact that its stock is held by about seventeen hundred of the leading newspapers of the United States.

DROPSY TREATED FREE. Positively CURED with Vegetable Remedies. Have cured many thousand cases called hopeless. From first dose symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed. BOOK of testimonials of miraculous cures sent FREE. 10 DAYS TREATMENT FREE by mail. Dr. H. H. Green & Sons, Specialists, Atlanta, Ga.

WE WILL SELL YOU THE BEST BUGGY Cart, Harness, Phæton, Spring Wagon, Surrey or Saddle in the world at lowest wholesale prices. Shipped anywhere to anyone with privilege to examine without asking one cent in advance. All goods fully guaranteed. Send for large illustrated catalogue and testimonials Free. Write to-day address (in full) CASH BUYERS' UNION. 158 West Van Buren Street, B 30, Chicago, Ills.

Mother! Mother! Mother!

SET YOUR CHILD TO WORK.

The Young Crusader

will send a

PRIZE

to the boy or girl securing largest number of subscribers before

APRIL 1.

Send for January Crusader and read the particulars. Address

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
The Temple,
Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

To every local superintendent of literature who would like suggestions of

HOW TO WORK

we commend Department Leaflet No. 23,

Seeding Down the Field.

In fact, state superintendents would do well to order a sufficient supply to place in the hands of every local superintendent in her state. No method of seed-sowing is, in proportion to the amount of money and effort invested, so effective in bringing a swift and abundant harvest for our cause as the systematic circulation of temperance literature, and now is the time to

Prepare for Spring Campaigns.

The first step for a superintendent of literature to take is to send for (1) our catalogue of publications, and (2) the

Bound Sets of Leaflets.

These last are sample copies of leaflets in convenient form for reference, those of each series stitched together in brown paper covers. Absolutely indispensable for workers.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Timely Talks | $ .15 |
| Signal Lights | .05 |
| Gospel Lights | .03 |
| Total Abstinence | .03 |
| Teachers' Series | .08 |
| Suffrage | .07 |
| Temperance and Labor | .05 |
| Mothers' Meetings (Purity) | .08 |
| Home Leaflets | .20 |
| Social Purity Series | .25 |
| White Cross Series | .25 |
| Loyal Leaflets | .15 |
| Evangelistic Series | .08 |
| Y. W. C. T. U. Series | .08 |
| L. T. L. Series | .08 |
| Local Union Helps | .08 |
| Picture Leaflets | .03 |
| Little Folks | .03 |
| Busy Day | .03 |
| Department Leaflets | .12 |

It often happens that the eye is a more potent medium for education than either the voice or the printed page. A picture is often a wonderful seed-sower. This has been the record of the famous cartoon,

The Mill and the Still.

It has spoken eloquently for temperance in the past. It speaks eloquently still, and as long as the drink demon stalks abroad in our land it will continue to speak eloquently. It is printed in colors, and may be suitably exhibited in stores, depots and all places where public notices are displayed. More of them should be in use.

Price, each ..... $ .10
Per dozen ..... 1.00

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A WONDERFUL BOOK.

TOUCHING INCIDENTS AND REMARKABLE ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

As Related By

John Wesley, Bishop Bowman,
Chas. G. Finney, T. DeWitt Talmage,
Bishop Simpson, John Knox,
John B. Gough, Martin Luther,
B. Fay Mills, D. L. Moody,
George Muller, C. H. Spurgeon,
and many others.

This new book is meeting with universal favor, and is already having a large and rapid sale.

Over 3,000 Sold in Less Than Three Weeks.

Read a few of the good things said of it:

Western Christian Advocate: "It is simply wonderful. No one can read the book without having his faith in prayer greatly strengthened."

THE UNION SIGNAL: "Its high religious tone, its fascinating spirit, and the high rank of its contributors, make it a strong faith tonic and an inspiration to prevailing prayer."

B. Fay Mills: "A wonderful book—an excellent book."

Chaplain C. C. McCabe: "This book will remind the reader that there are Elijahs still upon the earth."

Bishop Wm. Taylor: "True to its title."

Bishop Thos. Bowman, D. D., LL. D.: "I have read your book, 'Touching Incidents and Remarkable Answers to Prayer,' with much interest and spiritual profit."

Price $1.

Address
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE.
Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

RAILROAD RATES.

Presentation of the Polyglot Petition, Washington, D. C., Feb. 15, 1895.

White-ribboners will appreciate the interest of Mrs. Rachel Foster Avery, who has had in mind the convenience of the National W. C. T. U. in the negotiations with railroads for reduced rates and an extension of time, allowing them to be in Washington a few days earlier than the date on which the National Council of Women convenes. Those intending to participate in the historic meeting to be held in connection with the presentation of the Polyglot Petition, will please note the following arrangements:

Reduced Rates.

Those desiring to participate in the presentation of the Polyglot Petition, can secure the one and one-third rate for the round trip to Washington, D. C., and return, by buying their tickets to Triennial Session of the National Council of Women, to convene in Washington, February 18, 1895.

Time.

The Southern Passenger Association makes the reduced rates good from February 13 to 19 going, and good until March 15, returning.

The New England Passenger Committees make their rates good between February 14 and 21 going, and ood to March 5, returning.

The Trunk Line and the Central Traffic Association make rates good from February 13 to 28, going, and good to March 5, returning.

The Western Traffic Association, it is believed, will concede the same rates that the others have done, though definite information has not as yet been received by those in charge of railroad rates for National Council of Women.

LATEST INFORMATION.

We have received from Mrs. Avery the following important information. To secure one and one-third fare you will pay full fare going to Washington, but your station agent will give you certificate which will secure you one-third fare returning.

Provided,

you get this certificate signed in Washington by Miss Lucy E. Anthony, who will be at the Bureau of Information from 9 to 10 A. M., 7:30 to 8 P. M. } Feb. 20, 21, 22, 26, 27, 28.

Also from 7:30 to 8 P. M., Feb. 19 and 25.

Please cut this out for reference, and remember, without certificate you cannot obtain reduced fare.

Young Women.

New Series Oak and Ivy Leaf...

Official Organ Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

12 Pages. - Published Monthly. - 50c. a Year.

JENNIE A. STEWART, Editor.

★

A welcome change has taken place in our Y paper during the year. Enlarged and improved it is an attractive paper for the general reader as well as the young folks within the white-ribbon fold. The new list of departments includes:

News of the Month (in temperance, religious, political and educational circles); Special Articles (biography, travel, interviews, etc.); Queen's Gardens (poems, stories and sermonettes); Worth Repeating; Editorial; Official (messages and hints from the leaders in Y work); College Corner; Kindred Societies; Have You Read——? Brothers of Girls; Good Times; Girls at Home; By Mail; Silhouettes; Y Round Table and Pearls and Feathers.

TERMS TO UNIONS.

★

Single copies, one year, each ..... 50c
Five copies on one order, one year, each, 40c
Any number of copies, for distribution, each ..... 4c

★

TERMS TO SOLICITORS.

One copy, one year ..... 50c

For clubs of five or more, the solicitor may retain 10 cents of each cash subscription. After the first club is sent the solicitor's name will be entered, and ten cents may be retained for each subsequent cash subscription.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Young Women to one address, one year, $1.40.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

CHILDHOOD: ITS CARE AND CULTURE.

Price, Cloth, $3. Given for five new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL. Bound in cloth, marble edges.

"If I could have but one book besides the Bible to help me in bringing up children, I would by all means choose this."—Madam Willard.

.....GLIMPSES OF FIFTY YEARS.....

Price, cloth ..... $2.25
Half morocco, gilt edge .... 3.00
Full morocco, gilt edge .... 3.75

Over 50,000 of this autobiography of Miss Willard's have been sold in America, and a leading firm has now brought out an English edition, under the title "My Happy Half Century." We have still on hand a large supply of "Glimpses," and agents will find it one of the most attractive books offered to the public.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION
The Temple, Chicago

Knits farthest FLEISHER'S KNITTING WORSTED Wears longest

JUST WHAT YOU WANT!
A NEW ENTERTAINMENT.

Our Illustrated Authors...

JUST PUBLISHED.

A splendid social and instructive game FOR OLD AND YOUNG.

Suitable for a Small or a Large Company...

W. C. T. Unions, Y's, Christian Endeavorers, take notice.

Fifty illustrations, complete directions, cards and key, all included in a box.

Price only Fifty Cents, postpaid. Can be used any number of times.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,

State L. T. L. Superintendents.

Do you know about

THE CRUSADER BANNER?

Has your state L. T. L. ever held it? Why not?

Send for January issue of YOUNG CRUSADER, and then get the children interested.

The subject for the

JANUARY BIBLE READING

is Pentecostal Preparation and is particularly suggestive as a starting point for the work of the year.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Signal Notes.

The Czar has established a yearly income of fifty thousand roubles to be paid as pensions to scholars and authors.

The L. T. L. of Great Britain has subscribed nearly thirty pounds towards their Willard fountain, a fac simile of the one in America.

February 2 was Christian Endeavor day, observed by special services in the interest of their year's purpose, "one million for missions."

The Salvation Army in Sweden has just purchased the Sodertelge beer garden; they will transform the theater into a barracks and the garden will be utilized as a Salvation Army rendezvous.

Thirty years ago there were but one or two meager prints; now there are twenty recognized women's papers in England, besides minor monthlies. This is the statement made by Miss E. March-Philipps in The Fortnightly.

England's drink bill has decreased nearly one pound per capita in the last nineteen years, from four pounds in 1875 to three pounds in 1893. The number of convictions for drunkenness has decreased over one-fifth in the same period.

President Clark, of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, during his four months' absence in Europe, addressed large meetings in many cities of the Continent, where he found much interest in Christian Endeavor. In Great Britain, where the Baptists lead numerically in the movement, the enthusiasm for the society is quite equal to that in America.

The Turkish legation at Washington announces the whole number of Armenian subjects of Turkey to be 900,000. According to the reports presented to the Berlin congress in 1876, there were three million Armenians in Turkey at that time distributed as follows: In Major Armenia, 1,330,000; in Armenia Minor, 670,000; in Asia Minor, 600,000; in Constantinople and Balkan Peninsula, 600,000. In the district of the Vilayet of Diarbekir, where the massacres were perpetrated, there were 180,000 Armenians, 160,000 Turks and 40,000 Kurds. The difference in the figures would indicate an enormous exodus or depletion during the twenty years.

The Ohio state board of pardons has just issued the following statement which will receive the commendation and approval of every Christian temperance advocate: "This year more than any previous year we have deemed it prudent in recommending the granting of pardons to include in the recommendation a condition that they shall forever refrain from intoxicating liquors in all cases wherein we have found that the prisoner prior to his conviction had been in the habit of using such liquors. This has been done in cases wherein it does not appear that the prisoner was intoxicated at the time of the commission of the offense. It is believed by the members of the board to be a wise stipulation, inasmuch as it seems to lessen the liability of a pardoned prisoner to again commit crime; for it is a conspicuous fact that in nearly every case of crime against the person the offender was either under the influence of liquor or became involved in an affray by reason of being in a place where intoxicating liquor was sold."

Mr. Sho Nemoto, of Japan, who is at present in Central America on business for the Japanese government, writes in a recent letter to Miss Willard, that the general temperance work in Japan is growing wonderfully; the temperance papers published in Tokio, he says, bring home joyful news of the progress of the work. Mr. Nemoto says: "From our number nearly three hundred men went to the war. Lieutenant Saito, one of our members, became a captain of two hundred soldiers. He first collected these men and gave an order as follows: 'First, this war is righteous. Second, if it is righteous we must be good moral, that is, good temperance soldiers. Third, we must be very faithful in our work and fulfill the law of the Almighty.' There are many interesting facts which we receive from our members on the battle-field. It is said that temperance is the best factor in the victory. Mr. Taro Ando, the president of the Tokio Temperance Society, is working earnestly and conscientiously, giving much time and money to the cause. He is a very busy man as he holds many important positions in different societies. The membership of the Tokio Temperance Society is 2,613, showing thirty per cent of increase during the last six months."

Irritation of the Throat and Hoarseness are immediately relieved by "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Have them always ready.

Ivory Soap
It Floats

The muddy tinge of shirts, handkerchiefs, napkins, and table cloths just from the wash, is often from the poor soap. It will cost little, if any more, to have them washed with Ivory Soap.

The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

Perfect Health

Can only be secured by keeping the Liver and Kidneys in order. Satisfactory results are always secured by using

Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm.

Mothers, fathers, sisters, brothers, all pronounce it the "PEERLESS REMEDY" for curing ailments of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, Female troubles, Rheumatism and Bright's Disease. For sale everywhere at $1.00 per bottle.

THE DR. J. H. McLEAN MEDICINE CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

Dirt defies the king.

If the old proverb be true, SAPOLIO is greater than royalty itself. Try it in your next house-cleaning. Grocers keep it.

DO YOU LIVE IN GREASE?

As a true patriot and citizen you should naturalize yourself by using the best inventions of the day for removing such a charge. To live in Grease is utterly unnecessary when SAPOLIO is sold in all the stores, and abolishes grease and dirt.

A QUALITY SEED OFFER.

Our "Imperial Mixtures" of Asters, Balsams and Pansies, represent the finest strains of these flowers in existence. They are blended from the prize strains of the most celebrated growers of America and Europe. The unique marking and wonderful coloring of the flowers are such as to astonish all who see them in bloom. To introduce our Seeds amongst those who have not used them, and to prove the advertising value of this paper, we make the following offer.

To any one who will send us 16 cts. and mention this paper, we will send one full-sized package each of our IMPERIAL MIXED ASTERS, IMPERIAL BALSAMS and IMPERIAL PANSIES. We will include also a package of the BRIDAL VEIL, one of the most charming flowers ever introduced; invaluable for bouquet work.

In addition to the above, we will send a package of one of the most beautiful FLORAL NOVELTIES ever introduced; a "real" novelty of surpassing merit; a flower that has elicited unbounded admiration from all who have seen it in bloom; more fragrant than Mignonette, and something that will delight every one who grows it.

This offer is not intended to compete with those which give a large number of varieties or packages for a very few cents, nor is it expected to attract the favorable attention of purchasers to whom quantity is the first consideration, quality the second. It is designed, however, to serve as an introduction of our Seeds amongst those who have never used them and who are looking for the finest strains obtainable. Our catalogue for 1895 will be mailed with every order. It is replete with good things in Flower, Vegetable and Farm Seeds; everything correctly illustrated and described.

SEND NOW. THIS OFFER WILL NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

NORTHRUP, BRASLAN, GOODWIN CO., Seed Growers, 24-26-28 & 30 Hennepin Ave. MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

SCOTT'S FREE CATALOGUE OF AND OTHER FLOWERS ROSES

Brighter and handsomer than ever with special features of Premiums, Discounts, Club Offers and Low Prices with full description of the latest varieties and profusely illustrated. IT IS SENT FREE. Write To-day.

ROBERT SCOTT & SON, 19th and Catharine Sts., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1895

"The Leading American Seed Catalogue."

A handsome book of 174 pages with many new features for 1895—hundreds of illustrations, pictures painted from nature—it tells all about the BEST SEEDS that grow, including rare novelties that cannot be had elsewhere. Any seed planter is welcome to a copy FREE. Send your address to-day on a postal.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Seed Growers, PHILADELPHIA.

RUBIFOAM FOR THE TEETH

SAMPLE VIAL FREE.
E. W. HOYT & CO., LOWELL, MASS.

BABY CARRIAGES Shipped C.O.D.

Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without asking one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save dealers' profits. Large illustrated catalogue free Address CASH BUYERS' UNION, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 30, Chicago, Ill.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| $18.50 Carriage for | $9.25. | $12.00 " " | $5.95. |
| $5.00 " " | $2.65. | | |

Most of Eve's Fair Daughters

love flowers, and look to us each year to supply their garden wants. Our 1895 Catalogue of

Everything FOR THE Garden

is a 160-page book, 9x11 inches, containing over 500 engravings and 8 superb colored plates of Seeds and Plants. And as all are drawn from nature, we show, as in a looking-glass, the best of the old and the latest of the new.

To trace advertising, and give our Catalogue the largest possible distribution, we make the following unusually liberal offer:

Every Empty Envelope Counts as Cash.

To every one who will state where this advertisement was seen, and who encloses us 20 cents (in stamps), we will mail the Catalogue, and also send, free of charge, our famous 50-cent Newport Collection of Seeds, containing one packet each of New White Sweet Pea "Emily Henderson", New Butterfly Pansy, New Crested Zinnia, Succession Cabbage, New York Lettuce, and Ponderosa Tomato, in a red envelope, which, when emptied and returned, will be accepted as a 25-cent cash payment on any order of goods selected from Catalogue to the amount of $1.00 and upward.

PETER HENDERSON & CO.
35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST., NEW YORK.

HAIR GOODS Natural curly bangs, $3; parted bangs or waves, for elderly ladies, $3.50 to $6; switches, $1 to $10, according to length and quality of hair. Ladies' and gentlemen's wigs, $8 to $25. Send sample hair. Try Oxzyn Balm and Powder for complexion, 50cts. each. Our store is one of the finest in the West. Call or write.

B. C. STREHL & CO., 191 Wabash Ave., Chicago.
Please mention The Union Signal when writing or calling

Publisher's Notes.

BIBLE READING FOR FEBRUARY.

Power from on High.

By Anna M. Palmer.

The text in Acts 1:4 forms an important part of the last message of the Master to His disciples just previous to His ascension. The central thought imparted, the promise about to be fulfilled, and a command to wait in Jerusalem for its fulfillment.

The writer ably discourses upon the two most important points in Gospel Temperance Work, and emphasizes the need of a large enduement of spiritual power for the worker, and Christ to be presented by the worker as the only safe cure for the sin-bitten multitudes about us.

Most graphically she compares the special call of Moses and of the women of the W. C. T. U.

Thus eloquently closes this excellent Bible reading:

"The Crusade was the temperance Pentecost descending upon the Marys. We tarried until we heard the Master say, 'Ye shall receive power' and 'shall be witnesses unto the uttermost parts of the earth.' This promise has literally been fulfilled, although the kingdoms are not yet restored. Our day of prayer has been our tarrying hours, the 'trysting time' and 'noontide hour' should be tarryings for fresh power from on high."

Please send promptly for this reading before the supply is exhausted.

PRICE.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1 copy | $ .01 |
| 12 copies for | .10 |
| 30 " " | .20 |
| 50 " " | .35 |

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
The Temple,
Chicago, Ill.

...THE...

THOMPSON INSTITUTE

805 Monroe St., CHICAGO

FOR THE TREATMENT OF NERVOUS DISEASES, ALCOHOLISM AND NARCOTICS SPECIALTIES.

What Others Say of It:

The more I know of the results of Dr. Thompson's treatment, the more heartily I can commend it to the confidence of the public.

Bishop Samuel Fallows.

Auspices National Bichloride of Gold Co.

Mark M. Thompson, M. D., Pres.
Rev. P. S. Henson, D. D., Vice-Pres.
G. D. Van Vliet, Sec'y.
Geo. B. Townsend, Treas.

Ursula D Herrick
1029 15th St
6295

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXI.—No. 7. CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 14, 1895. [Price $1.00 Per Year, in Advance.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

PRACTICAL ANSWERS TO PRACTICAL QUESTIONS RECEIVED FROM ACTIVE WORKERS.

QUESTION.—Should the county superintendent of literature be a W. T. P. A. representative?

ANSWER.—Unless the county superintendents of literature are enrolled at the W. T. P. A. office, they will not be entitled to the official discount which such superintendents receive, viz.: Twenty per cent from list rates. This discount provides a fund with which to purchase literature for free distribution.

* * *

Q.—Should unions obtain literature through county or local superintendents?

A.—It is the duty of the county superintendent to bring the subject of literature before every local union in her county, see that a superintendent of literature is elected in each such organization, and instruct the ladies of the several unions to order their literature through the local superintendent of this department, who shall communicate directly with the W. T. P. A., and thus avoid both the confusion and the delay occasioned by ordering through the county superintendent.

* * *

Q.—Should department superintendents procure their own literature from Headquarters?

A.—The superintendents of the various departments, viz., franchise, narcotics, mothers' meetings, etc., should order the literature necessary for the work in their departments through the superintendent of literature, so as to secure the benefit of the discount and enlarge her sales, in order that the per cent allowed may increase the free literature fund. To simplify matters, discount is allowed to none but superintendents of literature.

* * *

Q.—If a local superintendent sends less than ten subscriptions at one time, will you allow her discount?

A.—The superintendent of literature receives a discount of twenty per cent from full rates on all subscriptions, whether sent singly or in clubs, while the club-raiser must secure the full quota before club rates are allowed. Discount is never given from club rates, premium offers or ministers' rates.

* * *

Q.—Are you willing that any one should take subscriptions at eighty or ninety cents per year, and allow the subscriber the benefit of the discount?

A.—The superintendent of literature should collect the full amount of subscription, one dollar, from the subscriber, so that the paper may not be offered for less than the advertised rate, which is an unjust discrimination in favor of a few. The twenty per cent discount should be retained by the superintendent to assist in carrying on the work through the purchase of literature for free distribution, or in sending the paper to some one who would otherwise be unable to subscribe.

* * *

Somebody is at work steadily for new subscribers and premiums, and we are interested in the result. So you will be, and you will be as gratified as we are to learn that the "White Ribbon Hymnal" is the most taking premium.

* * *

One hundred and one new names and one hundred and one new hymnals sent out as premiums.

Fifteen new names and three copies of "Childhood, its Care and Culture," sent out as premiums.

Ten new names and five copies of "David Douglas and His Wife" sent out as premiums.

CAROLINE F. GROW, Bus. Mgr.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Congress has decided to establish a national military park at Gettysburg, Pa.

The temperance committee of the Indiana legislature has decided to favor the Nicholson bill.

A tidal wave swept away lives and property last week at Cape Breton and other points along the Atlantic coast.

Mrs. Charlotte Emerson Brown, first president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, died at East Orange, N. J., February 5.

The Hawaiian cable enterprise has been ratified by the United States Senate, and $500,000 appropriated for beginning the work.

The Kansas senate has appropriated $50,000 for the purchase of seed to be loaned to needy settlers, and the same amount for the relief of the poor.

In face of the disapproval of the House, the President has ordered the sale of sixty-two million dollars of government bonds to maintain the gold reserve.

The British Parliament has reassembled. The message of the Queen included the promise, among others, of the introduction of a bill for the popular control of the liquor traffic.

Six participators in the Hawaiian rebellion have been sentenced to death. As two of these are Americans, the United States government has demanded delay of execution and evidence. The ex-queen, who is held for treason, has written a letter of abdication, and begged for clemency.

THE effort to send at least one state officer to the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in London, Eng., (June 14–21) has already begun in one of the important states and the response is most encouraging. Let the good work go on.

MOTHER EXPERIENCE shares the disappointment of thousands of readers in being obliged to yield her space to the important correspondence of this issue. Hereafter we trust the Local Union department will be a fixed and not a movable feast.

OUR two National officers at Headquarters, Mrs. Barker and Mrs. Stevenson, have flitted away to the Polyglot Petition and Woman's Council meetings at Washington, and for field work in various states. Mrs. Barker will give two or three weeks to lecturing and organizing in North and South Carolina and Kentucky. Mrs. Stevenson has several appointments in Ohio, Maryland and Virginia. During their absence the work will be ably carried on by their faithful assistants.

MRS. REBECCA C. SHUMAN, of Evanston, the maker of the Polyglot Petition, is finishing her herculean task this week, preparatory to the departure of the Petition for Washington. Mrs. Shuman tells us that the Petition proper is already two thousand yards long and growing hourly. She is fairly overwhelmed by letters and potitions pouring in by every mail and is too much occupied to answer all the inquiries as to extension of time, etc. Next week we shall give an interesting interview with Mrs. Shuman.

WORD has just come from South Australia from the president of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Nicholls, of Prospect, Adelaide, that the Adult Suffrage Bill has been carried for South Australia, giving all women the right to vote on the same terms as men and with no barrier to a seat in Parliament. The bill now only awaits the Queen's consent. Mrs. Nicholls writes it is a grand victory after a hard and well fought battle of seven years in which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has done its fair share of the fighting. It was carried by a majority of seventeen, being three votes to spare above the constitutional majority needed to carry the measure.

LIQUOR men, who have been besieging with their bribes the gates of the Dakota legislatures ever since the adoption of constitutional prohibition, followed their capture of South Dakota's solons by a single majority for resubmission in the North Dakota senate. We rejoice that this backward act was promptly nullified last Saturday by the lower house, which in no uncertain manner rejected the bill. While we deplore that the South Dakotan lawmakers have proven so vulnerable, yet we mourn not as they without hope. As South Dakota's law requires only a majority of one legislature, the question will be submitted to the people at the November election. The cloud is dark and threatening but hope gleams like a silver lining, and earnest temperance workers will rally around the Prohibition banner and the polls, ready to support the standard of home protection.

THE inspiration of the Temple Wheel is growing every day. Mrs. Carse's enthusiasm is contagious and her firm belief in the adequacy of the dimes when multiplied by our earnest-hearted white-ribboners is enough to reprove all the doubters and set every one of them to work. So rapidly are the orders for the wheel coming in that Mrs. Carse has been obliged to take a larger office and increase her clerical force. It is not much for each one of our members to do—solicit a dime from twelve of her friends, but if our entire constituency of three hundred thousand (including the boys and girls of the Loyal Temperance Legion) would each fill a wheel this year, the grand total would be $360,000. So magnificent a sum would call out such an admiration for the temperance host that moneyed men could speedily be enlisted to raise the balance of the debt. "Nothing succeeds like"—united endeavor. Let us all help.

THE news of Dr. A. J. Gordon's death reached us too late last week for more than a short announcement. To many readers outside of Boston this news has brought genuine grief, for Dr. Gordon was one of the manliest supporters the W. C. T. U. has ever known, and the husband of the well-known and much loved president of the Boston union. The esteem for Dr. Gordon was not confined to the Baptist church of which he was a pastor, but he had loyal friends and affectionate admirers in every denomination. He antagonized no one, and his deep humility and spirituality drew every one to him and to the Christ whom he so lovingly served. Although his sickness was brief and his death entirely unexpected by his friends, he looked upon it as a fatal illness, and several times during the past winter expressed himself as ready to die. He had just completed a pastorate of twenty-five years at the Clarendon Street Baptist church, Boston, a privilege which he had devoutly craved, and his last book, "The Ministry of the Spirit," was put into his hands the day of his death. "My work is now done," he exclaimed with joyful emphasis, as he saw the book. Our editor-in-chief writes from Boston: "In all these twenty years no pastor of equal power has ever been a warmer friend to the white-ribboners. Nothing in our record inspires me more than to remember that concerning all the principles of the W. C. T. U. we were in perfect accord with a man than whom I have never looked into the face of one more saintly; with a scholar of undoubted authority and a patriot as pure as Washington. The gentle bravery of Dr. Gordon, his brotherly kindness, his chivalric coöperation in all the noble work of Mrs. Gordon, his largeness of mind as well as of heart and soul, stamp him as one of the foremost ministers of the New Testament that this century has produced. God bless his wife and children! How his radiant record and hallowed memories must console them in this hour of loneliness." Without doubt the officers of the World's W. C. T. U. will place Dr. Gordon's name on the In Memoriam list at their coming Convention in London.

A BATTLE PRELUDE.

BY DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

The times are getting ready!
The countermarching vans
Along the path of nations
Move straight in God's great plans;
And He hath not forgotten
The land we love so well,
For He new flags is lifting
Upon her citadel.

The times are getting ready!
The Lord is in the air.
The heavens are full of highways
With chariots of prayer.

The times are getting ready!
Humanity is sick,
But faith has been the Day-star,
And courage groweth quick;
We've had two generations
Of heroes gone before,
Look up and see their banners,
They come a million more.

The times are getting ready!
The lightning in his lair
Is waking up in thunder,
And flashes everywhere.

The times are getting ready!
Oh, say not they are slow,
The Master plans the battle
Enough for us to know;
Great thoughts are His battalions,
Transverse their lines may be,
But flank and wing and center
They move my land for thee.

The times are getting ready
To lay our Bastile low,
And drive our licensed Bourbon
Out of our night of woe.

Cazenovia, N. Y.

THE YELLOW PASSPORT.

A True Tale of Russian Tyranny.

BY VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

(Concluded.)

Two months later. A wild spring night of driving rain, battering with a million hands at the window frames, trampling with a million feet upon the roof. I glance at my watch. "Eight o'clock—no pupil to-night; the poor boy couldn't come four miles in a beating storm like this." And I settled myself for an evening with Renan's History of the People of Israel.

"Israel never stood quietly by to see the world so badly governed under the authority of a God reputed to be just. Her sages burned with anger over the abuses of the world."

A loud and imperative ring startled me from the page. An instant later my pupil entered the room, dripping with the storm, without an umbrella and with such a white, agonized face, that I involuntarily cried, "For God's sake, what is the matter?"

He came straight up to me extending both hands and saying, "I t'ink you are a friend to me, and vill listen to me, and vill not metter if I do express myself bedly, bot' vit ideas and vit vords. I kennot keep still. I must speak vit some one. All day in de fectory I vas like a crazy, dat knows noting v'at 'e is doing. And to-night I am like on fire! My poor Natasha, my poor Natasha!" He clasped his hands to his head and shuddered as if shrinking from a horrible sight.

As gently as possible I urged him to remove his soaking outer garments and draw near the heater, assuring him of my sympathy and willingness to listen to all he might wish to say. He obeyed me with a mechanical movement, but after that first outburst remained silent a long time, with his face bent forward in his hands.

At length I touched his shoulder saying, "You have bad news from Russia. Tell me about it. It will do you good to speak. Never mind your mistakes, I will understand."

He uncovered his face and leaned back in the chair, looking steadily at me as he answered in a low, vibrating voice, "I am so poor-r vit vords, and you are so unused to it det I fear to explain you wrong. But I vill try. You do mind yourself det I vas telling you of some friends of me to come from Russia? I did tell you 'ow I vas caring very much for dem, because I vas leeving vit dem togeder four years-rs. Dey vere sent out, so as I, from Petersburg-gh, but dey vent to one of de gubernias, 'ow is it? de states v'ere Jewys 'ave right to leeve. Dey vould come to vit me to America, only for deir daughter Natasha. She vas dere studying. She is a very, oh! a more dan good scholar, and she did vish very much to finish 'er studies. Certainly she did not go to de school, because dere is Jewys not allowed in de 'igh schools. But she ken to study at 'ome, and ven comes de time she ken pay twenty-five roubles and take de exemination. So is allowed. But after de family vas sent out certainly she ought to go too. Dere is only one vay for her to stay."

He stopped, locked his fingers together desperately an instant, and then flashing a look into my eyes, asked in a still lower tone, "Did some one ever tell you v'at means a yellow passport?"

I shook my head.

"Vell—so is now de law in Petersburg-gh;—det voman Jewys, except de very reech ones, w'o 'ave right to leeve dere, cannot stay unless dey 'ave a yellow passport. And dis passport is given only to de shameful vomen, w'o it is a shame to speak about to you."

I caught my breath. "And your friend—?"

"Yes, my friend 'ad a yellow passport! Not to lose all de years of 'ard, long-gh vork, not to lose de exeminations efter so much fait'ful studying—in spite de all bad circumstances, she did sign herself for a such voman and take de yellow passport."

"Good Heavens!" I cried, "what kind of a law is that which drives out honest women and licenses prostitutes?"

He looked gratefully at me as he answered: "For surely it must seem 'orrible to you. Oh! many times at 'ome, certainly not in public for dere is not allowed to speak against de government, but vit ourselve togeder, ve said 'ow it tears de heart out, such a law. But det is not de all. Dere is again a law det such vomen ought to go, I don't know exactly but I tink once a mont' for de exemination to doctor; I guess 'ere ought to be de same law like in all countries, no? So for a v'ile vas it all right; she gave money to de—dvornik, ve call it,—like in French de concierge,—de 'ousekeeper; only dere is not little 'ouses like ere; dere is per'eps a 'undred families in one 'ouse. She give money to de 'ousekeeper and de 'ousekeeper feex it det she 'ave not to go de exemination. But dis morning I received a letter det she was compelled to go dere. Certainly dey find out she is not such a voman and de officers sent her out.

"But yet is more; you see it is not so far to v'ere 'er parents leeve. I mean it is far but vit riding you could go in one day. But so is de law, too, det not one prisoner shall be sent directly but must go from one town to anoder, all de vay, and take up more prisoners at each place; so it ken sometimes take two, t'ree mont's on de vay. She vas going t'ree veeks, poor Natasha, and she is not strong-gh, and dey treat 'er very badly, so she get de fever, and now she is at 'ome near-r-ly dying. She is out 'er mind and cries and cries all de time for de school and de exemination; and—you see ve vere very liking each oder—and sometimes she cries for me very much. And all day in de fectory I vas 'ering 'er crying, and seeing 'er face and I t'ought I'll burn vit fire. And den—you see de letter is two weeks—I vas t'inking per'eps is she now dead. And den I vas cold like ice. I t'ought I'll go crazy; and I made bed vork, so det my foreman looked bleck at me. Ah, dey are vidout mercy, dose foremen!"

He had taken two letters from his pocket as he spoke, and now as I looked at him in dumb-stricken sympathy he said, "Dere are de bot' letters. Dis one 'ad er picture; you do mind yourself de evening I vas so glad two mont's ago? You vould like to see it? I t'ought to show you den but I didn't."

It was a proud, strong face, delicate in feature, but with a world of resolution in its great Jewish eyes. I felt the tears creeping into my own as I looked at it.

"She is very beautiful," I said, "and very brave and strong in soul. And because she is brave and loves you, we will hope she will have power enough and will enough to survive this shock. And then she will come to America."

He sat quiet for several minutes, but when he arose to go his voice was easier as he said, "I must go. I ought to get up early for de fectory—I ken't stop de vork. But I am glad det I told you. T'enk you."

I closed the door after him and mechanically returned to the page of "Renan" open where I had laid it aside. "They were fanatics in the cause of social justice, and loudly proclaimed that if the world was not just or capable of becoming so, it had better be destroyed at once."

"No wonder," I muttered.

---

To know that He is always coming to us, to know that there is nothing happening to us which is not His coming—to know all that is to find the most trivial life made solemn, the most cruel life made kind, the most sad and gloomy life made rich and beautiful.—Phillips Brooks.

A LEAD PENCIL.

BY J. FOWLER WILLING.

I.

The lead pencil is a good memory crutch. Under the pressure of work the best mnemonic power will limp. There is no better stay for it than a note made on the spot.

We have wondered at the number and aptness of quotations with which our Dr. F. E. Willard enriches her writing and speech. I caught her secret one day,—a small note-book and bit of pencil always at hand. Her memory is quite like that of other poor humans; but she does not overload or overlash it, for fear it will "strike" if driven too long and too far. She helps it on gently and kindly, as we must people, if we would get the best work out of them. She says, "That's a bright thought. It will come in play sometime." So she pins it with her pencil point where it cannot get away.

We have all listened to enough wise and brilliant things to equip us amply for any campaign. We remember them in a general way, but they are not available. Now let us turn over a new leaf. Let each of us arm and equip herself as the law directs with note-book and pencil. Let them be always within reach, even if there has to be a special pocket for them, against Dame Fashion's protest.

We must listen, pencil in hand. At conventions we hear specialists who have made a study of a given work. They know that one thing thoroughly. We are apt to sit like children, laughing and clapping hands over the merry rattle and sparkle of the handfuls of coin that they toss about. We have a good time and that is all. We go away but little richer. If we would catch the coin in our note-books it would do worlds of good among the dear home people who sent us to the rallying of our clans.

We must read, pencil in hand. That is the only way to go through a book properly. Seneca said: "Read much; but read few books." We must never waste time on any book or periodical that is not enriching. Newspaper gossip is as wasteful as that which is retailed by word of mouth. Let the weeklies boil down the dailies. Let the monthly pay a specialist to winnow the chaff from the story of an event, and give us the grain. We must read only the best. What is the use of chatting with a freshman when we can talk with the college president?

Then let us treat our best books with due respect. Let us not gallop through an author's domain in such haste to say that we have "done" his bit of territory, that we carry away but little of his wealth.

We must read, as the children say, "for keeps." As we jog along through a book, let us ask at each turn, "What is there here that I can use?" Then let the pencil put what we find where it is get-at-able when it is needed.

We must own our best books. If we cannot afford them in good binding, we can in paper covers; and we must, if we have to do without sugar in our tea. We must blaze our way through their jungles, so that when we go over the route again we can tell where the best things are found.

If we cannot own the volume we read our pencil can arrange its best thoughts under proper captions in a commonplace book. Some of the best instructors of the people do very little original thinking. They simply bring out in effective order other people's thoughts. They meet the condition made to Jeremiah, and the promise is fulfilled to them: "If thou take forth the precious from the vile—the lightly esteemed—thou shalt be as my mouth." Thoughtfully read, well sifted books will help bring this momentous result.

New York City.

THE OPEN DOOR.

BY ELLA A. BOOLE.

In these days of financial depression and of the struggle of labor to be freed from oppression of capital, it becomes the student of statesmanship to inquire into the cause.

That a combination of causes have produced the present condition of affairs there can be no doubt, but one prolific source of poverty and enemy of labor has been overlooked.

The liquor-seller does a cash business. The saloon is the source of supply of a vitiated appetite. It supplies no real need of the people. It deprives the home of comfort and happiness. It takes the money that ought to supply the family with the necessities of life, to satisfy this vitiated appetite. Thus it injures every other business. The grocer, the butcher and the merchant all do less business, because of the open saloon.

There is not a legitimate business industry but has suffered this past year because one thousand two hundred millions of dollars was spent in the United States for liquor. Divert this one thousand two hundred millions of dollars into legitimate avenues of trade, as it would be if the saloons were outlawed, and immediately there would be such a revival of all business interests as has never before been seen.

The condition of the laboring classes would be vastly improved. Not that all laboring men are habitual drunkards, but even the occasional glass of beer, repeated several times a day, sensibly diminishes a man's wages, while the effect of the beer is to dull the intellect and lessen the ability for work. The use of alcoholic liquors robs labor of the clear brain that is necessary to contend with capital.

The open saloon on Sunday means more poverty and starvation on Monday and Tuesday and every other day in the week; it means more workmen unable to be at store, factory or shop on Monday, more men discharged for drunkenness, more unemployed, more applicants for vacant positions, which always means reductions in wages.

Not only is the liquor traffic the enemy of the laboring man, but it is the enemy of the capitalist as well. It increases taxes, it deprives him of skilled and competent workmen; it breeds discontent, promotes unrest, and by lessening the demand for his manufactured goods robs him of a market for the output of factory or mill.

An open door for the W. C. T. U. is to seize upon these facts and bring them before the masses of the people. This is a form of argument that will appeal to all classes, for all are interested in the financial welfare of the nation. Let each local union take up the study of the temperance question from the financial standpoint, and having become fully convinced that the liquor traffic is a parasite upon the financial body politic let us, "with trust in God, and firmness in the right," labor to win the world.

While I would not detract one iota from the importance of, and necessity for, every other department of work in the W. C. T. U., yet we are all agreed that the saloon makes necessary all the work of our organization, and by means of these departments we are endeavoring to undermine the foundations of a traffic which is sustained by law and upheld by social customs rooted and grounded in the appetites and passions of the people.

We want to produce the "arrest of thought" that is necessary before we can arouse the masses to action, and I believe the financial argument, based on the two cardinal principles, first, that total abstinence is the best financial investment a man can make, and second, that Prohibition is the best financial investment a state or a nation can make, is the open door by which we can reach the masses, and convince them of the necessity of overthrowing the legalized saloon and of destroying the license system upon which it stands.

New York City.

ALICE R. PALMER.

Fifth Round-the-World Missionary.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

About six years ago, at the Lake Bluff convocation, thirty miles north of Chicago on the lake shore, I was presiding under the leafy canopy that shelters the dear old auditorium of that famous temperance resort. Before me on the benches were many women with note-book and pencil in hand, for the school of methods was in full blast under the superintendence of that incomparable teacher, Mary Allen West.

There I saw a young lady whom I had never met before, but her intelligent, attentive face seemed to me that of a typical white-ribboner, and, inquiring into her history, I found that she was the daughter of a Presbyterian minister, who had been a pioneer in Indiana; that she had been well educated, and had left a promising position as a teacher to join our ranks. From that day many of us predicted for Alice R. Palmer an exceptionally wide and useful career. She soon became the state organizer, and built up our work in the systematic way that seems to come as a sort of second nature to the assorted mind of one who has enjoyed the discipline and experience of a teacher's life.

In 1892, when we were looking about for a young woman to send to South Africa in response to the earnest request of our white-ribboners there, who agreed to support her if we would pay the expense of the journey, the name of Miss Palmer came to my mind and was warmly acceptable to the General Officers of the World's W. C. T. U., who proceeded to send her forth on her long journey, and to her laborious duties in a far continent. Miss Palmer came to England in the summer of 1892, and was the guest of Lady Henry Somerset for a few days in London before starting on her second voyage. All went well with her, and she has since been most helpfully engaged in founding and strengthening the local unions that are springing up all through that great new country, in which our heroic Mrs. Leavitt was the pioneer.

In anticipation of writing this sketch, I sent a letter to Miss Palmer, asking her to give me some notes, and have just received the following, which is so off-hand and characteristic that I am confident our women will like it better than any "fixing up" that I could give.*

"I was born in Clark county, Indiana, in 1856, and my mother thinks I partake of the nature of the year, my father being very much interested in expounding 'Free Soil' doctrine about that time, along with that other favorite doctrine of the family concerning 'the final perseverance of the saints.' I became a very radical abolitionist as soon as I was able to know the meaning of the word. One of my first and most vivid recollections is of my father lifting me to his shoulder to see the 'boys in blue marching away to the war,' and I wished with all my little soul that I were a 'big man' so that I could be a general in the union army. I think that is the only time I ever wanted to be a man, for I soon discovered that a woman can be a great general, or at least a faithful soldier when there is need of it.

"You know my father was of New England stock and my mother Scotch Irish on the one side, and 'Ole Virginy blue' on the other. The Scotch manner seems to have percolated through, for the colonists of Scotch descent often tell me 'since I'm in this country' that I seem to fall very readily into their 'ways.' I fancy this is more because my mother taught us to 'be noticing.' She possesses a great deal of quaint humor and used to say with a merry twinkle in her beautiful brown eyes, 'My dear, if you will only keep your eyes wide open and your mouth shut nobody will ever discover that you are a fool.' I was a regular chatterbox and needed this advice—need it yet sometimes, for my heart has not half so often condemned me for remaining silent as for speaking unadvisedly.

ALICE R. PALMER.

"As for early educational influence, my father's whole life was a lesson to me. It is condensed in the words of the 103d Psalm, 'Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him, for he knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust.' I learned to know the Heavenly Father from the ever constant, loving care of the earthly one, and when He took him to Himself I rested in His love, knowing it was because somehow it was best for His children—we can trust a father. It was because my earthly father never forgot to take me for the best I was worth, because he made strength out of my very weakness, because there was no badness in my heart and life I feared for him to know, he was so gentle, helpful and forgiving, that I came to have no fear of the 'all-seeing eye,' but to rejoice in its constant watchfulness.

"Our father went away when I was seventeen, a student in our State Normal School. Three years later I completed my course there and taught for a number of years in the public schools of Shelbyville, Franklin and Indianapolis, Ind. I was never specially distinguished for my teaching ability, though I was sometimes told that I was 'born before my time,' I don't clearly know why. Not long after that, however, I had a position offered me in the High School at home where I had but little supervision and I believe 'gave good satisfaction' to the pupils as well as to myself. I look back upon that season as a very special answer to prayer.

"In 1884 I began to be interested in the work of the W. C. T. U. I do not think I sympathized with the object of their work so much, for I was almost totally ignorant of the effects of drink, but from the first I admired the dauntless courage of the women, and thought there must be a great work to do, for it was plain that God's Spirit was their teacher. I joined the class and learned too. My first convention was at Bloomington, in 1886.

"I must not forget to tell you that, beside my father, I have been so fortunate as to have two men friends. I thought of it just here, because like you, they helped me by taking it for granted that I wanted to do some good in the world, and that I could do what I saw I ought to do. One of these has gone to his long home. He was my father's friend, one who 'talked his best' to me even when I was a child. He did much to curb my naturally hasty and impetuous disposition by pointing out, sometimes in gentle sarcasm, but always wisely and kindly, my besetting faults. The other, for many years my Sabbath-school teacher, never intimated by word or sign that I could be possessed of a fault, yet he was no less helpful. I have had a letter—only one from him in the last year—but one that moulds me for life. 'Always carry a note-book,' he says, 'remember that all that interests you in that wonderful land will interest your friends when you come home. Form the habit of getting a clear mental picture of all that you see, then write out your impressions while they are still vivid; this will be of use to you by and by.'

"But enough of myself; I would like to tell you of the work here. If Theresa M. Campbell had told me before we left New York what a piece of perfection was required to organize South Africa for the W. C. T. U. I should not have had courage to come. The last half of that voyage was made in spiritual fear and trembling. Physically I was in perfect health, for I am a rare good sailor. I find upon intimate acquaintance with Miss Campbell that she is a typical W. C. T. U. woman in that she asks for everything she wants and then gracefully and sweetly takes what she can get!

"The W. C. T. U. is stronger in the Cape Colony than in any other state in South Africa. There is a larger field of labor, having over eighty towns, containing from two or three hundred to as many thousand white inhabitants, Dutch and English speaking. These are widely scattered, however, for fully half these towns are from two to twelve hours' journey by post cart from the nearest railway station. It is nearly three days by rail from Cape Town, in the Western Province to Port Elizabeth, the chief town in the Eastern Province. Our Wellington sisters, who are teachers, took five days of their fortnight's holiday to journey to and from the last annual meeting, and one little lady drove eighty miles from the Transkie to get a resolution passed affiliating a band of a hundred and fifty abstaining Christian native women to the Colonial W. C. T. U. When I tell you there were fifty of the then four hundred regular members present at this meeting you will see that they do not 'stick at little things.'

"The wife of the president of this little Republic kindly gave a drawing-room for me, at which time I gave out fifteen membership cards; most of them were signed, and we afterwards met, electing officers. Mrs. Reitz also invited the leading officers of the I. O. G. T. and myself to dine, and the president indorsed our World's Petition in behalf of a mass-meeting at which he presided and which I addressed in its interests. There are probably not more than two other towns in the Free State where it would be possible to organize at present. Mrs. Gray was instrumental in getting a local union at Pretoria soon after her removal there, and later at Johannesburg, the important city in South Africa. They now have a Y Branch in Johannesburg. Dr. Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew held very successful meetings in these two towns of the South African Republic, and I spent four weeks in the two.

"I have been in Natal since early in May. I am jubilant over blessed little Natal. They told me I was saving 'the best for the last' all along the line, and I find it a true saying.

"It is amazing to me to see the good that has been done by the two hundred women of the Natal W. C. T. U. Mrs. Bridgman is a host in herself, but the distance from Durban, at which she lives, and the increasing infirmities of her husband, make it impossible for her to reach all these meetings in person, and, for the benefit of her counsel, I was obliged to go to her, traveling almost two entire days in an ox wagon, two days in a post cart, part of the time with only the native driver, and seven hours by rail.

"Since leaving home June 15, 1892, I have traveled by steamship 10,000 miles, by rail 5,744 miles, by post cart and private conveyance 856 miles. Our Natal railway trains only average fourteen miles an hour, owing to the hilly structure of the country, and this should be taken into consideration in estimating distance. I have visited in South Africa sixty-two towns, and delivered two hundred and nineteen public addresses. I cannot tell about the number of additions to the unions; we must 'always allow for shrinkage,' and I think we can know more accurately from the treasurers' reports. There is a great deal of the work unreportable.

"I have only to say, 'Surely goodness and mercy have followed me.'"

Boston, Mass.

*This sketch was written last August, but as it could not be published upon receipt, it seems most timely now, as Miss Palmer has just returned to her native land.

CORRESPONDENCE

THE SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION IN THE SOUTH.

Dear Union Signal:—For the first time in its history, the National American Woman's Suffrage Association held its annual convention outside of Washington, D. C. That it should have chosen the heart of what is admittedly the most conservative part of the nation on this question for its first "migratory convention" seems strange, but, as events have proved, profoundly wise. Such a sowing of seed the suffragists have not done in many a year in the same length of time. Such a dispersion of prejudice against the whole woman movement has seldom been accomplished in so short a time. From the beginning of the convention to the close, the large opera house was well filled. The regular attendance upon all the sessions could not have been far from fifteen hundred to two thousand persons, and Sunday afternoon when Anna Shaw preached, there must have been between four and five thousand persons, in the building, while many went away unable to get even standing room.

The comments upon the convention are reported as universally favorable, and many who went feeling a little as though they were going to a prize fight, were heard to express the greatest interest in the proceedings and surprise at the "kind of women" that composed the convention. The press was very generous. A week beforehand the papers gave daily reports of the officers who had come on in advance to make preparations, published interviews with them and printed pictures of all the most prominent women.

The convention was called to order Thursday morning, January 31, by Miss Susan B. Anthony. Though seventy-four years of age, Miss Anthony shows no sign of failing strength in either mind or body. She presided over all the meetings with an unfailing alertness, wisdom, good-nature and a general grasp of the situation which would do credit to a person twenty-five years her junior.

DeGive's Opera House was gay with decorations which it had never worn before—the yellow badge of woman's suffrage. Above the heads of the speakers were two large beautiful United States flags. But one of them had only two stars, yellow stars, representing the only two states of the Union where instead of a "male oligarchy" the government is a genuine republic, the states of Wyoming and Colorado. The other flag had upon it the same two yellow stars, twenty-one others having a narrow band of yellow to show partial woman's suffrage, the remaining stars of black velvet.

The first evening was devoted chiefly to addresses of welcome and responses. One of the brightest speeches of the evening was the address of welcome in behalf of the state by Mrs. M. L. McLendon, of Atlanta. Her remark that some of the ministers and other belated men of Atlanta, by their bitter attacks upon defenseless womanhood "simply fatigued indignation," brought down the house and prepared people to receive the other witty characterizations with which her speech abounded. She assured the convention that when women had the ballot, associations of women would not find difficulty in getting recognition from the city officials. On the contrary they would be invited to hold their meetings in the new capitol, which was paid for by the taxes of men as well as of women, but which, though wide open to all conventions of men, would scarcely admit women in the role of humble suppliants for some needed legislation. Perhaps her most telling point was her reference to the times of the war. As a southern woman, born and reared, Mrs. McLendon does not hesitate to declare any truth learned from past experiences. She said she remembered how at that time ministers proved from the Scripture that slavery was of divine ordination; that the South would prove it by force of arms; that Sherman could never march through Georgia, and the papers printed the sermons just as they do to-day. She added significantly, "we learned to doubt their foresight and their interpretation of Scripture." The applause with which this was received proved that she had scored a point.

Our little Georgia president, Miss Augusta Howard, with characteristic modesty, said a few but very appropriate words on behalf of the Georgia Woman's Suffrage Association and in introduction of Miss Anthony. One of the speakers in the convention truly said that "to be the mother of the Howard girls was a greater honor than to be the mother of the Gracchi." The three sisters, Miss Augusta Howard, Mrs. Claudia Howard Maxwell and Mrs. Miriam Howard DuBose, are southern women who thought themselves out on the suffrage question simply from what they saw and what they experienced with regard to taxation without representation, and other disabilities of a disfranchised class. In the face of bitter opposition amounting even to persecution, they entered upon the work of spreading the truth as they saw it. They organized the Georgia Suffrage Association, have sent literature all over the state, and to their efforts alone is due the coming of the National Convention to Atlanta.

Miss Anthony gave a brief but most telling résumé of the work that had been accomplished since the beginning of the suffrage movement. Then the laws concerning woman formed a strict parallel to the slave code existing in the South. She did not own the clothes on her back, had no right to her children, her earnings belonged to her husband, she could hold no property in her own right, she could neither sue nor be sued, nor could she appear as a witness in courts of justice. In some states many of these disabilities exist to-day.

Miss Yates, of Maine, took as her text, "They that have turned the world upside down have come hither also," and divided her subject into four heads: First, the world was originally right side up; second, the devil turned it over; third, it must be turned back again, and fourth, we are the people who must do it. In her discussion she reviewed woman's history as far back as we can trace it. It was, therefore, somewhat amusing to read in an editorial in the Atlanta Constitution after the close of convention the solemn statement that "the women who are engaged in this movement should study the history of the past," accompanied by other statements which facts and statistics brought to light in the convention clearly disproved; as "the right to vote would send every negro woman to the polls while the whites would stay at home." "At the present time women have all the rights in the courts and elsewhere that they need." "They are felt at the polls just as much as if they were present themselves."

The reports of the state presidents showed the work done during the year, and proved the steady advance of the suffrage sentiment. The report from Colorado was of special interest because it told of complete victory, of the effects of woman's suffrage thus far, and it was made by a southern woman, Mrs. Taylor, who was born and raised in Alabama and married into Colorado. In contradiction of the statement of the southern press that a southern woman would have blushed to witness the election in Colorado, Mrs. Taylor said that she went through the entire campaign without blushing except with gratification. A Maryland woman arose and told of two of her friends who went from Maryland to Colorado, conservatives of the conservative, and who had written her that they were a hundred years ahead of her in her pet hobby and advised her to come west and grow up with the country. Mrs. Taylor testified that the persons who had carried woman's suffrage in Colorado to a successful issue were the women, the very best and most prominent business men, and, with a single exception, all of the papers which had a circulation worth mentioning. "I do not want my southern friends to think that suffrage was bestowed upon Colorado women by unmanly men and unwomanly women. It was the best people of the state who did it. Our only opponents were the saloonists." She said that the three women legislators were treated with the utmost respect by their brothers, and spoke of the successful attempt of one of them, Mrs. Holly, to carry through the house a bill raising the age of consent to twenty-one years. The convention voted to record in its archives the fact that the first bill ever introduced by a woman legislator was one for the protection of the home. Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake's report of the constitutional campaign in New York was of great interest, but as it has been very prominently before our W. C. T. U. women it need not be retold now. Mrs. Blake said the New York women were not discouraged, they were going at once to Albany to petition the legislature, and with good hopes of success, for the legislature was much nearer the heart of the people than was the constitutional convention.

Kansas, too, comes from a hard fought battle. Its indefatigable president, Mrs. Laura M. Johns, told the story admirably, explaining the situation and analyzing the causes of defeat. Chief among these was the hostility of the liquor traffic. The liquor men of the nation have decreed the re-submission of the prohibitory amendment in Kansas, but the use which Kansas women have made of the municipal suffrage makes it certain that re-submission cannot be secured if Kansas women have the full franchise. The first step necessary, therefore, was the defeat of woman's suffrage. On this account Mrs. Johns advised women never to work for partial suffrage of any kind, unless it be the presidential franchise, inasmuch as when they have municipal or other suffrage they never fail to arouse the enmity of the liquor dealers, and they then take their revenge when the question of the full enfranchisement of women comes up. Alas, that the good men of the land are not as wise as the liquor dealers! If they were, they would rally for the enfranchisement of women as the liquor men rally against it, and woman's suffrage and prohibition would come in at once.

The committee on plan of work, however, differed from Mrs. Johns as they considered that the educational effects of a suffrage campaign more than made amends for any ills arising from partial suffrage. Various other differences of opinion coming to light as the advisability of securing endorsement of political parties, of working for constitutional suffrage without first securing a thorough organization of the suffrage forces, etc., Anna Shaw was led to point a moral. She said the possibility had been suggested that on some occasion the women might all vote for war and the men all vote against it, and the dreadful problem would then be raised how the women could make the men fight. She thought these differences of opinion threw a hopeful light upon the problem, for it seemed probable that on no given occasion the women would all vote for war.

Kentucky, where the women made their brave and successful fight against Breckinridge, had a report of no less interest than any other state. Mrs. Josephine K. Henry, the beautiful Kentucky woman who was one of the foremost in the fight, said: "We did everything that women can think of, and you know women can think of a good many things; and we defeated him by the paltry majority of two hundred and fifty-one votes; but if women had had the ballot, we would have rolled up such a majority against him that he would never have been heard of again." The campaign, however, was not without its beneficial effect, for Mrs. Henry reports that during it the women were converted to suffrage by the hundred.

North Carolina and Texas appeared in the ranks of the suffrage association for the first time this year.

As an indication of the progress the suffrage question had made in the public mind, Miss Anthony mentioned at one session that the day before the correspondent of the New York Herald had received a telegram from the editor, saying: "Add another thousand words to your report of the convention to-day." Miss Anthony added that twenty years ago, when she and Mrs. Stanton were getting up "The History of Woman's Suffrage," a reporter of the New York Sun asked Mr. Dana if he shouldn't go and find out what those women were doing. "No," he replied. "People don't care anything about what they are doing. No one would read your article if you should write it."

The evening speeches were very fine, and left absolutely nothing of the various objections brought against woman's suffrage. On one occasion Miss Shaw took for her text the answer of some man who had been interviewed by the Constitution reporter. The unfortunate individual had been led to say that because of her excitable nature, her inability to control herself, woman was unfitted to exercise suffrage. Miss Shaw quoted also Herbert Spencer's words to the same effect, in which he said that the government should be left in the hands of the "legal male mind" until the "emotional female mind" should have had time to evolve. Miss Shaw began by reading the evening paper, which contained an account of the fight in the United States Congress between the honorable gentleman from Kentucky and the honorable gentleman from Missouri. Her comment was, "the poise, the magnificent balance of the 'legal male mind.'" She then proceeded to describe the effect of political excitement upon the "legal male mind" as she had many times witnessed it in political conventions. She described the convention which nominated Harrison for the presidency the first time: "The magnificent Auditorium at Chicago was crowded to its utmost capacity with 'legal male minds.' It was probably one of the finest assemblies that have ever gathered in this country. When the announcement of the nomination came with one shout and yell and scream and screech those 'legal male minds' sprang to their feet and howled until the roof of that vast auditorium seemed to sway with the vibrations of the 'legal male mind.' But that didn't satisfy those 'legal male minds'; they jumped into their chairs, they threw their silk hats in the air and when they came down they jumped on them: and that didn't satisfy the 'legal male minds'; they rushed back and forth, shouting, 'What's the matter with Harrison? He's all right.' I saw two 'legal male minds' rush at another 'legal male mind,' seize him and try to pull him in opposite directions, his coat split up the back, and they left him spinning like an animated top. I have been in a great many conventions of 'emotional female minds,' when they elected their officers but never in my life did I see an 'emotional female mind' throw her bonnet in the air and shout, 'What's the matter with Susan B. Anthony?' I never saw one 'emotional female mind' knock another 'emotional female mind's' bonnet over her eyes as she answered, 'She's all right.' No, when we get very much excited we just—(here she gave the Chautauqua salute) and when that doesn't satisfy the 'emotional female mind' we all stand up and sing—'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow.'" The "legal male minds" and "emotional female minds" in the audience alike laughed till they cried and applauded with equal enthusiasm. It is entirely safe to say that neither class of mind which was in the opera house that night will ever deny woman's capacity for the ballot on the ground of her "emotional" nature.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman-Catt is one of the very finest of the suffrage speakers. Her voice is clear, melodious and strong, her arguments are unanswerable. She showed from statistics that in giving the suffrage to women with an educational qualification, lay the solution of the whole vexed question of the illiterate vote, north and south. She also said that the question, "What are you going to do with the bad women?" had been put to her so often that she set herself to find out how many bad women there were in the country. After weeks of the most careful investigation she was prepared to give the number as about 500,000. But in her investigation she had learned another fact, and that was that there were in the neighborhood of twelve bad men for every bad woman. This would make the number of bad men in the country 6,000,000. It was therefore fair to suggest that if the men would take care of the bad men, we would take care of the bad women. We should have 12,000,000 women who could read and write. Setting aside the bad women and an equal number of good women to fulfil our part of the contract, we should have left 11,000,000 good women, "and we won't ask you to keep your part of the contract; we will do it for you in addition to our own part. We will set off 6,000,000 good women to balance the bad men and we will still have left 5,000,000 good women."

The election of officers which took place Saturday afternoon bore a striking resemblance to the same procedure in W. C. T. U. conventions. Every officer was elected on the informal ballot. The vote for Miss Anthony as President was unanimous, 194 votes being cast. The other officers elected were: Vice-President at large, Rev. Anna Shaw; corresponding secretary, Rachel Foster Avery; recording secretary, Alice Stone Blackwell; treasurer, Mrs. Harriet Taylor Upton.

Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, or rather long before that time, which was the hour for the opening of the services, the opera house was crowded from topmost gallery to the lower floor to hear Rev. Anna Shaw's sermon. Those who know Miss Shaw need not be told that her sermon was a masterly effort.

A reception was given at the Aragon on Monday evening to Miss Anthony and the delegates by the Georgia and Atlanta Woman's Suffrage Association. It was largely attended, many of the most prominent people of the city being present. Among the number was Governor Adkinson.

The committee on Woman's Congresses of the Cotton States and International Exposition extended to the convention an invitation to visit the exposition and tendered them Oct. 17, as Woman's Suffrage Day. The invitation was accepted.

There is no doubt about it. Woman's suffrage has been planted in the South in soil that was ready to receive it.

Isabella Webb Parks.

South Atlanta, Ga.

ANOTHER GAIN FOR TEMPERANCE.

Editors Union Signal:—At various times The Union Signal has taken occasion to note the gradually growing sentiment amongst our Catholic brethren in favor of total abstinence. The important advance made by Bishop Watterson, of Columbus, last winter, upheld by Mgr. Satolli in the early summer, was the last great forward step to which you drew attention. The good news we have to communicate now relates to one of the great Orders in the old church—the Dominicans. The members of this order in the United States are, at the recommendation of their Superior, taking the pledge for life.

The Dominican Order was founded by St. Dominic, a Spaniard, away back in 1215. Their aim is missionary.

They go about giving what Catholics call "missions"—a term signifying something like what Protestants understand by the word "revivals." They wear a white habit and call themselves the "Order of Preachers," the initials "O. P." being always found after the names of the members of the order. Dominicans are to be found in perhaps every country on the globe, and wherever they are they make their influence felt. At all times for six hundred and eighty years, the followers of St. Dominic have had representatives in the van of progress. Some of the greatest of the world's workers have lived according to their rule. St. Thomas, of Aquin, the great mental philosopher, whose deductions Protestants as well as Catholics adopt, wrote "O. P." after his name. So did Father Burke, whose eloquence was always such a terror to the late J. A. Froude.

There are about one hundred priests of this order in the United States. They have somewhere near twenty houses scattered throughout various cities.

The Superior of the Eastern Province is Very Rev. Dr. Higgins, O. P., and this article is occasioned by reason of the advanced ground lately taken by this Rev. official. While making his prescribed annual visit to the cradles of the Order in Ohio and Kentucky a few days since, he advised all present, both teachers and students, to take the total abstinence pledge, in order, he said, that by using example as well as precept, they might the more successfully preach temperance. Every soul present in both houses took the pledge from him for life. Who can tell where such a grand beginning may end?

St. Paul, Minn. A. W. Gutridge.

PETITIONING FOR SUFFRAGE.

Editor Union Signal:—Perhaps some of the readers of the Chicago Herald who noticed an editorial, "Women do Not Ask Suffrage," became very indignant that so leading a paper did not speak more kindly of the suffrage measures before the present Illinois legislature. The trouble with this editorial, and the reason that it makes us provoked, is because much of it is true. We can endure calumnies with true martyr-like resignation, but when it comes to hearing the truth about ourselves, we do not like it.

This editorial says: "Their use of the electoral privilege already in their hands is too inert, too spasmodic, too careless, to justify further legislation." Those of us who were anxious to get a larger vote of Illinois women for trustees of the State University last fall would hesitate to admit this to be the truth as far as Illinois goes. But probably not more than 100,000 women of the 600,000 entitled to vote appeared at the polls to register and vote. When the editorial says that ninety-nine per cent of the women absolutely refused to use it, that figure seems too large. It seems an exaggeration, especially when we come to other states where women have more suffrage privileges, or the full franchise. From those states, Washington, where women voted for four years; Wyoming, where they have voted for twenty-five years, and Kansas, where the municipal franchise is in their hands, as large a proportion of women as of men have voted. When one can vote for quite a number of officers it seems worth while to take the trouble to register and vote. That must be the excuse why five-sixths of the Illinois women did not vote last fall.

The Herald says that men, the intelligent and thoughtful, are ready to give women the ballot when they ask for it, and that is true, but there are a few men who break into legislatures who could not properly be classed as among the intelligent and thoughtful! From those, women have not had any encouragement.

It is a fact which we often acknowledge in the privacy of our women's meetings, that while the better class of men are willing to give women the ballot, their own wives and daughters are sometimes indifferent. There is a reason for that. Such men never insist on their full legal rights. If every husband in Illinois for one day only, would insist on his full legal rights as far as relates to his wife and children, every one of those wives would be so indignant that the legislature would be overwhelmed with petitions asking for changes in the laws and the full ballot for women. The average man is better than the law could force him to be, and so some women are lulled into a false sense of security. But let this generation of men pass off the face of the earth and a different kind take their place, life would be a torment to the women then under existing laws.

The Herald editorial shows us a way out. "If the bills for the extension of suffrage are supported by petitions in numbers that are convincing that women desire a larger participation in politics, the Herald is of the opinion that the bills should be taken seriously and fully considered. "Up to the present time women in this state have not asked full suffrage. Until they ask it legislation should avoid the subject."

That shows us what we must do. We must pour in petitions in great numbers. The negroes did not have to petition for suffrage. Neither did the Indians who renounced tribal relations, nor the foreign barbarians, nor our own beardless boys. But a different rule has been established concerning women. If we do not petition we will not get suffrage. If we do petition perhaps we may.

Some little work has already been done showing that some women do desire extension of franchise in Illinois. The Township Suffrage bill, which is championed by the Illinois Equal Suffrage Association, passed one House two years ago, and would have passed the other but for the treachery of some pretended friends, who smothered it in committee. This bill was then supported by more petitions than were sent in for all the other bills in the legislature put together. Mrs. Metzger, of the state W. C. T. U., also worked for this bill, and I have no doubt but what the state W. C. T. U. will do the same this winter. That magnificent organization with ten thousand members, with the workers from the Suffrage Association, ought to convince even the writer of editorials that it is no "inconsiderable fragment of the womanhood of the state who desire the ballot."

Catharine Waugh McCulloch,
Legislative Sup't for Ill. Equal Suffrage Ass'n.

FROM AN HONORED WORKER.

Dear Union Signal:—Permit me through your columns to thank the National Union for the kind, sisterly greetings sent from Cleveland, as well as each preceding annual Convention since I have been laid aside. I owe a lasting debt of gratitude to my sisters across the line for courtesies and kindness in various ways. It was from them I learned the mode of work which is now leading the temperance world. The little cloud that rose at Chautauqua has spread from shore to shore until now it can be truly said that on the W. C. T. U. the sun never sets. I am so glad, that although disabled, I am still in the army, not mustered out but simply on a furlough.

My heart grieves at your recent losses, especially Mrs. Lathrap, as I knew her best. It does seem that her loss is irreparable. When she visited me during her recent visit to Toronto, she was so jubilant and apparently robust. Is it possible she has gone before me? I used to listen to her burning words of eloquence and often felt that I could never again address an audience. Her telegram to Miss Willard touched my heart: "The chariot swings low. Resigned. Trusting." It was indeed sublime for her to be resigned. She had so much to tie her to earth. Brilliant talents, almost unequaled popularity, an elegant home and a noble, indulgent husband, who fully recognized her divine call to the work in which she was engaged. How mysterious the ways of Providence! God buries his workmen but carries on His work.

Our hearts rejoice at the restoration of dear Miss Willard to apparent health; it seems so nice to have her on this side old ocean again, and that the deep sea does not separate us. We have had our bereavements, dear Mrs. Fawcett, who has successively held every office, local, Provincial and Dominion, she has obeyed the summons, "Come up higher." Methinks I see her now, with Mrs. Woodbridge and Mary Lathrap, happy, redeemed spirits before the throne.

We have now a magnificent hall in Toronto, the gift of H. A. Massey, one of our prosperous Canadians; there is nothing like it in this Dominion, and we will not be satisfied until Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset stand upon its platform. Your Canadian sister, Letitia Youmans.

Toronto, Can.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE IN BUSINESS.

Dear Union Signal:—Apropos to your editorial of January 24, I send extracts from a letter received to-day from an official of one of the largest western railway systems running out of Chicago.

A switchman, crippled in the service of the company, was last summer discharged for drinking. For several months he has refrained from drink. A brother employé importuned me to take up the case with the company. In view of his long service, his crippled condition and his abstinence for several months I did so.

A few sentences from the letter referred to indicates the unyielding position of the road. This really kind-hearted official says: "A man who would do as he did is not a safe man to have on the road. I cannot think of taking him back. It is absolutely necessary to enforce discipline and especially in regard to liquor. . . . I am sorry for W—— and if I could help him, personally, outside of railroad business, I would be glad to do so; but I have my duty to perform and I cannot allow my sympathies to stand in the way. I thoroughly appreciate your effort in behalf of this man; at the same time, I am obliged to decline to reinstate him."

It is proper to state that this was not a first offense. Many incidents come to the observation of workers in the railway departments all emphasizing the magnificent gain in sentiment and practice, in favor of total abstinence, in lines of the most perfectly organized business in the country. Yours for sobriety,

Seward, Neb. Caroline M. Woodward.

FOR PENNSYLVANIA WHITE-RIBBONERS.

Dear Union Signal:—Senator Vaughan of Lackawanna, Pa., has brought before the senate an act "authorizing the school directors or controllers of the several school districts of this commonwealth to establish and maintain out of the public school treasury, free kindergartens for infants and children under six years of age" in the state of Pennsylvania. I would ask all subscribers to The Union Signal living in Pennsylvania to write to their county member and senator, asking them to assist in securing the above act. Senator Vaughan thinks it would assist him greatly if the officers and members of each union of the W. C. T. U. would write to their representative and senator of the legislature now in session in Harrisburg, Pa., urging the passage of this bill. We owe it to the children, particularly of the very poor to establish free kindergartens. The voice of the people must be aroused before we can accomplish it. All communications if not sent immediately to the legislative hall may be addressed to me. Agnes Kemps.

Harrisburg, Pa.

THANKS FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

Dear Union Signal:—Last summer at Chautauqua I had the pleasure of speaking in the W. C. T. U. headquarters about our temperance work in South Africa. At the close of the meeting the kind friends present made a collection and gave me six dollars and a half towards literature to help in our work. I sent out a package of literature and last week I had a letter from our colonial president, Miss Campbell, in which she says how grateful they are for the kindly interest shown. She adds: "I wish you would thank the donors in my name for their gift. It is at work." As I have no way of thanking them personally I shall be glad to have this letter inserted in your columns where, I trust, it will meet the eyes of those to whom it is addressed. It is these little things which make us realize our common sisterhood.

Yours faithfully,

Englewood, Ill. Emilie J. Solomon.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

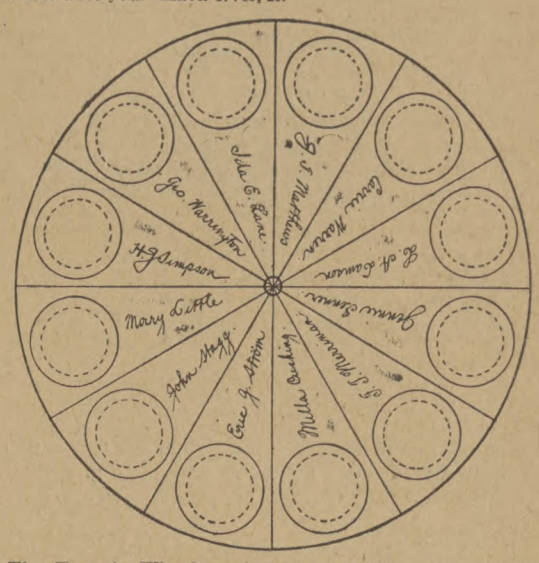
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Then came the disciples to Jesus apart, and said, Why could not we cast him out? And Jesus said unto them, Because of your unbelief; for verily I say unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you.—Matt. 17:19, 20.



The Temple Wheel again! you exclaim. Yes, my sisters, the Wheel is in my head, my heart and my hands. I shall never be content until I get it not only in the head but the hands of every white-ribboner and L. T. L. boy and girl in the land. It is only ten days since the first Wheel was sent out and already they are whirling back ladened with their silver freight.

***

The first Wheel received was from Miss Ellen Dickison, Grand Ridge, Ill., who supports herself by the labor of her hands, but she was not too busy nor too weary to find time to go out in the evening and work a little for the Temple; she writes, "I got eight names and dimes Saturday evening after I received the Wheel and the other four to-night, Monday. I think it will be a grand way of getting money, and if you will allow it to count on the one hundred dollars pledged by our union, I will fill the Wheels as fast as I can."

***

The one that has the honor of sending in the second Wheel filled, is little six year old Elsie Thorp, Pawcatuck, Conn. Mrs. Thorp writes, "Elsie received the Wheel only yesterday; she bids me say to you she worked hard to get it filled. She wants the Brownie game sent in return. My other three children will send their Wheels soon.

"I consider this is the best plan you have ever offered to interest children. I shall take Elsie's prize and show it to the Loyal Temperance Legion and tell them about the Wheels so as to interest them to send for some."

***

Miss Frances E. Willard writes in regard to the Temple Wheel, "I think this is the brightest plan yet for raising money for the Temple, because it bears so lightly upon any individual and gives an inducement not only to the one who contributes the ten cents but to the one who induces twelve persons each to give the same amount. Lady Henry, Anna Gordon and myself are all filling our Wheels."

***

Great numbers of letters are being received asking if unions can raise their hundred dollars by filling Wheels, and if so, can the members who get a Wheel filled receive a premium? If a union fills one hundred Wheels, they will be credited with a hundred dollars and the persons filling the Wheel will receive a premium, but not otherwise. If a union is large, numbering from fifty to a hundred, they could easily raise a hundred dollars in a few days in this way.

***

Mrs. B. V. Hypes, South Charleston, O., sends $50 on the South Charleston W. C. T. U. pledge. This makes $65 the union has paid. The Berkley (Va.) W. C. T. U., sends through Mrs. Lelia Simpson $37.50 on their pledge. The money was the result of a mite-box opening. The Alexandria, Neb., W. C. T. U., through Mrs. Jessie M. Park, sends $15 on their pledge. Mrs. Ida E. Davies, Nebraska City, Neb., sends $20 for the union, to be credited on the Oloe county pledge.

***

Miss Julia Torboss, Philadelphia, Pa., writes a beautiful letter full of sympathy in the work of the Temple. She says: "I am delighted with the Temple souvenir spoon. We will always keep it as one of our greatest treasures. I feel glad that I have had the privilege of doing a little for the grand and noble work. I am going to try to fill my mite-box again this year." Our friends can all earn one of these beautiful spoons by filling a mite-box during 1895. Or earn it at once by sending for four Temple Wheels and filling them.

***

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money order and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

"WE ARE SO FEW."

The long, blest chain is broken—
So many links have softly dropped from sight!
So many names are now in sadness spoken—
Names once so bright!

"We are so few!"
We count them on our fingers,
One, two, a half a dozen left to cheer;
And then in faltering tones our converse lingers
On those as dear.

"We are so few!"
And kisses seem more holy,
And partings touch the soul to deeper woe;
Stern hearts grow gentle; pride becometh lowly,
When we say so!

"We are so few!"
And eyes seek signs of failing;
Age groweth dark when years take one by one!
Death fills the air. A sense of dull bewailing
Blots out the sun.

But hark! It seems to us an angel speaketh:
"We are so many!" Aye, so many, there!
A dawn upon the gray horizon breaketh—
A day most fair.

We count them! Not by fingers, but by heart-beats,
By thrills of joy and hope, by wings of faith!
The chain is drawn together—softly parts—meets—
This is not death!

They keep our places for us. Some day gladly
Shall fall on us God's fresh, immortal dew;
In heaven we nevermore can murmur sadly,
"We are so few!"

—Zion's Herald.

MRS. LAKE'S VALENTINE.

BY LIZZIE YOUNG BUTLER.

It was snowing. A noiseless flutter of soft, large flakes dropped swiftly to the earth covering it with a whiteness almost heavenly. Mrs. Lake, looking from her sitting-room window upon the fallen flakes, wondered if the robes of the righteous could be more resplendent and beautiful. Then she sighed. Theodore had just gone away with the word added to his good-bye: "Shan't be home until late to-night. Don't sit up for me, Celia. It's club night, you know."

Yes, she knew—; and that sigh? Well she knew, also, that her husband could not claim, as yet, the "robes of the righteous." A sadness of minor feeling left its impress upon Mrs. Lake's face as she sat and gazed, with unseeing eyes, upon the rapidly whitening fields.

Theodore Lake walked quickly down the street, haunted by the quick and saddened look which had leapt from his wife's eyes into his as he said good-bye.

"Oh, fudge!" muttered he, quickening his pace, "I don't see why she should so object to my going to the club. I'm sure," half apologetically, and with an insight into the reason, "the little wine we get there does us no harm."

So engrossed was he in his own thoughts that he almost ran into two women who were just ahead of him. As he slackened his footsteps he heard: "It will be a fine lecture without doubt. Mrs. Ames is a delightful, earnest, magnetic speaker, and I would not miss hearing her. Yes; to-night, at the Temple."

Then each woman went on her way, and Mr. Lake hurried to his office, this new undercurrent of thought in his mind. As he sat apparently deeply engrossed with his ledger one would scarcely have thought that his mind was elsewhere. The name of that woman lecturer, so prominent in temperance work, had opened the floodgate of his memory. He and Celia one night long ago were within a little church listening to an earnest address. How the words had thrilled them! How the personal experiences of the speaker, told with wonderful power and pathos, had moved them to tears. How, on the way home, with Celia's arm linked closely within his own, they had exchanged their thoughts, and the earnest hope that they might hear Mrs. Ames again. So she was to lecture there in the city that night! Many thousand miles from the little church where they had first heard her, and yet the same woman, the same thrilling speaker. How Celia would love to hear her. But he drew his brows together and told himself he was an idiot. Temperance was well enough for the common drunkard; of course, he needed temperance lectures; but as for Theodore Lake, he was certain he could take care of himself.

The hands on the clock moved swiftly along and dusk crept in at the windows. Mr. Lake put his books into the safe, locked it, put on coat and gloves and hat and went out. Not heeding the direction he took, he found himself in front of a restaurant; he went in and gave his order. While waiting he picked up a bill from the table. That lecturer again! He wished he had kept away, and yet he perused the slip of paper with an earnest interest unusual to him. He could not have told whether his meat was well seasoned or not so busy was he with crowding thoughts and memories; indeed, a touch on his arm and a low-spoken, "pay, sir," as he was leaving the restaurant, told him he had not remembered to give an equivalent for his meal. With a laugh he handed out the cash, gave himself a mental shake and proceeded quickly in the direction of the new club-house. Indecision in its several stages flashed over his face as he walked along.

"I'll do it," he said at last, as with quickened heart-beat he passed directly by the club-house and took the road home. "Celia doesn't have many pleasures, and I know she will think lots of this one."

He ran lightly up the front steps and entered the hall.

"Celia! Ce-lia!" he called.

"Here, Theodore! Oh, what is the matter?" asked Mrs. Lake, hastening from the library to meet him.

"Why, nothing," with an embarrassed laugh. "Get your bonnet, wife of mine, I want you to go to the lecture with me; Mrs. Ames, the woman we heard so long ago, gives one of her talks to-night."

"Oh, Theodore!" gasped the bewildered, happy woman, hurrying into her dressing-room. The tears came many times and were wiped away as she prepared for the evening's treat, different emotions filling her heart.

. . . . . .

"Just as earnest and magnetic a speaker as ever," commented Theodore Lake as he tucked his wife's hand within his arm after the lecture.

"Just the same," agreed Mrs. Lake. "Do you know, Theodore, I seemed to be back in the little old church all the evening," with a catch in her voice.

"So did I," said Mr. Lake.

"Things were different then," wistfully. "I could almost wish we had never learned so much of the world and its ways, Theodore," with a question in her voice.

For answer he hugged closer the hand in his arm.

The next morning, as Mrs. Lake, thinking with a grateful, happy thrill of her husband's affectionate good-bye was flitting about her pretty home, planning Theodore's favorite dessert for dinner, she heard the postman's whistle.

"Large mail this morning," she said, taking the packet from his hand.

"Yes'm; all I can carry. It's Valentine's Day, you know," and with a pleasant nod he went whistling down the street while Mrs. Lake untied her package. Within, looking out from its silver setting, was an artistic copy of the pledge, signed by Mr. Lake.

. . . . . .

"Yes, I did it while you slept, Celia. Mrs. Ames' entreaties clung so persistently I couldn't get rid of them. In fact, Celia, dear, I'm converted clear through to God and to—habits!" A sudden convulsive hug broke into his speech. "Not an altogether appropriate valentine, dear, but I thought since you and St. Valentine celebrate together, you'd like it for a birthday's gift."

"More than anything in the world, my dear husband," was the answer given, with her face close to his and her arms twined about his neck, while from her happy heart ascended a thankful prayer that Mrs. Ames had been sent to them.

Rockland, Me.

MOTHERS' MEETINGS.

BY MRS. J. H. KELLOGG,
General Secretary Mothers' Meetings.

The more we study the problems of the age the more is the conviction forced upon us that the hope of the world lies not so much in *re*formation as in right formation; that we must begin at the outset of life to cultivate the man in the nursery as the gardener cultivates his plants. Viewing this thought from another standpoint we are impressed with the magnitude and importance of the work of the mother whose high and holy privilege it is to give direction and trend of character to the little beings whom God sends into the world so plastic and impressionable that they may be likened to clay in the hands of the potter.

In no other calling in life are the finite and the Infinite so closely allied as in mother-work. Indeed, she who conscientiously endeavors to fulfill her mission is nothing less than a co-worker with God.

While there is no work on earth of higher import it is an unfortunate fact that motherhood is the only responsible position for which some special preparation is not demanded. As has been aptly said, "The individuals who build our ships, cut our clothes, manufacture our watches, superintend our machinery or tend our cattle, must know how, must have been specially prepared for their calling. It is only character-moulding, the shaping of human destinies, for which is demanded neither preparation nor a knowledge of the business."

The children which we see all around us growing up without self-control, leading selfish or purposeless lives, lacking those elements of character which will make their lives useful and pleasing in the sight of God, attest the need of education in child culture on the part of parents, for how shall a mother, herself unprepared for intelligent work, cultivate the best there is in her children? It is like the blind leading the blind, and it is scarcely to be wondered at that one or both often fall.

Granting the need of intelligent training, where is it to be obtained? There are no colleges for the training of mothers. It is true she who earnestly seeks knowledge may obtain it from various sources, but there are many mothers who do not realize their need.

To help in this education of mothers is the true aim of the department of mothers' meetings. If rightly conducted such meetings may serve an excellent purpose in arousing the indifferent and thoughtless, since oftentimes such an one will listen and take heed who would not search for herself. These meetings will help to stimulate the mother, who is already sensible of the gravity of her stewardship, to the necessity of action in definite directions, and will open up to the uninformed mother a field of knowledge hitherto undreamed of. The mothers' meeting is a line of work which every union can undertake, and there is no community where such work is not needed, and seldom one where a sufficient number of mothers may not be interested to make them a success. How such meetings may be begun and continued is told in a little leaflet obtainable of the National superintendent of the purity department, or of the general secretary of mothers' meetings.

Difficulties will no doubt arise, but such should only serve to double our zeal. No good thing, either in this life or in the life to come, can be attained without effort, and oftentimes much hard labor and self-sacrifice on our part. Large and immediate results are not often to be expected. Those who most need the help will often be the least ready to come and receive it. If one plan does not succeed another may be tried, as there are many ways of accomplishing the same result. Different people in different places require different methods. With mothers accustomed to systematic study in other lines, the permanent organization of a mothers' club may serve the best purpose. For mothers of the less intelligent class the work must be actuated by the same spirit in which other missionary work is undertaken. Do not be discouraged if the number in attendance at first is small. A few really interested persons will in the end do more good and make the success of the work more certain than a larger number who are indifferent. Nothing will help to gather in the mothers as much as personal visitation, but if some are too far away for personal calls a written invitation would serve.

The question is often asked, How shall we maintain interest in mothers' meetings?

Enthusiasm in any direction is hard to keep up unless, like a fire, it is fed. New themes, new sources of information, new persons in attendance at the meetings will all aid in keeping them aglow with interest. Get the mothers to work; let them share actively in the meetings according to their ability. By this means they will gain confidence, strength and interest in the work. Participation is one key to interest and success. Another helpful means of keeping up the interest is for the members to follow out some systematic course of reading in their own homes in the interval between the meetings.

Such a course, the most comprehensive for the least outlay that we are able to suggest, would be gained from the following books and leaflets:

1. "The Children's Wing," by Elizabeth Glover, with which may be read "The Science of Motherhood," by Hannah Whitall Smith.
2. "How John and I Brought up the Child," in connection with which read the leaflet, "Obedience," Mothers, Meeting Series (W. T. P. A.) "Words to Mothers," (Social Purity Leaflet, Good Health Publishing Co.)
3. "A Study of Child Nature," by Elizabeth Harrison, in connection with which read, "A Child in the Midst," "Education of Environment," "These Are My Jewels," (Social Purity Series, W. T. P. A.)
4. "Teaching Truth," by Dr. Mary Wood Allen, in connection with which may be read "A Song of Life," by Elizabeth Morely, and the leaflets "The Training of Girls," (G. H. Pub. Co.) "Talks With a Child," (W. T. P. A.)
5. "The Moral Education of the Young," by Elizabeth Blackwell, M. D. In connection with this may be read "Girlhood and Purity" and other leaflets published by the Philanthropist Co. "Responsibility of Parents," "Pitfalls for Our Boys," "Dangers for Our Girls," "Predisposing Causes," (Mothers' Meeting Series, W. T. P. A.) "Child Confidence Rewarded," by Mary Wood Allen, National Superintendent of department of Purity.

Battle Creek, Mich.

PET'S VALENTINE.

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY.

"Papa, what is a valentine?"
There came a flutter of flying feet,
A flash of curls and a kiss for me.
"Well, baby is mamma's and you are mine,
'Tis the dearest thing in the world, my sweet."
"Then mine is my dolly, Annabel Lee."

"But how can a basket of violets be
The dearest thing in the world to Prue?
Who wrote the letter that made her cry?"
"St. Valentine, darling, from over the sea,
He is holding the blossoms of life for you,
And he'll send you a letter, dear, by and by."

Montecito, Cal.

A VALENTINE CONVERT.

BY MAGDELON CAMERON.

"I wants a valentine, Nelly. I never has seen one, but ma used to have 'em 'fore she got married. She was rich then, so was papa, but the money all went for the drink, she says."

Here the speaker, a golden-haired, blue-eyed boy of seven, paused. He had often heard his mother tell of her life as a wealthy girl, whose every whim was humored, and he wondered how they could have become so poor.

"Ma said," he began again, "that we could have one if pa didn't spend all his money for whisky. I do wish he'd quit it!"

"Yeth," lisped tiny Nell, his baby sister of just four summers. "Yeth, me too. Do on."

But brother was not ready to "do on." He was thinking. For several minutes at least they were both silent, and then, as a thought struck the boy, he arose, and, taking little Nell into his lap, began to question her.

"Baby," he said, and his voice was very earnest, "Baby, what did Miss Kate tell us about saying our prayers Sunday? Say, pet, does you 'member?"

The tiny hand went up to the mass of curls, as if in deep thought, and the two brilliant sapphires searched the ceiling for the missing thought. But Nelly's wee brain would not work, and she soon gave it up.

"Baby tan't 'member one bit but pway—oh, I tan't say it!" and the little foot stamped impatiently.

"All right, let's go and ask ma. She can tell us, I guess," and the little pair trotted cheerfully into the house.

Mother was ready to wait on them but could not give them the desired information until Benny happened to mention that Miss Kate said something about John fourteenth, but he "knowed there were no fourteen Johns in her class."

Mrs. Phillips now understood, and taking down the Bible from the shelf where it was always kept when papa was there, read, "If ye shall ask anything in my name I will do it." "Now, my darlings," she asked, "what will you do with John 14: 14?"

"Ma," said her thoughtful son, leaving her question unanswered, "Ma, will God—if we beg Him real hard—will God keep papa from the drink? Will He truly?"

The poor little crippled mother (for such she really was, and for several years had only walked on crutches) seemed very much agitated and the gray eyes filled with tears as she thought of the many petitions that had been poured forth day and night for so many years in behalf of the erring father.

Her faith was very weak. But with a forced smile she said, "Yes, my children, God always keeps His word."

Benny's eyes brightened. "Come, sister," he said, "we'll go up-stairs," and off they ran up the steps and into the little attic. A rickety chair, and a small dilapidated trundle-bed were all the room contained, and by the latter the children knelt.

As Benny and Nelly left her Mrs. Phillips heard the door open and shut and her husband enter. He had been in the hall trying to persuade his angry landlord to wait just one more month before turning his family out of the house. He had not overheard the children's conversation. As he took up his hat the poor woman shuddered. She well knew that if he went out into the street the next time he crossed that doorway he would be under the influence of strong drink.

"Papa," she whispered, timidly, "the babies are up-stairs, and I can't go after them. Won't you see to them, please, before you go?"

Now if there was one thing on earth that Mr. Phillips loved it was his little daughter, and he would do anything for her. He also had a strange kind of feeling for his wife, that might be called a pitying love. So without much hesitation he went up to where the children were now pouring out their little souls in prayer. As he started to open the door their solemn, appealing tones made him listen a moment to what he supposed to be their pretty childish play. But as he heard the words, "And oh, dear God, save our papa. Don't let the drink steal all his love away," his astonishment was unbounded. Opening the door a little way he saw his two little ones kneeling beside the bed, their tiny hands clasped tightly and their little faces turned upward.

And now his pet, Nelly, was speaking.

"Oh, Dod," she said, "ma's face dets so white when papa tomes home drunk and 'oo know dat ma dot crippled one day when papa had some drink."

Why does the listener in the hall hide his face in his hands as if ashamed of the very daylight which comes streaming through the open window?

"Dear Dod, ma sez he's a dood man," the soft baby voice went on, "and we love 'im, oh, so much."

The big man at the door was now sobbing violently.

"And after oo has saved him from de drink, please send us one, just one valumtime?"

"For Jesus' sake," Benny added, and though the children did not hear it, their mother waiting anxiously at the foot of the stairs heard with delight a fervent "Amen," that echoed from the hall. Happy little mother; she hobbled back into the room, and after having a good little cry of joy she lay down and was apparently asleep when her husband came in.

"Dear wife," he said as he kissed her tenderly, "she shall not have another hour of worry if I can help it. Oh, how she has suffered for me and all so patiently!"

He tried to get up, but found that he was chained, for his wife's soft arms had been thrown round his neck and though the tears were coursing down her cheeks, he understood all.

An hour or so afterwards while they were talking together and planning for the future, the children came running in from their play. As they saw their father sitting up soberly and talking pleasantly with their mother and her beaming face they stopped still at the door in astonishment. Suddenly all flashed upon Nelly and rushing into her father's arms she cried, "Oh, papa, did Dod ask you not to go to Bill's saloon no more? Now, did He, papa dear?"

For a moment the father's voice was choked—he could not speak—but he soon was able to answer. "Yes, my darlings," he said earnestly as he gathered them both in his arms, "and by as sweet and pure an angel as was ever sent to earth," and he meant it.

And now the first and greatest part of that prayer was answered and that very afternoon the doorbell rang and Ben running to the door found two envelopes directed to Master Benjamin and Miss Nelly Phillips, inside of which were two beautiful valentines, and from then until now St. Valentine has never passed them by.

Greensboro, N. C.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

389.

ONE LETTER PUZZLE.

A letter from love,
And one from above,
And then a letter from health;
A letter from fine,
A letter from shine,
Then take a letter from stealth;
A letter from spin,
A letter from win,
And add the last from wealth.
If you these letters rightly guess
Your own true love you must confess.

S. A. J.

390.

DROPPED LETTER PUZZLE.

"T.s .e.e .t a.n .h.r. c.m.s .i. l.v.,
A.l .a.e. a.d .i.h .m.l. b.n.g.,
A .o.d.n .u.b.a. f.o. a.o.e,
T. r.a. t.e .r.s.'s .a. v.l.n.i.e."

391.

INITIAL CHANGES.

1. Change the initial of sport and have a race.
2. Change the initial of a space of time and have the hinderpart.
3. Change the initial of shining and have correctly.
4. Change the initial of a painter's pigment and have the name applied to a certain fast day week.

Arrange all the initials used in their correct order and have a winter month. S. A. J.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED JANUARY 24.

380. Zerelda Wallace. 381. Frances Willard.
382. 1, B-rook. 2, C-rock. 3, G-round. 4, C-lock.

Correct answers; Genevieve Williams; La Jeune Forrey; Emma Brown; Jennie M. Campbell; Sallie A. Wright; Dwight Newton; Roxana G. Wilkinson; Abby M. Collester Arthur L Marsh; Edith H ay; Bertha Hendricks; Maud an Lor r Warn

"Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner!" Perhaps some boy or girl picks this paper up for the first time only to wonder what that means. They know what a corner is. They can also tell you that "cozy" has some idea for them. But who is Aunt Jane and why does this paper have a "Cozy Corner"? What can it mean?

It is very simple and can be told in a word. It means that Aunt Jane, a lover of temperance children (of whom there are thousands all over the world) invited all the boys and girls of the great UNION SIGNAL family to meet here every week. As the grown up members of the family are so numerous, the children could only have a Corner. And as this Corner was a small one, and Aunt Jane was always there, it was well called "Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner."

What do we do? Well, we talk on various interesting subjects, tell stories, etc.

How can one belong? All that is necessary is to sign the pledge and write to Aunt Jane. "I mean to do all I can for temperance" is our countersign. There is no fee or badge but the white ribbon. When your letter has been received your name is placed in the list of nephews and nieces. Your letter may be printed, too; it is sure to be if it has anything especially interesting in it.

Nephews and nieces have the privilege of corresponding with each other, and I know of some very pleasant friendships that have sprung up in this way.

Perhaps there are some young UNION SIGNAL readers who have not yet ventured over the threshold of Cozy Corner. They may have stood outside the crowded entrance modestly fearing that there is no room for them within. This is a great mistake, there is no chance of our Corner becoming too full, for although it is so "cozy" it is also as big as the wide, wide world. So there is no lack of space in such elastic quarters.

We welcome temperance children and want our roll of nephews and nieces to include every child reader of THE UNION SIGNAL. So with postal card or envelope and paper, knock for admittance, being sure first, however, that you can give our countersign!

Affectionately your

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

All the little children love my stories very much and some of them got after me to write one for a paper. As I love THE UNION SIGNAL best I thought I would write one for it. It is for the St. Valentine's number. It is the first story I ever tried to have published. I hope the Crusaders will make more progress in the next twelve months than they ever have before. I am older than most of your nieces but I hope you will have me, anyhow.

Greensboro, N. C. MAGDELON CAMERON.

The story is on this page, dear niece, and Cozy Cornerers will be glad to hear from you again. Many thanks.

---

We are temperance girls, aged thirteen and fifteen. Our names are Alice De Forest and Alice Springstead. Alice D. lives here in Otsego and I live two miles south of Plainwell. I am visiting here. There is no L. T. L. at either Otsego or Plainwell.

ALICE DE FOREST AND ALICE SPRINGSTEAD.

Otsego, Mich.

Two enthusiastic temperance Alices—and no L. T. L.! 'Twon't be for long, I hope.

---

I am ten years old. I belong to the L. T. L. I stay with my grandmother who is a W. C. T. U. and takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I like to read the Cozy Corner. I would like to join it. It is the first time I ever wrote.

Sullivan, Ill. CLEVELAND MILLER.

P. S.—Our mayor made the stores quit selling cigarettes.

All our Cozy Cornerers will clap their hands at that good postscript.

---

I would like to be one of your nephews and join the Cozy Corner. My mamma calls me her little Prohibition sprout. I am eight years old now. When I was six years old my sister and brother and I belonged to the L. T. L. in West Superior, Wis. I love to read the letters in the Cozy Corner. BETHEL W. ROBINSON,

Duluth, Minn.

May the L. T. L. send forth many thousands of good Prohibition sprouts.

---

Would you allow me to join your Cozy Corner? I am a little girl eight years old and live in the country. My mamma attended the W. C. T. U. Convention at Cleveland. I was much interested in hearing her tell about the L. T. L. My brother, Orville, and I belong to the L. T. L. of Harrison union. LELA MONTGOMERY.

Ash, Ohio.

A member of the L. T. L. has the right of way into our Corner, Lela.

THE UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD, LL.D.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President. MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, London, Eng.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Chicago.
MME. LOUISE DEMOREST, New York City.
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MRS. E. B. INGALLS, St. Louis, Mo.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK ..... 1
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, A Battle Prelude. By Dwight Williams. ..... 2
The Yellow Passport. By Voltairine de Cleyre ..... 2
A Lead Pencil. I. By J. Fowler Willing ..... 2
The Open Door. By Ella A. Boole ..... 2
Alice R. Palmer. By Frances E. Willard ..... 3
CORRESPONDENCE:
The Suffrage Association in the South ..... 4
Another Gain for Temperance ..... 4
Petitioning for Suffrage ..... 5
Total Abstinence in Business ..... 5
For Pennsylvania White-Ribboners ..... 5
Thanks from South Africa ..... 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS ..... 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, "We Are So Few" ..... 6
Mrs. Lake's Valentine. By Lizzie Young Butler ..... 6
Mothers' Meetings. By Mrs. J. H. Kellogg ..... 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Pet's Valentine. By Emma Playter Seabury ..... 7
A Valentine Convert. By Magdelon Cameron ..... 7
Soft-Shelled Nuts ..... 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER ..... 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Suffrage in the South ..... 8
Immigration from an Ethical Standpoint ..... 8
World's Delegates ..... 8
The Great Petition Meetings ..... 9
A Worthy Tribute ..... 9
Declaration of Principles for the W. C. T. U. ..... 9
Lend a Hand ..... 9
THE WATCH TOWER ..... 9
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
District of Columbia—New Jersey—South Carolina—Connecticut—Western Washington—Kentucky—Colorado ..... 10, 11
News in a Nutshell ..... 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Sabbath Observance ..... 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES ..... 12
TREASURER'S CORNER ..... 13
ORGANIZERS' CORNER ..... 13
National Temperance Hospital ..... 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE ..... 14
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT ..... 15
SIGNAL NOTES ..... 16

And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son.—John 14:13.

SUFFRAGE IN THE SOUTH.

We print on another page a cheering report of the reception given the twenty-seventh annual convention of the National Woman's Suffrage Association, in Atlanta. This is the first convention of the association ever held outside of Washington. We understand it is the plan to continue to hold conventions every alternate year in Washington, during the session of Congress when the principal business is transacted, and the intervening years to hold "migratory conventions" in different cities of the Union. The object in so doing is to spread the educational effect of the conventions over the country as much as possible. The result in Atlanta justifies the wisdom of this course. Memphis, Texas and other points, some beyond the Rockies, asked for the next migratory convention.

The suffragists clinched their work in Atlanta by holding a mass-meeting Monday morning after the close of the convention. It was a large and enthusiastic gathering, and while the exact number is not yet known, it is reported that not less than fifty new members, mostly men, were added to the Atlanta Equal Suffrage Association.

The work in the South is to be vigorously pushed the coming year. The plan of work committee reported that it was highly desirable that a fund of five thousand dollars be secured to send workers to Idaho, whose legislature has submitted to a vote of the "male people" an amendment for woman's suffrage, and also to send workers into the South. A subscription was started and two thousand dollars were pledged at once. If our W. C. T. U. sisters of the South do not look out, they will find themselves bringing up the rear on the suffrage question, instead of leading the van where they belong.

The multiplied testimony of the suffrage speakers to the fact that the liquor traffic and woman's vote are natural and implacable enemies, is but a confirmation of the wisdom of the National W. C. T. U. in declaring for suffrage and making it one of the departments of our work. The truth is that woman's suffrage and prohibition are inseparable questions. If one begins to work up either one of these questions she speedily finds herself brought up standing against the other. It is useless to attempt to sever them. In our judgment the unwisdom of the white-ribboner who would divorce suffrage from her temperance work is only equaled by that of the suffrage woman who would divorce temperance from suffrage work. We have known, very rarely, we are glad to say, a suffrage woman who urged the white-ribboner to take off her white ribbon and work solely for suffrage on the ground that prohibition could never be secured until woman's suffrage was secured, and we injured our cause by antagonizing the liquor interests. We repudiate such advice. White ribbon women have long ago passed the years when they cry for the moon. Woman's suffrage can never command the liquor vote and white-ribboners would scorn to accept the liquor vote if they could get it. No, when liquor men vote for woman's suffrage let them do so with the distinct understanding that the day that sees the full enfranchisement of American women sounds the death knell to the liquor traffic. On the other hand, let temperance women fling the yellow banner of suffrage boldly to the breeze, for, conversely, the day that sounds the death knell of the liquor traffic will never dawn until the American mother has equal say at the polls with the liquor dealer, the gambler and the pardoned convict.

We rejoice in the work accomplished by our suffrage sisters in Atlanta. They are the strong right wing of our temperance army and their success hastens our own.

IMMIGRATION FROM AN ETHICAL STANDPOINT.

In order to work out intelligently a problem in mathematical science, the student must be sure first of all that he starts right. That is, he should know not only the rule under which he operates but he should understand the basic principle which underlies and formulates that rule. So it is also with problems in moral and social science. Statesmen, philanthropists, sociologists, all who are interested in the study of man, whether professedly Christian or not, are fast coming to recognize the Golden Rule as containing the essence of the only philosophy by which human conduct may be safely squared, human conditions satisfactorily adjusted.

But in applying this supreme rule of Christian ethics to the solution of the practical questions of the day, the great principle back of it and upon which it rests should be grasped by the reformer, or "regenerator," to use Dr. Parkhurst's newer and more expressive term. This primary principle is the oneness of humanity.

It has been urged as an argument against the further restriction of immigration, and indeed against restriction along this line at all, that it is a violation of the Golden Rule. Most people admit the dangers which attend the present immigration policy of this republic; and most people acknowledge the necessity—from the standpoint of self-preservation, at least—of speedy measures for checking the influx of foreign matter which is increasing in quantity and deteriorating in quality each year; but nevertheless many Christian reformers are inclined to believe that no government possesses the moral right to exclude any man or class of men from any part of God's footstool.

Recognizing the fundamental law of being—the law which formulates and explains the Golden Rule—as unity, we find in the desire for mutual helpfulness which is growing in such marked degree among men, its natural and inevitable expression. And taking into consideration existing conditions in our own country—for the level reached in the evolutionary career of the race must always be a factor in human problems—we are confronted with the question, Are we really helping the illiterate foreigner when we so readily confer upon him American citizenship, with all which that implies?

We do not forget that those who constitute the "undesirable classes" are our mothers, nay, more, that they are members of the same body as ourselves; we do not forget that, as General Booth says, these are the classes which need, more than any other, the uplifting hand. But we may well pause to inquire if we really are uplifting the criminal and pauper of Europe, if we really do benefit the illiterate foreigner when we permit him to come to our own land with its open saloon on every street corner and its many agencies for making it as hard as possible to do right and as easy as possible to do wrong—our land with its wonderful opportunities, not only for "getting on," but also for the development and indulgence of criminal propensities? Is it wise, is it helpful to place weapons of power in the hands of any man until he knows how to use them? Will he not be apt to use them to his own hurt as well as to our own, if we do?

In this country where not only the humblest male citizen, but also the most ignorant, is part of its governing power we maintain that the spirit of the Golden Rule itself declares it to be our duty both to ourselves as Americans and to the would-be immigrant to deny the latter the privilege of American citizenship until such time as (1) we have learned how properly to govern ourselves, and (2) he is fit, morally and intellectually, to be a help instead of a hindrance to the progress of the nation whose political and social life he would aid in shaping and moulding.

Uncle Sam has, in the years that are past, been entirely too hospitable, not only for his own good, but for the good of those he has with such a masculine lack of discrimination adopted into his family. If he think it best to debar only the criminal and pauper elements, and "contract labor" from landing on our shores, placing no restrictions upon illiteracy, he should at least, in order to be true to his own interests and to the interests of those he invites to dwell with him, make some provision by which the prevailing ignorance among newly-arrived citizens may be remedied.

In view of the fact that four-fifths of all our criminals come from the uneducated classes, and that it costs $110 per annum to maintain one criminal in the penitentiary, this nation can better afford, even from a money point of view, to educate its adult immigrants sufficiently to make of them intelligent American citizens (even if they have to furnish them board and lodging while doing it) than to allow them to drift into crime and pauperism. The Golden Rule—the great law of co-operation back of it—proclaims loudly that "I am my brother's keeper." And the closer the touch the more interdependent the relations of each to the other.

But however wise, however conducive to the good of the whole (and therefore to the good of each of the parts) are regulative immigration laws, it is well to remember that after all, according to the figures of 1890, only 14.77 per cent of our population is foreign born. If we include those who are of foreign parentage the per cent is 33.1. Two-thirds, then, of our population is distinctively American. And this fact is very suggestive. For one thing it is an effective argument for the expediency of woman's ballot. It can surely do no harm, but on the contrary would be productive of much good, to double the "foreign vote" if by so doing we also double the American vote. This government has immense reserve power which is as yet unutilized. The logic of events is slowly but very surely revealing to our reformers and "regenerators" that American womanhood, armed with the ballot, is the missing factor in many of the problems they are endeavoring to solve.

WORLD'S DELEGATES.

We must again urge upon our comrades the importance of selecting their delegates and alternates to the World's W. C. T. U. Convention to be held in Queen's Hall, London, June 14 to 21, 1895, with the least possible delay. Our sisters over the water are already arranging, as one is obliged to do in London, beforehand, to supply important pulpits, and they must know who among our "chief speakers" will be in attendance. Therefore, beloved, we pray you to select with care, but to do so with promptitude and if you are going to raise the $200 for this, this is the time when that work should be earnestly carried forward. We know that it has begun in several localities and is being contemplated in many more, but do not wait to raise the money; select your delegates and alternates without delay. And remember that there must be at the back of each delegate one thousand women who have paid their dues, and that if any state has an excess over a given number of thousands it can by arrangement with an adjoining state utilize the full number. But by far the best method of making sure of your thousand is, if you lack some hundreds of that number, to go out and get new names of members, sending their dues at once to the state treasurer, so that there may be no doubt as to the validity of your report. We do not by any means suppose that a majority of the delegates we send to England will have their way paid for them. Two hundred dollars is not beyond the reach of a large majority of those who will go, but in some instances there will be workers whom their sisters desire to have attend who may not be fitted out with the "wherewithal," except by proxy. Do not fail then to carry out these friendly suggestions and by all means remember to report your delegate and alternate, with name and address in full, to Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson corresponding secretary, or to Miss Anna Gordon, assistant secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., addressing both at the Woman's Temple, Chicag

Frances E. Willard.

THE GREAT PETITION MEETINGS.

We are glad to be able to present to our readers who cannot be present at the Washington meetings a program of them. We hope they will follow the hours with prayer and faith, from the opening address of welcome to the closing benediction. There will, doubtless, be many features of interest not included in the printed program. It is hoped that Dr. Lunn, promoter of our two great trips, will be present at one or more of the sessions, while the pulpits of Washington will be largely occupied by white-ribboners at both morning and evening services on Sunday the 17th.

PROGRAM.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 15.

10 a. m.—Address of welcome, Mrs. M. E. Griffith. Response, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman.

10:30 a. m.—Prayer and consecration meeting, conducted by Miss E. W. Greenwood. Prayer for the power of the Holy Spirit upon those who present and those who receive the Great Petition, both in Washington and in all its future journeyings. Led by Mrs. Anna M. Hammer Pennsylvania, Mrs. J. T. Ellis, New Jersey, Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing, New York, and others.

12 m.—Noontide prayer, Mrs. M. E. Griffith.

2:30.—Devotional service, Mrs. Helen M. Barker, National treasurer.

Address, "The W. C. T. U. has attained her majority; is she worthy of citizenship?" Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, Washington.

Address, Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, of Massachusetts.

Address, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Chicago.

Music. Adjournment.

7:30 p. m.—Grand mass-meeting. Hall draped with Petition. Presiding officer, Miss Frances E. Willard, LL. D.

Devotional exercises, Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, Chicago.

Music. Moody Quartette.

Address, "Origin of the Polyglot Petition." Miss Willard.

Address, "Its value as an educator." Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Boston.

Solo, Miss Katherine Willard, Baltimore.

Address, "What the Petition will mean to the world." Lady Henry Somerset, England.

Address, "Its relation to the final victory." Clara C. Hoffman, Missouri.

Music. Benediction.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16.

10 a. m.—Discussion. What are the special needs of the W. C. T. U. in the national capital, and how may these needs be met? Opened by Mrs. Griffith, Mrs. La Fetra, Miss Weightman, Mrs. Mary Haslup and others.

11:30 a. m.—Devotional hour. Conducted by Mrs. Jennie F. Willing.

12 m.—Noontide prayer. Adjournment.

2 p. m.—Young woman's work. Miss Frances Ensign, Miss Belle Kearney, Miss Margaret S. Hilles, Miss E. U. Yates.

3 p. m.—The claims of the L. T. L. as a juvenile organization. Miss Anna A. Gordon, Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair.

4 p. m.—Address, "Physical culture and artistic dress," Miss Julia Leavens.

7:30 p. m.—Mass-meeting:

Devotional services, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Maine.

Brief addresses: "The W. C. T. U. in its relation to the individual," Miss Belle Kearney, Mississippi. "Its relation to the home," Mrs. Helen M. Barker, Chicago. "Its relation to the school," Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Boston. "Its relation to the church," Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, Chicago. "Its relation to the nation," Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Missouri. "Its relation to the world," Frances E. Willard.

Music. Adjournment.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 17.

3 p. m.—Y mass-meeting. Presiding officer, Miss Willard. Addresses. Miss Belle Kearney, Miss Frances H. Ensign, Miss Alice R. Palmer, Miss E. U. Yates.

Music.

7:30 p. m.—Addresses: Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman.

A WORTHY TRIBUTE.

At the annual meeting of the Illinois State Bar Association Judge Bonney, in an address delivered before that august assembly, paid a most eloquent and deserved tribute to Mrs. Myra Bradwell, the one to whom woman owes the opening of the door to her activity in the department of jurisprudence. Mrs. Bradwell's effort to gain admission to the bar in 1869 was the entering wedge, but not until 1892 had this gentle yet intrepid suitor conquered, and the supreme court of the United States issued to her a license to practice law. In his tribute to Mrs. Bradwell Judge Bonney says:

"Rarely has there been a better illustration of the maxim, perseverantia omnia vincet. Myra Bradwell was gentle, unostentatious and self-controlled. She was, at the same time, thoroughly resolute, courageous and persistent. Her leading intellectual quality was common sense. Her leading moral endowment was an intense devotion to the welfare of womankind. The desirability and the beauty of the reforms which she espoused were never permitted to make her blind to the rational way of their accomplishment, nor did any difficulty or opposition ever turn her from the determined pursuit of what she deemed to be her duty. At the outset of her career she found women and children without adequate protection in the laws, and felt that she was called upon to devote the best energies of her life to secure such protection.

"When Myra Bradwell commenced her career, it was generally thought that jurisprudence was a realm quite beyond the abilities of women, and that any attempt on their part to act within it would result in their discomfiture. She was one of the first to demonstrate the capacity of women to master the science of the law, and while few women have become, or are likely to become, practicing lawyers, the influence of her example on the great body of intelligent women has been of inestimable value in the formation of an enlightened public opinion, that all intelligent women should have some knowledge of the civil laws which affect their interests, in order that they may know when their rights are in danger, and may be prompted to seek such aid and protection as the occasion may require."

When such a man as Judge Bonney, a keen, logical, just, withal a broad-minded and generous thinker, pays tribute as above to women who have fairly won the gracious laurels, the education of public sentiment in favor of woman's cause receives an impetus the extent and duration of which cannot be measured.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES FOR THE W. C. T. U.

We believe in the coming of His kingdom "whose service is perfect freedom" because "His laws, written in our members," as well as in nature and grace, "are perfect, converting the soul."

We believe in the gospel of the Golden Rule, and that each man's habits of life should be an example safe and beneficent for every other man.

We believe that God created both man and woman "in His own image," and, therefore, we believe in one standard of purity for men and women, and in the equal right of each to hold opinions and to express the same in the home, on the platform, in the pulpit and at the ballot box.

We believe in a living wage; in an eight hour day; in courts of conciliation and arbitration; in justice as opposed to greed of gain; in "peace on earth and good will to men."

We therefore formulate, and for ourselves adopt, the following pledge, asking our sisters and brothers of a common danger and a common hope to make common cause with us, in working its reasonable and helpful precepts into the practice of every-day life.

PLEDGE.

"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquors, including wine, beer and cider, as a beverage, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

To confirm and enforce the rationale of this pledge, we declare our purpose to educate the young: to form a better public sentiment; to reform, so far as possible, by religious, ethical and scientific means the drinking classes; to seek the transforming power of divine grace for ourselves and all for whom we work, that they and we may willfully transcend no law of pure and wholesome living; and finally we pledge ourselves to labor and pray that all these principles, founded upon the Gospel of Christ, may be worked out into the customs of society and the laws of the land.

LEND A HAND.

The National L. T. L. superintendent has received the following appeal. We are sure it will stir many of our Legions to "lend a hand":

WAUNETA, NEB., Jan. 25, 1895.

DEAR MRS. RICE:—In this drought-stricken region it is impossible to raise money enough to carry on the L. T. L. work in my district and it has occurred to me that the Legions of the East would be pleased to gather up manuals, song books and Crusaders that have been used and laid aside, and send to me for the use of the boys and girls of southwestern Nebraska. We have a Legion here of forty-five members, without manuals, but we keep them together, meet every Sunday afternoon, and sing, march, talk and pray, still hoping to get the necessary helps in some way.

Let me hear from you as soon as possible.

Yours perseveringly,

(MRS.) NETTIE DOTY,

Pres. Eleventh Dist., Neb. W. C. T. U.

Before mailing packages it will be wise to consult Mrs. Doty as to the special point to which they should be forwarded, and thus save extra postage in some cases.

The Sultan has formally demanded that the English government make Mr. Gladstone stop talking about the Armenian atrocities! The rest of the world is inclined to demand that the English government make the Turks stop their atrocities.

***

Mrs. Sarah Knowles Bolton, of Cleveland, Ohio, is the chief woman biographer of our times, the Samuel Smiles among women. She has written twelve books and brought up a son, Charles Knowles Bolton, who is a graduate of Harvard University, and as gifted as his mother. White-ribboners are especially proud of Mrs. Bolton, because she was a Crusader and is a charming specimen of refined, Christian womanhood. As somebody has said, "She has the sixth sense of the interesting." We wish that every girl would remember what Mrs. Bolton has written in her book entitled "Girls who Became Famous": "The laws of life are as rigid as the laws of mathematics. A person cannot idle away the hours and come to prominence. No great singer, no great artist, no great scientist, comes to honor without continuous labor; work and will must go together. The world has little use for cold natures; better bear a gospel of love and sunshine than make an impression of indifference and frigidity. That man or woman is apt to be a success in life who knows how to hold the friends he has won, and is not afraid to show that there is warm blood coursing in his veins."

***

Among the telling illustrations of a forcible speaker, Rev. W. B. Osborn, at the Bombay Methodist conference, on Christian service, was his remark that what is needed in Christian work is "not more harness but more horse." How true it is that we are fully supplied in panoply but lack in power!

***

Whatsoever is not of faith is sin. We take a narrow view of what we read about in the Bible and elsewhere, whittling it down to the circumference of our own small heads, but in this single phrase, "whatsoever is not of faith is sin," lies the whole philosophy of life. The difference between a cheery, hopeful, inspiring outlook on the world that is and that which is to come, and the doubting, distrustful, unhappy view of all that is and is to be, is the difference between Paradise and perdition. If a mother would teach her little boy and girl line upon line from their earliest recollection, that "whatsoever is not of faith is sin," and that this is true in the most minute, every-day occurrences of life, she would do them the utmost possible kindness. They are to have faith when things go contrary to their wish that they shall find a way out of their difficulty, whether it be about a toy in childhood or a throne at the summit of power. We are creatures of habit, and we have the power to form habits of believing the best, and our mothers ought to start us out early along this pleasant path, which, alas! they are not forward to do because they were not started that way themselves.

***

Edward Everett Hale recently said that it is a misfortune that people who have made an impression in life are so swarmed after by those who want help that they can never have any peace or comfort with their own friends, cannot get the strength and intellectual aliment that is their due. He said his uncle, the famous Edward Everett, was so followed up in this way that although he often asked his nephew to come and see him, the latter not only did not feel at liberty to do so, but reflected that if he went there would be such a crowd stepping down before him that he should get no audience with his beloved relative. He said that Edward Everett once told him that he wanted to give him an account of how he prepared his speeches, for he thought it might be helpful to others, but he never had the opportunity, or at least never felt free to seek it; and so there is no record of the methods of that great orator. Edward Everett Hale wisely said in commenting, not without sadness, on the statement just made, that he now thought those who could be a real help to philanthropists, reformers, writers, speakers, and others who hold wide relations with the public, ought to break through the barrier of those who sought them because they had less delicacy or more insistence, and to bring their sympathy and strength to the rescue of these overburdened leaders. Perhaps there is in this reflection of that wise head and warm heart somewhat in the nature of food for reflection for us all.

ON DUTY.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

ON TO WASHINGTON.

I never attended a more beautiful quarterly meeting than our last. It was held in Union M. E. Church. The West End local union was the hostess. The attendance was small as it was one of Washington's proverbial pouring rainy days. Scarcely more than one hundred women were present, but they were of one heart and mind. All of the general officers were present, superintendents of eighteen departments of work, three trustees, sixty-six delegates and a few visitors.

So inclement was the weather that none but those deeply interested came. The prayers were uplifting, the reports were enthusiastic and the business was dispatched with intelligence and order. Reporters from three city dailies graced our platform, and full reports of our proceedings appeared later in the newspapers with startling head-lines such as "Prohibition for the District of Columbia," "Abolish the Traffic," and "The Polyglot Petition soon to be Submitted to the Senate and House." They printed in full a resolution introduced by Mrs. Platt in the following terms:

THE NEXT CONGRESS TO BE ASKED TO PASS A BILL EMPOWERING BOTH SEXES TO VOTE.

A motion was adopted that the superintendent of legislative and petition work be instructed to prepare a bill for presentation to the next Congress which shall provide that the question of the abolition of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia shall be submitted to a vote of the people residing in the District, the bill to incorporate the following: "That all men and women over twenty-one years of age of sound mind and able to read and write, resident in the District at the time of the passage of the bill shall be allowed to vote upon the question; that at the expiration of six months from the passage of the bill the vote shall be taken; in case a majority vote in favor of the abolition of the traffic it shall be the duty of Congress at its next session following such vote to abolish the traffic, and to provide suitable means for the enforcement of a prohibitory law and adequate penalties for its violation."

Year after year the W. C. T. U. has rolled up petitions for prohibition for the District of Columbia. No less than 90,000 signatures have found a quiet resting place in the shelves and pigeon-holes sometimes spoken of as the "archives" of the capitol. Remembering this the new way proposed to grapple with our bête noire was adopted with enthusiasm tempered by merriment. Although success may not be imminent we expect to conquer eventually, so we gird on the armor anew and prosecute the siege with brighter weapons.

About a year ago Mrs. Chambers, our superintendent department purity in literature and art, reported that she traveled about the city constantly requesting the dealers in cigarettes, etc., to remove indecent pictures from their show windows. She is a lawyer, and compelled compliance to law. She said: "Sometimes they tell me to go home and mind my business. I always do go home after I have minded my business, and seen that the objectionable pictures are removed." She does not have to do that unpleasant work now. The police are doing it. The W. C. T. U. has been a pioneer over this rugged path. At present our streets are free from immoral displays, and when Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and the rest of you come to the convocation, you can see for yourselves if it is not so.

How delighted we are, dear sisters, that you are coming. We are busy as bees on a sunny day planning and arranging for the three days of meetings. We find that the churches and the pastors are favorable, which means so much for our success. We hope our visiting sisters will volunteer to preach the gospel from the pulpits of the city on February 17.

Mrs. Clinton Smith,
District Reporter.

NEW JERSEY

ON THE WARPATH.

"The Lord of the seed field takes care of His own
And the world shall yet reap what our sowers have sown."

"Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with Thee—with Thee."

We are not dead, nor sleeping, nor on a journey, but on the warpath, alive to the interests of our homes, and are using every effort to forward temperance work in our midst. Two applications for license were recently presented to our county court (Morris); by the swift action of the W. C. T. U. a remonstrance came in time, and notwithstanding the liquor interest was largely represented in the court room, the applicants were alarmed by the presence of a few women and withdrew their applications. It was a signal victory and we rejoice over two less saloons! Whether the law abiding members of the community will put their shoulders to the wheel and not flinch in the battle, at the coming election on March 8, the coming days must decide. We hope to carry no-license.

Crusade meetings have been general throughout the state.

January 8, Morristown celebrated the day with appropriate exercises. Some influential active workers have been added to their list. They are fortunate in having secured May Leonard Wells as president of their union.

Our Crusade parlor meeting was held on the 17th, when Morris county's president, Mrs. Greenman, gave an address. Miss Leonard read the story of the Crusade in Ohio, and the history of the W. C. T. U., organized here in 1874, by Mrs. Daniel P. Kidder, of Evanston; and in 1875, Miss Frances E. Willard came and gave us an address. So you see we W. C. T. Unions of Morris county are among the pioneers of New Jersey, coming in next to Essex. Let us comfort our hearts with the belief that whatsoever has been entered into with right purposes will be finished for the good of humanity.

Mrs. I. T. Ellis, state corresponding secretary, held a parlor meeting at Atlantic Highlands, January 12. Subject: "Equal Suffrage." Her address was intensely interesting, showing clearly that the helpless condition of women and children demanded the ballot for women as well as men, and that we cannot gain prohibition until suffrage is given us.

Camden entertained the sixth annual state Y conference on the 11th and 12th.

A host of good things was our portion, the best of all being the presence and help of Mrs. Barnes, General Secretary of Y. W. C. T. U., whom every Y member loves and eagerly welcomes on all occasions. Her Bible reading on the text, "To her was granted to be arrayed in fine linen, and fine linen is the righteousness of the saints," was most practical as well as beautiful.

The roll-call of unions was answered by brief reports of the condition of each one represented, showing growth and progress all along the lines. Mrs. Caminade, our state treasurer, and Miss Campbell explained our method of sending dues, urging us to be more prompt and regular in collecting, each local treasurer doing her part faithfully, sending all money through county treasurer. Our state is expected to do our share in the support of the Y bed in the Temperance Hospital and to help the Temple at Chicago. Mrs. Bourne, state president, was prevented from being present by sickness. She writes: "It was a personal sorrow to be unable to attend this gathering. I shall miss it all the year. Many thanks for the greeting received from the Y conference."

Burlington county convention of the W. C. T. U. was held at Delanco on the 15th, a large gathering, helpful, enthusiastic and encouraging.

Union No. 1, of Trenton, gave out Christmas baskets to the poor; seven hundred people were fed, embraced in one hundred and sixty families, fifty-five of which were widows and children.

Colonel Bain has done good work in New Jersey. He will give a lecture at Moorestown February 11. This union is looking up.

"New Jersey has received honor through Mrs. Cox being made associate superintendent" with Mrs. Bateman, who is one of the most successful superintendents on the national board. Her health is not good and she needs some one to share her labors, and Mrs. Cox is one of the most efficient state workers on her list of Sabbath observance."

New Jersey is entitled to six delegates to the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in London, June 14 to 21.

We have great reason to rejoice over the fact that New Jersey, although among the last, has secured the passage of a scientific temperance law for our public schools, also South Carolina, leaving only four states without one in our glorious United States. The tide is flowing in the right direction. Let it swell as it flows.

Helen M. Brittin,
Madison.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

SHADOW AND LIGHT.

When the old year, 1894, was leaving us, bearing away so many of our loved ones, and we felt ourselves weighed down beneath such an accumulation of things we had left undone that ought to have been done, we resolved and resolved, and there we are yet resolving, but never doing. One of the resolutions we passed was, to do better in future with our reports to The Union Signal, and now, "we take our pen in hand to drop you a few lines."

The most beautiful pictures are made of shade and light; must South Carolina always furnish the shadows for the light gathered among the fields? Not always, I hope, but this time it will have to partake of its usual somber colors. Van Brunt, the Dutch farmer in "The Wide, Wide World," told Ellen "things happen most every year." The year that has left us has proved no exception; many things have happened to make life more real, more earnest to many of us. Death has visited us so often, his face is growing almost familiar. Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Lathrap had visited our southern homes, we loved them for their beautiful lives, we grieve to think that they can never redeem their parting promise to come again to us, but we trust our own lives will be braver and better for having been crossed by theirs.

To come closer home, our own local union in Spartanburg has been sorely afflicted. On Easter Sunday, Dr. Wofford, one of our honorary members, was called away from us. Our cause was dear to him and his sympathies were with us in all our trials and difficulties. Then in the autumn, Mrs. Wm. K. Blake, our dear, faithful president for so many years, was taken. No words can tell how much we lost by her death. We have never been able to hold an election of any one to take her place, so we almost feel as if she was still our president. The memory of what she said and did influences us as if she were here. A short time since we were making up the club for The Union Signal; her name had headed our list so long we hated so much to leave it off, but we did not have to do so. Her husband said, "Have the paper sent the same as ever in the same name. I want it always to come." She was our state treasurer from the organization of the union until two or three years ago, when we felt it was only an act of justice to her to receive her resignation on account of failing health.

Our union is, as I have said, still without a president, but we carry on the work in a quiet way. The Band of Hope and the temperance Sunday-school are the prominent lines of work. Last Sabbath in church I saw one of our vice-presidents with a bow of white tied on her cloak, and just where the cloak parted I caught a glimpse of another bow on her dress. She looked so sweet with her two bows of ribbon I came home and got out my own; so much for example. There is a great deal in a bow of white ribbon.

The Charleston union is wide awake and hard at work. They set us an example of faithful service. Their home for the needy, which they maintain at a great sacrifice of time and means, is doing a noble work. They are doing it, too, unaided. Another thing, "they do not forget to entertain strangers." God bless them for that.

Our beloved president, Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, has done and is still doing the work of many. Although for the greater part of the year she has been in feeble health, she has worked unceasingly, and when not able to leave home, she wrought with her pen, until mainly through her efforts there is now in course of erection an industrial school for girls. The law preventing the selling of tobacco to boys has passed, and a temperance instruction bill lifts the black line against South Carolina on Mrs. Hunt's famous chart. Mrs. Chapin is now trying to get houses of sin banished from the genteel streets, and a police matron at the station house. She has called a conference of the principal workers of the W. C. T. U. in South Carolina to meet in Charleston in February. I am glad to be able to say she is feeling stronger, and that her health is improving.

N. P. Farrow,
State Reporter, Spartanburg.

CONNECTICUT.

RING OUT THE OLD, RING IN THE NEW.

The new year of 1895 is well upon us and already the chimes of the old have floated out of our hearing. What will the weeks before us bring to our waiting, working and hoping hearts as we go on in the same routine, laboring for our beloved cause? In the year that is passed some have laid aside this earthly life and have gone beyond our touch of heart or hand. As we review the months we recall what they did and think anew of the continual loss we still shall feel.

Some have gone who were known only in the town perhaps, yet the small circle is bereft; some have left a vacant place in the county or state, and yet each was loved and is mourned not alone as a personal friend, but as one in the sisterhood of workers who are bound by ties, not limited by town or state, but only by the broad boundary of humanity.

One who passed from death unto life, was she whom some of us were wont to call "dear Mary Lathrap"; I recall so well one midday at a state convention, when by some chance, or blessed providence, she passed through the city and came in for possibly half an hour. She spoke for a few moments, but how she spoke! Her pleading was that the people might not lose the opportunity before them of claiming God's best promises for His own. We who remain must not forget that a heavier burden is left for us to bear, for when one is taken others must take up the broken links and go on with the work.

STATE AFFAIRS

are about as usual. The state paper has a new editor, owing to the resignation of the former editor, who was compelled, on account of ill health, to give it up. Miss Culver, the new editor, will command the same universal support accorded Mrs. Stanley, for she is a thorough business woman, and will put heart and soul into the work.

Fairfield county convention was held during one of the most violent storms that visited the New England coast last fall. This did not, however, deter the delegates, who met at South Norwalk, and had a most delightful day. County business, a bright "experience meeting," the original papers entitled "Franchise" and "The Object and Aim of the W. C. T. U.," and several encouraging reports filled the day with interest and profit. The best feature of the convention was the topic question box. A lively interest was taken in questions on the following subjects: Juvenile work, the legal status of woman in Connecticut, proportionate giving, duties and privileges of women under the school ballot law, and prohibition or local option—which?

A Meriden correspondent tells how they spent the last day of the year at white-ribbon hall. It was celebrated by several pleasing events, that made the day truly memorable and worthy to be recorded. The golden wedding reception of Mr. and Mrs. Moses Santy, which was held from two to three o'clock in the afternoon, was a happy affair. Mrs. Santy is one of the oldest members of the union. The couple were presented with a bridal loaf of cake contributed by the W. C. T. U.

At five o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ekmark held a twentieth wedding reception at the hall. Mrs. Ekmark is the corresponding secretary of the union. During the afternoon and evening there was also a loan exhibition worthy of patronage; many valuable and ancient relics were displayed, loaned by different individuals. Mrs. Homer Curtis, a member of the union, a lady over eighty years of age, was seated at the spinning wheel. In the evening "Jerusha Dow's Family Album" was presented, and the pictures were accurately portrayed from the grandmother down to the baby and faithful dog, all living characters. Before this exhibition all sang "Auld Lang Syne" behind the curtain, and this was preceded by a musical program.

The week of prayer was fully observed by union meetings in the hall. All the pastors participated in these, and

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N.Y.

there was a good attendance, the weather considered.

Rockfall union had its annual meeting and tea at the home of the president. The members do much work in a quiet and thoroughly harmonious way, and thus far have prospered.

Rockfall L. T. L. had a Christmas tree, and a very happy time the day preceding Christmas.

M. BELLE SMITH,
State Reporter, Rockfall.

WESTERN WASHINGTON.

GLEANINGS.

The W. C. T. U. meeting of Whatcom county was held in the Y. M. C. A. parlors, President E. C. Graves in the chair. Delegates were in attendance from Whatcom, Sehome, Fair Haven, Blaine and Lynden. Sumas was not represented. The regular order of business was followed in opening the convention. Mrs. Shockey, of Sehome, read the address of welcome to which Mrs. Hidden responded. The president's address abounded with excellent advice and plans of work. A symposium on alcohol and narcotics by the public school children deserves special mention. Of 150 essays by the children four were chosen. Interesting papers on "Peace," "Temperance," "Woman Suffrage," "Looking Forward," "Temperance Work" and "Narcotics," were presented by various members.

The question-box called forth much merriment and repartee.

Mrs. M. L. T. Hidden, of Vancouver, was in attendance, imparting enthusiasm, interest and instruction. She conducted a parliamentary drill. In her remarks about THE UNION SIGNAL she said it was as necessary to a W. C. T. U. worker as the Bible is to the Christian. She showed how plainly the white ribbon band had the Bible for a text and guide to their work. The election of officers resulted in the following: Mrs. L. B. Shockey, president, Sehome; Mrs. L. Brown, vice-president, Sumas; Mrs. E. C. Graves, corresponding secretary, Sehome; Mrs. F. A. Judson, recording secretary, Lynden; Mrs. S. E. Pierce, treasurer, Whatcom.

The superintendents of departments were appointed. The entire program was generously interspersed with music and recitations. The athletics gave a class drill. The ladies of the Bay cities spread a generous supply of refreshments for delegates and visitors.

Work for the Master lifts our souls
Out of the ruts of everyday life;
Helps us to take a broader view
And brightens our armor for the strife.

King county held its semi-annual convention at Kent. Seattle Central, Tremont, Auburn and Kent were well represented, Etta Jones, president, in the chair. The convention throughout was helpful and enjoyable. Dr. Ella J. Fifield, state president, and Dr. Eva Osbourne, of Tacoma, were with us and assisted greatly by their presence and advice along various lines of work. A number of excellent papers and reports were read and discussed. The department of equal suffrage received considerable attention, and the resolution was unanimous to persevere in that work until right prevails, and women stand on an equal footing with men. Petition work was heartily entered into. The evening session was devoted to a Demorest medal contest. The M. E. church was filled to overflowing with an interested and enthusiastic audience. The pastor, Rev. C. E. Fulmer, made the presentation speech as he placed the medal in the hands of the successful contestant, Miss Lillie Boyce. The small children from the public school entertained the audience with their singing. Miss L. L. Lacy, a young lady teacher in the public school, conducted the contest. The members of the local W. C. T. U. and their friends entertained delegates and visitors most hospitably. Their arrangements for the comfort of the guests were so complete as to leave no want unsupplied, so writes one of their guests. Seattle is to have the honor of entertaining the next convention.

The state executive committee meeting was held at the pleasant rooms of the Chamber of Commerce, in Seattle. A large amount of routine business was disposed of, and plans for the furtherance of the work were discussed. Several members of the committee sent in their resignations, which were accepted, and the following ladies elected to fill the vacancies thus caused: Superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Merritt, of Snohomish; flower mission, Mrs. Smith, of Seattle; press department, Mrs. S. C. Shorthill, of Tacoma; scientific temperance instruction, Mrs. S. M. Goss, of Montesano; school of methods, Mrs. A. E. Saunders, of Tacoma.

A proposition for issuing a state paper was presented by Mrs. Mary Williams Dow, of Auburn, also a proposition for sharing in a woman's paper, by Mrs. Ida B. LeFever, of Puyallup. After a lengthy discussion, the plan outlined by Mrs. Dow was adopted under certain conditions, and the paper will no doubt soon become an established fact. Seattle Central union served an appetizing lunch at the pleasant rooms of the Young Woman's Christian Association. Adjourned to meet next June at Olympia, previous to the meeting of the state convention.

A joint meeting of the W. C. T. U. of the Bay cities was held in the M. E. church, Fairhaven. After a song service, led by Rev. Mr. McDermoth, and prayer by Rev. Mr. Brooks, memorial services were conducted for the late Mrs. Beavers, of Lynden, who has been a prominent member in the W. C. T. U. work since its inception.

At the close of the beautiful service we thought: "How blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Our National workers and our local aids are all hastening to join the larger union "just over there." Let us be faithful to our trust, and be ready when the summons comes to put on immortality. Others will be raised up in our places to carry on the great work of reform.

ETTA JONES,
State Reporter, Kent.

KENTUCKY.

NOTES FROM THE BLUE GRASS STATE.

The Glasgow W. C. T. U. reports a great revival in their union, as well as among all the temperance people of the town.

Two distillers applied for new license, and the W. C. T. U. bent all its energies to prevent its being granted, and had numerous petitions circulated, but in spite of all this, after a long delay the distillers gained the victory, which means saloons in the town. This, of course, is very discouraging, but the women are brave, and are determined not to give up the fight to keep saloons out. They held a union gospel temperance meeting, their first effort in this direction, at the Christian church, in which all the pastors took part, as well as others present, making eloquent and enthusiastic speeches. Much interest was aroused in their work, resulting in the addition of six active and five honorary members to the union. It was decided to hold these meetings frequently.

The Paducah W. C. T. U. is making an effort to secure a police matron and hope to succeed in the near future. They are enjoying a course of lectures this winter, under the management of the Redpath Lyceum Bureau. Peters lectured in November and Dixon in December. They did well with both lectures and will continue the course till April.

Not long since a musicale was given for the benefit of the Temple under the auspices of the treasurer, Mrs. Fox, at which the sum of twenty-five dollars was realized, which was promptly forwarded.

Just before the holidays Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, assistant National recording secretary and state organizer, spent a week in Pulaski county, speaking eight times and organizing five unions. The first of January her engagements for a week were cancelled, owing to heavy snows and bad roads in the country districts. She is now organizing in the vicinity of Augusta.

Kentucky is trying to get her additional five hundred members this year.

MARY ROGERS,
State Reporter, Lexington,

COLORADO.

ACTIVITY AND PROGRESS.

In this far western city, under the shadow of the "Rockies," there are many loyal W. C. T. U. workers. For the state I cannot, at this writing, give a detailed account of the work, (having but recently come from an eastern city) but for Arapahoe county, I can report activity and progress.

At the recent county convention held January 10 in this city, much interest was manifest. Scientific temperance instruction—with duties of mothers on this subject, were topics for discussion, suggestive and helpful to all. The attitude of young people on the temperance question was also an interesting subject forming the basis of an address, discussion following. A protest against the election of immoral men to the legislature was noticeable, and showed how "our women realize the danger attending such elections."

In THE UNION SIGNAL of January 31, I noticed an article concerning a W. C. T. U. mission in Chicago. I would like to report that a large mission is supported here by voluntary contributions. It is located in the lower part of the city and is known as the Eleventh street W. C. T. U. mission. Save on Sunday, the rooms are open daily from ten to twelve o'clock in the morning. Mothers with children of varied sizes come to us for fragments of food which are donated by the woman's exchange and several hotels. Space will not permit a detailed account, but I cannot refrain from a brief outline of this almost limitless work. A service of prayer and praise is held daily, varied on Saturday by Loyal Temperance Legion work. It would do the most skeptical good to note the happiness of the boys and girls as they sing,

"When we are old enough to vote,
We'll make a great commotion,
We'll sweep the land from whisky clean
From ocean unto ocean."

The primary cause of much of the distress attending the applicants for help is drink. We estimate that upwards of one hundred people are daily supplied with food sufficient for one meal. On Saturday at two o'clock in the afternoon a mending party is held, when the women and larger girls sew for about two hours repairing the partially worn clothing or piecing and knotting "comforts," which are then given to the most needy. Following this a mothers' meeting alternates with a temperance meeting, and while not in a position to "pay dues," many of the women have taken the pledge and promised to do all they can for the suppression of intemperance. After this necessarily brief service a tea is furnished and food distributed for use on Sunday. It is a bright spot in the lives of many of those present, and one of the women (the mother of six children) said she couldn't live without it.

Who can approximate the results of such continual and faithful "seed sowing," claiming the promise, "My word shall not return void." Isaiah 55: 11. At a recent meeting nine of the women rose to say they had received the help which enabled them to accept Christ as their personal Saviour at that mission. Another turned to our missionary, and said: "You did it." She has helped her in the face of adverse circumstances to trust. A goodly number of the W. C. T. U. ladies take a personal interest in this work, helping by donations of money, clothing, or by attendance at the meetings. This last named way is potent for good, as it shows that white-ribbon sisters are desirous of reaching the less favored class, extending a kindly greeting, thus removing the prejudice which sometimes exists.

PRISON AND JAIL WORK.

I am informed by the matron of Arapahoe county jail (herself a staunch white-ribboner), that it was owing to the united effort of the W. C. T. U. women that her appointment was made some four years ago. Previous to that time there was no matron. All honor to the noble workers who thus showed their interest in behalf of the erring women and boys.

Since last flower mission day I have been privileged to make weekly visits to the jail in behalf of the matron's family, which consists of all the women prisoners, also boys under nineteen years of age.

I can report only one truly hopeful conversion, but that one is abundant reward for all efforts. It is the case of a young boy who has continued faithful to his profession since last July. Frequent visits to him serve to encourage us. In several instances our interest in discharged prisoners is kept up by correspondence, which seems fully appreciated. The women seem harder to reach as so many of them are slaves to either alcohol or morphine. This is one of the saddest sights and one not easily pictured, to see a bright young woman with her sense of honor so deadened that all appeal seems useless, the only craving being just one more portion of the deadly drug. This is peculiarly true of the morphine subjects, while those whose curse is strong drink tell us they can't help it when they get outside.

At Cañon City some weeks ago (the state penitentiary) a fine looking young man said, "I'm surprised at the women of Colorado." In answer to the query, "Why?" he replied, "I thought when women could vote we should have prohibition. It was drink put me here."

At no other prison have I ever noticed such a strange array of human nature. The highest type of intellect as well as the most depraved all on the same platform. Some I believe earnestly desire to reform; but the chain of evil habits is so hard to sever, and many appear to think an ex-convict has nothing better to look forward to than another sentence. This one thought was uppermost as I looked upon these: "Let him who thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."—I. Cor. 10-12.

One sentence from the prayer of our state president some time ago impressed me deeply. She asked that wherever our lives touched the life of another that life might be made brighter.

It becomes our privilege as individuals to devote a part of our time to at least one line of work in behalf of the cause so dear. Each in our own little corner may accomplish something, and the combined results may not be known until we meet "Beyond the river." Let us take courage, thankfully happy, in the assurance that from every state the trumpet call goes forth: Onward to victory.

MARTHA J. BAKER,
State Reporter, Denver.

SLEEP & REST
For Skin Tortured
BABIES
And Tired
MOTHERS
In One
Application of Cuticura

The only speedy, permanent, and economical cure for torturing, disfiguring eczema, and every species of itching and burning skin and scalp diseases.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

ASK FOR THE
NEW JAPANESE PERFUME
MAT-SU-KI-TA

THE CROWN PERFUMERY CO.,
of 177 New Bond Street, London,
Have much pleasure in introducing to their American clientele their latest perfume
MAT-SU-KI-TA.

This delightful scent differs in odor from anything heretofore produced. It has been called "an incomparably delicious perfume." We heartily commend it to all lovers of the celebrated
Crab-Apple Blossoms
AND
Crown Lavender Salts,
so popular all over the world.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

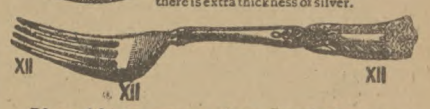
"Silver Plate that Wears"

"XII" Spoons and Forks

Our mark "XII" (pronounced X-2-I) means there is three times the usual thickness of silver on the parts exposed to wear. Goods so marked are the best to buy, because they last longest. Remember to look for the following "Trade Mark."

1847 Rogers Bros. XII

The dark places show where there is extra thickness of silver.



If unable to procure these goods from your dealer, we shall be glad to furnish necessary information. Manufactured only by the Meriden Britannia Co.
Meriden, Conn., Chicago, San Francisco.
New York Salesrooms, 1130 Broadway and 208 5th Ave., Madison Square, West.

A New Coffee Pot
Always sells well; the best ever made is now on the market—no toy at fancy prices, but a practical Pot for the million, that makes poor coffee impossible. Once used always used. Terms extremely liberal. Exclusive terr'y. A grand chance for agents—ladies or gentlemen. Write for terms.
Wilmot Castle & Co., 59 Elm St., Rochester, N. Y.

A $1 Magazine for 30c.
Send 30 cents and names of 6 people who might subscribe, and we will send you THE ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE a full year. The price of the magazine is $1 a year. A sample copy for 6 cents. Address
ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE 2819 OLIVE ST. ST. LOUIS, MO.

AMERICAN DESK CO.
4 FOOT DESK, $16
4½ " " 18
5 " " 20
18-20 E. Van Buren St., Athenæum Bldg., CHICAGO.

MARSHALL'S CATARRH SNUFF has been on the market 60 years. F. C. Keith, Mfr., Cleveland, O.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MISS JESSIE A. ACKERMANN has been very ill for some weeks and unable to give attention to her mail. She desires THE UNION SIGNAL to state that as soon as possible all letters will be answered. Her address is 615-59th Street, Englewood, Ill.

ANY unions, county or district, desiring Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman for April and May conventions, will please ask early, as Mrs. Horning is already at work for those months. Mrs. Hoffman spends nearly the entire month of March in Quebec, Canada. Address Mrs. M. B. Horning, The Temple, Chicago.

AN aged correspondent congratulating the National W. C. T. U. on attaining its majority writes: "The W. C. T. U. should have the right to cast its vote against all internal and external foes of the American republic and people and their useful institutions, and against all enemies of good society, good order and good morals."

MRS. MCCLEES reports that a demand exists among soldiers in posts for libraries of temperance books. In addition to libraries placed on our new war cruisers, Fort Riley, Kan., has been supplied by the department of soldiers and sailors with a box of books. The venerable Massachusetts worker in this department, Mother Livesey, has excelled all others in circulation of literature by personal effort.

IN response to the call for new and practical literature to aid in the work, the National superintendent of purity is planning to issue a monthly leaflet to be sold to subscribers at very low rates. In these leaflets will be discussed in plans and practical ways all the problems that present themselves both to parents and teachers. For full terms address Dr. Mary Wood Allen, 37 S. Thayer St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

MEMORIAL meetings for Mrs. Lathrap were held in many places Feb. 3. Among the first accounts which come to THE UNION SIGNAL is that from Cleveland, O., where the East End W. C. T. U. held services in Euclid Avenue Disciple Church, Mrs. Mary E. McConnell, presiding. Mrs. H. E. Hammond, editor of the Ohio W. C. T. U. Messenger, and Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, National organizer, paid glowing tributes to the departed temperance orator. At its close new members were received who will take up the work. "Thus being dead, she yet speaketh."

Official Communications.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

The battle this year is not national, but by states. Our organization is in the thick of the great fight in New York for Sunday saloon closing, the "reform" mayor and liquor men uniting to open them. In Pennsylvania also, determined efforts to break down the excellent Sabbath laws of the state has aroused energetic effort to preserve and strengthen them, in which the W. C. T. U. coöperates with the National Reform and Sabbath Associations. In California we are again moving strongly by petitions and other forces for a state Sabbath law.

In many states the steady drift of affairs is toward looser laws and less enforcement. Everywhere the liquor traffic, greed and pleasure, apathy and ignorance oppose us, the Sabbath is steadily disappearing, the organized forces for its preservation are far less than usual, the church inactive. A dishonored Sabbath will surely bring national calamity, and it is not difficult to read in our present disorders the results of violated law.

"We are set for the defense of the gospel" of the Sabbath. It is part of the charter work of our organization, and we are surrounded by the enemy. What are we—the local unions, doing about it? What account can we give? Signing petitions, engaging sermons and giving leaflets to those who have listened? We hope so, some do not even do this every year. We are verily guilty, dear sisters, if we do not arouse and impress ourselves on the public sentiment of our communities, and do all that in us lies to stem the tide and turn it. Study the Manual and the varied leaflets and see what you can do.

THE APRIL PRAYER WEEK

is at hand, let us observe it as such, in private and public, and make it the occasion for a general concerted work all along the line, and let us prepare for this at once. As is known to nearly all, the week beginning with the first Sabbath of April was set apart for united prayer and effort in all lands for better observance of the Sabbath, by the World's Prayer Union, a score of years ago, and later by the hearty indorsement of the National W. C. T. U., the American Sabbath Union and all other Sabbath organizations in this country. The annual leaflet of "Prayer Topics for April" No. 65, is to be ready February 15, ten cents a hundred.

With this in hand and ready to give out, every local union should solicit the coöperation of every pastor, engaging for one or both Sabbaths, the 7th and 14th, a practical sermon on the subject, and ask that it be made the subject of prayer of the mid-week meeting. Sabbath-school instruction should also be looked after where this has not been lately done and a platform meeting is desirable.

LITERATURE,

however, is our special work for that week. Ten cents will give you forty samples to choose from, and leaflets should be secured in ample season and given out at church doors. This year we ask that the unions take up the special work of house to house and shop to shop visitation, reaching thereby those to whom our literature is not often presented. Among the forty leaflets offered every class can be suited. No. 64, one of the latest, "Remember the Sabbath," should be given to railroad men and all who necessarily work on Sabbath, also to all who employ labor, whether in the household or shop. Every union needs a Sabbath Observance Manual (price 25 cts.), and with every dollar order for leaflets at retail price a manual is given free if requested. Sisters, I beg you to talk and pray over this subject, and resolve so far as in you lies the week's work shall be a success and strengthen the things that remain.

AN INTRODUCTION.

As frail health has prevented my doing all I desired, I have, with the approval of general officers, taken an associate superintendent, Mrs. Varilla F. Cox, of Tabor, N. J., whom I now introduce. She has for years been most successful as state superintendent, and brings undoubted ability, interest and experience to this work, which must increase its power and influence. She will be glad to correspond or make short lecture trips, and after midsummer is expected to take charge of the publishing of the department and fill orders for literature, but for the present all orders should be addressed to MRS. J. C. BATEHAM.

Williamsburg, Ky.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

I would call especial attention to the "Declaration of Principles" published in another column and ask that all white-ribboners do their utmost to "pass it along." If you have read your Annual Minutes you will note, on page 15, that the executive committee voted that the General Officers prepare such a declaration for publication in the Annual Leaflet. Among the General Officers the work was delegated to Miss Willard. Copies have been sent to each one of the five for suggestion and indorsement and this is the best result of our united judgment. Please scatter it broadcast over the land, as the latest, most authentic statement of our raison d' être.

The Annual Leaflet will be ready for distribution by the time this column meets your eyes. I hope you will feel that the change of form justifies the delay. It seemed best to adopt the catechism style as the most direct method of answering questions which are continually being received. I have tried to cover all points, and if any important ones have been omitted I shall be grateful to you if you will call my attention to them for future revision. All orders for small quantities should be accompanied by postage. In larger quantities they will be sent by express, charges payable by the person ordering. Please give them the widest possible circulation.

I would call especial attention to the program of the Polyglot meetings, February 15, 16 and 17. It has not been an easy matter to arrange an exact program, owing partly to the fact that the thought of so extended a series of meetings came rather late to admit of careful working out, and also because, at such long range, and with so many to consult, there are countless unavoidable delays. Even now it is not warranted to be carried out to the letter; but, whatever may fail, we are quite sure there will be a something as good, or better, to take its place. Will the press superintendents kindly see that as full reports as possible find their way into the local papers? This will be a most notable convocation and its importance should not be minimized for want of its proceedings being made known. The W. C. T. U. day in the Council proper has been changed from February 28 to February 19, an exceedingly gracious act on the part of the Council officers, as it will enable those of our busy women who cannot remain through the entire session to take in the Council meeting as well as the Polyglot. Miss Belle Kearney, Mrs. Hoffman, Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard are the speakers on that evening, while Mrs. Hoffman is our delegate throughout the entire Council. The Council program is a very attractive one, and it is gratifying to see how many of those reading papers are well-known white-ribboners.

The news from the organizing field is most encouraging. The majority of the organizers are hard at work, and of those who are not, many are perfecting plans. State organizers, also, and free-lance speakers, are doing grand service. Mrs. Baxter is planniug a trip into Indiana, which, under the energetic supervision of Mrs. Balch, state corresponding secretary, will doubtless be most successful. Unions wishing to secure her services should write to Mrs. Balch, or to Mrs. Baxter, Harvey, Ill.

Madame Sakurai, the dear little Japanese sister who has won all our hearts, is to have her headquarters in Chicago until she starts on her homeward trip, about the last of March. She would be very glad to address unions upon her work, and we are very sure no local union could do better than to secure her services. She is a genuine little heroine, and is doing us more good in showing us the patience and pluck with which she works for the building up of Christ's kingdom in her native land, than we can possibly do her, though our contributions were quadrupled. Address her at 120 South Wood St., Chicago.

The observance of Mrs. Lathrap's memorial service has been very universal. The Willard Hall meeting was sweet, and full of the blessed uplift of faith and hope. The music added much to the effectiveness of the occasion. This was furnished by Mrs. L. G. Johnson, a well-known white ribbon and prohibition speaker, and her two daughters. Miss Willard's "On Heights of Power" was one of the selections, while two of Mrs. Lathrap's own poems were rendered. Truly, "being dead she yet speaks."

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner.

Remember, dear comrades, that the custom is now becoming established in the National W. C. T. U. to ask each member of the local white-ribbon society to send on each birthday, in token of her gratitude to God, as many pennies to the National treasury as she has lived years on this earthly ball. Again we say, remember. This little deed faithfully followed out would, financially speaking, transfer our society from crutches to wings.

Our beloved Chieftain has requested me to keep standing in italics at the head of the Corner the above, which I gladly do.

☞ Only sixty copies of Minutes left for sale at this writing, and by the time this announcement reaches the eye of the reader a large part of this number will be gone. They have gone rapidly. We ordered four hundred more than last year thinking the demand would be greater but did not expect quite such a rush as we have had. Mrs. Stoddard of Cohasset, Mass., writes, "How can you afford to send them out so low? The amount we forwarded was only enough for postage. It is worth one dollar." Another writes, "I send 15 cts. but would pay ten times that amount rather than not have a copy." We are glad of these words of appreciation.

The Polyglot souvenirs are now ready giving text of Petition, autograph, signatures of World's and National officers and seals of both societies, World's and National, stamped from a beautiful cut. This souvenir will be greatly prized by all lovers of our cause. It will have to be carefully sent in pasteboard rolls, as parchment paper breaks easily. Ten cents will little more than cover cost of printing and wrapping, and we trust every one ordering will add a 2c. stamp for postage in addition to the 10 cents, making 12 cents. Send to treasurer for souvenirs.

A dear white-ribboner, Sue T. Smith, of Mass., writes, "To-day would have been mother's birthday, if living, and I thought I would like to send an offering for her; mine will be the last of the month, so I will send for each of us," and the letter contained $2. What a beautiful tribute to a loving mother!

New Jersey's faithful treasurer sends a second installment of dues thus early in the new year, also donation from Mrs. Thacher of $1, and self-denial gifts from Florence union, $1.50; and from Ocean Grove W. C. T. U. $2.26, also $7 for Y bed in hospital. Mrs. N. Wilson sends gift for herself and daughter, Effie, of $1.20, and Lucy R. Head, of West Va., sends a remembrance of 20cts.

Annual leaflets of important information are now ready and will be sent to every one sending postage sufficient to cover expense of transportation, or where a large quantity is desired at state headquarters it may be best to send by express, but will be at expense of those ordering.

HELEN M. BARKER.

That's the sort of Bias Velveteen Skirt Binding you ought to have on your dress. Look for "S.H.&M." on the label, never mind what the clerk says—see for yourself.

For sale by all dry goods dealers.

Samples and booklet on "How to Bind the Dress Skirt," for 2c stamp.

The S. H. & M. Co., 131 Spring St., N. Y.

"S.H.& M." Dress Stays are the Best.

Papa's Pants Would do for Willie

if they were made over and dyed with Diamond Dyes, the great home money-saver. The children's clothes—the faded cloak, wrapper or dress—can be made to look like new, at a cost of only 10 cents, and no experience is needed.

DIAMOND DYES

come in more than 40 shades, and the Fast Blacks are fast.

Direction Book and 40 samples of colored cloth, free WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

DRINKING FOUNTAINS

FOR MAN AND BEAST

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS...

84 to 90 Beekman Street NEW YORK.....

311 to 313 Wabash Ave, .....CHICAGO

Catalogue with price may be obtained upon application.

DEAFNESS

and head noises relieved by using WILSON'S COMMON SENSE EAR DRUMS. Entirely new, scientific invention; different from all other devices; the only safe, simple, comfortable, and invisible ear drum in the world. Hundreds are being benefitted where medical skill has failed. No string or wire attachment to irritate the ear. Write for pamphlet.

THE DRUM IN POSITION

WILSON EAR DRUM CO. 132 Trust Bldg. LOUISVILLE, KY.

DENT'S CORN GUM

Cures Corns, Warts, Bunions, etc. So easy to apply—it sticks fast. Ask for Dent's; take no other. Sold everywhere, or by mail 10 cents. C. S. DENT & Co. DETROIT, MICH.

Try Dent's Toothache Gum.

High Arm Warranted Ten Years

MY HUSBAND Cant see how you do it.

$60 Kenwood Machine for - - $23.00
$50 Arlington Machine for - $19.50
Standard Singers - $8.00, $11.00
$15.00, and 27 other styles. All attachments FREE. We pay freight ship anywhere on 30 days free trial, in any home without asking one cent in advance. Buy from factory. Save agents large profits. Over 100,000 in use. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write at once. Address (in full), CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-164 West Van Buren St., B 30, Chicago, Ill.

SHOEMAKER'S POULTRY ALMANAC

Contains 80 pages; over 70 illustrations in colors. Sure remedies and recipes for all known diseases in poultry; also valuable hints on poultry raising. Full information and prices on all leading varieties. Finest descriptive Poultry Book ever issued. Sent postpaid for 15cts. to any address. C. C. SHOEMAKER, Freeport, Ill. U.S.A.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my Invisible Tubular Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Warranted to help more cases than all similar devices combined. Help ears as glasses do eyes. Sold by F. HISCOX only, 853 Br'dway, N. Y. Send for book of proofs FREE

LADY AGENTS, Rubber Undergarment Quick sales, big profits Catalog free, Mrs. N. B. LITTLE, Chicag

Our Library Table.

AMONG THE MAGAZINES.

The midwinter issue of the CENTURY is particularly rich in contents. An article that will touch a wide class of readers is "Oliver Wendell Holmes; Personal Recollections and Unpublished Letters," by Annie Fields. Perhaps there is nothing from the pen of a great writer which is such a happy revealment of personal characteristics as the informal notes and letters written to friends. The bright spontaneity of these epistles from Holmes is but a fresh witness to his unique character in its fine gentlemanliness and keen appreciation of the laughable "side of things."

---

The February issue of the NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE presents to its readers an intensely interesting article by David Nelson Beach entitled, "The Norwegian System in its Home." Mr. Beach, in company with Dr. Philip S. Moxom, paid a visit to Norway to examine "without bias" into the real condition of the liquor traffic as controlled by the Gothenberg system. Mr. Beach makes a very clear and valuable report, but is wholly converted to this régime, believing that here is the eventual solution of the dark "problem" over which America's best brain and heart is bent in earnest effort."

---

THE NEW ENGLAND KITCHEN MAGAZINE assumes an appropriate February air in its varied articles and menus. The leader this month is "Food as a Factor in Student Life," by Ellen H. Rechards and Marion Talbot, the material being gathered from the report of a study of student diet at the University of Chicago. Other contributions suggestive to housewives are: "A Lunch Room for Students," by Ellen H. Rechards; "Some Attractive Tables," Carrie M. Dearborn; "Belgian Kitchens and Their Products," Dora M. Morrell, Antwerp, Belgium; "The Home and the Labor Problem," by Mrs. Helen E. Starrett: "The New Era in Food Supplies," by Dr. Mary E. Green. Valuable recipes and hints for the conduct of the home make a very complete issue of nearly seventy pages, well illustrated.

---

The following paragraph from a recent issue of THE AMERICAN MEDICAL TEMPERANCE QUARTERLY is a testimony that will be gladly read by the ever-increasing number of those who advocate "no alcohol in medicine":

"Can the general practice of medicine be conducted with success without alcohol as an internal remedy? This question has been answered in the negative, as a rule, but the experience of an increasing number of active practitioners points to an affirmative answer. A prominent general practitioner expressed surprise that any one could do without alcohol in general medicine. He was persuaded to make a trial, by abandoning the internal use of spirits as medicine. A year afterward he wrote that his success in the treatment of disease had been equal to that of any year in the past, and that his cases recovered as well without alcohol as with it. In a recent medical meeting he remarked, 'I thought for many years that I could not do without spirits as medicine. I was mistaken. I am constantly treating cases of all degrees of severity without alcohol, and my success is fully equal to the average.'"

---

The February issue of the ARENA contains among other valuable contributions a discussion that is of interest to thinking men and women, especially the latter. Opposing views of leading Southern women on the question, "Woman Suffrage in the South," are advanced in two vigorous articles,—"The New Woman of the New South," by Mrs. Josephine K. Henry, and "Attitude of Southern Women on the Suffrage Question," by Mrs. Annah Robinson Watson. The topic is most thoroughly discussed, both sides being well handled. Contrasting statements may be acceptably quoted. Mrs. Henry gives utterance to her belief in prophetic vein: "The monochord of political liberty for women of the South has been touched by the finger of manifest destiny, and no power on earth can silence its refrain." Mrs. Watson uses as one of her arguments the following: "In the home, the source of all good to the state, would surely come sooner or later discussions, divisions and dissensions. There would inevitably be two sides and these in many instances hotly contested. It is an old saying that a man and his wife should not play chess. Surely it is a graver question whether they should play at the dangerous game of politics."

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are the simplest, quickest and most effectual remedy for Bronchitis, Asthma and Throat Diseases.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

1619 Diversey Street, Chicago.

MEDICINE AND ALCOHOL.

That physicians are coming more and more to see the mistake of prescribing alcoholic beverages is a good omen of progress in the faith for which our National Temperance Hospital stands as a living evidence and object lesson. A writer in the Toledo, O., Blade holds up in clear light the relation of the materia medica and alcohol, and the opportunity of the physician to become a benefactor and active temperance worker. His remarks follow:

"One of the signs of the times in the temperance movement is the steady growth among physicians of a sentiment against the administration of liquor of any kind as a medicine. The accepted scientific view of alcohol is that it is a poison, and its administration should be as guarded as that of any other poison used as a medicine. Perhaps the hardest thing a physician finds in his effort to restore his patients to health without the use of liquors is the common but erroneous belief that they are "strengthening," and that the convalescent, by their use, reaches recovery more quickly. The error is in supposing that any alcoholic liquor is nourishing or strengthening. They are neither. Alcohol does not nourish, but it pulls down; it does not strengthen, but excites and exhausts, for every stimulation is necessarily followed by a period of depression, and this is inevitably unfavorable to the patient.

"There is a grave responsibility resting on the physician who prescribes alcoholic liquor. It may arouse in a susceptible patient a dormant, inherited tendency to drink. He may, by authorizing its use during the period of convalescence, fix a habit upon a patient of feeble will which the latter will never be able to shake off. No physician who realizes this great moral responsibility will be willing to accept it habitually. He certainly knows that the best medical authorities agree that alcoholic intoxicants are rarely useful as a medicine; that at best they are dangerous remedies and that the less they are resorted to, the better for both brain and body, the better for his well-being, physical and moral.

"In point of fact the physician who does his best duty to his patient teaches him the error of the prevalent belief in the virtues of liquor in restoring the sick to health. He becomes an active temperance worker in effect. And he can do a noble and useful work in the rescue of those who are under the control of the drink habit. . . . .

"Furthermore, every physician owes it to his profession to teach his patients the utter fallacy of the common belief that alcohol is an article of food value. It has none whatever. The use of intoxicants in any quantity whatever, or at any time, is entirely useless and unnecessary. The continued use of them gradually induces structural degradations and functional derangements of the great bodily organs, thus leading to the gravest physical disorders.

MRS. M. E. KLINE,
President Hospital Board.

62 E. 43d St., Chicago.

Organizers' Corner.

Superintendent of the Department of Organization, Corresponding Secretary of the National W. C. T. U.

ORGANIZERS.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, 1105 Davis street, Elmira, N. Y.

Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, Port Jervis, N. Y.

Miss Frances E. Griffin, The De Soto, Chicago.

Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, Chautauqua, Wash.

Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, 1907 Bush street, San Francisco, Cal.

Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair, Clinton, N. Y.

Mrs. Maude L. Greene, Manitou Springs, Col.

Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Baraga, Mich.

Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.

Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Ellensburg, E. Wash.

Miss Ida Clothier, Manitou Springs, Col.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, Pacific Grove, Cal.

Mrs. S. C. Harris, Franklin, Va.

Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, 1006 Bainbridge street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.

Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.

Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.

Mrs. E. A. Kenyon, Townshend, Vt.

Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown, LL.D., Cincinnati, O., Lecturer.

Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, Vincennes, Ind.

Mrs. Sue V. Tomlinson, Charlotte, N. C.

Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, Roslindale, Mass., Lecturer.

Mrs. E. L. Calkins, 922 S. Rose street, Kalamazoo, Mich.

Miss Lilian Wood, Maryville, Mo., Lecturer.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, A. M., West New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y., Lecturer.

Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, 27 Everett street, Cambridge, Mass., Lecturer.

Mrs. Addie Northam Field, Bedford, N. H.

Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, McMinnville, Ore.

For terms and date address as above.

---

Since the National Convention I have been constantly on the wing in Michigan, and I am happy to report the very best meetings I have ever held. Many women long coveted are joining us, and men are exclaiming, "I never saw it in that light before."

To God be all the honor and glory! Have just been holding some very successful meetings in Detroit, and expect to do more work there in the spring.

Sunday, February 3, I had the honor of being permitted to speak words of eulogy for our dear departed state president. February 13 I expect to start for Florida and shall work in that state and Mississippi during the remainder of this month and through March. In April I wend my way back to Michigan to attend several county conventions and visit local unions.

I can truly say, never have I been so deeply anxious about the work, and more and more is it borne in upon my mind, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel of temperance and purity," which certainly is a part of the great gospel of Christ. I am coming to believe, too, that the W. C. T. U. ought to push out more actively into the rural districts. I find some of the best working unions in the country, where the women ride from four to eight miles to attend regular meetings. Our work has this advantage in rural districts that there are not so many clubs and the women are not so carried away with social frivolity as city women. I have long had the conviction that we ought to have township organizations or by school districts.

I send greetings to my sister travelers and pray that God's blessing may attend them.

Yours for victory,
E. NORINNE LAW.

Baraga, Mich.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, bilious headache, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, loss of appetite, sallow skin, etc., when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

Go by the book. Pills 10¢ and 25¢ a box. Book free at your druggist's or write B. F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

Quaker OATS

A Helping Hand.

Quaker Oats has helped millions across perilous places in life. It will help you. Delicious, too!

Sold only in 2 lb. Packages.

All About ROSES

How to get the famous D. & C. Roses—the best and sweetest—on their own roots. How to grow and care for them and a thousand other flowers. All this and many valuable flower-growing secrets are contained in our new Guide to Rose Culture. To every flower lover who so requests, we will send free, this book and a sample copy of our floral magazine "SUCCESS WITH FLOWERS."

The Dingee & Conard Co., West Grove, Pa.

Seeds and Bulbs GIVEN AWAY. The Choicest Collection and best offer ever made. We want every reader of this paper to try this collection: 1 pkt. Lovely Marguerite Carnation, 1 pkt. Fuller's Perfection Pansy, 1 pkt. Snow Queen Pansy, pure satin white; 1 pkt. Balsam, 1 pkt. Floral Park Giant Phlox, 1 pkt. Sweet Pea, 1 pkt. Mignonette, 1 pkt. Giant Zinnia, 1 pkt. Poppy Bridesmaid, 1 pkt. Aster, 1 Bulb Lovely Tuberose, 1 Bulb New Seedling Gladioli, 8 Bulbs Oxalis, free bloomers. The above collection, 10 packets seeds, 10 Bulbs and our Bargain Catalogue mailed free on following conditions: Send us 25 cents to pay postage and packing. We will include in each collection a check good for 20 cents.
J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N. Y.

Mrs. R. Howard Kelly
1018 Chamber Commerce Bldg., CHICAGO

by reason of her fifteen years' training in the difficult work of

CONVENTION REPORTING

is claimed by those who have made use of her services, to be specially fitted for intelligent reporting, editing, condensing and preparing for publication the proceedings of all associations, and particularly those engaged in reformatory, literary, religious and women's work.

Overburdened or inexperienced secretaries find her services of special value.

She has been for several years official stenographer for the National W. C. T. U., and by permission refers to its officers and to those of the National Council of Women, the Federation of Women's Clubs, the Wisconsin Farmers' Institute, to C. C. Bonney, President World's Congresses of 1893, to Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Secretary Religious Congresses, 1893; to Judges of Cook County, Illinois, and many others well acquainted with her work.

HOME STUDY Book-keeping, Penmanship, Arithmetic, Shorthand, etc. thoroughly taught by Mail at student's Home. Low rates; perfect satisfaction. Cat. free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 77 College Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

At 1/4 Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc. List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address, C. J. MASON, Box, 519, New York City, N. Y.

SALESMEN WANTED to sell our goods by samples to the wholesale and retail trade; sell on sight to every business man or firm; liberal salary, money advanced for advertising and expenses. Permanent position. Address with stamp, KING MFG. CO., A 55 Chicago, Ill.

$2.75 SPECIAL GENTS OR LADIES SIZE 14 KARAT Gold Plate.

CUT THIS OUT and send it to us with your name and address and we will send you this beautiful gold finished watch by express for examination. You examine it at the express office, and if you think it a bargain pay our sample price $2.75, and it is yours. It is magnificently engraved and equal in appearance to a genuine Solid Gold watch. A guarantee for 5 years and beautiful gold plate chain and charm sent FREE with every watch, write to-day, this may not appear again; mention whether you want gents' or ladies' size. Address
THE NATIONAL MFG. & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

RUBIFOAM
FOR THE TEETH

It's a luxury and a benefit. It's deliciously flavored, sweetens the breath, stops decay, hardens the gums, and adds a charm of its own to the most irregular teeth.

25 cents. All Druggists.
Sample vial free. Address
E. W. HOYT & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Kernels.

"LATIN and Greek are all right," said a Delaware farmer as he halted his team, "but gimmee a man who can plow around an apple tree 'thout touching the roots."

JACK SINGLETON: "Every man has his good and bad side." Miss Willing: "I've never seen the better half of a bachelor."

LITTLE Ben lives in a new house, one of the most modern of modern houses, where light, water, heat and other things are all to be had by turning a knob or touching a bell. He lives in a state of perpetual marvel over these things, and the other night, when suffering from a headache, the little fellow said to his mother, who sat beside him: "Please turn on the dark, mother; my eyes hurt me."

BILLY—"Just one more question, pa, and I'll go to sleep sure." Father—"Well, what is it?" Billy—"When any one pounds a knot out of a board how can it leave a knot whole in the board when the knot hole is knocked out?" Father (irritably)—"Don't talk so foolishly, William." Billy—"And supposing the whole not knocked out, how can the whole hole be there? To go a little further, it's a whole knot hole, not a whole hole, just because—" An ominous creaking of the paternal bedstead put an end to further speculation.

"I SUPPOSE," said he, "that if you women had the right to vote you would also assume the right to stand up in the crowded street cars, all the same as the men?"

"H'm!" said she. "If women were running things there would be enough street cars put on the tracks, or they would take the company's privileges away."

"MARY Jane," said the rector, solemnly, "the steak is cooked to a crisp, and the potatoes are raw. You have left undone the things that ought to be done, and cooked too done the things that ought not to be done."

ASPIRING poet: "I'll set the world ablaze yet." His wife: "I do hope you will, dear. Would you mind making a fire in the kitchen stove—just as a matter of practice, you know."

THE proprietor of a crossroads store in Kentucky has the following on a bulletin board displayed in front of his store: "Tucking combs and side-saddles, hairpins and trace chains, watch charms and sledge hammers, hair oil and blasting powder, cinnamon drops and Colts revolvers."

A MAN once asked a teacher if he could make a first-class scholar of his daughter. After a trial he answered in the negative. 'Why not?" asked the father. "Because she hasn't the capacity," was the response. "Oh, I am rich," says the father, "I can buy her a capacity."

THERE are two reasons why some people don't mind their own business. One is that they haven't any mind; the other that they haven't any business.

"I'M going to call my baby Charles," said the author, "after Lamb, because he is such a dear little lamb." "Oh, I'd call him William Dean," said a friend, "he Howells so much."

A DOG that won't give us the wag of his tail will kill sheep.

"MA," said a newspaper man's son, "I know why editors call themselves we." "Why?" "So's the man that doesn't like the article will think there are too many people for him to tackle."

FOLLOW the example of the thermometer—don't be impatient, and you'll get there. The thermometer rises by degrees.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Our Library Table.

The February ATLANTIC MONTHLY contains, beside much excellent fiction, one or two articles of particular timeliness, one of which is an able paper by Theodore Roosevelt upon "The Present Status of Civil Service Reform." In these days when hypnotic influences are much discussed, the article by Boris Sidis upon "A Study of the Mob," is of special interest.

SCRIBNER'S February number is unusually good. Robert Grant's series of papers on "The Art of Living," are humorous and satirical yet eminently practical. Noah Brooks continues his group of papers on "American Party Politics," outlining the growth of American politics from Washington's time to the war. Dr. Charles L. Dana, under the title, "Giants and Giantism," devotes his skill to showing that giantism is a disease. Bret Harte gives the humor touch in a poem entitled "A Question of Privilege," and others too numerous to mention here add their quota to the fine table of contents ever to be found within the covers of this admirable periodical.

McCLURE'S magazine makes a specialty of profuse and elegant illustrations. The first thirty-six pages of the February issue are devoted to papers upon Napoleon Bonaparte, comprehending the fourth of a series of papers by Ida M. Tarbell, upon "Napoleon, the King Maker." The second paper is entitled, "The Wax Cast of the Face of Napoleon: The Strange History of a Precious Relic," by Baron De St. Pôl. A most timely article, finely enriched by portraits of the leading characters referred to, is "Lincoln, as Commander-in-chief," by Alexander E. McClure, editor of the Philadelphia Times. The litterateur will appreciate William Churchill's "Stevenson in the South Sea," with its excellent portraits of this man of whom the author says, "he won more than the honor of being regarded by his own people the first of romancers in the English tongue." A poem entitled "Scotland's Lament," by J. M. Barrie, and two brief articles upon that "ready writer," give a very complete literary touch to this issue of McCLURE'S.

February REVIEW OF REVIEWS has its hands full in these stirring times, there are so many significant movements to record under the head of its regular department entitled "The Progress of the World." But the editor's pen is pointed and fleet. By its impetus he carries his readers first to consider "Presidential Changes in France," analyzing in a few pithy paragraphs the situation in that country of such uncertain temper; from France it is but a step to Hawaii, where the matter of a cable station has become wound up with affairs of weightier moment, and the editor says gravely, "If there are reasons why a telegraph office requires a separate island under a separate flag, that do not also apply to any steamship line that serves the Sandwich Islands regularly, we have not as yet been made to understand wherein the difference consists." Leaving the troublesome little island for Japan, the effect of the war upon the latter's progress is discussed at length; the awfulness of the Armenian massacres is noted and "Armenia from the European point of view" is put into a nutshell in the following sentence: "So far as Armenia is concerned, therefore, the peace of Europe is not likely to be disturbed, nor, unfortunately, are the wrongs of the Armenians likely to be redressed." Coming to American questions, Secretary Carlisle's perplexities are discussed, the income tax question overhauled, the Congressional outlook scanned, a list of successful aspirants to senatorial chairs given, and in "Reformers versus Politics" a stormy time ahead is predicted (in New York city) in which the reformers will have to fight as valiantly to secure the substantial results of their success as they fought last autumn to gain the victory at the polls." A flying glimpse is given at the labor troubles in New York, the collapse in Newfoundland, Indian news, the new reign in Russia, a ministerial crisis in Hungary, and "Crispi-ism and corruption at Rome." The month's casualties by wreck and fire and explosion, and a brief comment upon the tribute to be paid to Reverend Robert Hunt, the first preacher at Jamestown,—"The first English-speaking missionary who preached the gospel of Christ in America," bring to a close this rapid transit mode of putting the World's history within the compass of a half-hour by the clock.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda, is a constructive food that nourishes, enriches the blood, creates solid flesh, stops wasting and gives strength. It is for all

Wasting Diseases

like Consumption, Scrofula, Anæmia, Marasmus; or for Coughs and Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Weak Lungs, Loss of Flesh and General Debility. Scott's Emulsion has no equal as Nourishment for Babies and Growing Children.

Buy only the genuine put up in salmon-colored wrapper.

Send for pamplet on Scott's Emulsion. FREE.

Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All Druggists. 50 cents and $1.

Publisher's Notes.

The beautiful verses by Mary T. Lathrap,

"THERE'S A SHADOW ON THE HOME,"

with music by Lucy Rider Meyer, are arranged as a "Battle Song of the Y's," an alto or bass solo, with the chorus,

"We are Coming to the Rescue,"

and are found in the collection of songs compiled for the Y. W. C. T. U. by Anna A. Gordon. To meet the general demand we publish the words and music in leaflet form for convenient use in the

Memorial Services

to be held by unions throughout the country in loving memory of our promoted leader.

PRICE:

| | |
|---|---|
| Single copy | $ 1 |
| 50 copies | 40 |
| 100 copies | 75 |
| 500 copies | 3 00 |
| 1,000 copies | 5 00 |

No orders filled for less than ten copies.

This is a most fitting time also to circulate leaflets written by the peerless prohibition orator, now passed from our sight. Unions would do well to order a supply. They are:

National Leaflets.

No. 1. The National W. C. T. U.
No. 65. After Twenty Years.

Of the "Timely Talk Series," No. 17 contains two "Talks":

1. On Which Side Are You?
By Frances E. Willard

and

2. The Seen and the Unseen.
By Mary T. Lathrap

PRICE OF NATIONAL LEAFLETS:

| | |
|---|---|
| Per package of 10 | $ 10 |
| Per 100 | 90 |
| Per 1,000 | 7 50 |

PRICE OF TIMELY TALKS:

| | |
|---|---|
| Per 100 | $ 30 |
| Per 1,000 | 2 50 |

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

JUST WHAT YOU WANT!

A NEW ENTERTAINMENT.

Our Illustrated Authors...

JUST PUBLISHED.

A splendid social and instructive game FOR OLD AND YOUNG.

Suitable for a Small or a Large Company...

W. C. T. Unions, Y's, Christian Endeavorers, take notice.

Fifty illustrations, complete directions, cards and key, all included in a box.

Price only Fifty Cents, postpaid. Can be used any number of times.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

You will find the "White Ribbon Hymnal" a great help in temperance meetings and song services. Price 35c.

Publisher's Notes.

RAILROAD RATES.

Presentation of the Polyglot Petition, Washington, D. C., Feb. 15, 1895.

White-ribboners will appreciate the interest of Mrs. Rachel Foster Avery, who has had in mind the convenience of the National W. C. T. U. in the negotiations with railroads for reduced rates and an extension of time, allowing them to be in Washington a few days earlier than the date on which the National Council of Women convenes. Those intending to participate in the historic meeting to be held in connection with the presentation of the Polyglot Petition, will please note the following arrangements:

Reduced Rates.

Those desiring to participate in the presentation of the Polyglot Petition, can secure the one and one-third rate for the round trip to Washington, D. C., and return, by buying their tickets to Triennial Session of the National Council of Women, to convene in Washington, February 18, 1895.

Time.

The Southern Passenger Association makes the reduced rates good from February 13 to 19 going, and good until March 15, returning.

The New England Passenger Committees make their rates good between February 14 and 21 going, and good to March 5, returning.

The Trunk Line and the Central Traffic Association make rates good from February 13 to 28, going, and good to March 5, returning.

The Western Traffic Association, it is believed, will concede the same rates that the others have done, though definite information has not as yet been received by those in charge of railroad rates for National Council of Women.

LATEST INFORMATION.

We have received from Mrs. Avery the following important information. To secure one and one-third fare you will pay full fare going to Washington, but your station agent will give you certificate which will secure you one-third fare returning.

Provided,

you get this certificate signed in Washington by Miss Lucy E. Anthony, who will be at the Bureau of Information from 9 to 10 A. M., } Feb. 20, 21, 22, 26, 27, 28.

7:30 to 8 P. M. }

Also from 7:30 to 8 P. M., Feb. 19 and 25.

Please cut this out for reference, and remember, without certificate you cannot obtain reduced fare.

State L. T. L. Superintendents.

Do you know about

THE CRUSADER BANNER?

Has your state L. T. L. ever held it?
Why not?
Send for January issue of YOUNG CRUSADER, and then get the children interested.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

The Rialto

is the favorite with the daintiest of housekeepers. This Pattern is furnished in the now so popular brand

Sterling Silver Inlaid.

Silver is inlaid in the back of the bowl and handle, giving the service of solid silver. Guaranteed 25 years. Ask your Jeweler for these goods, or send to us for a sample set of six Tea Spoons. Price $2.75

Each article is stamped on the back

E. STERLING INLAID HE.

THE HOLMES & EDWARDS SILVER CO.,
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

New York Salesroom, 2 Maiden Lane (second door from Broadway). A complete line of Solid Silver Plated Ware and Novelties.

HEALTHFUL WOMANHOOD AND CHILDHOOD.

From the Evanston Press, June 9, 1894:

DR. HEMENWAY'S NEW BOOK.—A new book by an Evanston author has come to our table this week, "Healthful Womanhood and Childhood," by Dr. Henry B. Hemenway. As the title indicates, the work is a treatise on the health of women and the care of young children. The work is intended for non-professional readers and was prepared with a view of taking a place which had not yet been filled, that of a strictly scientific work, perfectly reliable in all of its statements and at the same time put in language which a person unfamiliar with medical terms can readily understand. The volume is illustrated with eighteen plates which are put in a pocket on the inside of the cover.

The physical life of woman, from childhood to old age, is very fully treated upon. The statements are made in a very concise manner and yet no important subject is passed without consideration.

One of the most useful and instructive chapters in the book, and one which will find much favor with readers, is the chapter on infant feeding. This subject has been very thoroughly investigated by the author, and his conclusion should be of great assistance to the mother anxious to know with what to satisfy the appetite of her child.

The book is a 12mo. volume of 290 pages. It is printed in clear, large type and will be sold at $2.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

OUR NEW YEAR'S OFFER

To NEW Subscribers to

THE UNION SIGNAL....

Cut out the Coupon given below and send it to us with $1.15, and get THE UNION SIGNAL for 1895, and The White Ribbon Cook Book.

This offer is made to NEW subscribers only.

COUPON

This coupon, if sent to THE UNION SIGNAL together with $1.15, is good for one year's subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and a copy of the White Ribbon Cook Book.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n
...THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO...

Publisher's Notes.

BIBLE READING FOR FEBRUARY.

Power from on High.

By Anna M. Palmer.

The text in Acts 1:4 forms an important part of the last message of the Master to His disciples just previous to His ascension. The central thought imparted, the promise about to be fulfilled, and a command to wait in Jerusalem for its fulfillment.

The writer ably discourses upon the two most important points in Gospel Temperance Work, and emphasizes the need of a large enduement of spiritual power for the worker, and Christ to be presented by the worker as the only safe cure for the sin-bitten multitudes about us.

Most graphically she compares the special call of Moses and of the women of the W. C. T. U.

Thus eloquently closes this excellent Bible reading:

"The Crusade was the temperance Pentecost descending upon the Marys. We tarried until we heard the Master say, 'Ye shall receive power' and 'shall be witnesses unto the uttermost parts of the earth.' This promise has literally been fulfilled, although the kingdoms are not yet restored. Our day of prayer has been our tarrying hours, the 'trysting time' and 'noontide hour' should be tarryings for fresh power from on high."

Please send promptly for this reading before the supply is exhausted.

PRICE.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1 copy | $ .01 |
| 12 copies for | .10 |
| 30 " " | .20 |
| 50 " " | .35 |

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Young Women.

New Series Oak and Ivy Leaf...

Official Organ Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

12 Pages. - Published Monthly. - 50c. a Year.

JENNIE A. STEWART, Editor.

★

A welcome change has taken place in our Y paper during the year. Enlarged and improved it is an attractive paper for the general reader as well as the young folks within the white-ribbon fold. The new list of departments includes:

News of the Month (in temperance, religious, political and educational circles); Special Articles (biography, travel, interviews, etc.); Queen's Gardens (poems, stories and sermonettes); Worth Repeating; Editorial; Official (messages and hints from the leaders in Y work); College Corner; Kindred Societies; Have You Read——? Brothers of Girls; Good Times; Girls at Home; By Mail; Silhouettes; Y Round Table and Pearls and Feathers.

TERMS TO UNIONS.

★

Single copies, one year, each .....50c
Five copies on one order, one year, each, 40c
Any number of copies, for distribution, each..... 4c

★

TERMS TO SOLICITORS.

One copy, one year.....50c

For clubs of five or more, the solicitor may retain 10 cents of each cash subscription. After the first club is sent the solicitor's name will be entered, and ten cents may be retained for each subsequent cash subscription.

THE UNION SIGNAL and Young Women to one address, one year, $1.40.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

JUST WHAT YOU WANT. WHAT?

THE CRUSADE SPOON.

New Prices.

We are happy to give our patrons the benefit of the reduction in silver by offering the Crusade Souvenir Spoon at the following prices:

CRUSADE SPOONS.

| FORMER PRICE. | | REDUCED PRICE. |
|---|---|---|
| Teaspoons, - - | $2 25 | Now, $1 75 |
| " gilded bowl, | 2 75 | " 2 25 |
| After dinner coffee spoons, - - - | 1 50 | Now, 1 00 |
| After dinner coffee spoons, gilded bowl, | 1 75 | Now, 1 25 |

These spoons will commend themselves to workers as especially fitting souvenirs, both of the birth and the "majority" year of the W. C. T. U.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ASK Your Grocer for

NONE SUCH MINCE MEAT

Two Mince Pies, equal to our Grandmother's, from each package of None-Such Mince Meat, without the worry and work. For sale by all Grocers.

MERRELL-SOULE CO.,
Syracuse, N. Y.

A WONDERFUL BOOK

TOUCHING INCIDENTS AND REMARKABLE ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

As Related By

| | |
|---|---|
| John Wesley, | Bishop Bowman, |
| Chas. G. Finney, | T. DeWitt Talmage, |
| Bishop Simpson, | John Knox, |
| John B. Gough, | Martin Luther, |
| B. Fay Mills, | D. L. Moody, |
| George Muller, | C. H. Spurgeon, |

and many others.

This new book is meeting with universal favor, and is already having a large and rapid sale.

Over 3,000 Sold in Less Than Three Weeks.

Read a few of the good things said of it:

Western Christian Advocate: "It is simply wonderful. No one can read the book without having his faith in prayer greatly strengthened."

THE UNION SIGNAL: "Its high religious tone, its fascinating spirit, and the high rank of its contributors, make it a strong faith tonic and an inspiration to prevailing prayer."

B. Fay Mills: "A wonderful book—an excellent book."

Chaplain C. C. McCabe: "This book will remind the reader that there are Elijahs still upon the earth."

Bishop Wm. Taylor: "True to its title."

Bishop Thos. Bowman, D. D., LL. D.: "I have read your book, 'Touching Incidents and Remarkable Answers to Prayer,' with much interest and spiritual profit."

Price $1.

Address
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

QUIET MOMENTS,

A Series of Twelve Bible Readings by Hannah Whitall Smith

upon the following subjects:

| | |
|---|---|
| Service. | Yokes. |
| The Hidden God. | Thorns. |
| What is His Name? | Peace. |
| God's Thoughts vs. Man's Thoughts. | A Lesson of John 10. |
| The Feasts of the Lord. | Things that are Shaken. |
| | God our Fortress. |
| | Garments. |

These Readings, published in 1887–88, are every bit as valuable helps now as then. The paper on which they are printed may show signs of age, but the readings themselves are the Sword of the Spirit—they never grow old, never wear out. Indeed, the oftener they are used the keener the blade, the more burnished the weapon, the more thoroughly furnished the user unto every good work.

But just because the date upon them is 1887 and 1888, this valuable series of twelve Readings, neatly bound in paper, is offered at

Ten Cents Per Copy.

Workers, send for it!

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

NEW PREMIUM OFFERS.

Our former premium offers are still open to all who are willing to work NOW for THE UNION SIGNAL, viz.: For ONE new subscriber, one copy

White Ribbon Hymnal.

For TWO new subscribers, one copy of

David Douglas and his Wife.

For FIVE new subscribers,

Childhood: Its Care and Culture.

These are premiums which appeal largely to mothers, but we have this week a tempting offer for the L. T. L's. It is an entirely new book for boys, one which has received favorable comment from college professors, principals of educational institutions and ministers of all denominations. Read what some of them say:

PUSHING TO THE FRONT;

Or, Success Under Difficulties.

By Orison Sweet Marden. Price $1.50.

"No other book in the English language contains such a variety and multitude of fresh, living truths. The young will peruse it in preference to the story or the novel, as it tells the experience and struggles of real life. I certainly never read a book of the kind which approaches it in the intrinsic merits of its contents or the possible good that will flow from its wide-spread reading."—THOMAS W. BICKNELL, Providence, R. I.

"The book is unique in its character, and lofty in its aims. It must be an inspiration and help to both old and young."—A. H. CAMPBELL, Ph. D., Principal State Normal School, Vermont.

"To the poor, struggling boy, the book will come as an inspiration and revelation. It will inspire a brighter hope, a quicker zeal, a braver heart. New life will course through his veins as he realizes the possibilities open to him. Public speakers and teachers will find the book a storehouse of apt illustrations and stirring incidents from life."—WILLIS L. HAND, Kearney, Neb.

Boys, girls, members of the Loyal Temperance Legion, we offer this premium to you because "our chieftain," Miss Frances Willard, whom you all love, expresses the opinion that when the worn, weary mothers are so overworked that they cannot go out to obtain new subscribers, if the interest of the Loyal Temperance Legion can be awakened, "busy little feet will be running for us all through the country," getting new subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL, Young Women and their own organ, The Young Crusader.

We offer this wonderful book to you, with its twenty-four fine portraits, many of them taken from original sources, and you can get it if you make the effort for five new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL at $1 each. "Pushing to the Front" is published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., of Boston, and is one of the new books of the season.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A GREAT MOTHER

Too much cannot be said of the value of this book, not only to the mothers of the present day, but to mothers of the future. It is dedicated to the

White Ribbon Women of the World, their Husbands and their Children,

and is destined to live as one of the marked books of the "woman's century." This biography of Madam Willard is the work of her daughter,

Frances E. Willard,

and her kinswoman,

Minerva B. Norton,

and the introduction is written by

Lady Henry Somerset.

Bound daintily in gray and silver, and beautifully illustrated.

Price $1.50.

BIBLE READINGS

JANUARY—"Pentecostal Preparation."
Miss Anna Downey
FEBRUARY—"Power from on High."
Mrs. Anna M. Palmer

PRICE:

| | |
|---|---|
| Single copies, per year | $ 12 |
| 10 copies, per year, to one address | 1 00 |
| Numbers published prior to January, 1895, per 100 | 25 |

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Signal Notes.

The University of Glasgow has this year 205 women students; that of Chicago has 309.

Aberdeen, Scotland, is wrestling with the proposed municipal control of the liquor business.

A wise rule is that of the St. Joseph, Mo., board of education, which expels any pupil found smoking cigarettes.

The annual reports of the superintendents of Indian training schools indicate a growing interest taken in education by the Indians.

An elegant building costing $85,000, in which the use of tobacco is forbidden, has recently been dedicated by the Fitchburg, Mass., Y. M. C. A.

Under the new Parish Council's Act the elections have returned many women poor-law guardians, a large percentage of whom are British white-ribboners.

The Bishop of London, presiding at a recent pledge-signing meeting in Exeter Hall, stated that he felt bound for the sake of example to become a total abstainer.

Scotland has 183 parishes in which there are no licensed dramshops. In one of these, the parish of Keir, Dumfriesshire, there is a population of 639 and only nine paupers.

A pledge-signing campaign was instituted by the National Temperance League at the beginning of the year, which has awakened much activity in English temperance circles.

The death of the late Lord Randolph Churchill, according to the London Graphic, was due in part to excessive cigarette smoking, which inflicted serious injury upon his nervous system.

A photograph album will be required in the saloons of New Zealand, if the proposed local option bill is carried into effect. A clause of this bill provides that every one convicted of habitual drunkenness shall be photographed at his own expense and every saloon-keeper in the district where he lives must be supplied with a copy.

According to the Methodist year book for 1895, the church of Wesley enrolls over fourteen thousand ministers and local preachers and 1,195,137 members. There are 12,536 Sunday-schools with 144 613 officers and teachers, and 1,109,557 scholars. The 10,040 churches and 4,133 parsonages are valued at over sixty million dollars.

The People's Institute of Chicago combines some of the elements of a great educational institution and a people's church. Tickets are sold at six for one dollar which admit to concerts, lectures and public debates. The audiences are said to be the largest ever known at University Extension lectures. The needs of both old and young are considered in its plans, and it is a beacon light to offset Chicago's dark places.

Chief Khama, the native South African, who has stood so manfully against the proposed encroachments of the liquor merchants within his domain, paid a visit to England recently. As a Christian chief, he will not be satisfied with anything less than the total prohibition of the liquor traffic in his country. He has received the support of Queen Victoria, who has by telegram assured him of her aid in his righteous efforts to keep the curse of the liquor traffic from entering Khamaland.

An extension of the Indian outing system has been planned by the Secretary of the Interior and the United States Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for placing the Indians at service even if only for a few months in the families of thrifty farmers, the girls and women sharing in all the domestic duties of the family life, cooking, sewing, dairying, gardening, and the boys and men in the farming, gardening and care of stock. As the paternalism of the United States government must inevitably be withdrawn from its dusky charges ere long, this seems a practical plan for making them self-reliant, while through the wages received they will learn the value and use of money.

A NEW CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending out large trial cases of the Kola Compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send your name and address on postal card, and they will send you a trial case by mail free.

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 PURE

It costs a little more, but with chapped hands and clothes weakened by the free alkali in common soaps, the housekeeper soon finds that Ivory Soap is the cheapest in the end.

The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

HUMAN OR ANIMAL

Pain from sprains, bruises, cramps, diseased or torn flesh, aches, wounds, Neuralgia, etc., can be promptly relieved and cured by using

Dr. J. H. McLean's Volcanic Oil Liniment.

The FARMER'S REMEDY for the various diseases of domestic animals. It is easy to apply, relieves at once pain and inflammation, and cures quickly. Full directions with each bottle. For sale everywhere. Price, 25c., 50c. and $1.00 per bottle.

THE DR. J. H. McLEAN MEDICINE CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

"A bright home makes a merry heart"

JOY TRAVELS ALONG with SAPOLIO

SAPOLIO

COPYRIGHT

It is a solid cake of scouring soap. Try it in your next house-cleaning.

All work should be so done as to give joy to the worker. Perhaps you have never felt joyful when cleaning house? You never will till you use SAPOLIO to assist you. House-cleaning has been revolutionized since housewives first learned its value. Why shouldn't you find joy in your work? All Grocers sell SAPOLIO.

Mrs. J. M. B. writes: "I thank God for Tokology; by following it I cured myself of local troubles of the worst kind, and Dyspepsia of seven years standing."

An agent writes: "I never thought I would like to be a book agent until I read Tokology, and then felt as if it would be real missionary work."

TOKOLOGY

a complete ladies' guide in health and disease, by Alice B. Stockham, M. D., in practice over twenty-five years. Prepaid $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents.

ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO., 277 Madison Street, Chicago.

10 Choice Plants 50c.

Including Ever-Blooming Rose, Mammoth Lily of the Valley, Mexican Primrose, Manettia Vine, Prize Chrysanthemum, Rainbow Plant, Ever-Blooming Carnation, Cinnamon Vine, Bouquet Rose, Beautiful Solanum, sent post paid on receipt of price. Handsome Seed and Plant Catalogue Free.

FOREST CITY GREENHOUSES.
H. W. BUCKBEE, P. O. Box 586 Rockford, Ills.

EVERBLOOMING ROSE.

ACRE APPLES, $1,493. Write Nurseries and Orchards, Louisiana, Mo., for free sample copy telling about it. A practical Fruit and Farm paper published by Stark Bros., 40c. a year; circulation, 460,000 copies. The "Cream of the Cream"—gives the busy Fruit Grower or Farmer, who hasn't the time or the money to buy and read a great mass of papers what is best from them all what he wants to know.

DON'T WEAR STIFF CORSETS.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE WAISTS

Fit all ages and shapes—infants to adults.

Mother! Mother! Mother!

SET YOUR CHILD TO WORK.

The Young Crusader

will send a

PRIZE

to the boy or girl securing largest number of subscribers before

APRIL 1.

Send for the January Young Crusader and read the particulars. Address

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
The Temple,
Chicago, Ill.

ANSWER THIS QUESTION

is a new department leaflet for miners by Jessie A. Ackermann. The question it asks is one calculated to produce the necessary "arrest of thought" among the class appealed to.

Workers in the

Franchise Department

will find that the recently issued leaflet,

A True Picture in a Chicago Home,

by Mrs. Nico Bech-Meyer, "hits the nail square on the head," while the Franchise Responsive Reading for last November is a most valuable contribution to the helps of this important department. Miss Willard says: "It is one of the best I have seen"; and Mrs. Stevenson, National superintendent of literature: "It is all that could be desired."

PRICE OF ALL DEPARTMENT LEAFLETS:

Per 100.....$ .15
" 1,000..... 1.25

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
The Temple,
Chicago, Ill.

WALTER BAKER & CO.

The Largest Manufacturers of
PURE, HIGH GRADE
COCOAS AND CHOCOLATES
On this Continent, have received
HIGHEST AWARDS
from the great
Industrial and Food EXPOSITIONS
In Europe and America.

Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or other Chemicals or Dyes are used in any of their preparations. Their delicious BREAKFAST COCOA is absolutely pure and soluble, and costs less than one cent a cup.

SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE.

WALTER BAKER & CO. DORCHESTER, MASS.

A QUALITY SEED OFFER.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

NORTHRUP, BRADAN & GOODWIN, Minneapolis, Minn.

Not Since * Adam Dug

in the gardens around Eden, has there been seen the peer of our gorgeous Catalogue for 1895 of

Everything FOR THE Garden

This Catalogue is really a book of 160 pages, 9 x 11 inches, containing over 500 engravings and 8 colored plates of Seeds and Plants. And as all are drawn from nature, we show, as in a looking-glass, the best of the old and the latest of the new.

To trace advertising, and give our Catalogue the largest possible distribution, we make the following unusually liberal offer:

Every Empty Envelope Counts as Cash.

To every one who will state where this advertisement was seen, and who encloses us 20 cents (in stamps), we will mail the Catalogue, and also send, free of charge, our famous 50-cent Newport Collection of Seeds, containing one packet each of New White Sweet Pea "Emily Henderson," New Butterfly Pansy, New Crested Zinnia, Succession Cabbage, New York Lettuce, and Ponderosa Tomato, in a red envelope, which, when emptied and returned, will be accepted as a 25-cent cash payment on any order of goods selected from Catalogue to the amount of $1.00 and upward.

PETER HENDERSON & CO.
35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST., NEW YORK.

Publisher's Notes.

WISE WORDS TO THE Y'S.

Among the leaflets recently issued in the interests of young women's work are two in the National series.

No. 111. What is Your Value?

by Mrs. O. W. Scott, appeals very strongly to the innate common sense of every self-respecting "girl of the period."

No. 112. Inasmuch,

by Ida C. Clothier, contains practical and timely suggestions for relief work, for which work our Y organizations are particularly adapted.

Every white-ribboner should keep on hand a supply of these and other Y leaflets to slip into letters and otherwise tactfully circulate among their girl friends.

Price, per 100.....$ .90
" " 1,000..... 7.50

BIBLE READINGS

February—"Power from on High."
Mrs. Anna M. Palmer
March—"Going Forward,"
Mary Sparkes Wheeler

Responsive Readings.

February—"The Children's Paper."
Ada M. Melville
March—"School of Methods and Parliamentary Usage."
Mrs. A. S. Benjamin

Price: Bible Readings:
Single copies, per year.....$ 12
10 copies, per year, to one address... 1 00

Price: Responsive Readings:
Single copies per year.....$ 10
13 copies, per year, to one address.... 1.00
Price of all Readings published prior to January, 1895, per 100..... 25

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
The Temple,
Chicago, Ill.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION — FOUNDED 1883 — AND EVERY LAND

Mrs Ursula D Hertick 1029 15th st 6593

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXI.—No. 8. CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 21, 1895. [Price $1.00 Per Year, in Advance.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

...THE...

Glad Easter Tide

WILL BE SOON HERE

Have you noticed our beautiful illustration on page 15? Why not select a souvenir now.....

W. T. P. A.
THE TEMPLE
CHICAGO.....

FOR ONE NEW SUBSCRIBER.

Regular price, 35 cents.

A rare opportunity to supply your unions with the best collection of W. C. T. U. songs yet published.

For one new subscriber! Had you noticed that our own White Ribbon Hymnal proves the most taking premium yet offered for new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL? We have already sent out one hundred and thirty-one copies of the White Ribbon Hymnal as premiums for new subscribers and each mail brings additional orders. Do not miss your opportunity to secure this fine collection of temperance songs for the meetings of your union. You can sing the money out of the pocket-books of your members. Try it, organizers! We appeal to you to strengthen the new unions you organize by urging each and every individual to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL and secure for herself a copy of the White Ribbon Hymnal. We venture the prediction that a new union with a supply of this best of song books will flourish and grow in proportion to the number of Hymnals owned and used at each meeting. Nothing gives so much interest to any gathering as good, earnest, soul stirring music.

CAROLINE F. GROW, Bus. Mgr.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Mexico and Guatemala have settled their differences.

Arizona's House has passed the bill for equal suffrage by a two-thirds vote.

The German Reichstag has decided to call an international currency conference.

The Spencer bill for woman suffrage has been sustained by the California assembly.

A suit to test the validity of the bond issue has been begun by the Knights of Labor.

The House refused Friday to ratify the President's issue of bonds by a vote of 165 to 120.

A saloon on the Scandinavian plan in Ida Grove, Ia., has been enjoined as illegal by Judge Church.

Four hundred pastors in Chicago preached on Civic Patriotism Sunday, by request of the Chicago Civic Federation.

The equal suffrage committee in the Massachusetts legislature has decided to report a bill for municipal suffrage for women.

Strong opposition was shown by the peace members when the bill to build more warships was discussed in the House last Friday.

Only two votes defeated the equal suffrage amendment in the state of Washington, and township suffrage was lost in Illinois by a single vote.

The House committee on education and labor has favorably reported Senator Perkins' bill providing for the creation of an industrial commission of twenty-one persons to arbitrate labor difficulties.

INVESTIGATIONS into the whisky trust last week show that its president has been making fifty thousand dollars a year from one contract alone. The receivers are "astonished" at the daily revelations of fraud. Why should they be? A "trust" is bad enough, but a "whisky trust" is well-nigh the essence of badness.

THE saloon-keepers of Sioux City, Iowa, are growing uneasy because of the W. C. T. U. crusade in that place. For three successive days, the white-ribboners marched in a body one hundred strong, through the streets and into the saloons, and though they were treated with contempt and in at least one case with cruelty, they are determined to create such a sentiment against the unlawful traffic that the prosecutions which they will immediately begin will be decided in their favor.

SIGNATURES to the Polyglot Petition should be secured right along and mailed to Mrs. Rebecca C. Shuman, 2130 Sherman avenue, Evanston, Ill. The postoffice authorities have ruled that letter postage must be paid, and all friends are requested to conform to this, as it is a trifle to each one sending her little package of petitions, but a great deal in the aggregate for the World's W. C. T. U. to meet. It was impossible to get all the names on the Petition before it started for Washington, February 11, but they will be put on before it goes to England and on its unique round-the-world journey.

MICHIGAN is about to follow the example of Illinois and elect a woman to the regentcy of the state university at Ann Arbor. Among the candidates prominently discussed is the new state president, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, our well-known National superintendent of parliamentary usage. The very thought of such an honor must have driven Mrs. Benjamin, with her characteristic modesty, from her state, as we learn she is at present in Pennsylvania! But if the Michigan voters will do themselves the honor to elect her, we will guarantee not only her safe return to them, but a patriotic, intelligent discharge of a regent's duties.

THE states are moving to send some of their trusty white ribbon women to the World's W. C. T. U. The low price of two hundred dollars for the voyage out and back, including hotel bills throughout the conventions, for June 14–21, and a trip to Paris and Switzerland, has made a deep impression on the minds of our people, and Dr. Henry Lunn, editor of the Review of the Churches, whose present address is 13 Astor Place, New York city, says he has hundreds of letters on the subject. We should be glad if behind each of our thousand paid up memberships there might be a woman, good and true, seated as a delegate to the World's W. C. T. U. in Queen's Hall, London. There is no reason why this may not be brought about, for "where there's a will there's a way."

Two states are calling loudly for help from white-ribboners—Kansas and Nebraska. Kansas' W. C. T. U. president, Mrs. L. B. Smith, of Ottawa, writes that during the last month they have found it impossible to supply the needs of the suffering and now earnestly implore contributions of money, clothing and provisions. The state relief committee is well organized and its chairman, Hon. G. T. Howe, Topeka, Kan., will properly distribute all supplies. We published three weeks ago an official letter from the state officers of Nebraska, and we are asked to repeat the names of those who are prepared to receive and wisely disburse all donations of money, food, fuel, seed or clothes. The following ladies are the responsible almoners: Mrs. Margaret C. Happersett, Indianola; Mrs. Nettie Doty, Wauneta; Mrs. L. H. Blackburn, Atkinson; Mrs. Abby Gay Dustin, postoffice, Dustin, railroad station, Stuart, and Mrs. Jane L. Goff, Hazard. Mrs. Dustin writes: "The need of help is so urgent in northwest Nebraska that we pray our sisters of the W. C. T. U. in the states that were blessed with an abundant harvest to respond at once. Many are in actual destitution and almost starvation, and the extreme cold weather makes the suffering much more severe." All donors should remember to pay the freight or express.

THERE never was given to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union more signal opportunity for proving its splendid vitality than when it found itself forced to enact in the capital of the nation on the evening of February 15 the play of Hamlet, with two Hamlets left out. There had been hope until almost the last moment that Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset might rally from la grippe enough to admit of their presence upon the platform, even if they could not speak. But hopes were vain, and the general officers, speakers and invited guests found themselves facing an audience of four thousand disappointed men and women. However, the first shock of the disappointment soon passed, and then it became manifest that the Petition itself was the Hamlet in that play. Hanging in great festoons from the girders all up and down that immense hall, rolled in "original packages" at the ends of the festoons, piled in great masses on the platform—the sight of so many prayers was, in itself, an inspiration, and right royally did both platform and floor respond to it. The Moody choir gave glorious music; Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens presided in her own quiet, capable, dignified manner; Anna Gordon read admirably Miss Willard's wonderful address on the history and import of the Petition; Miss Kearney, Mrs. Barker and Mrs. Hoffman were in their very best and brightest vein, as frequent and prolonged applause testified; Dr. Lunn gave a stirring speech, while Miss Helen Potter's presentation of John B. Gough brought back that glorious old hero in very life. Altogether it was a soul-stirring occasion. Many senators and representatives were present, both on the platform and in the house. The meetings have thus far been well attended, the press has given most favorable reports and the capital city of our great nation can but be stirred by this deluge of white-ribbon enthusiasm.

ONLY A RUSH: AN EASTERN FANCY.

BY JAMES MANNING BRONSON.

'Twas only a rush by the Ganges' low brink,
And one of a legion that modestly waved
Near by where the antelope came oft to drink,
And foot-weary travelers gratefully laved.

'Twas only a rush, but its broad leaf was green,
And 'twas plucked by a pilgrim with heart full of praise,
For it made for his head a most excellent screen
As he toiled his slow way in the sun's fearful blaze.

More beautiful far to the pilgrim it seemed
Than the splendidest flower in Arabia's land;
More precious than jewels by him it was deemed,
For it saved him from death in the desert's white sand.

There's many a rush in the river of life,
Like that of the Ganges, as humble and plain,
Worth millions of flowers when trouble is rife,
When in the soul's desert, or racked by brute pain.

Care well for these rushes! Their beauty will shine
When that of mere flowers has faded away:
All beauty of form must surely decline,
While beauty of soul will last ever and aye.

Ithaca, N. Y.

MC CRACKEN'S BOY.

In Three Chapters.

BY HELEN RACHEL ROBB.

CHAPTER I.

"Want to buy a load of wood?" called a childish voice. A few of the loafers at the street corner turned listlessly, and, seeing it was "Si McCracken's young 'un," again settled into their former lazy attitudes. Busy men passed down the crooked street, but none even glanced toward the wood wagon as the shrill voice rang out with the same question.

The July sun poured down hotter on the yellow dust; the loungers, one by one, straggled off, each to look after the noonday meal which some more industrious, but misguided person, had prepared for him; the lank, mongrel dog under the wagon crept further into its shadow, and there was a shade more of hungry appeal in the brown eyes that gazed out between the spokes of the wheel. Still the small voice came from the top of the wood on the wagon, but the effort at cheerfulness that always characterized it was apparently more of an effort than it had been a few hours before. The busy men were now hurrying home to satisfy the appetites sharpened by labor, and had no time to heed the call.

The wagon was driven further down the street into the shade of some trees and the oxen unhitched from the heavy tongue. The delicate figure of the driver was in marked contrast with the great beasts as the thin little brown hands patted their rough and bony sides.

He sat down and leaned against a tree, asking again and again his one question of the few people who passed. The dog came out from his retreat and, wagging his tail faintly, gave the thin cheek of his master a lick of sympathy, and seating himself by his side, leaned his head on his shoulder. Life had evidently pressed heavily upon them both. The dog was an animal of naturally small capacity, but the miseries of life had given him a pathetic dignity, very different from the frivolity of other curs, and a power to sympathize with the little master, who was his deity, shone in the compassionate gaze of the earnest eyes fixed on his face.

There was no appeal in the boy's face, except when life's burdens were unusually heavy, or when he had time to sit and think on the questions that would come, and that always baffled his powers. The sensitive face had been moulded into lines of maturity by the throbbings of the tender heart that ached for the misery he had such small power to remedy, till its most striking characteristic was alert shrewdness and eager outlook for the main chance; and the voice that piped out its unvarying question was cheerful by reason of an habitual determination to keep it so.

But this was on the surface; like the shell in which the crustacean is incased, that the rough and tumble of existence may not crush the soft, little creature, so the necessities of life had housed in a hard, practical shrewdness a nature that was essentially meditative, analytical and keenly sensitive. Under the lank, light hair that hung about the face the clear, blue eyes reflected every emotion. Ill-fitting clothes of coarse homespun clung loosely about the thin body, and had long ceased to cover the bare wrists and ankles that protruded from them.

A bent old negro woman hobbled along the street, and the boy's face brightened as he saw her, for she was the one person in all his world who had ever given him any gleam of hope that there might be an answer to the questions that so often perplexed him.

"Why, Ike, honey, haint ye sol' yer wood yit?" she asked, compassionately.

"No, Aunt Nancy, 'pears like nobody don't want no wood to-day," he answered.

"Wall, chile, jes you trus' de bressed Lawd, an He's gwine ter take keer ob ye, shu. He haint neber gwine back on His own word when He say how He look arter dem lil' no 'count sparrers, an' you's heap moh to Him, chile, dan all de sparrers an' sech like insec's in de worl'."

"'Taint me, hits mammy. Why don't He let me sell this heah load ter buy rations fer mammy?" and the blue eyes glanced up into the dark old face of his friend with the wistfully pathetic look that only came when he was hard pressed.

"Hit's mighty cur'us, I know hit is, an' hit'd take a heap knowiner puson dan dis heah old niggar ter tell dat same. De Lawd knows His own business, chile, dats de thing we wants ter larn. He say ef we trus' Him how He'll take keer we gits de thing what's good fer us, an' I knows dat's a fac', fer I's done pruv Him. Hit's a bargain 'twixt us; de Lawd, He say, 'My chile, you do de trus'in' an' I'll do de purvidin'.' But most folks dey won't trus', but goes long purvidin' fer demselves wif whatever trash dey finds layin' roun' loose anywhars, an' den dey keeps a cryin' dat dey's hungry an' de Lawd aint filled 'em like He said He'd do."

"But, Aunt Nancy, how kin I trust Him? I aint never seed Him an' He's so fur off."

"Dat's de ole debil what say dat t'ye, honey. God's jes' 'long side ob ye a wantin' ye ter gib Him yer han' an let Him lead ye. Hit tells in de good book how de Lawd Jesus says, 'I's wif ye always.' Come to recolec'" she resumed after a thoughtful pause, "I's got er piece of ash bread in dis heah basket som'ers." And, after fumbling about she brought forth a good sized corn cake and put it into his hand.

"An' hit looks ter me like you's bin settin' heah long 'nough," she resumed. "Drive yer wagon 'long de road, an' keep a drivin, an' see ef ye don't come up on de one dat de Lawd 'tends dat wood fer. God's got de ripe 'simmon fer de hungry 'possum, but ef de 'possum don' go 'long an' git hit, hit aint gwine ter wait fer him, but'll drap off'n de tree an' bus' shu." And she trudged down the street with a peaceful light on her wrinkled face.

Ike looked hungrily at the bread, and the dog thrust his nose into his master's hand, simply as a reminder that they had always been equal partners. Neither had tasted food since they shared a scanty breakfast. The dog slowly wagged his tail and gazed into the boy's face with eyes that told of a perfect trust that whatever he did must be right. Ike was thoughtful and uncertain. In a moment he climbed on the wagon and hurriedly thrust the bread into a sack that lay on the wood. He was tremulous with haste, as if fearful that his determination might weaken. He had seemed to hear the fretful cry of the sickly baby at home, and had seen again his mother's face with its weak despair, when at night, instead of food, he brought home the wood he had taken away in the morning, and frequently something else more heart breaking. He climbed down and hastily hitched the oxen. The appeal in the dog's eyes was harder to resist than that of his own empty stomach, but he had learned in a hard school the relative importance of needs.

While working about the great beasts of burden, the words Aunt Nancy had quoted repeated themselves to his heart, "I am with you always!" She had often told him how this same Jesus loved children when He lived in the world, but he had supposed Him to be so far away that He neither knew nor cared for the struggles going on here. This was a new thought, "I am with you always," he whispered. "Hit's sech a big I, an' 'always' is a mighty long word; thar hain't nowhars that word don't cover."

So a new strength and confidence, and a sense of companionship settled down into the lonely heart, as he drove along the dusty streets; and the coarse bread lying in the wagon was transformed into a sacrament to two souls,—to the old negro who lay down to sleep, supperless, but happy, that night, and to the boy driving the wood wagon through the glare of the July sunshine, and conquering the strong cries of a weak little body for food.

At last, towards the close of a wearisome day, he found a purchaser for his wood, and joyfully held out a hand that would tremble to receive the silver which represented comforts for the ones for whom he was every day giving up some part of his life. He did not need to hesitate about spending the money, for all day he had been planning how he would apportionate it for the various needful things, and the purchases were soon made and stored away in the empty wagon.

"Now, Doc," he said to the dog, "me an' you'll eat that ash cake." But a sudden thought caused him to push the sack determinedly into a corner of the wagon bed. When he reached home it would take some time for his mother to prepare the food he brought, and this piece of bread would supply the immediate need of her and the hungry baby. He and Doc had done without food so long, they could continue to wait. "Not yet, old feller, we'll have our supper arter a bit," he said, patting the dog encouragingly.

The homeward journey was begun through the crooked streets of the untidy little town. Men, recently returned from their day's toil, lolled on rickety door-steps, their faces and hands grimy with the dirt from which no impulse, either within or without, impelled them to cleanse themselves; women with soiled and ragged sleeves rolled to the shoulder, leaned on the remnants of broken fences, gossiping with one another; and the dusty road was populous with uncared-for children, happily tumbling about on the breast of their Mother Earth, sharing her bounty of warmth and health with their kindred, the weeds. The foul odor from the open door of a saloon swept past him, and he felt a loathing as he realized that this baleful thing was the blight upon his life and his mother's. He had seen what was behind that carefully screened door so often that he knew now just how it looked in there. Possibly his father was behind it now, spending the money, for the lack of which his mother and the baby were starving at home. Why did God allow this—God who was his Father? Or why was He not rather God, the Mother! This word summed up all he had known of parental love, little though it had been, but the other brought only a sense of rebellion.

He was soon out in the pleasant twilight of the open country. The broad fields, with massive wooded hills beyond, sometimes brought a sense of freedom and even a quiet joy to Ike's heart, a feeling that after all there was enough and to spare in God's world, and that somehow he would come into the inheritance of it. But he could not find this peace this evening. He had sold his load and bought food, and this was comforting, but life was such a sad mystery to him, and, though he did not know it, it was much more sad and mysterious because of his empty stomach.

A beam from the sun just about to sink below the horizon glinted through the trees and shone into his eyes, and instantly, with the same directness, came the remembrance, "I am with you always." From habit, when he thought about God, he turned his face toward the sky. It was a very beautiful sky just then, the clear orange light of the sunset intensified by bands of dark gray clouds, picturing the peacefulness of which those horizontal lines in an evening sky are intended to speak with the clear blue of the perfect rest above them. But then, he remembered the words were, "I am with you." "So he must be in this heah wagon," he thought. And then that "always"—this great one who loved him and who was so powerful had been there all the time and he had not known it, but thought himself so utterly alone. He felt that just then Jesus took him into His arms, as He had done with those other children Aunt Nancy had told him about, and that he was rested and comforted as he had never been before.

Tears gathered in his eyes and slowly ran down his little pale, freckled face. He had seldom cried since he could remember anything. His mother cried, but he must comfort her, and so, even when alone, he kept himself strong for her sake. But the sense of having this Friend, this companionship, brought tears that he could not restrain. He laid his head down against the seat and sobbed till his thin, small frame shook in the strength of the emotion. The oxen, knowing the road, plodded along with their usual sidling, crooked gait, while the strong sobbing continued with a force proportioned to its long restraint.

But at last it came more and more softly, like the little breeze that rustled in the corn fields between which the road led. Ike had never known such a peace as that which now enfolded him; he feared to get up lest it might go from him. The tears had relieved a nerve tension that he could not have endured much longer, and the assurance of help and of love which the child heart accepted unquestioningly was sweeter than anything he had ever known. The circumstances of life were still the same he knew, but he had discovered that he had a Friend, and this had changed all their relations to himself. How could anything hurt or trouble him since this strong and loving Jesus had said to him, "I am with you always"? He wondered if his mother knew about Him. She surely did not know that He was with her always. He would tell her about Him.

Steubenville, O.

WHAT we are stretches past what we do, beyond what we possess.—Drummond.

THE GREATEST NUMBER'S GREATEST GOOD.

A Golden Rule Study.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Mr. Harry Lloyd, a native of Albany, N. Y., is a man thirty-seven years of age, the son of a Welsh workingman who died when Harry was six years old. Lack of money drove Harry and his mother into a factory in Albany where the boy worked until he was in his teens. His father had been a book-worm, and the boy inherited this love of learning to such a degree that although he has never attended school a day in his life, he has become a most vivid and acceptable speaker on labor topics, and was recently sent by his fellow workmen of Boston to study the labor movement in England.

It is pathetic to hear him say that as a little boy he used, at the noon interval for lunch, to climb into a chair and harangue the working people around him on the evils of putting little children at work before they were strong enough, and the hardships of the working people's life as a whole.

Mr. Lloyd is a carpenter, and has never earned more than fourteen dollars a week at his trade. His income is now about seven hundred dollars a year. He has a wife and a comfortable home, and he enjoys the respect of his associates and of all who know him.

It was my good fortune to meet Mr. Lloyd under circumstances somewhat remarkable. Mrs. Ole Bull has a beautiful home in Cambridge, Mass., which she uses for high purposes, convening there as opportunity offers those who are devoted to the good of humanity. On the last Sunday afternoon of the old year she invited well-nigh a hundred men and women into her drawingroom to hear Mr. Lloyd and others speak concerning what might be done to help the wage-workers to better conditions of living. Some of the highest officials of Harvard University and the dean of a theological school were present, a group of young women from the college settlement in the slums of Boston, and a score or two of well-known reformers and philanthropists. Among these last were Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Amie Hicks, superintendent of the labor department of the British Women's Temperance Association, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Thorpe (the latter a daughter of the poet Longfellow), Mrs. A. M. Diaz, the well-known writer, and many others.

In his speech at Mrs. Bull's Mr. Lloyd said that under the power of invention the wage-worker is now an active competitor with iron and steel and is considerably worsted in the competition. Where tens of thousands were employed under the old system only thousands and hundreds are now. In olden times trades unions were formed for the purpose of shortening the hours of labor, increasing wages, diminishing or doing away with the work of women and children; indeed, every side touched by the new trades unions was also touched by the old. Perhaps one chief difference is that in earlier days the trades unions believed that a man should work all the time, that his best good consisted in having plenty of work; whereas in later times we have come to think that he is first of all a man, and should have opportunities of self-improvement independent of his career as a worker.

But the new trades-unionist is after all only a development of the old. In England the trades union is as much an institution of the country as is the Judiciary or the Parliament. It is recognized as a great and growing power and one that has come to stay, while in this country it is called "a fifth wheel to the wagon" and it is popular among the well-to-do classes to say that we have no need whatever of trades unions.

"John Burns," said Mr. Lloyd, "is a product of the old Trades Union school, but to what he learned under its influence he adds a whole world of modern ideas. I should be with him, fighting for the ownership of production and distribution except for the fact that I consider that in this country our problem is different from what it is in England. If there are nationalists in this country, single-taxers, socialists, among all classes of society, and notably among the class of highest opportunity, trades unionism should have much credit for this result. We have helped on the agitation, we have been the finger-post pointing toward a better path.

"Whenever the labor question is before an audience they begin to think about strikes, so I must speak a little on that subject. We all deplore strikes, but we deplore still more strongly the necessity that sometimes arises for having them. How are we to make our grievances known to the great public except by declaring that we can no longer suffer under them, and that means that we 'declare off' work. But we are very careful as to the method; there cannot be a strike until a ballot has been taken, duly notified, a ballot that includes a majority of all the workmen in the United States. This ballot has to be sent from one to another of the different trades, one trade including all the carpenters, another all the railroad employés, etc. Mr. Debs has been greatly blamed for the strike of last summer, but the facts are he used his utmost efforts not to have a strike at all, and it was deliberately voted by the united labor societies of the United States.

"Now as to our recent convention in Denver. A subsidized press that toadies to the rich has tried to make out that we men fought, but we had no severe encounter whatever. We were as well behaved as the average conference of teachers or of ministers. We introduced a new principle; that is, we indorsed for the first time a bill for the eight-hour day for male and female labor. No one can estimate what such a statement means who does not remember that Charles Bradlaugh, the great labor leader, stumped England against the eight-hour movement, because, he said, 'if the number of hours is settled by law the next we know the capitalists will make us work fourteen or sixteen hours instead of eight.' But we workmen of to-day are willing to trust the manhood of the nation, for we ourselves make up a large part of it, and we feel sure that there is no danger of a return to the uncivilized hours of the past.

"The most pronounced action that we took at Denver was that to defeat the famous Tenth Plank. This plank calls for the ownership by the people of the means of production, distribution and exchange. This would include the railroads, the mines, etc. Personally, I was in favor of defeating this plank at this time, not but what I believe in the principle, but I thought it would be well to refer the subject to the trades unions for one year. But the plank was voted down without reference; and yet the number in favor of it is so large that I feel sure that at our next convention it will carry, and I believe the next president of the federation will be elected on this issue.

"We were glad of the telegram of goodwill from the white-ribbon women, and believe that great good will come from our mutual friendliness. We do not think that men drink more who work only eight hours; it is our observation that being less worn out, they drink less, and we know they take more interest in their homes and begin to try to fit them up and make them pleasant places."

At the close of Mr. Lloyd's vigorous speech, several questions were asked; among them the following:

"How are we going to get hold of the property of the nation; will it be by confiscation?" And this answer was made:

"Let the state interfere by continued legislation until stockholders of the various corporations are willing to sell out to the state. This is the way they did with the railroads in Germany. One result of the labor movement is that already we have the law for the regulation of interstate commerce, which has put a heavy hand of restraint upon the great railroad lines. If this method should be carried out still farther in respect to railroads, they would before long become the property of the nation. This need not cause the slightest revolution, but would come about quietly as it did in Germany, where it works well, and as in Australia, where no other method of ownership would be for a moment tolerated. John Burns believes that the principle of nationalizing all the means of production should be frankly espoused by the trades unions. He thinks that to do this is the most thorough method of educating the average mind up to the idea. He thinks this transfer of property from the individual to the state can be fairly made without injustice to the individual, but the change must come about slowly, as the result of a more altruistic public sentiment."

I think that every one who attended this conference, conducted as it was in a spirit of fairness and goodwill, went away feeling that the kingdom of God among men had been advanced in the hearts of those present, and by their influence would extend into many other hearts, and thus in time the Golden Rule shall bring the Golden Age.

Boston, Mass.

"WHERE?"

BY V. A. LEWIS.

One of the great questions of the day is the localizing of crime. Assuming that some of the social evils can not be controlled, the proposition is presented of having some section of the city, designated by the civic authorities, as a region in which these evil houses may exist. But the question immediately arises "where" shall this section be located?

Shall it be in the region of the rich? Surely, they by their wealth and home surroundings are the better fitted to protect themselves and their families from the evil. They live comparatively isolated from their neighbors and so could the more surely defend their children from the proposed contamination of the herding together of a large number of known criminals permitted to openly flaunt their evil living in the face of the community. No one for a moment supposes that this would be permitted. The wealth and influence of the rich would effectually defend their section.

Then this abomination must be located in the section of the city where the poor are compelled to make their home. Yet could wealth make any more despicable use of its power than to force by the side of the poor man and his family the evil that it will not permit in its own section? Could it do any more cruel deed than to increase the difficulties and the trials and temptations of the struggling poor man by placing moral pest-houses by his side so that his children shall have added to their physical deprivations and sufferings the spiritual blight of unveiled, persistent and ever present crime?

Some of the leading clergymen of cities want the saloon open a portion of the Sabbath and Christianizing influences introduced into its business. But when the question of "where" to locate the saloon is brought forward, these same clergymen are found resisting and protesting with all their power against placing that same saloon in the vicinity of the church. Yet "where" shall the saloon be placed, for the rich neighborhood will prevent its location by the side of their homes? Again, then, the poor man must be doubly cursed in his poverty by having that placed by the side of his home which the church and the rich will not allow by the side of their buildings because of the evil physical and moral influences. Does not a community deserve to be cursed of the living God that will thus abuse the helplessness of the poor and add to the temptations of their burdened lives?

Besides, if the saloon is to be opened on the Sabbath why not bring it next to the church so that the visitors to the saloon will find the church convenient and the minister and his helpers can touch easily the masses? If it is not fit because of its ungodliness to be next to the church, why place it next the poor man's home and so destroy the possibility of that beautiful gospel thought, "The church that is in thy house."

The moment that the question arises, "Where shall the saloon of the Sabbath or of the week-day and the house of ill-fame be located?" the incongruity appears and it is at once manifest that truth and decency and the church can have no fellowship with such evils, and that there is no location in any city for such evils with the permission or agreement of the church or of decent rulers. When we ask the question of "where" in the city these places of evil shall have a permitted and recognized home, the answer is "nowhere" on earth. When we are thus compelled to face these great evils with the Bible in our hands that forbids any covenanting with evil, we are compelled to utter the word "Prohibition" however distasteful it may be to our political plans or seemingly disastrous to our pecuniary interests. There is not a foot of this earth created by God and redeemed by Christ in country or city that can be rightly rented or leased or recognized as a proper, legal or admissible location for the den of iniquity or the door of hell. All the logic and argument of the parties advocating special locations and sections for sinful places is demolished by the one word "where" will you place the house of iniquity?

Brooklyn, N. Y.

A PLEA FOR THE SINGLE TAX.

BY GEORGE SUTHERLAND.

[Questions having come to us on this subject, we print the following article by a specialist, but not as an expression of the opinion held by this journal.]

How few people realize that in the single tax lies the only hope of permanent well-being for the laborers. We may elevate their characters by the teachings of temperance; we may teach them habits of frugality; we may spread education among them and surround them with all the influences for a better moral and physical life which our civilization affords, but if we continue to deny them free access to the land—that element upon which all labor must be performed and from which all human subsistence must come—we will but lift them up a little to be plunged into still deeper misery.

In these United States it has been estimated that a population of one billion ought to find a comfortable living. With a population of about one-fifteenth of that number we have all the symptoms of overpopulation. There are thousands of idle men in every large city, and millions of idle acres throughout the land. We need to bring the idle men and the idle acres together, and in no other way can it be justly and peaceably accomplished except by the single tax.

Consider the evils of the speculation in land fostered by our systems of land tenure and indirect (Mr. Shearman calls it "crooked") taxation. The speculator holds his land, not because he means to use it, but in order to squeeze from the labor which needs and must have it the last dollar it can be made to yield. By taxing the land, therefore, according to value, and exempting improvements and personal property, we will undoubtedly make the speculator relinquish his hold, but not creating thereby any injustice to him, for he will still have the privilege to use it, if he will, in order to get the necessary revenue to pay his taxes. Whether he elects to use it or to give it up labor will in either case get the needed access to land—to work for wages or for self. Of course the land owner who is putting his land to its best use will suffer no inconvenience by the operation of the single tax. We believe that in most cases he will largely gain, for the results of his industry will be undiminished by taxes (other than the one tax on his land) and he may become a veritable Crœsus without having to pay a penny more than for the values of the privileges he holds.

By thus taxing privileges and untaxing the products of industry, we will encourage and stimulate industry. With free access to the store-houses of nature, aided by labor-saving inventions, and with all men working, commodities of all kinds—the necessities, and even the luxuries, of life—would be within the reach of all. Involuntary poverty—the result of involuntary idleness—would become a thing of the past, with all the wrong-doing, crime and misery of which it is a prime cause. The general wealth would increase, and each man's share be measured only by his skill and application, not as now, by good fortune, or fraud or robbery, as too often is the case.

Our country is as sick as Rome was when it neared its fall. Rome perished because of the great estates and the consequent enslavement of the masses. Our civilization, from similar causes, has produced the multi-millionaire simultaneously with the tramp, huge armies of unemployed and discontented laborers, and in general a condition of things bordering on revolution. Earnest work for the single tax may avert the evil day, and its adoption arrest our decadence.

GREETINGS FROM OUR FIFTH ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARY.

DEAR WHITE RIBBON COMRADES:—It is just a week since we landed in New York. I am very glad and thankful to be home again, though it is rather a surprise. We could not carry the war into Ireland just now, for they are having a little political revolution on their own account. It was a disappointment, of course, the fact that they can not give the W. W. C. T. U. their attention, but the time will come, and meantime I have been assured from many sources that the "American unions that are always so ready to unite with anything good will be glad to hear more in detail of the plans and projects of the South African unions."

I think we are very near each other in reality, and I tell you confidentially that the Father watches with very loving care over those grand women whom I left late in 1894, and I believe we might all learn much from them though they are so young in the work. I want to see you face to face in your conventions and local meetings and tell you not only of South Africa, but the little I eagerly absorbed from the B. W. T. A., the ten days we spent in London. It was almost like home to see at headquarters Miss Helen Hood and Addie Northam Field, and one needs "strong language" and sweet as well, to describe the delightful visit we made to our two saints at Reigate, Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell. Then we had a charming "informal meeting" and tea-drinking given us in the president's room, where we met the officers and some of the members of the B. W. T. A.

All the time from leaving Cape Town till now my conscience is dogging me to write, write of the "native question" and other questions, and to redeem my promise to Cape Colony and write for papers there, and some day I will, but how can one give out of her mental store this wise when she is having such delightful opportunities to take in so much information from new sources, and the days fly by and there is so much to be done?

We were forty-four days from Cape Town to New York. Miss Landfear, from Wellington, Huguenot Seminary, was my traveling companion, and as we reached home Saturday I was much gratified to receive a cordial invitation from her family to come up to New Haven and spend the Sabbath. We are all interested in each other's good times, so I must tell you of the kindness I received from the W. C. T. U. of this classic city, and that they were so eager to hear of missions in Africa that in spite of protest I almost had three appointments for Tuesday evening thrust upon me. Monday evening I spoke at Beulah Mission Hall, but the next was flitting toward "home and mother," to be found when wanted.

Yours for service,

Franklin, Ind. ALICE R. PALMER.

PROHIBITION SUFFRAGISTS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I was deeply stirred to find in a W. C. T. U. column in a suffrage paper, an account of a Prohibition woman who had not before this year voted for school trustees, because her husband objected to women voting. This year she begged him to allow her to go with him, and promised, if she could, to vote his ticket—the Republican. His objection vanished and she went. She asked the editor of the W. C. T. U. column if she did right. The reply was, under the circumstances she did perfectly right; which meant that to vote was worth more to her than to stand by her convictions of right; with which conclusion I take issue. Let us remain voteless forever, if need be, but let us hold our integrity true. I think such influence was pernicious to her husband.

The incident recalled a statement I read soon after the fall election, which was that thousands of the votes received by the Republican and Democratic candidates for University Trustees were cast by Prohibition men and women.

Now, why need they vote for Republican and Democratic candidates in order to elect women, when there were two women candidates on the Prohibition ticket? It seems to me Prohibitionists should vote for Prohibitionists. Not because of party, but because there is a principle at stake, for women who care so little for Prohibition as to allow their names to be placed upon a party ticket which is backed by the saloon, cannot surely be called friends of our cause. "He that is not for me is against me." Is there no principle at stake in voting for such candidates? We condemn Christian men for voting with whisky parties on any issue, and we do well. How then can we, ourselves, vote with them?

Policy should never control us. I know not how others may feel, but as for me I believe it a sin to license the liquor traffic—a sin to vote for a party which does license it and a sin to vote for any candidate on any ticket which is backed by the saloon, no matter who or what they may be. There is but one party entirely free from these charges, and therefore a white-ribbon woman can vote for no other and be true to her convictions and her pledge. As the National union is not partisan in "lending its influence" to the only party that stands for our principles, so as women we are not partisan in voting only and always with that party. Indeed, to me it seems inconsistent to do otherwise. If men should not vote with whisky parties, thereby indorsing and strengthening them, why should women! If women may rightfully vote old party tickets, how will woman's enfranchisement help the prohibition cause?

As for me—God helping me—I will never vote for man or woman, no matter how good and true otherwise, who will allow their name to be placed upon a party ticket which is backed by the liquor power, and over whose victories it rejoices, upon no condition whatever. If we ever triumph it will be when men and women who believe in prohibition cut loose forever from every party tainted in the least by rum and vote for principle regardless of consequences. God will never bless anything less than that. If that be partisan, God speed it quickly.

We believe, as white-ribboners, that the Prohibition party alone represents ideas which can secure the welfare of the commonwealth, and are therefore in duty bound to stand by it. If we vote with a party pledged to whisky, even for one candidate only, we are backing it to just the degree of our vote. Knowing what that party will do, we are criminal to that degree. It matters not whether the candidate be man or woman, the principle remains the same.

Just so long as we help whisky parties elect their "good candidates" just so long will they remain in power to work for the liquor interest. "Come out from among them and be ye separate." M. Z. C. MAIN.

Chicago, Ill.

CHRISTIAN WORK, YEA OR NAY?

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—In its remarks on current topics, the Christian Work, of New York, quotes as correct an enunciation of The Sun, of the same city, in declaring that "in every American who knows the history of his country," the "hatred of Great Britain is deep rooted and unshakable." It avers that this feeling does not pivot upon the Revolutionary period wholly, but that it was accentuated by the course of Great Britain in overhauling our ships antecedent to the war of 1812, and to the markedly unfriendly attitude of Great Britain to our country during the late Civil War. It does not see how any one could be so blind as not to know of all this prevailing dislike—not, indeed, against the British people, but their government, a dislike which is "deep rooted, abiding and unmistakable." Its proof is—"we have met with it in the army, we have seen it in the navy, heard it in public places, and witnessed it manifested in many homes."

In the foregoing presentation of what is partly fact and (I am free to confess it) partly fable, we have a whole peace sermon suggested. The writer of this note has several correspondents in England, and he has friends who have many other correspondents in that country. He has no knowledge of this asserted implacable feeling, though doubtless traces of it would be found did he deem it worth while to seek interviews with officers of the army and navy. On the other hand, as a boy, he attended for awhile the public schools, and it was the remembrance of the mischievous way in which history was taught there—the pupils specially drilled in the battles of the Revolution and the war of 1812—that impelled him afterward to write two histories of the United States in which the view point that he attempted to find was sought for in those parallel lines of Christian principle and practice that permeate every book of the New Testament.

We can undoubtedly find the bad sentiment noted, if we look for it, but it is not the sentiment of the Christian people of this country, nor of our brethren by blood and by many social and sacred ties in Great Britain. It becomes our bounden duty to testify against it, and especially to stand against those two anomalous movements of a strong military trend in church and state that mark the ending of this nineteenth century of grace, to wit, the boys' brigade for the churches and the military drill for the public schools.

The former of these I have testified against repeatedly of late. So have many others in this country and in England. THE UNION SIGNAL has spoken brave and truthful words in its condemnation. Now as to the teaching of military tactics in the public schools, the genesis of the recent strong effort in its favor appears to have been the action of the Grand Army at its last annual encampment in Pittsburg in appointing General Wingate "special aide to the commander-in-chief in charge of military instruction in schools." Suggestions as to drill, uniform, demeanor, etc., have been issued, though the general appointed thinks it well to leave the system to the principals. "Every boy should be required to salute all teachers when meeting and addressing them, and the teachers should be equally careful to return the salutes." The late meeting at Carnegie Hall, New York, to which ex-President Harrison and the governors of six of the nearest states were invited, was in promotion of this plan, which is rightly headed by the daily paper as a plan "To Make Young Soldiers." There will assuredly be no difficulty in discovering evidences of a traditional bad feeling and grudge toward "the mother country," if we mischievously accentuate it in our school histories, and give guns and other accoutrements to the boys to instill an esprit du corps and to keep fresh the "patriotic spirit."

Philadelphia, Pa. JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

WOMAN'S FIRST WORK IN COLORADO AS A LEGISLATOR.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—We are all acquainted with the old time sophistry, that men from chivalry will do more for women without the ballot than they would do for her if she were their recognized political peer; that her greatest power lies in moral suasion and petition.

Of course the progressive woman saw the fallacy of this argument, knowing that the ballot was the quickest, surest and most effective means of influencing legislation.

This statement is shown to be true by the fact that in all the states in which women have some of the rights of franchise, the best laws will be found upon the subject that so vitally concerns the welfare of all women—that of the age of consent.

How long would it have taken for women without the ballot to have succeeded in raising the age of consent laws from sixteen to twenty-one years, as has recently been done in the state of Colorado with only three women in the house? The following clipping tells the story:

A bill by Mrs. Holly to raise the age of consent for females from sixteen to twenty-one years passed second reading in the house with but very little opposition and none on the final vote. When it was before the house on the first occasion two amendments were made which did not meet with the approval of the women. One was to require the female making the charge of criminal assault to be of previously chaste character, and the other was to raise the age at which a male could be punished for such an assault from fourteen to eighteen years. To-day both these amendments were defeated and another one adopted, striking out all reference to the age of a male, so that the measure reads that any male can be punished for a criminal offense which he may commit with or without the consent of a female who is under twenty-one years.

It is true that two of the men representatives, presumably from chivalry, tried to so amend this woman's bill as to virtually destroy it, yet the members dare not vote against it even if they had been so inclined, knowing that they could never again hope for political preferment if they would thus antagonize one-half of their constituents. SOPHIA N. REDDIN JENKINS,

Pres. E. S. League, Costello county, Colo.

HOLLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Miss Willard's last address is not behind any of the former. In the last number of my weekly paper you will see a translation of its first part: "Since we were here." It gives such a nice and pleasant history of the twenty-one years' labor and victories. The number may be besides this a useful one, as I translated in it the speech of Dr. Richardson at the conversazione in the Temperance Hospital, and of the advice of our special children doctors, who all condemn the giving even of weak beer to children, though they themselves yet very much need the lessons of Dr. Richardson on alcohol as a medicine.

Of our Christmas number all ten thousand copies have been sold. The Workman is my monthly paper, not exclusively on temperance, but rather for the do-everything policy, and to win the hearts of the well-to-do for that principle.

To my little Bible almanac for 1895 I have added the text-book as a memento present of my eightieth birthday, on January 25, 1895. I have arranged it so that it can serve for every year. When you look at the names you will see that the principal part of the work is yet resting on my shoulders. Happily I have good helpers in two ladies, Miss Schelling and Miss Coolsma, who are very successful in writing pleasant tales.

At my age I enjoy the full blessing of a brain free of alcohol fumes and tobacco smoke, and my now more than two years' vegetarianism even seem to improve my health.

My own temperance union at Amsterdam and Ymiden, on the do-everything plan, will make a fête of my birthday. We started on March 21, 1862, and for almost twenty years I remained the only minister of the gospel in the land who believed that total abstinence is a necessary foundation for the whole Christian philanthropy. Even now not one of the fifty Protestant ministers in Amsterdam is willing to give up his wine for the people's sake. Among our Roman Catholics not even the smallest sign of life is visible on the total abstinence field.

The bishops and priests in our country are so hostile against Protestants, that such a priest as Archbishop Ireland will be even more than an eight world-wonder in their eyes. I use every occasion to fix the attention on the better example the bishops in America are giving; unhappily total abstinence is not much more appreciated in our own well-to-do circles. It is the people, the working classes, and even our soldiers, who feel that it is their cause we are pleading and laboring for.

The triumph on the Tammany tiger is a splendid affair. May also Chicago soon have its Dr. Parkhurst, and the same powerful assistance of the W. C. T. U. ladies.

May equal rights for men and women be soon the blessed condition of the whole human race.

C. S. ADAMA VON SCHELTEMA.

Arnheim, Holland.

AN ADDENDUM.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In Miss Willard's account of the rise and progress of temperance in Preston, England, there was one item omitted. The origin of the word teetotal. James Teare was one of the seven men who met in Preston to discuss the temperance problem. He introduced the subject of total abstinence, or teetotalism in my native town (Falmouth) and he told us that the word originated by one of the seven who was a stammerer, declaring that nothing would do short of tee-total abstinence.

Yours respectfully,

JAS. W. TEESTRAIL.

DEAR COMRADES:—Will not about fifty of you who are members of wide-awake unions sit down in the midst of your many cares and write me a short, crisp account of the best thing your union has accomplished during the past year, telling just how you were successful?

Through this column I am only too glad to answer questions, but "turn about is fair play." May I not receive at least fifty inspiring solutions of my special difficulties?

---

Dr. Mary Wood Allen, M. D., National superintendent of our

PURITY DEPARTMENT

has been circulating an appeal to local unions concerning the demand for and supply of literature, especially for use in mothers' meetings. If there is a sufficient call to warrant the work and expense Dr. Allen proposes to issue a monthly periodical, The Mother's Friend, for study in mothers' meetings, making the price so low that it will be practically within reach of all. If you have not received Dr. Allen's circular letter, write to her at once, 37 South Taylor street, Ann Arbor, Mich., and let her know what part you can take in forwarding this good move.

---

An urgent letter from New York asks for information concerning the laws of that state in relation to "houses of ill-fame."

The best "dictionary" for W. C. T. U. workers is a copy of the state minutes. In this particular case, a letter to the state superintendent of the Department of Legislation, and one to the state superintendent of the Department of Purity, would have elicited the required facts more directly. The LOCAL UNION means to do its best in answer to perplexing questions, but it is local and cannot well compass the individual machinery of the various states.

---

There is a permissible desire in the heart of all good housewives to furnish their tables with delicately flavored dishes, but white-ribbon chefs conscientiously wishing to "refrain from all appearance of evil," are averse to using which contain or are contained in a per cent of alcohol. There can now be bought good flavorings in powder form, free from the "poison." Mrs. Anne S. D. Bates, Fabius, N. Y., can furnish further particulars to those who wish them.

FLAVORING EXTRACTS

---

"What is to be thought of a local union that has no

W. C. T. U. COLUMN

in the local newspaper?"

Such a union shows that it has an enormous power to resist knowledge. It could subsidize a printing press and outfit that cost thousands of dollars, and could "get in its work" in space that would cost ever so much money if used for advertisements, and yet it allows that space to be used for matter of infinitely less value to the public than bright, pointed temperance news, facts and arguments would be. We regret to say that scores of editors make the complaint that when they have offered space to the women they "ran well for a season" but became careless after awhile and dropped the column out altogether. Send five cents to Miss Lodie E. Reed, National superintendent of Press Department, 66½ N. Penn st., Indianapolis, Ind., in return for which she will send you "Press Points." If the local editor is difficult to reach, find some tactful woman who is a personal friend of himself and family to undertake to secure the space. "Wise as serpents"—!

---

There are still some of us who do not fully understand the mission of

THE SOMERSET W. C. T. U.

There are scattered through the boundaries of the National W. C. T. U. isolated women who are one with the white-ribbon movement and desire to be members, but find no union at hand with which to unite. For these the Somerset union was organized, and any one may become a member of same by signing the pledge and paying the regular membership fee to state or National treasurer. It seems to me that then, with her white ribbon tied in her button-hole and W. C. T. U. zeal burning in her heart, this "isolated" member would proceed at once to gather about her all available women, and by persuasion, prayer and persistence, succeed in organizing a regular local union.

CREATE DEMAND FOR LITERATURE.

That is, temperance literature! I am acquainted with the literature superintendent of a local union numbering about one hundred and fifty members. For some time previous to the superintendent's appointment this special department had not been thoroughly "worked" or exploited, to use the latter term, so she set herself at the none-too-easy task of resuscitating temperance literature activity. Once in a month or six weeks she writes a circular letter, sending a copy to each member. Her first move was to divide the members into two classes, viz., those who do and those who do not take THE UNION SIGNAL. To each individual of the former class (and their number was pitifully small) she sent a letter of appeal, in which she specified the number of non-subscribers, asking the subscribers to coöperate with her in winning over these "delinquents" and outlining some methods by which this coöperation could be rendered. Then she wrote to the larger class an earnest letter on personal responsibility in W. C. T. U. work, the relation of THE UNION SIGNAL to intelligent W. C. T. U. activity, its special departments for special needs, its low price, its good offers to clubs, etc.

These communications met with a fair response, and encouraged the writing of Circular Letter No. 2, which was exclusively to superintendents of departments, calling their attention to the outfits for workers furnished by the W. T. P. A., and also furnishing a list, entitled

W. C. T. U. SUPERINTENDENT'S LIBRARY, which was to include

| | |
|---|---|
| THE UNION SIGNAL | $ 1 00 |
| National Minutes for the current year | 15 |
| State Minutes for the current year | 10 |
| Set of "Department Leaflets," per 100 | 15 |
| Annual Leaflet | postage |
| W. T. P. A. Catalogue | " |
| State W. C. T. U. Paper | |

A catalogue of the W. T. P. A., marked to suit the special line of the superintendent receiving it, accompanied each one of these letters.

Circular Letter No. 3. asks each member to send the superintendent fifteen cents, in return for which she will send one hundred assorted leaflets published by the W. T. P. A., these to be distributed by the individuals during the ensuing month, that there may be simultaneous seed-sowing of truth in the vicinity of this union. The "returns" from this request have not yet come in, but if one-third of the members respond, at a very slight cost to each member, five thousand leaflets will have been sent out on their temperance mission during the month of February.

---

By the way, have you sent for a copy of the Annual Leaflet for 1895? It answers a great many questions that arise daily among W. C. T. U. workers, and not one white-ribboner ought to be without it.

---

Mrs. Mary C. Upham, National superintendent of WORK AMONG LUMBERMEN,

in answer to some inquiries sent her regarding literature for use in lumber camps, says:

"I have found Mrs. Grubb's leaflets for foreigners, in all languages, admirable for this purpose. Then, too, Mrs. Grubb is one of those patient souls, easily imposed upon, and she will make a selection with great care for any one, sending for thirty cents a package large enough to do great service. She publishes Bishop Ireland's talks, so acceptable to our Catholic friends, and several tracts as good. The W. T. P. A. "Timely Talks" are several of them good for camp men. A good assortment from these sources with our home papers, THE UNION SIGNAL, Youth's Companion, illustrated papers, fresh daily or weekly secular papers, and any religious papers, of which the Salvation Army War Cry, and Ram's Horn are good, and are appreciated in camp."

Mrs. Grubb's address is Kirkwood, Mo.

---

These bleak winter days, made more terrible by the business depression, are saddened by the awful fact that among those who suffer from want and deprivation are countless little ones, their bodies illy-clad and poorly nourished, the natural laughter of childhood turned to unnatural gravity and tears because of cold and hunger and oftentimes cruelty. Warm-hearted white-ribbon mothers and sisters, hurrying along the streets of our great cities where these "fragments" are more numerous say within themselves, "Oh, that somehow we could furnish

HOMES FOR HOMELESS CHILDREN."

A number of states have taken up this department, but there is an immense field yet to be brought under its jurisdiction. This winter is nearly over, but while spring and summer are minimizing the sufferings of the poor, shall not the mother-heart of our great organization be planning to shelter thousands of the weaklings of the human flock when winter comes again?

Yours for "them that are in bonds,"

Mother Experience.

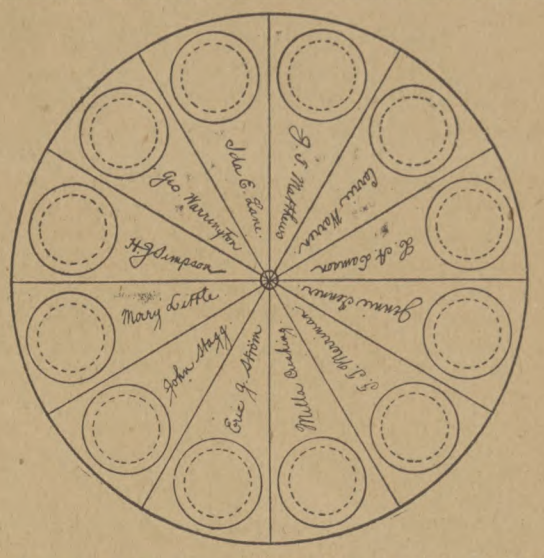
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

PRAYER.—Hear, O Lord, when I cry with my voice; have mercy also upon me and answer me.—Psalm 27:7.

PROMISE.—And it shall come to pass before they call, I will answer, and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.—Isa. 65:24.



When one has a wheel in one's head it makes one think of all the wheels in the world—from the tiniest one that sets in motion the delicate works of a Geneva watch, not larger than the top of your thumb—to the monster one connected with a Corliss engine, that sets going all the machinery in a World's Exposition. If you are old enough a childish vision of a sainted face will come to you with silver hair almost hidden beneath a soft-frilled cap. It is grandmother at her spinning wheel. She is telling you a story of the olden times. So interested are you, you heed not the tick, tick, tick of the old clock on the stairs, nor the soft, low music of the wheel. But you think of it all now since those loved hands have been folded in their last sleep. What a charm you always found in the old wheel at the mill as you passed back and forth to school. How your first baby boy used to crow and clap his little hands with delight as nurse came with his little wheeled carriage to take him for his afternoon ride. That brings you to think of the wheels in the first carriage your husband presented to you. Well you remember the happy day you told the driver to avoid all the muddy spots so the wheels would not get splashed. Then you think of all the wheels that are revolving in a great city in the interest of manufacture, business and pleasure. The magnitude of the wheel overpowers you and you become firmly of the opinion that the world would come to a standstill, or at least lapse into barbarism if no wheels moved.

***

You don't blame the Temple founder for inventing a Temple Wheel. As it seems to you it requires a wheel to make things move, and you will sit down this very moment and write to Chicago for five Temple Wheels for yourself and the children, as the Temple is so big it will require a million Wheels to get it properly in motion, and you feel your family should do its part in the great work, besides by this means you will be able to secure one of the lovely silver souvenir Temple teaspoons, and the educational game of checkers, which will be both instructive and amusing to the children during these long winter evenings.

***

Mrs. Emily G. Gibson, of Juniata, Neb., writes as follows: "Inclosed you will find a Wheel filled yesterday by our little boy nine years old. He now wishes you to send him another, also premium No. 5 (the game of Pixies). We think the Wheel very nice. Any child can fill one." A little friend, Lillian C. Austin, of Taunton, Mass., writes us that she is delighted with the Temple Wheel arrangement; everybody seems willing to give ten cents for the dear Temple. She also asks us to send a Wheel to a twin brother. This is the way we want our "chain" added to. Let each one not only fill a Wheel but get some one else to do the same.

***

Mrs. Julia Dexter Stannard, of Dexter, Mich., sends $5, with the following note: "I, too, with Miss Willard, am anxious that the name of Mary T. Lathrap should be placed in Willard Hall. Enclosed please find a second to Miss Willard's first $5, to honor the memory of our beloved state president." Mr. O. Woodin, of Detroit, Mich., sends $1 for Mrs. Lathrap's tablet.

***

The Y's of Moorestown, N. J., send $1 for the tablet in honor of Mrs. Evans and the same amount for Miss Stewart's tablet. Allentown, N. J., W. C. T. U., sends $5, and the Palasade union, at West Hoboken, N. J., sends $20 on its $100 pledge. The W. C. T. U. of Elizabeth City, North Carolina, sends $10, the balance on its pledge of $25 to the Temple.

***

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money order and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple Chicago.

THE TAPESTRY WEAVERS.

Let us take to our hearts a lesson—no lesson can braver be—
From the ways of the tapestry-weavers on the other side of the sea.
Above their heads the pattern hangs, they study it with care,
The while their fingers deftly work, their eyes are fastened there.
They tell this curious thing, besides, of the patient, plodding weaver;
He works on the wrong side ever more, but works for the right side ever.
It is only when the weaving stops and the web is loosed and turned,
That he sees his real handiwork—that his marvelous skill is learned.
Ah, the sight of its delicate beauty, how it pays him for all his cost!
No rarer, daintier work than his, was ever done by the frost.
Then the master bringeth him golden hire, and giveth him praise as well;
And how happy the heart of the weaver is, no tongue but his own can tell.

The years of man are the looms of God, let down from the place of the sun,
Wherein we are weaving alway, till the mystic web is done.
Weaving blindly, but weaving surely, each for himself his fate;
We may not see how the right side looks—we can only weave and wait.
But looking above for the pattern, no weaver hath need to fear,
Only let him look clear into heaven—the Perfect Pattern is there.
If he keeps the face of our Saviour forever and always in sight,
His toil shall be sweeter than honey, his weaving is sure to be right.
And when his task is ended and the web is turned and shown,
He shall hear the voice of the Master, it shall say to him, "Well done!"
And the white-winged angels of heaven to bear him thence, shall come down,
And God shall give him pure gold for his hire—not coin—but a crown.

—Selected.

THE CAMP OF ISRAEL.

BY LOUISE GRANT.

"That's all right; I know what I'm about! The devil's had five of my mines and I'm going to see to it that not one cent from this gets into his clutches."

Old Dick Taylor, as he was commonly called, had been a very successful prospector and might now be a very wealthy man had he not squandered his money. He was what Arizona men call an old-timer. It took more whisky to "floor" him than any of his acquaintances. His vocabulary of profanity was, perhaps, more extensive than that of any other man in the territory.

After the sale of a certain mining property, he spent ten thousand dollars in two weeks in the wildest debauchery. After another sale he is said to have spent more in a shorter time in Phœnix.

Worn out physically, depressed mentally, and "broke" financially, he wandered down the streets of Phœnix one evening vaguely thinking of putting an end to his miserable existence. Suddenly the beating of a drum arrested his attention; flags were floating in the breeze and hallelujahs broke the stillness of the evening air.

The "crazy Salvationists," as Old Dick called them, seemed to be in an unusually happy mood. When they reached the street corner they stopped for an open air meeting. Dick Taylor stopped too.

The first speaker was a saved miner. His experience before conversion had much in common with Dick's. He, too, had played the part of the prodigal son; had journeyed into a far country, been joined himself to the citizens of that country, and by them made to feed swine.

The speaker dwelt on the misery of his existence; on the cravings of his soul which were unsatisfied. With tears in his eyes he told how many times he had desired to leave the far country, but because he was joined to the citizens of that land, he found it hard to escape. He was no longer a free man, he was a slave; a slave to the intoxicating cup; to the gambling table; and to her who "lieth in wait at every corner." But one year ago he had said, "I will arise and go to my father," and oh, the change in his condition! The best robe—the robe of Christ's righteousness had been placed upon him. Balm of Gilead had been poured on his wounds. Famine had changed to feasting, and sorrow to joy and gladness.

"He breaks the power of cancel'd sin
And sets the prisoner free,"

was sung with great feeling by the Army people, after this testimony.

Dick began to wonder if there really was something to make life worth living. If so, he wanted it; and right there in the open-air meeting on the street corner, "Old Dick" Taylor was converted.

He worked with the Army for several months, marched with them on the streets, and spoke in the open-air meetings and at the barracks. One continual source of sorrow to him was the remembrance of the thousands of dollars he had worse than wasted.

One morning he suddenly announced his intention of going to the hills again in search of mineral. For several months he was neither seen nor heard from, and people began to fear he had fallen a victim to Apache hatred and cruelty. But no; one day he came into Phœnix with a burro load of very rich ore, and announced his intention of giving the mineral and the claims on which he found it to the Salvation Army. His old-time chums tried to dissuade him, but he strongly adhered to his decision as expressed in the first paragraph of our story. The mine was duly offered to the Army and accepted. Sixteen soldiers immediately left to begin operations under Taylor's direction.

The mine is situated almost on the crest of one of the Huachuca mountains. It is difficult of access, yet many a camping party from the surrounding country has paid a visit to this most unique mining camp in the world. None of the soldiers receive pay for their work. Every cent remaining after expenses are paid goes to carry on the work of the Army, and already more than $8,000 has been turned into the treasury.

The working of the General Booth mine, for that is its name, is an added proof of the loyalty of the Salvationists, and of the presence in the world of the Spirit of Him who "pleased not Himself."

Crittenden, Ari.

SOME REVELATIONS OF SCIENCE.

The most active handmaiden placed at the service of the intelligent housekeeper to-day is science, and her service is rendered without remuneration. Every department of housekeeping is indebted to science for her generous donation of accurate knowledge based on investigation and research. This knowledge, if used by those who manage homes, reduces the cost of living, reduces the dangers of disease and death, and reduces crime and immorality.

The loss in money to the homes of this country through the adulteration of food is enormous. The Ohio Dairy and Food Commission has placed every home in the land in its debt because of the aggressive, thorough work it is now doing to detect adulterations in all articles of food and proprietary medicines and tonics.

The first crusade was waged against grocers. Goods were bought and analyzed by authorized chemists, and the seller prosecuted when the goods sold were adulterated or below recognized standards. Vinegar sold as cider vinegar is on the market, sold regularly and bought in perfect faith, but is a chemical compound. Jellies and jams were analyzed and found to contain only a small percentage of the real fruits. Jellies were made of water, grape and cane sugar, ash and coloring matter. Spices yielded, on analysis, cocoanut shells, rice, flour and ashes. Coffee contained burnt starch, burnt sugar, and saccharine extracts. A preparation sold as lemonade was proved to be made of water, sugar, and tartaric acid, and contained no lemon. A dairyman was prosecuted for selling skimmed milk; the milk he sold contained ninety per cent of water, and of the ten per cent only 1.2 per cent contained fats. A fine of one hundred and fifty dollars was imposed in this case, which was a test case. All the cases tried resulted in victory for the Commission. Public sentiment has been educated in the demanding of pure foods in Ohio through the effort of the Dairy and Food Commission that the arrest and prosecution of offenders is made easy, not difficult, as in most of our states. This last year the Ohio legislature passed laws still further simplifying the proceedings in the prosecuting of cases of food adulterations.

Another field in which the Commission has been active is that of proprietary medicines and tonics. The revelations resulting from the analysis of two much-advertised tonics, both recommended as especially beneficial to mothers and children, were startling. Druggists were made the defendants in these cases. Four arrests were made, three for selling goods other than that specified, and one for selling a pre-digested food which contained no food elements. These goods are sold over the whole country, and the decisions, when rendered, will affect the sale of these goods, because the people have become more intelligent. The laws of Ohio controlling the sale of foods and drugs are very explicit. An act passed in 1884 says: "No person shall, within this state, manufacture or sale, offer for sale, or sell any drug or article of food which is adulterated, within the meaning of this act." The term "drug" is made to include all medicines designed for internal or external use.

One tonic, analyzed and found to come within the condemnation of the law, proved to be a certain kind of Bordeaux wine, and did not contain a fraction of the drug that gave it its name; it yielded, on analysis, one-fifth of alcohol. The result was an alcoholic stimulant. The other tonic, two brands of which were analyzed, claimed to be entirely free from alcohol; one contained fifteen per cent of pure alcohol, the other yielded no alcohol; but in both a large percentage of salicylic acid was found.

. . . . . .

The first duty of every housekeeper is the preservation of the health of her family. Her second duty is to secure from the money expended the best results. The wider her range of knowledge, the closer she watches the revelations of science as they bear on the questions affecting the home, the surer she is to succeed in accomplishing her highest aims and to educate public sentiment.—The Outlook.

TRILBY.

BY MRS. J. G. HAUSER.

In thousands of homes a leading novel of 1894, "Trilby," has been given as a Christmas present, and just now is impressing its influence on a multitude of minds and hearts.

As a whole, Trilby seems like a beautiful stream, with fair banks and flowers, deep shadows and brilliant lights, but the water is tainted. Thousands will drink, their hearts and souls being strong enough to throw off its subtle influence, but many others will find poison in the delicious draught.

God is referred to as a nebulosity, and not quite "certain" if He is even so much. Physical beauty in woman is the chief mantle for her failings; in marriage, her beauty, coupled with innocence, may prove a cover for her husband's failings. As the easily influenced read the story pretty girls are apt to grow vain, studying the glass to see if they have a Trilby chin or ear, while plain girls may grow morbid. Religious questioners of a certain calibre find doubt added to doubt, and the sensuous and self-indulgent are assured "that God will make it all right for us somehow, in the end, all of us."

Suppose Trilby had contracted a loathsome disease, suppose she had had a pug nose, squint eyes and yellow teeth, yet her foot beautiful enough for a model, what would all her lovely graces of heart and soul have counted for among those artists?

Thousands of young men will read this book and use it as a new argument that a man may live and do as he pleases, if he only at last marries a pretty, innocent girl, has beautiful children, to whom he may be as were Trilby's father and grandfather; still, in the end, it was only his fate, and some day "God will make it all right."

It is quite true that many of the old Bible lessons have been accepted literally by us, rather than in the far deeper meaning involved, and "we would not treat our criminals" according to some of the ancient notions of God's justice. Nevertheless, neither should we condone the unclean lives of men like Trilby's father and grandfather in such namby-pamby, indifferent, unjust fashion.

Trilby was marvelous in her purity of thought and heart, but she was brought up in the darkness of a moral cellar, and her young life early bore the penalty. What a noble woman she would have been could her child days have been surrounded by heavenly light and teaching, which would have bestowed upon her the safeguards of shame and wisdom. "Pauvre Trilby!"

Any discussion of the question whether we should receive a Trilby in our drawing-rooms, would lead to a far greater question: Shall we receive those artists to whom the immolation of other Trilbys seems necessary to their success? Still further,—what of those who buy pictures which have cost so many maidens that dearer than life?

More insidiously than ever does this book proclaim one law for women, another for men. The shock is, not that Trilby was forgiven as soon as light dawned upon her soul, and she fled the model throne, but in the fact that within an hour the great artist teacher of artists, and "the father of grown daughters," he, who had been melted to tears by Trilby's repentance, had another girl on that same throne.

Chicago, Ill.

A FLAG DAY.

THE stories of battle and raid,
In the times when our flag was made,
Oh, let them be often told.
And the stars and stripes we'll raise,
In token of thanks and praise
To one, in the grand old days,
Most patient and wise and bold.

In honor of truth and right,
In honor of courage and might
And the will that makes a way,
In honor of work well done,
In honor of fame well won,
In honor of Washington,
Our flag is floating to-day.

—Youth's Companion.

HOW I LEARNED NOT TO CHEW OR SMOKE TOBACCO.

BY EVERETT MC NEIL.

I could not have been over six years old when I took my first and last chew of tobacco; but, to this day, I have a distinct remembrance of just how that tobacco felt and of what I did to get the taste of it out of my mouth. I found the tobacco in a little paper bag up-stairs, in the hired man's room. I had often seen the hired man chew, and supposed, of course, tobacco was something good to eat, and I wanted a taste the moment I saw it. I did not go and ask the hired man to give me some; no, I stole a small handful and, stuffing it into my mouth, began to "chaw." At first it tasted sweet, then it began to sting and burn, until, finally, in some alarm, I took the "cud" from my mouth and threw it out of the window. The next thing I remember I was standing before the wash-stand in mother's bedroom cleaning my mouth out with castile soap and a toothbrush.

This was nature's way of telling me not to put any more of the dirty stuff into my mouth; but nature had to be supplemented by mother. I do not think mother whipped me when she found out what I had been doing; but I am quite sure she did something far better—gave me a talking to on tobacco that I, even at that age, could understand and profit by.

I was somewhat older when I smoked my first and last cigar, probably in my eleventh or twelfth year. Father was a farmer and grew tobacco. One day I went out to the shed where the tobacco hung, and pulling some leaves off a stalk, rolled them up into something which I fancied looked very much like a cigar. Then I crept away into a corner where no one would be apt to see me, lit the cigar, and placing it in my mouth began to puff away, determined to get some of the "solid comfort" I had heard men tell of "sucking through a cigar."

Of course I knew I was doing wrong. If I had not I would not have hidden; but men smoked, and other boys smoked, and I wanted to smoke too; so smoke I did.

The cigar drew splendidly. The smoke fairly poured out of my mouth as I puffed, puffed away, thinking what a bright lad I was to be able to make such a success out of my first cigar.

But presently a queer feeling began creeping around inside of me. I took the cigar out of my mouth and looked at it. It was only about half gone and appeared all right. I rose to my feet but instantly sat down again. I could not understand what made my head so dizzy. And my stomach! My stomach! ! oh, my stomach! ! !

The cigar dropped from my fingers, and I fell backward and lay at full length chuck full of solid discomfort.

No, I did not die, but for about an hour I was a very sick boy. Again nature had warned me to let tobacco alone.

Nature had now done her part. She had shown me very plainly that tobacco was not good for me, and yet, I think, both her lessons would have been in vain had it not been for mother. Mother—ah, only when we can look back over our youth through the eyes of manhood do we begin to understand how much we owe to mother! I had to have another dose of mother-love and mother-wisdom and the cure was complete.

This is how I learned not to chew or smoke tobacco, and it has two lessons in it, one for the boys and one for the mothers.

Boys, tobacco would not make you sick when you first chew or smoke if it was good for you. Nature sends the sickness to warn you that you are taking a slow poison into your system. Leave it alone. It is only fit for worms to chew and for men to kill lice with.

Mothers, if you do not want your boys to use tobacco teach them the wrong and the folly of it while they are young, before some other boy has had a chance to tempt them to smoke and chew. Put them on their guard. Then when asked to smoke or chew they will know it is wrong and why it is wrong, and if you have done your duty well their answer will be NO.

Stoughton, Wis.

ANTI-CIGARETTE LEAGUES.

BY MRS. E. B. INGALLS.
W. C. T. U. Nat'l Supt. of Narcotics.

IN THE UNION SIGNAL of January 24 was an excellent article on Anti-Cigarette Leagues, and I am receiving letters from all over the country asking for information.

The constitution that was printed at that time is not binding upon any League. We have no national constitution. Each League can adopt or reject any part of the one printed in THE UNION SIGNAL. Let the boys and the girls do the work as they please. The important part is to pledge them against cigarettes. In many Leagues they include chewing gum.

How many of our white-ribbon boys and girls will push the Anti-Cigarette League during the year? I will shortly organize a National League, so that boys who are out of school can join. Send to me for constitution and badge.

4119 Westminster Place, St. Louis, Mo.

ENGLISH BY SOUND.

It was in one of our schools the other day, says a writer in the Northwestern Magazine, where I picked up the following thrilling composition written by a twelve-year-old girl, which is one of the best pieces of English as she is "spelt" that I have yet seen:

"A right suite little buoy, the son of a kernal, with a rough round his neck, flue up the road as quick as a dear. After a thyme he stopped at the house and wrung the belle. His tow hurt hymn and he kneaded wrest. He was two tired to raze his fare, pail face, and a feint mown of pane rose from his lips.

"The made who herd the belle was about to pair a pare, but she through it down and ran with all her mite, for fear her guessed would not weight; but when she saw the little won tiers stood in her ayes at the site. 'Ewe poor dear. Why do you lye hear? Are yew dyeing?' 'Know,' he said, 'I am feint.' She boar him inn her arms, as she aught, to a room where he mite be quiet, gave him bred and meet, held a cent bottle under his knows, untide his choler, rapped him up warmly, gave him a suite drachm from a viol, till at last he went fourth as hail as a young hoarse."

SAID a little boy, who, during a visit to Florida was obliged to drink condensed milk: "Mamma, I just wish that condensed cow would die."

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

392.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of sixteen letters.
My 1, 4, 3, 5 is a drink that causes a great deal of trouble.
My 10, 11, 12, 13, 2 belongs to a door.
My 14, 15, 16, 6 is a sound.
My 9, 8, 7 is a form of to be.
My whole is the name of a great general of whom it is said, "The entire progress of the civilized world for more than a century has been shaped by the influence of his life and precepts." GRACE WAIT.

393.

ANAGRAM.

(A hero's last resting place.)

TURN ONE, VON M.

394.

CHARADE.

My first is done to make things clean.
Second in studying is seen.
My third, a measure of heavy weight.
My whole you'll say was "good and great."

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED JANUARY 31.

383. Temperance.

384. 1, Finch. 2, Woolley. 3, Demorest (Dem, O!, rest). 4, Neal Dow (kneel, dow). 5, Willard (will, lard). 6, Somerset (summer, set).

385. 1, Dog. 2, Oxen. 3, Rat. 4, Lion. 5, Hare.

Correct answers: La Jeune Forrey; Bertha Hendricks; Rosa Doar.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—If I should ask Cozy Corner circle the question this week, "If not yourself who would you like to have been?" a good many of the bright boys, with a certain near birthday in mind, would answer promptly, George Washington! And I should be very glad to have such an answer. Do you know why?

Because George Washington was not only a great man but a good one as well. His goodness was a large part of his greatness, and shines out strongly in many of his best known qualities.

Our country's hero had learned one very good lesson, that of self-control. He kept watch over and checked his own fiery temper with just as much firmness as he held the bit of the horse which he rode so gallantly.

But the trait of his character which I want you to admire equally as much as the greater ones, because it is not so common in great people, was that of consideration for others. A story told about him illustrates this, and also shows the power of a good example.

It runs thus: On one occasion General Washington and his officers stopped over night at a house where a girl was sick. Learning this the general talked very low all evening and of course the officers also talked very low. But when he left them to go to his room they forgot about the sick girl and kept talking a little louder and a little louder until they became quite noisy.

The sounds reached the good general's ears, and thinking of the sick girl he resolved to put a stop to the noise. What do you think he did? Did he walk into the officers' company and command them in stern tones to be silent? Oh, no; he had a far more telling way of administering a rebuke. He came out in his stocking feet, tiptoe, and went over to the mantelpiece and took down a book. Then he nodded good-night silently with a smile and tiptoed all the way back to his room. Do you suppose those officers remembered that sick girl when they noticed their general's motions? The story says there was no more loud talking after that.

For others' sake is the governing principle of all good temperance lives. Let us remember it in the little as well as great things as did George Washington.

Affectionately your

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

Willie Poff, Wisconsin.
Etta Kinsella, Dist. of Columbia.
Alice Springstead, Earle S. Richmond, Michigan,
Jennie Hannawell, Illinois.
Corinne C. White, Nebraska.
Strauss Hadley, Oregon.
May Harley, Ohio.
Sallie E. Wright, Homer Henley, Indiana.
Rosa Doar, South Carolina.
Florence Robinson, Florida.

I am a little girl eight years old, and I would like to enter the Cozy Corner list. We have no L. T. L. here, but mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. and takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I belong to the Junior Christian Endeavor, and go to school every day. What is your countersign?

Tustin, Orange Co., Cal. DELLA KEIM.

I think you found the answer to your question in this Corner last week, Della.

This is the first letter I ever wrote to THE UNION SIGNAL. I am eight years old. I have a sister ten years old. I live with my grandma and aunt, who are white-ribboners, and I am a temperance girl. I live in a village where there are no saloons, and I am glad to say it.

Stillwater, Pa. GRACE L. HESS.

I wish that every Cozy Cornerer could live where there are no saloons.

I will write you a little letter.
I belong to the L. T. L.
I am in the second class.
Mrs. Morgan is my teacher.
I have a little brother.
He will soon be three years old.
I am eight years old.
I go to school.
I am in the first reader.

Lake Preston, S. D. BENEDICTA M. LEWIS.

Your letter is well written, but did you notice when you wrote how many of your sentences began with a certain familiar word?

I enjoy reading the letters in the Cozy Corner and I am writing to ask admission to your Corner. I am thirteen years old. My papa, mamma and sister all belong to the W. C. T. U. We have an L. T. L. here which has about fifty members, and most all are active. My sister is superintendent, I am president, and my brother, who is five years old, is a member of the society. Although we live in a very small town yet we have a saloon.

Indianola, Neb. ANGIE QUICK.

No place is too small or secluded for the saloon power. But there'll be enough temperance voters when that L. T. L. grows up to drive it out of Indianola.

THE UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD, LL.D.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President. MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, London, Eng.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Chicago.
MME. LOUISE DEMOREST, New York City.
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MRS. E. B. INGALLS, St. Louis, Mo.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK ..... 1
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Only a Rush: An Eastern Fancy. By James Manning Bronson ..... 2
McCracken's Boy. By Helen Rachel Robb ..... 2
The Greatest Number's Greatest Good. By Frances E. Willard ..... 3
"Where?" By V. A. Lewis ..... 3
A Plea for the Single Tax. By George Sutherland ..... 3
CORRESPONDENCE:
Prohibition Suffragists ..... 4
Christian Work, Yea or Nay ..... 4
Greetings from our Fifth Round-the-World Missionary
Woman's First Work in Colorado as a Legislator ..... 4
The Needs in Kansas ..... 4
An Addendum ..... 4
LOCAL UNION ..... 5
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS ..... 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, The Tapestry Weavers ..... 6
The Camp of Israel. By Louise Grant ..... 6
Some Revelations of Science ..... 6
Trilby. By Mrs. J. G. Hauser ..... 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, A Flag Day ..... 7
How I Learned Not to Chew or Smoke Tobacco. By Everett McNeil ..... 7
Anti-Cigarette Leagues. By Mrs. E. B. Ingalls ..... 7
English By Sound ..... 7
Soft-Shelled Nuts ..... 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER ..... 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Last Glimpse of the Great Petition ..... 8
Political Amenities ..... 8
The Kindergartens of San Francisco ..... 9
THE WATCH TOWER ..... 9
CANADIAN FIELD:
News from Over the Border ..... 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Maine—California—District of Columbia—Pennsylvania ..... 10, 11
News in a Nutshell ..... 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Department Work Among Foreigners ..... 12
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES ..... 12
TREASURER'S CORNER ..... 13
ORGANIZERS' CORNER ..... 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE ..... 14
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT ..... 15
SIGNAL NOTES ..... 16

"We will rejoice in thy salvation, and in the name of our God we will set up our banners; the Lord fulfill all our petitions.—Ps. 20:5.

LAST GLIMPSE OF THE GREAT PETITION.

The bright sunshine was streaming across the snow-covered avenues of the suburb of Evanston, Ill., making a picture suggestive of peace and prosperity, as we stopped at the home of Mrs. R. C. Shuman, the "maker" of the Great Petition. To look upon the scene as viewed from the path leading to Mrs. Shuman's home, there was little apparent need for the voyage of the Petition, for there was no visible sign of such a curse as the drink traffic in this Prohibition town.

Mrs. Shuman had just finished her last work upon the gigantic document, and was waiting for it to be boxed and carried away. In a pile near by the five great rolls at our feet lay the belated sheets that had come in that morning, and while we were regretting that even these could not be added, the postman deposited another armful, which Mrs. Shuman, smiling, said was a "small mail."

"About how large has been your average mail?"

"People have been unusually active in circulating the petitions lately, and last week I received on an average seventy-five letters a day."

"To begin at the beginning—when was the Petition first circulated?"

"About twelve years ago—when Miss Willard was in California."

"And when did you take hold of it?"

"In June, 1890—almost five years ago."

"Can you estimate about what proportion of your time has been spent in preparing the Petition?"

"Yes, about two years, allowing eight hours of work a day. The number of hours can easily be estimated."

Just here Mrs. Shuman showed us the room where the "pasting" or mounting had been done. It was her own cozy diningroom. The long strips of white cloth were laid on a paperhanger's board which in turn rested on the dining table.

"On last Sunday," said Mrs. Shuman, "I could not put it away as usual and the family had hardly room to move about,—but they were very patient!"

"About how much cloth have you used?" we asked, not being able to guess how many yards there might be coiled up at our feet.

"I have used two thousand yards of cloth and over four thousand yards of braid. This does not include the material used in the three rolls made in England."

"It may seem a strange request, Mrs. Shuman, but might we see the machine upon which you stitched these four thousand yards?"

Very simply, this earnest, modest woman answered, "I did it all by hand," and we looked reverently at the fingers that had stitched over two miles of blue and red braid upon the white body of the Petition.

"What a task it has been," was our exclamation and the response was both pathetic and humorous:

"Yes, indeed. Many times when I have been more tired than usual I have said I wished that the men would behave themselves and then we would not have to do this! If the names were in one column it would be much longer," continued Mrs. Shuman, "but you see they are mounted three columns across."

"Three times two thousand yards of names!—How many names is that?"

"One million, one hundred and twenty-one thousand actual signatures and six million attestations; therefore, the Petition really voices the sentiment of over seven million people."

"Are any of these men?"

"One million names are those of men who have indorsed the Petition."

"Have you had any special arrangement for names?"

"Yes; this roll, which is the smallest in actual size, is really the most important one. Here are the names of dignitaries, men in authority, Members of Parliament, magistrates, ministers and clergymen (the distinction between these two is an English one) secretaries and London county councillors. Do you want to look at the names?" and giving a deft push to the roll, Mrs. Shuman stretched several yards of the Petition across the floor of her sunny parlor.

Interested to see whose name stood at the head of the list we looked and there in the characteristic writing of our Prohibition hero, stood the honored and revered name of Neal Dow, and just below, another signature from a staunch hand—Joseph Cook. We had time only to jot down a few names that are world known: Archdeacon Farrar, John Whitehead, secretary Sunday Rest Association, London, Ballington Booth, Maude Booth, William Hayes Ward, Henry Wade Rogers, Judge Robert Rich, George C. Lorimer, Ira D. Sankey, and Khama, chief of Bamanwato Palapye Protectorate, South Africa.

"Talking about names," said Mrs. Shuman, handing us a list, "there are some oddities we have copied from the petitions."

Among these were some from Indian Territory—Ka-hutah, Going Wolf, Martha Nakedhead, Lenora Johnnycake!

"There are fifty languages represented on that petition," said our hostess as she picked up two sheets from the table. "Here is one printed for use in Ceylon and another for Burma. My son humorously calls the hieroglyphics 'tangled worms.'"

"You have had some arithmetical problems while handling this work, Mrs. Shuman?"

Her gray eyes flashed with a look of almost rueful mirth. "I should think I had," she said. "There were so many estimates we wished to make. For instance, over a thousand churches are represented among the 'attestations'; so many just signed the Petition 'pastor and people.' There are eighty thousand in 'rising votes.' The Salvation Army has put itself on record—five hundred thousand strong as 'with us,' and the United Society of Christian Endeavor have swelled the list by two million."

"Mrs. Shuman, as you have worked these four years, how have you felt regarding this great Petition—this silent cry from millions?"

There was a slight pause, and then in lowered tones this zealous white-ribboner said: "I can hardly tell you how it has impressed me. The mighty document, signed in fifty different languages, by representatives of all nations of the earth asking for protection against the liquor and opium trades, seems to me a vast power encircling the earth and embracing the islands of the sea. It has seemed to me from the first, as I have woven into this great stretch of canvas thousands upon thousands of signatures from all lands and nations, that I was weaving together the groans of the dying and the tears of the saints."

"Another thing that moves me deeply," continued Mrs. Shuman, "is that among the names written there are many whose owners are gone home. Their voices are hushed on earth, but by those written words they, being dead, yet speak in pleading for the cause of righteousness."

"Have you noted any remarks that have accompanied the petitions sent in?"

"Just a few; such as these are repeated countless times: 'Homeless through drink,' 'My home broken up and children scattered by the curse of drink,' 'We beseech you in God's name,' 'God grant this prayer,' 'God speed the work.' One was signed 'Mother of six prohibition voters,' and on a petition from Texas was scrawled this sentiment: 'What is done in this line mus be done by woman—man is a failour—commence at the cradel.'"

"By whom has the Petition been circulated?"

"The Petition has been circulated by young and old rich and poor, strong and feeble, by the sick and the blind. Sometimes an invalid would write, 'I cannot go out but I have kept the Petition beside my bed and asked all whom I saw to sign it.' Some who were blind yet raised their voices in this way for God and Home and Humanity. It is at once a solemn and a pathetic thing. It surely will not all be lost. The oldest signer was aged ninety-three and the youngest (by special permission) a little boy of seven.

Our conversation was interrupted by Mrs. Shuman springing up with the words, "There are the boxes." An express wagon bearing some compact looking boxes stopped at the door and soon they were deposited in the entrance hall for this last consignment of the Great Petition. The boxes were very strongly made, their dimensions, two feet by two and a half. The five great rolls were packed securely away, the lids dropped, the patent locks "snapped," the keys laid in Mrs. Shuman's hand and the boxes borne out on sturdy shoulders. (Eight boxes had already been shipped from the vault in Willard Hall, Chicago, in charge of Mrs. M. B. Carse, the special custodian of the Petition.)

The scene was a solemn one, for one could not thrust away the thought that there was more than miles of muslin and braid, paper and ink, silent and motionless. As box after box was fastened it seemed as if a million voices were raised in appeal and a million pitiful hands raised for mercy, that the galling chains be stricken off and they be set free, and we fervently echoed the prayer, "We beseech you in God's name."

Thus was the Great Petition fairly started on its unique mission—the greatest petition in length that has ever been circulated, that of the Chartists for the repeal of the Corn Laws having held first place until now.

POLITICAL AMENITIES.

The amenities and asperities of public life are well illustrated in two incidents which we think would interest the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL. Judge East, the Abraham Lincoln of Tennessee, once told us that in his boyhood his father's plantation was near the Hermitage, the home of the great Andrew Jackson, to whom the father of the Judge was bitterly opposed in politics, and whom he was wont to characterize in terms so severe that as a boy Judge East thought he would please his father by putting General Jackson to an inconvenience.

He had noticed on his way to school that a post-office box had been placed at the roadside on an avenue leading to the Hermitage, which stood at some distance. In this box the mail-carrier was wont to deposit the General's letters for which a servant was sent from the house at stated intervals. It occurred to young East that in token of the disgust he felt toward General Jackson he would break off the lid of this box and fill it with mud, which he did. On going home he told of his escapade with great glee, when the family assembled around the supper-table. But behold his father's face grew dark with indignation, and he reproved the boy in the severest terms that he had ever known.

"Why, father?" the boy whimpered, "I knew you hated the old reprobate, as you often call him, and I thought you would be glad to have me do him an ill turn."

"Hold your tongue," his father answered as he exercised the lad by the coat collar. "You will not get a bite of supper till you get on your horse and go with Sambo to the Hermitage this very night and apologize to the General, who is, as you ought to know, if you had a particle of sense, the greatest man the nation has ever produced or is ever likely to." "Old Hickory" was made of such stout stuff that perhaps he never gave much outward indication of the pleasure that must have filled his heart when the bright boy made his apology and explanation.

The incident illustrates a principle that all public workers should keep in mind, namely, that it is not themselves, their character or their principles, that are so much disliked by the public as it is the necessity, unhappily felt by political parties, to belittle each other in the people's eyes. If they cannot find something in the record or character of the prominent leader of the opposition, they will set about undermining him by inventing stories to his disadvantage, but all the time away down in their hearts they respect every leader who merits their respect, because they cannot help it, and in their personal relations they often show great kindness and consideration. We do not even pretend to say that they deliberately set about inventing stories, but the whole attitude of their minds, politically, is such that they are ready to believe anything that will minimize the influence of those to whom they are opposed, and there are always some in the party who are base enough to manufacture disadvantageous reports "out of whole cloth." We have recently received a letter in point from a young lady, who writes as follows:

"You may not remember me, but I feel that I must intrude upon you very rudely and unwelcomely. At the close of one of your recent meetings as a procession from your audience passed by and you shook hands with them, I mentioned to you that my mother had been an admirer of yours for many years, and you sent your love to her. But not five minutes had elapsed since I had told an acquaintance who was with me that my mother strongly disapproved your political position, had worked against you in the Temperance Alliance, and did not consider your positions fair or to be admired. I spoke to you on the basis of a personal liking which she has always had for you, but that cannot justify the false and wrong impression I gave. Believe me, I regret it most bitterly, and ask your pardon, as well as that of God."

This letter, which was certainly dictated by a noble impulse, is an indication of the ameliorating influence that will be brought by women into politics. It also illustrates the fact before stated, that the apparent unfriendliness of those who break up into separate groups is more imaginary than real. Indeed, we are of the opinion that it is for the most part only "skin deep," and would disappear if those arrayed against each other on public questions would but seek to maintain personal relations of good-will. We think the social experience of women may be of value in leading them to do this, and we are confident that no greater service could result from the admission of women to public life than the carrying of those personal amenities that have always been the rule of the parlor upon the platform and into the forum of debate and the capitols of the government. "Evil is wrought for want of thought," and we earnestly hope that it will be made a study by all white-ribboners to break down the middle walls of partition that may form between themselves and their local co-workers by the frank statement that while they must differ concerning methods, they will stoutly endeavor to maintain in their thinking and speaking that the difference does not extend below the eyebrows, but that heart and hand shall always join in personal good cheer and friendly coöperation along the lines on which they can meet freely and fraternally. This one resolution, if formed in the love of God and man, in the breast of every white-ribboner, would do more to smooth the rugged face of war among reformers than any amount of public oratory or editorial writing. "Keep sweet" was the most frequent utterance of the eloquent lips of one of our now silent leaders. We affectionately reiterate the exhortation, first of all to our own souls, and then we pass it on to the great comradeship in the sacred service of the white-ribbon host.

THE KINDERGARTENS OF SAN FRANCISCO.

We have just received a copy of the fifteenth annual report of the Golden Gate Kindergarten Association of San Francisco. It is a beautiful pamphlet, in red and gold, and it is full of absorbing interest from the first page to the last.

In opening her report Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper, the president of the Association, says: "The past year, notwithstanding the stringency of the times, has been one of the most successful of all the years of the work. Two new kindergartens have been organized, making a total of thirty-eight now under the care of the board, with an annual enrollment of three thousand five hundred and four little children from three to five years of age. The total number of children trained during the fifteen years is eighteen thousand one hundred and twenty-six—a number large enough, when grown to manhood and womanhood, to make a good-sized city.

Over seventy-five thousand reports of the work have been scattered broadcast all over the world. As a result two hundred and thirty-five kindergartens have been organized in one hundred and eighty-three different cities. The strongest testimony to the value of this work in San Francisco is given by the public school authorities and the chief of police. It is as follows:

Superintendent Swett, a notable educator, in his last annual report, has the following. He says:

The training received in the free kindergarten schools is having a marked effect on the children who enter the receiving classes of the public schools. I asked Miss Agnes Manning, principal of the Webster school, one of the largest primary schools in the city, to give me a written opinion on this point, and received the following statement:

Superintendent Swett:

DEAR SIR:—I wish to tell you why I am so strongly in favor of kindergartens. My school is in a crowded neighborhood. I have many children from tenement houses and from the narrow streets south of Market street.

Before the days of the kindergarten these children, as soon as they could crawl, spent their waking lives on the sidewalks. From the age of two to six years they pursued the education of the street. The consequences were that at six they came to us with a fund of information of the worst description and a vocabulary that might excite the envy of the Barbary coast.

At the commencement of each new year they tumbled over each other in their rude haste to take up the unexplored life of a school. They were in tens, fifties, hundreds in our yards. The novelty being past, the hard struggle commenced of keeping them from joining the army of truants and leading them into habits of work and cleanliness. When I made my appearance it was the signal for such asides, "Cheese it!" "Lie low!" "Here's the boss, kids!"

A freckle-faced, blue-eyed innocent-looking boy would shock and astound us by swearing as roundly as a Nevada mule driver. He had four years of street training, and it was uphill work to uproot the ill weeds so rankly sown, and a slow task cultivating a different and better crop.

The kindergartens have changed all this. They have taken the babies that used to be consigned to the curbstone, trained and guided them along a path of development. They have wisely attempted no cramming of the infant brain with premature scholarship. They have surrounded the young lives with a fresh atmosphere. They have passed the hours in pleasant games, taught a purer language, and led the little feet into a new civilization.

The children of tenement-houses and narrow streets still come in tens, fifties and hundreds to begin life in a new school at the beginning of each school year. I hear no more, however, the wild phrases of the Barbary coast or the mule driver's oaths. The little ones are clean, self-respecting, eager for knowledge. They have opinions of their own on many things, and are quite anxious to express them. They neither know how to read nor to write. They have been taught to see, to observe, to tell about what they see and hear. They have been taught to respect older people, to be honest, to tell the truth.

It is a rare thing now to find a child that does not know it is wrong to steal. If you meet one you may be sure he has never been in a kindergarten. It used to be a common thing to find blase villains of six, who would steal anything on which they could lay their hands. They were always "finding" their neighbors' pencils, sponges, strings, pictures, books or stray toys. When caught in the act they would grin in your face and tell you, "Them as finds, keeps."

I think you will now understand why I am so strongly in favor of kindergartens.

AGNES M. MANNING,
Webster School, July 21, 1892.

I have also received the following invaluable testimony from Chief Crowley, of our police department. It speaks volumes in behalf of our work:

OFFICE CHIEF OF POLICE,
SAN FRANCISCO, August 19, 1893.

MRS. SARAH B. COOPER, President of the Golden Gate Kindergarten Association:

Dear Madam:—I can cheerfully bear witness to the good accomplished by the establishment of the free kindergartens in this city.

My opinion in this matter is based upon the reports that I have received from police officers.

Very respectfully, P. CROWLEY,
Chief of Police.

Mothers' meetings are held in connection with the different kindergartens, and thus the homes are lifted up. The first and the worst boy ever enrolled, is now a practicing attorney in San Francisco, and is greatly respected. He was a remarkably bright child, only five and a half years old when he entered the kindergarten.

One of these kindergartens is named for our leader, Miss Frances E. Willard. It has been under this board since 1888. Excellent temperance work is done among these children, and the families represented. At the temperance congress of the Pacific coast, Mrs. Cooper gave a paper showing the beneficent results of free kindergarten work along the line of temperance reform. Over four hundred and fifty thousand dollars have been given to Mrs. Cooper for the carrying forward of this great and good work. Eighteen of these kindergartens have been permanently endowed. One thousand business firms in San Francisco contribute to the work. Men of affairs see in this a question of political economy.

MRS. MARY T. BURT, president of the W. C. T. U. of New York city, has been made superintendent of the department of legal work in the National W. C. T. U. in place of Mrs. Judge Belford, of Colorado, who has resigned on account of the pressure of other duties. It is well known that both these ladies are remarkably capable and we feel sure that had Mrs. Belford been able to give the attention she desired to the department it would have taken the high rank that it has held among our lines of work. Mrs. Burt is a staunch Prohibitionist and has behind her twenty years of constant experience in white ribbon work. We expect that she will give an account of the department this year superior to any yet attained. It will be her special work to correspond with state superintendents, but most of all to secure such legislation as may be possible from the National Congress. This may relate to the District of Columbia or the territories, and may represent prohibitory law, the better protection of women, or any other department of preventive or ameliorative work with which our society is identified in any of its lines.

Isn't this a simple and sensible way out of a difficulty? "At a little country church in New South Wales on a recent Sunday," writes Mrs. Harrison Lee of Australia, "I attended the 'breaking of bread.' As the true unfermented wine was not obtainable in the district, raisins were boiled, according to Jewish custom, and the raisin water used. This is a capital substitute for the pure wine, and should be used by all who cannot procure genuine unfermented wine for the Lord's Supper."

***

Sometimes our artist calls one of us into her room to "pose" for her, and we obediently assume the required attitude. Perhaps it is that of a lady of leisure "out shopping,"—whatever it is, we are told to "be natural." A passer-by looking into the room might easily think the posture truly natural—that we had dropped in for a few minutes to chat with the busy artist. It just struck me the other day what a deal of Christian posing there is. We mistake Christian posing for Christian principle, and when the "model" says or does something out of character we are shocked that "a Christian should act so." It is as if the artist's model in German peasant gown and wooden shoes should look up and address one in Yankee dialect. It makes little matter how perfect the pose may be, the true character gives itself utterance. The pose may deceive the world for awhile but there is One who is a discerner of spirits and before him only principle and purpose can stand, the pose shall be utterly ignored.

***

The doctor who pulled the old Ameer of Afghanistan through his late illness is a young lady of Ayrshire, Scotland, Miss L. Hamilton, M. D., who took her medical degree three years ago in Brussels, and practiced in Calcutta before she went to Afghanistan. It is known that this lady took a dangerous journey to go to Afghanistan and is the first white woman who went there at all. A special escort was given her, but can we not see the long procession of progressive women following fast and following faster in her wake?

***

Here is "one woman's way," and a good one: She has always missed the yearly table of contents which would make her valuable UNION SIGNAL yet more valuable. She even regrets still the transfer from the first page, of the weekly "contents." But now she is consoled by clipping the latter week by week, preserving the margin (for Aunt Jane's dear sake) and pasting each by this margin in an out-of-date pamphlet containing pages enough for one year. Thus she can store away and out of the way her accumulating files, keeping at hand the little pamphlet to point her to a business announcement, a choice morsel or an elaborate discourse, having also emphasized with ink topics of special interest.

***

In his recent sermon to the white-ribboners in Boston, Rev. Dr. Lansing said: "The liquor men are as defiant as ever, even as the men of Jericho on the sixth day seemed to be no less invulnerable than on the first, but on the seventh they had 'folded their tents like the Arabs and as silently fled away.' Ten thousand murders in round numbers are declared to have occurred in the United States in the last year. This is one-half as many again as during the year previous and is a record so terrific that the simple announcement is more impressive than any commentary could be. We speak of the Dark Continent of Africa, but darker than the darkest ever known is the continent unexplored of human suffering and misery extending all over the world from whose deep shadow countless voices cry to heaven and to humanity for help. The W. C. T. U. is a great consoler. It would give the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; it would teach the people to rejoice evermore, and give them something to rejoice about. For this reason it should be loved and lauded even by those who hold opinions on many subjects not in harmony with the pioneers of progress who lead this mighty movement. May wisdom be given to those who take these new departures that those who follow them may find themselves headed toward heaven. The best definition that I know of the W. C. T. U. is that it is the 'Church in motion.'"

On Duty.

Canadian Field.

NEWS FROM OVER THE BORDER.

Inquiries have come from various sources for particulars relating to the "Letter to the New Member" alluded to in the last Canadian report to The Union Signal. The idea of this particular letter originated with some members of the Central union, Winnipeg, though about nine years ago one on somewhat similar lines was issued in Montreal, mainly through the efforts of Miss Dougall and Mrs. Williams.

A condensed copy of the letter is here appended in the hope that it may prove useful to unions struggling to bring home, both to old and new members, a sense of responsibility as to their duty in regard to union work.

"Dear Sister:—We cordially welcome you to our society.

"That you may at once enter into its spirit, become actively engaged in its work, and identified with its interests, this letter is addressed to you.

"You became one of us by signing the pledge of total abstinence, and paying a yearly fee of sixty cents; but your membership means more than this.

"You are expected to wear, always, a tiny bow of white ribbon; this defines your position as an advocate of temperance and purity, and preaches its quiet sermon to all you meet.

"You are expected, at noontide of each day, to lift your heart in fervent prayer to God for His blessing on the work of the W. C. T. U. 'Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, uttered or unexpressed.'

"You can thus pray, though your hands be busily engaged. In this way (from our unions all round the globe) prayer is always ascending to our Father for the W. C. T. U.

"At present the work of the Central union comprises these departments: [A list of departments follows.]

"Each of these departments is in the charge of a single member of the union called a superintendent. Any superintendent will be glad of your aid, and ready to give you work.

[Then follows a short sketch of the manner in which the work of each department is carried out.]

"In some of these fields, dear sister, there is work for you. Very much in each is necessarily left out in this letter; yet we hope the outline given will disclose some niche which you can fill, some work which you are able and willing to do.

"Outside of all these departments our members have work to do. The most quiet home is a field for powerful example and heart to heart speech. The white ribbon should always be seen by the children so that by and by it will become with them a permanent memory. Temperance tradesmen should be patronized, that our lives may be consistent with our profession.

"Will you kindly communicate with the recording secretary either by letter or personally, stating what work you think you can best undertake?

"Can you sing, speak, write? Have you spare time (a most precious talent in these busy days)? Somewhere in our field of work there is ample scope for you. Once a month each of our superintendents report to the general meeting; regular attendance will soon show you through these reports what we are doing.

"Come, and bring others whenever you can do so.

"May God abundantly bless you, and, through you, the

"W. C. T. U."

The eastern Maritime Provinces are bending their energies in the direction of franchise. An effort, which seems in a fair way to be crowned with success, is being made by which the president, Mrs. Archibald, shall be permitted to plead the cause of woman's suffrage before the legislatures of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Work among lumbermen is extensively taken up, with the happy result of obtaining 594 signatures to the pledge.

The men and women of the future are being thoroughly grounded in scientific temperance instruction, laws on that subject being very stringent.

The Youmans band of isolated members is growing, and the sap of life circulates healthily through the Provinces. Two new unions have been added since convention. During the last year there was an increase of 343 members and 148 honorary ones. Forty-eight unions raised $12,841.34 for temperance work, and 130,098 pages of literature were distributed. There is no word from British Columbia this month, but it is hoped there will be something for the next report.

From Toronto comes a pleasing account of the day of prayer, which was held on the birthday of Mrs. Youmans, and at her house. To the delight of all, the veteran leader was able to give an address, and her voice rang out with all its old-time vigor. A Bible reading was given by a saintly old lady, Mrs. Finch, the first president of the Toronto W. C. T. U., organized twenty years ago. During the meeting a telegram of greetings came from Mrs. Williams, the Dominion president, and an address was read by Mrs. Forster which was accompanied with fruit and flowers.

For some years the Toronto unions have combined to give the teachers of the city a reception, and care is taken to let them understand how thoroughly impressed the unions are with the great influence which they, the teachers, can and should wield in the matter of scientific temperance instruction. Mr. G. F. Marter, M. P., leader of the opposition in the local House, who is a staunch Prohibitionist and believer in woman's suffrage, was chairman. The address of the evening was given by Hon. G. W. Ross, Minister of Education. A couple of readings with vocal solos interspersed completed the program, after which refreshments were served and an opportunity given for all present to become better acquainted with each other. New members for the unions are often won on such occasions.

Margaret G. Ure.

772 Palace St., Montreal.

---

After hearing Mrs. Hunt's address on scientific temperance instruction recently, the superintendent of schools at Fitchburg, Mass., subscribed for fifty copies of her School Physiology Journal for the teachers.

MAINE.

THE WHITE RIBBON WAVES IN THE CAPITAL CITY.

Thursday, January 31, was one of the most notable days in the history both of the Maine legislature and of the Maine Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It was the day appointed for the hearing before the judiciary committee on behalf of the municipal ballot for women. Petitions containing the signatures of thousands of the best women and the best men had been sent in. The names of clergymen were particularly noticeable. The petition from Auburn was signed by every pastor (eight) and every pastor's wife, and the same could be said of many other places.

The trains of the morning and the previous afternoon brought women from all parts of the state, whose very presence was an argument in favor of the measure. The number has been variously estimated at from one to two thousand. Others unable to attend sent telegrams to their acquaintances on the judiciary.

At ten o'clock in the morning the Woman's Christian Temperance Union opened a conference in the Congregational chapel, and it was a happy omen that these home women who had come to ask for justice and equity, began their deliberations by singing "Sweet Home." Mrs. Stevens then briefly stated the objects of the conference. Delegates to the World's convention in London were chosen as follows: Miss E. U. Yates, Mrs. Geo. S. Hunt, Miss Cornelia Dow, Mrs. W. C. Spaulding. Alternates: Mrs. Oscar Holway, Miss Clara Farwell, Mrs. Mary Rayne Smith, Mrs. Mary Bunker.

The department for securing homes for homeless children, for which an appropriation has been asked from the legislature, was presented by its superintendent in a manner which reached every heart.

FROM THE CHURCH TO THE STATE HOUSE.

After a pleasant social hour spent in partaking of a lunch provided by the Augusta union, the women, two by two, wended their way up the broad sunlit street from the church to the state house as twenty-one years ago on that memorable December morning the nucleus of the white ribbon army led by Mother Thompson, passed from the church to the saloon. Included were some veterans of abolition days, one lady having been rotten-egged in the streets of the same city with Wendell Phillips and his coadjutors. The procession was for the most part a silent one, and there were many bowed heads—some gray, some golden. Evidently the Maine judiciary was not the only or the highest power to which petitions were addressed that day!

In a few minutes every inch of space in representatives' hall was occupied, the lobby was crowded, and hundreds unable to get into the buildings, sat in mute appeal upon the marble steps. Our daily papers have filled columns with descriptions of the scene—the collapsed sleeves, the busy elbows, the flushed, resolute faces and the general squeezedness of things. At length the head of Chairman Spofford appeared at the door of the hall. Slowly in single file the committee came, and in ten minutes they had penetrated a distance of ten feet into the solid mass of femininity. "Make way for the gentlemen of the judiciary committee," cried Mrs. Stevens again and again, but without effect. At length in desperation she rang the speaker's bell and said appealingly, "Ladies, stand aside, and give these men their rights." In the midst of the laughter that followed the women stood edgewise and the committee worked their way to chairs on the platform, where surrounded by a solid wall of women they represented the opposition to woman's ballot, at last besieged, brought to bay and driven to the wall.

At length the gavel fell and Chairman Spofford announced that the committee was ready to listen. Then Mrs. Stevens, standing close beside his desk, with a gesture familiar to nearly every white-ribboner, said:

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee: For twenty years past have the women come up to the state legislature and asked that the franchise be extended to them. They have biennially presented their claims and have as regularly been forced to turn in disappointment away. Two years ago we were met with the old argument that no considerable portion of the women of Maine wanted the ballot. We who came then were told that it would be better for our claims should we have the state represented by women from every section if we wanted to prove that we really wanted the ballot. We accepted this advice, and gentlemen," sweeping her arm at the sea of faces in an expressive manner, "we have come." [Laughter and applause.]

"From Aroostook's snow-covered fields, from far-off Washington, from wave-swept York and Cumberland we have come—women from Quoddy Head to Kittery, from every part of Maine, to tell you that the women of the state do really want the ballot. At first, we thought of having a woman speak for every town in Maine [laughter] but remembering your onerous duties, we have compromised on one from each county.

"We think that from these you may gain a conception of how general and how urgent our desire is.

"Now I will call on each county president to speak for her county. We will allow each woman but two minutes. Remember, gentlemen, that each one of these women represents one thousand other women, all just as eager as the speaker herself." [Applause.]

Miss Dow, of Cumberland, held the watch and each county president delivered her message from the women of her county. One had come from Caribou, way up in Aroostook county; another had driven sixty miles in a sleigh and ridden two hundred by rail, starting several days before the hearing. Mrs. H. J. Bailey, president of the W. S. A., said that she contemplated paying her taxes on the installment plan that she might protest the oftener. Mrs. Bailey called upon a number of suffragists to state briefly why they wanted the ballot and replies came from all parts of the hall.

It would be impossible to give an idea of the variety in these speeches. No weapon of woman's warfare was rusty.

If Maine women do not receive justice from their state legislature this year, the men who refuse it are utterly without excuse and will lay themselves open to the most uncomplimentary suspicions. Thousands of us are waiting to make a list of our friends and our enemies for reference when our favor or disapproval may mean more to a politician than it does to-day.

At the close of the hearing we returned to the church where the Augusta Y served a most delicious supper.

Later, when the report of the judiciary committee was brought in it was a tie—five for and five against the measure.

LADY SOMERSET'S GREAT SPEECH.

In the evening the opera house was packed to its utmost capacity with those eager to hear England's (and one might almost say America's) great philanthropist, Lady Henry Somerset. The one regret of the occasion was that Augusta contained no building of sufficient size and that hundreds were unable to secure tickets. Upon the platform were seated among other notables: President Whitman of Colby University, who has recently declared himself for woman's ballot; President Hyde, of Bowdoin; President Smith, of the State Agricultural College; President Gallagher, of Kent's Hill; ex-Governors Burleigh and Davis, the president of the senate and speaker of the house, the governor's council and private secretary. The members of the legislature and their wives were given seats in the center of the house, the white-ribboners were provided with seats and only enough tickets were sold to pay expenses.

The "Star Spangled Banner" and "God Save the Queen," were rendered by the Cecilian Quartette, and after prayer by Mrs. R. C. Hall, of Rockland, Mrs. Stevens briefly introduced her illustrious co-worker. And then followed an address which the president of Maine's oldest and most conservative college—the gentleman is not especially interested in suffrage—described on the train returning home in the presence of your scribe as one of the finest he had ever heard from man or woman. Nothing but a stenographic report could do justice to its perfection in matter and in form. Lady Henry Somerset was attired in the simplest of black gowns, relieved only by the ribbon white which has bound her heart to the hearts of her plain New England sisters. Prefacing her address with some general remarks upon the changed conditions of society and the corresponding advancement of woman, she considered one after another the arguments which are brought forward against her use of the ballot, and showed the fallacy of each. The great improvement in the government of English and Scotch cities since woman came to political power, was vividly described.

Lady Somerset has twice before honored the Pine Tree state with her presence and gracious words, but has not previously spoken at such length or upon an occasion whose importance so roused her latent energies. Had the audience been the British Parliament and the question pending the granting of parliamentary suffrage to the women of her own land, she could have done no more. Herself a woman of the largest, noblest and most gracious type, she seemed to speak for and represent not the women of any one state or nation, but the womanhood of the world, "seeking utterance in behalf of justice, purity and spiritual insight."

Mary L. French,
State Reporter, Auburn.

---

CALIFORNIA.

WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS.

The January meeting of the executive committee gave evidence of what had been filling the minds of the women since the state convention. In the whole course of our work in this state, no all day meeting was ever before so completely filled with affairs of state. It was good to see how the women have developed as their interests have expanded by the demands the work has made upon them.

The Liquor Dealers' Associations had just held a banquet, at which they felicitated themselves on the results of the recent elections, claiming to have elected seventeen out of the eighteen members of the Assembly from this city, and nine out of the twelve supervisors of the city, besides a majority of the entire legislature.

Emboldened by success, they boasted of their work with an insolence it should be hard for good citizens to bear.

The women felt all this keenly, and brought their strong convictions and earnest zeal to bear on legislative plans as never before. It was arranged to send Mrs. Peet, our state president, to Sacramento to stay with the legislature

---

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

and watch our interests there, of which we have more than one; chiefest of these is the effort to defeat the uniform license bill, which aims to destroy our right of local option.

Suffrage for women is not of less importance, but that has now many friends to share the work for its advancement.

A bill making it a misdemeanor to sell cigarettes to minors; a bill to make the wife's signature necessary to a deed of real estate; a bill to prohibit the buying and selling of lottery tickets; a bill obliging hotel and lodging-house keepers to keep a register of inmates; a bill raising the age at which children may be employed in factories from ten to fourteen years, and limiting a day's work for them to seven hours; a bill asking for an Inebriate Hospital to which drunkards may be sent and treated, instead of being sent to jail; bills in regard to social evils, and a Sabbath Rest Law, are all matters in which we are profoundly interested. Petitions are being vigorously circulated for several of these objects, and as our women are learning the value of personal influence, the members of the legislature are being showered with letters asking their votes for these measures. In several counties anti-saloon organizations have sprung up of a non-partisan character, bringing together all the elements opposed to the saloon. Some of these are working directly for local option.

Stanislaus, Butte, San Joaquin and several other counties have organized all the moral forces into a general movement against the saloon.

All interests now center in the legislature. We are watching, almost with bated breath, to see what will be done for equal suffrage. We hope for much.

This winter recalls the time when a California winter was referred to as the rainy season. It has been emphatically so. Twenty-three days of rain in December, and it was late in January before the storms abated, but the ardor of the temperance people is not dampened. The leaven is working perceptibly. Several cases of spontaneous combustion have occurred recently, where without any special incentive or encouragement a new union has sprung up.

There is a growing tendency in this city to incorporate the W. C. T. U. with the regular work of the churches. Three churches, one each from the Baptist, Congregational and Presbyterian denominations, have organized unions as a part of their respective church work; there is a prospect of unions in several others. It is certainly placing the work where it should be.

Miss De Velling has lately done some very excellent work in San Francisco, getting in about two meetings a day in spite of bad weather. A reception was given her at the state headquarters, and though the rain poured in torrents, there were no less than twelve churches represented by the ladies there.

A pleasant episode in her work was a visit to Angel Island, one of the defenses of the bay, where a garrison of three hundred men are stationed. Chaplain Macamber invited the W. C. T. U. to come over and hold a gospel meeting with the men at the chapel. About thirty-five ladies went, and had a very interesting meeting. The Polyglot Petition was presented and indorsed by all, also our petition to the legislature against uniform license. A number of men took the pledge, and all gave eager attention to Miss De Velling's address. It was the seventy-seventh birthday of one of the ladies, Mrs. Allyn. She offered the closing prayer with all the earnestness of the Crusade time, when she prayed in saloons. Her daughter and granddaughter were with her, making the rare picture of three generations of the family, all in the work together.

Angel Island has the distinction of being without a saloon, or even a canteen. If the soldiers get liquor it must be smuggled. We should be sorry to think of our country's defenders as smugglers.

A very beautiful memorial service for Mrs. Lathrap was held in the First Congregational church of San Francisco; members of six unions took part in it. An added tenderness was given to the meeting by the announcement of the death of the only daughter of our well beloved corresponding secretary, Mrs. H. E. Brown, one of our most earnest and active Y's, whose graces of character had endeared her to all of us. On the same day one of our older workers, Mrs. Jane Walker, received her promotion. She had been active in the work of missions to the Chinese, and the presence at her funeral of a large number of Christian Chinese with their wives, testified to the success of her labors. A Chinese preacher sat with the white ministers upon the platform and paid an eloquent tribute to her memory.

The powers of evil grow desperate. The Liquor Dealers' Associations are more defiant than ever; but they recognize a foe worthy of their steel. Their official organ divides its compliments between the W. C. T. U. and the Christian Endeavor societies. It is interesting to see how freely it quotes our state paper, The Pacific Ensign, evidently considering it the highest authority on the temperance side.

The good citizenship work of the Christian Endeavor people is telling on the present situation. Alameda county in particular is being thoroughly worked by the Christian Endeavorers. They are making a house to house canvass with reference to the next local elections. A mass-meeting of all the moral forces is called in Oakland to protest against the uniform license bill. Similar meetings are called in several cities, and the people stand some chance of being educated on these lines, as nothing but agitation can educate them.

DORCAS J. SPENCER,
State Reporter, San Francisco.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

THE VOICE OF THE CHURCHES.

Bills for the prohibition of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia have been presented to Congress year after year. Petition after petition has followed them, praying that the bills may become a law. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia has been unwearied in gathering up these petitions. The help of our sisters in the states has been accorded us until more than 90,000 signatures have been secured. They now are reposing in the archives of the nation.

But we are not weary in well doing. Our God calls us to work and faint not, to work while the day (our day) lasts. This is our day. It is not over. It may be but in its dawn. May our want of success in the past serve to stimulate us to greater efforts in the future.

Last spring a new inspiration came to us through the words of a welcome visitor, Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown. She suggested that we secure the "Voice of the Churches on Prohibition." Inasmuch as it has been said that there are many members of both houses of Congress who would vote for those bills if they could be assured that the better class of residents of the District, especially the religious people and pastors of the churches, really favored Prohibition. They do not suppose this is the case. There are among our law-makers at the capitol, men from Prohibition states who, when at home, sustain Prohibition and believe in it, but who, when here, vote for license for the District of Columbia because they do not suppose that the better class of people here believe in Prohibition or desire to see it tried.

Now, we of the W. C. T. U. believe quite differently. We believe that the best people of the District are in favor of prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating drink. We believe that the best and most substantial people of the District, and especially the pastors of evangelical churches, deplore its ravages, and would willingly throw the weight of their influence against it. We have undertaken to prove this.

The petition which we have gotten up this year is unique. We have undertaken to present to the pastor of every church in the District and the officers of the same our petition for prohibition and ask them to sign it. Our success has been marvelous. Of the Methodist, Congregational, Christian, Friends and Baptist denominations we have secured every church; also a large proportion of the Presbyterian and Lutheran churches. There are still others to be handed in which are promised. When these are all pasted upon muslin they will form a document worthy of the attention and respect of the august body for which it is designed. This petition will be presented to the Senate by Senator Proctor, of Vermont, about the time of the Polyglot Petition, but has no connection with it.

"The Voice of the Churches" is in favor of prohibition.

MRS. CLINTON SMITH,
District Reporter, Washington, D. C.

PENNSYLVANIA.

CLIPPINGS HERE AND THERE.

Pennsylvania white-ribboners are still busy at work, in fact so busy are they that they have very little time to stop and report their work. However, before our next letter is sent we hope to have the name of every county press superintendent in the state, and shall then write each one personally.

MERCER COUNTY

has been doing good work. The enterprising Sharpsville Y's gave a "Brownie" entertainment, the receipts of which amounted to one hundred and eight dollars. This Y maintains a reading-room in which much interest is taken by outsiders. They have as their president our former efficient county president, Mrs. G. D. Devitt.

Sharpsville Woman's Christian Temperance Union held a quilt-patch social at the home of their president.

Sandy Lake union has organized a very promising Loyal Temperance Legion which is in charge of Miss Rebecca Eberman, a young lady well adapted to this work.

Millbrook union has added one new member to their ranks; this by personal effort of Mrs. E. D. Savage, our worthy superintendent of narcotics, who is an indefatigable worker, and whose example may well be emulated by the rest of her co-workers to "win one."

West Middlesex has held a very successful entertainment by the Young People's Temperance Band, in charge of Mrs. Emily Rayen, who has had charge of the society for a number of years. She was presented with a handsome Bible as a New Year's gift by the members of the Band as a token of their love and esteem for her. This Band enjoys the proud distinction of having the largest membership in the county, one hundred being enrolled on the list.

The Salem Loyal Temperance Legion gave a very fine entertainment recently which netted them the sum of ten dollars. This Legion is active in every good word and work and during the past month have been busy circulating the W. C. T. U. Expositor. Mrs. A. P. Hamilton, county superintendent of legal work, has gotten up the Expositor for the second year. On its pages are found recorded the names of all applicants as well as signers of petitions for license. The paper has received a wide circulation in the county and Mrs. Hamilton deserves special credit for her work. All white-ribboners are intensely interested as to the outcome of the license question, there being a new judge; but this letter is written too soon to give his decision. However, as he has already made himself heard in regard to gambling, in no uncertain way, we hope for better things in regard to liquor selling.

Grove City held the second franchise contest January 1, at which Miss Gertrude McKinny was the winner of the medal.

SCHUYLKILL COUNTY.

This county has had Mrs. Annabel Morris Holvey for five lectures, and a new Y has been organized in Mahanoy City.

The Shenandoah Y gave the Milkmaid's Convention to a crowded house and from which they will realize about one hundred dollars.

This county has decided to raise one hundred dollars for the Temple. Mahanoy City has already raised its share (fifty dollars).

BUTLER COUNTY.

This county has been doing good work in obtaining signatures to the petition sent out by the state superintendent of soldiers' department in regard to the "closing of saloons on Memorial Day."

Petrolia has held two public meetings, which were addressed by local talent.

Butler expects to have Dr. Anna Shaw in January. The Butler union held a Temple mite-box opening, which resulted in twenty-five dollars as the grand total; this was promptly forwarded. A little over one-half the amount pledged ($100) has now been paid.

Five new unions have been organized.

At the last county convention resolutions were passed commending the judge for his conscientious ruling in regard to license, the county being, with few exceptions, free from the desolating saloon.

West Philadelphia union is doing good work in eighteen departments. As the Bulletin monopolized Mrs. Forrest's time and strength to such an extent, she felt unable to serve as president, consequently an interesting all-day meeting was held, at which Mrs. Russell was elected president; Mrs. Carrico, recording secretary; Mrs. Magee, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Bryan, treasurer, and Mrs. Moorhead, vice-president. Besides the regular department work, this union has a committee on ways and means, of which Mrs. Beard, of West Walnut street, is the efficient head. This union holds a gospel meeting weekly, each Monday afternoon, from five to half-past five, with the policemen at the police station, and these meetings are both interesting and encouraging.

THE UNION SIGNAL Gem Club is an interesting feature. It meets monthly at the home of one of the members; refreshments are served, and an hour given to the reading and discussion of gems from THE UNION SIGNAL. This union has the honor to claim as one of its members our beloved state president, Mrs. Anna M. Hammer.

LANCASTER COUNTY.

The Normal school Y has been specially active during the past month. Miss Amanda Landes was elected president; she was also a delegate to the state convention, and on her return gave a glowing account of the convention as well as bringing with her the beautiful banner which was won by Lancaster county for the largest increase in membership, and of which the Normal School Y, being the largest in point of membership, has the honor to be the custodian. A number of public meetings have been

CUTICURA, the Great Skin Cure, and CUTICURA SOAP, the most effective of Skin Purifiers and Beautifiers, preserve, purify, and beautify the skin, scalp, and hair when all else fails. CUTICURA REMEDIES are of the utmost purity and delicacy, and especially appeal to the refined in every community.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTER DRUG & CHEMICAL CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

"1847" Rogers Silverware

If you wish the old original quality of Rogers Spoons, Forks, Knives, etc., accept only those which are stamped

1847 ROGERS BROS.

Manufactured only by the Meriden Britannia Co., Meriden, Conn.
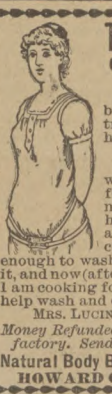
For sale by dealers everywhere.

A Yarn
well told is worth hearing.

FLEISHER'S KNITTING THE WORSTED

Only the best yarn spun is worth using.



The Natural Body Brace
Cures Female Weakness, restores Health and Vigor.

After wearing your Natural Body brace for nine months, the most extreme and painful female weakness has vanished. MRS. JESSIE FISHER. Spruce Creek, Pa.

I have been afflicted with falling of the womb for 23 years, and have never had anything do help me like the Natural Body Brace has. I could not stand up long enough to wash dishes before wearing it, and now (after wearing it 3 months) I am cooking for a large family. I also help wash and do all kind of work. MRS. LUCINDA FIELD, Oscar, Tex.

Money Refunded if Brace is not Satisfactory. Send for full information.

Natural Body Brace Co., Salina, Kan.
HOWARD C. RASH, Manager.

Marshall's Catarrh Snuff... has never been equaled for the instant relief of Catarrh, Cold in the Head and Headache. Cures Deafness, restores lost sense of smell. Sixty years on the market. All Druggists or by mail, 25 cts. per bottle. F. C. KEITH, Mfr., Cleveland, O.

AMERICAN DESK CO.
4 FOOT DESK, $16
4½ " " 18
5 " " 20
18-20 E. Van Buren St., Athenæum Bldg., CHICAGO.

The Best Dressmakers are using this Bias Velveteen Skirt Binding

The Redfern a brand of the famous S.H.&M.

Samples and Booklet on "How to Bind the Dress Skirt," for 2c. stamp. Address

The S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, New York.

"S.H.& M." Dress Stays are the Best.

Mrs. R. Howard Kelly

1018 Chamber Commerce Bldg., CHICAGO

by reason of her fifteen years' training in the difficult work of

CONVENTION REPORTING

is claimed by those who have made use of her services, to be specially fitted for intelligent reporting, editing, condensing and preparing for publication the proceedings of all associations, and particularly those engaged in reformatory, literary, religious and women's work.

Overburdened or inexperienced secretaries find her services of special value.

She has been for several years official stenographer for the National W. C. T. U., and by permission refers to its officers and to those of the National Council of Women, the Federation of Women's Clubs, the Wisconsin Farmers' Institute, to C. C. Bonney, President World's Congresses of 1893, to Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Secretary Religious Congresses, 1893; to Judges of Cook County, Illinois, and many others well acquainted with her work.

PIMPLES

Freckles, Blotches, Ringworm, Eczema, Scald Head, Tetter, and all other skin disorders positively cured with

HEISKELL'S OINTMENT.

If you would have soft, smooth and healthy skin, free from all imperfections, use constantly

HEISKELL'S SOAP.

Price 25 cts. Send Stamp for Free Sample.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., PHILA.

HAIR GOODS Natural curly bangs, $3; parted bangs or waves, for elderly ladies, $3.50 to $6; switches, $1 to $10, according to length and quality of hair. Ladies' and gentlemen's wigs, $8 to $25. Send sample hair. Try Oxzyn Balm and Powder for complexion, 50cts. each. Our store is one of the finest in the West. Call or write.

B. C. STREHL & CO., 191 Wabash Ave., Chicago.
Please mention The Union Signal when writing or calling

LOOSE BOTTOMS PERFECTION CAKE TINS

Delicate Cake

Easily removed without breaking. Perfection Tins require no greasing. 10 styles, round, square and oblong. 2 layer tins by mail 30 cts. Circulars Free.

Agents Wanted. Richardson Mfg. Co., 14 St., Bath, N.Y.

BABY CARRIAGES Shipped C.O.D.

Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without asking one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save dealers' profits. Large illustrated catalogue free. Address CASH BUYERS' UNION, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 30, Chicago, Ill.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| $18.50 | Carriage for | | $9.25. |
| $12.00 | " | " | $5.95. |
| $5.00 | " | " | $2.65. |

6 tubs in one BATH TUBS, Wholesale & Retail. For "Bath Room" & "Portable." Durable, many long used renewed, light, little water. Agents and others send for circulars.

E. J. Knowlton, Ann Arbor, Mich.

RUBIFOAM FOR THE TEETH

SAMPLE VIAL FREE.
E. W. HOYT & CO., LOWELL, MASS.

BAKER'S COCOA

ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE WAISTS

Are made in A VARIETY OF SHAPES—to fit SHORT, MEDIUM, and LONG Waists.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my Invisible Tubular Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Warranted to help more cases than all similar devices combined. Help ears as glasses do eyes. Sold by F. Hiscox only, 853 Br'dway, N.Y. Send for book of proofs FREE

HOME STUDY. A thorough and practical Business Education in Book-keeping, Shorthand, etc., given by MAIL at student's home. Low rates. Cat. free. Trial lesson 10c. Write to BRYANT & STRATTON, 77 College Bldg., Buffalo, N.Y.

LADY AGENTS, Rubber Undergarment Quick sales, big profits. Catalog free, Mrs. N. B. LITTLE, Chicago held which were addressed by Mrs. Holvey, John G. Woolley, Rev. Mr. Lentz. Also a debate was held at which this question was debated, "Resolved, That prohibition is the only solution of the drink problem." The union also gave an entertainment for Mrs. Sakurai for the benefit of a Bible Training School for girls she intends founding in Japan. A strong temperance sentiment has been the visible growth throughout the school, and for which the Normal Y feel that they have helped create.

LAWRENCE COUNTY.

The county superintendent of Y work held a conference in New Castle. A new Y was organized and the work of the Somerset Y presented. It was decided to undertake the work.

At the school of methods, Miss Maggie Young, the newly elected superintendent of Sunday-school work, reported her department, and made a most excellent beginning. The afternoon session was spent in the study of methods for mothers' meetings. Mrs. Dr. Blackwood is the efficient superintendent. She asked for plans. Mrs. Rev. Marten gave an outline of one she had planned. Mrs. McBride read a suggestive paper on "The Education of Boys and Girls."

The Neshamock Y spent a delightful evening at the home of their president, Miss Minnie Speir. The entertainment was varied, consisting of a debate on the marriage question, question box, recitations, music, etc. Mother Speir spoke on the great need of a W. C. T. U. county paper. Mr. George Gibson reported the county convention.

Smethport union is arranging for gospel temperance meetings which are to be held quarterly, the first of which will be held the last Sabbath in January.

Bucks county is especially active in scientific temperance, this county superintendent having recently given a fine address on the subject.

We are now waiting for more news. Would like especially to hear from every Y in the state so we can have a Y's (wise) departure from the beaten track next time.

ADDA G. BURCH,
State Reporter, Smethport.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE World's Petition was presented and received 132 indorsers at Lathrap memorial service, Cleveland, O., February 3.

MRS. L. E. BAILEY is spending the winter in Florida and speaking under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. and the Y. P. S. C. E.

THE address of Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, National superintendent of purity in literature and art, has been changed to room 119, No. 1 Broadway, New York city.

A JOINT memorial service for Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Lathrap was held in January by the Charlottesville, Va., W. C. T. U., which was very interesting and largely attended by outsiders.

JANUARY 23 was the date of the Lathrap memorial held by the Central W. C. T. U. of Nashville, Tenn. Many testified to her worth and works in behalf of Christianity, temperance and humanity.

MRS. BARNEY, of Rhode Island, will return to America in a few weeks much to the regret of the hosts of friends she has made in England. It is greatly hoped that she will be able to go back for the World's W. C. T. U. Convention, London, June 14 to 21.

REV. MR. HARMON recently addressed the people at Charlottesville, Va., in behalf of the white ribbon cause. It is said that had he been a Crusader himself, he could not have given a clearer synopsis of the mission of the W. C. T. U. He has been invited to speak in the principal towns of the state.

MRS. J. B. PORTER, Lansing, Mich., who wrote a tribute to the late Mrs. Lathrap entitled "There's a Shadow on the Home," was associated with her in ten years' continuous service upon the state W. C. T. U. executive board, first as president of the sixth district, then as state corresponding secretary.

VERNON, Mich., W. C. T. U. secured "The Bells," a prohibition concert company, for two nights. It proved to be a rich treat; everyone was anxious to hear them. They show the excuses for not voting prohibition in such a ludicrous light that their concerts cannot fail to send conviction to the audience.

MRS. LIZZIE OSBORN, wife of the well known English correspondent, Henry J. Osborn, has made a great success of the "Lantern Lecture" of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She not only supplies the slides and the lecture but the lecturer, the lady who had promised to give it having failed, and Mrs. Osborn, who is a most capable woman, stepped into the breach. She has already given the lecture twenty times to great acceptance.

AT the federation of unions in Cleveland, O., February 4, Mrs. S. M. Perkins was recommended to state officials as delegate from that body to the World's W. C. T. U. at London. Also one hundred dollars was presented to Mrs. Perkins to assist in the expenses. This was given in recognition of her hard work in the preparations for the late National Convention.

THE four W. C. T. U. districts centering in Chicago held their second annual conference in the Lincoln Park Congregational church, February 19. Narcotics, mothers' meetings, literature, our badge were among the topics presented. Miss Frances E. Griffin, National organizer, gave the evening address, taking for her subject, "A Synopsis of Our Ends and Aims."

LADY HENRY SOMERSET and Miss Willard held a mass-meeting in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Jan. 19, under the auspices of Mrs. Judge Nelson, county president, and addressed the young women of Vassar College on Sunday evening, January 20, when it was voted to form a "Somerset committee" for temperance in connection with the Young Woman's Christian Association of the college.

WILLARD HALL noon meetings will be conducted for a month by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, National evangelist. Evangelists and others passing through Chicago and finding it possible to give their services at the noon meetings in Willard Hall are earnestly invited to send word to that effect. Address Headquarters National W. C. T. U., 1116, the Temple, La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

MRS. R. W. MARRIAGE, Oskaloosa, Ia., desires to say that she has single copies of National Minutes, back numbers, for any one desiring them and willing to pay postage. The dates are as follows: Detroit, 1883; St. Louis, 1884; Philadelphia, 1885; Minneapolis, 1886; Nashville, 1887; Chicago, 1889; Boston, 1891; Cleveland, 1894. She has also two copies of Iowa annual minutes, 1889 and 1891; also Miss Willard's annual address at Atlanta.

MISS ALICE R. PALMER, sixth round-the-world W. C. T. U. missionary, just returned from South Africa, is prepared to make engagements in Georgia and Florida for March and a part of April. This announcement will be welcomed by the Southern W. C. T. Unions who can seize this bright opportunity to build up their work by the inspiration of this helpful, experienced and widely known worker. Address her immediately at Franklin, Ind.

THE president of each local W. C. T. U. in Missouri is requested by the state evangelistic superintendent to procure for the local superintendent a copy of the little book, "Hints and Helps for Evangelistic Workers." It has recently been prepared by and can be procured from Elizabeth W. Greenwood, 151 Remsen street, Brooklyn, N. Y., National superintendent of evangelistic department of the W. C. T. U. The price is ten cents, postage extra.

WILLARD Y. of Chicago, gave a successful entertainment at National headquarters in the Temple on the evening of February 12. The many guests found the well-known rooms transformed by varied and artistic draperies. Red hearts pierced with silver darts met the eye at every turn, and as a "Valentine Party" had been announced it was no surprise to be met by a real Cupid with quiver and missive from the impromptu postoffice which had been established in Mrs. Barker's den in her absence. Mrs. Stevenson's quarters, vacated for the time being, made an inviting tea-room, as did the cozy nook of the office secretary. A large apartment adjoining afforded space for the audience to listen to the program of music and recitations. "Cupid" struck the temperance keynote of the society by his sweet singing of "Cold Water." The Y's realized a small sum for their organizing work.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, bilious headache, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, loss of appetite, sallow skin, etc., when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

Go by the book. Pills 10¢ and 25¢ a box. Book free at your druggist's or write B. F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

NOTICE NAME THUS Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

PRIZES ON PATENTS.

How to get $100 and Perhaps Make a Fortune.

We secure patents and to induce people to keep track of their bright ideas we offer a prize of one hundred dollars to be paid on the first of every month to the person who submits to us the most meritorious invention during the preceding month. We will also advertise the invention free of charge in the National Register, a weekly newspaper, published in Washington, D. C., which has an extensive circulation throughout the United States and is devoted to the interests of inventors.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

The idea of being able to invent something strikes most people as being very difficult; this delusion the Company wishes to dispel. It is the simple things and small inventions that make the greatest amount of money, and the complex ones are seldom profitable. Almost everybody, at some time or another, conceives an idea, which, if patented, would probably be worth to him a fortune. Unfortunately such ideas are usually dismissed without thought. The simple inventions like the car window, which could be easily slid up and down without breaking the passenger's back, the sauce pan, the collar button, the nut lock, the bottle stopper, the snow shovel are things that almost every one sees some way of improving upon, and it is these kind of inventions that bring the greatest returns to the author.

The prize we offer will be paid at the end of each month, whether the application has been acted upon by the Patent office or not. Every competitor must apply for a patent on his invention through us, and whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a valuable patent.

THE PRESS CLAIMS COMPANY,
JOHN WEDDERBURN, Gen'l Manager,
618 F. St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

P. S. The responsibility of this company may be judged from the fact that its stock is held by about seventeen hundred of the leading newspapers of the United States.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED.

DYSPEPSIA FLOUR.

Also Special Diabetic Food, Barley Crystals, and Patent Biscuit, Cake and Pastry Flour.
Unrivaled in America or Europe.
Pamphlets and Baking Samples Free.
Write Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

DENT'S TOOTHACHE GUM

STOPS TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY.

Ask for DENT'S; take no other. Sold everywhere, or by mail 15 cts. C. S. DENT & CO., DETROIT, MICH.

(A Swell Affair.)

Dent's Corn Gum Cures Corns, Bunions, Warts.

WE WILL SELL YOU THE BEST BUGGY

Cart, Harness, Phaeton, Spring Wagon, Surrey or Saddle in the world at lowest wholesale prices. Shipped anywhere to anyone with privilege to examine without asking one cent in advance. All goods fully guaranteed. Send for large illustrated catalogue and testimonials Free. Write to-day address (in full) CASH BUYERS' UNION. 158 West Van Buren Street, B 30, Chicago, Ills.

A $1 Magazine for 30c.

Send 30 cents and names of 6 people who might subscribe, and we will send you THE ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE a full year. The price of the magazine is $1 a year. A sample copy for 6 cents. Address

ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE 2819 OLIVE ST. ST. LOUIS, MO.

ACRE APPLES, $1,493. Write Nurseries and Orchards, Louisiana, Mo., for free sample copy telling about it. A practical Fruit and Farm paper published by Stark Bros., 40c. a year; circulation, 460,000 copies. The "Cream of the Cream"—gives the busy Fruit Grower or Farmer, who hasn't the time or the money to buy and read a great mass of papers what is best from them all what he wants to know.

SONG JEWELS For S. S. revivals, etc., by HOFFMAN & WILLIAMS. 7c.
SILVER TONES Latest and best temperance song book. By S. L. Quartet & Williams, 30c; $3 per doz. W. A. Williams, Warnock, O

Purity and White Cross Literature.

THE PHILANTHROPIST, Monthly, 50 cents a year.
BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, LEAFLETS, PLEDGE CARDS, &c.
THE PHILANTHROPIST PUB CO., 39 Nassau St., New York.

At 1/4 Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc, List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address, C. J. MASON, Box, 519, New York City, N. Y.

SALESMEN WANTED to sell our goods by samples to the wholesale and retail trade; sell on sight to every business man or firm; liberal salary, money advanced for advertising and expenses. Permanent position. Address with stamp, KING MFG. CO., A 55 Chicago, Ill.

$2.75 Stem Wind, Stem Set, 25 CENTS OR LADIES SIZE

FREE A fine 14k gold plated watch to every reader of this paper. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address, and we will send you one of these elegant, richly jeweled, gold finished watches by express for examination, and if you think it is equal in appearance to any $25.00 gold watch pay our sample price, $2.75, and it is yours. We send with the watch our guarantee that you can return it at any time within one year if not satisfactory, and if you sell or cause the sale of six we will give you One Free. Write at once, as we shall send out samples for 60 days only. Address

THE NATIONAL M'F'G & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

THE MORGAN BROILER.
No Smoke. No Odor.

PRICE $1.00.
DELIVERED TO ANY PART OF THE UNITED STATES.

Broils Steaks, Chops, Oysters, Fish, etc. and toasts to perfection. Adapted to any kind of Stove. Lasts a lifetime. You will enjoy your meals better. Endorsed by leading cooks. To introduce we will ship subject to approval on receipt of 25c. If you like it pay the express company balance, 75c., which includes the express charges, and keep the broiler.

Send for illustrated catalogue and terms to agents. Address MORGAN MFG. CO., 1417 Boyce Bldg., 110 Dearborn St., Chicago.

Official Communications.

DEPARTMENT WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

The superintendent has for sale the following tracts and leaflets in the Scandinavian languages:

NORWEGIAN AND DANISH.
(Two-page, $1.10 for 500, or 1,000 pages.)

Duties of Citizenship.
Welcome to the Stranger.
Advice of a Friend (Evangelistic).
To Mothers—Social Purity.
Water and Rum.
Open Letter to Scandinavians from W. C. T. U.
Catechism on Government—Suffrage.
Plea for the Home.
Bible on Woman's Suffrage.
Our Drink and Tobacco Bill.

NORWEGIAN AND DANISH.
(Four-page.)

How Saloons Pay Taxes.
How Saloons Help Business.
Relation of Intemperance to Labor.
Why I Became a Total Abstainer.
One Pint of Beer.
Strong Drink as Medicine.
License False in Principle.
Temperance Arithmetic.

SWEDISH.
(Two-page.)

Needed Only Pieces of Paper—License.
Prohibition.
Prohibition Will Win.
Stop and Think.
Drink and Tobacco Bill.
Advice of a Friend.
Duties of Citizenship.
Welcome to the Stranger.
For Mothers—Social Purity.
Plea for the Home—Suffrage.
Bible Testimony on Woman Suffrage.
Catechism on Government.
Handbook for W. C. T. U., Swedish and English, 108 pages, 15 cents.

Our women will find these tracts very helpful in their work, because they embrace work on so many of the departments, viz., social purity, suffrage, tobacco, evangelistic ("Advice to a Friend") and economic. We sell them as low as possible, and when $5 an order give a discount of twenty per cent, giving them for 90 cents per 1,000 pages and paying the postage. Order of

SOPHIE F. GRUBB, Nat. Supt.
Kirkwood, Mo.

Or Miss Kate Lunden, Flemington, N. J., associate in Scandinavian department.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

ON THE WING.

I am writing my notes to-day from the center of the Crusade state. Yesterday I spoke twice in the little town of Mt. Gilead, Ohio, under the auspices of the local union, and found the members of that union wide-awake and progressive, with an intense desire to carry the war further and further into the heart of the enemy's country. Mt. Gilead is one of the many towns over which swept the Crusade flame, the president of the union being an old Crusader. It seemed pathetic, as I heard her tell of the days when they poured the liquor into the streets to think that in such a town the saloon should ever again exist behind legal barricades. It only proves to us that we must put on "the whole armor of God," if we are to stand against the wiles of such an adversary. To-morrow I go to Delaware, O., where I shall be the guest of our staunch friends, Dr. and Mrs. Bashford, addressing the union in the evening, then—"On to Washington!"

Miss Willard's latest "bright idea"—unless several have originated since I left Chicago—has already had editorial mention in THE UNION SIGNAL. It is to have a phonograph set up in National Headquarters as a nucleus for the Woodbridge-Lathrap fund for free literature. It ought to be an added incentive to white-ribboners to turn their faces Templeward that they can listen there to the very words of our absent leaders. What would we not give if Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Lathrap had themselves left such priceless legacies to us! And yet, if we can never again hear their spoken words on earth we can send their written words and the principles they so gloriously advocated on and on, in continually widening circles. We must find other ways of increasing this fund until it shall swell to the proportion it ought to bear. Cannot each state union give a "benefit" for it, and cannot each white-ribboner send a contribution, though it be but a dime, for the same end?

The blanks which will be sent out for the coming annual report will very largely resemble those sent out by Mrs. Woodbridge, but there will be added two or three questions. One will be "How many signatures to the pledge secured during the year?" and another will relate to the number of total abstainers in the state. We need to collect statistics on these points if we are to prove to gainsayers that the principles of total abstinence are really on the increase. And we need also to revive the ancient and honorable custom of pledge-signing—not as principal element in—but as accessory to our many-sided work. Will state corresponding secretaries in particular please bear these facts in mind and incorporate them in their own blanks?

Katharine L. Stevenson.

Treasurer's Corner.

Minutes are all gone, and we are very sorry to be obliged to return money and stamps for many orders that have come in too late. We ordered four hundred more than for last year but the demand was even greater than we expected. This is a good sign, and next year I trust we will be able to have a smaller copy, but equally useful, and all will feel the need of being prompt in ordering.

Annual leaflets now ready; will be sent for two cent stamp. We think them especially full of information. Headquarters can order by the quantity, and we will send by mail or express as cheapest.

Dues have been sent in from North California and Ohio. Mrs. G. R. Green, Wenonah, N. J., sends $2 self-denial; Mrs. Warren, Churchville, N. Y., 25 cts.; Mrs. H. Shaptaugh, Clearmont, Mo., 60 cts.

We leave this afternoon, 13th, for Washington, to attend our Petition meetings and then to South Carolina for a couple of weeks' missionary work for W. C. T. U., then to North Carolina for eight or ten days and also for a few appointments in Kentucky. I trust I may be remembered in the prayers of the white ribbon readers of the Corner that great good may come to work from the visit to the unions that really have so many obstacles.

Helen M. Barker

Organizers' Corner.

Superintendent of the Department of Organization, Corresponding Secretary of the National W. C. T. U.

ORGANIZERS.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, 1105 Davis street, Elmira, N. Y.
Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, Port Jervis, N.Y.
Miss Frances E. Griffin, The De Soto, Chicago.
Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, Chautauqua, Wash.
Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, 1907 Bush street, San Francisco, Cal.
Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair, Clinton, N. Y.
Mrs. Maude L. Greene, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Baraga, Mich.
Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.
Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Ellensburg, E. Wash.
Miss Ida Clothier, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, Pacific Grove, Cal.
Mrs. S. C. Harris, Franklin, Va.
Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, 1006 Bainbridge street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.
Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.
Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.
Mrs. E. A. Kenyon, Townshend, Vt.
Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown, LL.D., Cincinnati, O., Lecturer.
Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, Vincennes, Ind.
Mrs. Sue V. Tomlinson, Charlotte, N. C.
Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, Roslindale, Mass., Lecturer.
Mrs. E. L. Calkins, 922 S. Rose street, Kalamazoo, Mich.
Miss Lilian Wood, Maryville, Mo., Lecturer.
Mrs. Ella A. Boole, A. M., West New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y., Lecturer.
Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, 27 Everett street, Cambridge, Mass., Lecturer.
Mrs. Addie Northam Field, Bedford, N. H.
Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, McMinnville, Ore.

For terms and date address as above.

Since our great convocation in Cleveland, I have attended the state convention of the Alabama W. C. T. U., which met in Birmingham. While there, I delivered two addresses, conducted a brief Y conference and was present at nearly every business session. For twelve days, beginning January 24, I worked in Mississippi, traveling through snow and sleet often to meet my appointments. I lectured nine times, held four business meetings, organized one L. T. L., four W. C. T. U's and a Somerset Y at Belhaven college in Jackson; secured five subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL, seventy-five regular members for the W. C. T. U., three hundred and thirty-six signatures to the total abstinence pledge and placed the World's Petition in the hands of several ministers to be indorsed by their congregations. Six weeks were spent at home in hard study preparing for future work and in correspondence with the Mississippi Y's, and with leaders in W. C. T. U's in other states planning my spring campaign. I have written one hundred and twenty-five letters and fifty postal cards within the last few weeks in the interest of our cause.

On February 6, I came to St. Louis to attend a conference of Kindred Young People's societies under the leadership of the Y. W. C. T. U. of this city. I was on the program for three addresses during the conference and three the following Sabbath.

I expect to go to Washington on the 12th to attend the presentation of the Polyglot Petition and to speak at the woman's council. I am pledged to work in Georgia the last week in February and the first two in March; then I go to Louisiana for three weeks—the last two in March and the first in April; then to Alabama for the last three weeks in April, returning to Mississippi the first week in May to be present at the state convention which meets in Natchez. "If God will," I hope to make engagements en route to New York city from Mississippi the latter part of May and in June to go to London to attend the International Convention of the W. C. T. U.

BELLE KEARNEY.

POLYGLOT PETITION.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

Names. | Residences.

For Twenty Years

Scott's Emulsion has been endorsed by physicians of the whole world. There is no secret about its ingredients.
Physicians prescribe

Scott's Emulsion

because they know what great nourishing and curative properties it contains. They know it is what it is represented to be; namely, a perfect emulsion of the best Norway Cod-liver Oil with the hypophosphites of lime and soda.

For Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Weak Lungs, Consumption, Scrofula, Anæmia, Weak Babies, Thin Children, Rickets, Marasmus, Loss of Flesh, General Debility, and all conditions of Wasting.

The only genuine Scott's Emulsion is put in salmon-colored wrapper. Refuse inferior substitutes!

Send for pamphlet on Scott's Emulsion. FREE.

Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All Druggists. 50 cents and $1.

Publisher's Notes.

Now is the time when wise and zealous white-ribboners throughout the country are beginning to plan

For the Spring Campaign.

From now until the April elections local unions should make it their special business to bring before the voters the saloon question. There should be concerted action on the part of our women in these coming weeks which should be in the nature of an appeal to the voter as

Protector of the Home.

In this work of the hour the local superintendent of literature has an important part to perform, for in the circulation of the right kind of literature at the right time telling blows may be struck against the drink traffic.

Agitate, Agitate, Agitate,

and if this means, as some one says, "irritate," it is an irritation that is productive of good.

The following leaflets we recommend as specially adapted for the arousement of popular thought along the line of the

Relation of the Saloon to Home and Municipal Affairs.

Timely Talks:
1. Shall we License the Dram-Shops?
2. How Dram-Shops Pay the Taxes
3. How the Dram-Shop Helps Business.
11. The National Ox; What Shall be Done With It?
18. The Distillery vs. The Farmer.
32. Why William Dustin Became a Prohibitionist.

Signal Lights:
1. Individuality of Conscience in the Voter
6. Our National Dilemma.
8. Words for Wage-Workers.
25. Who Killed Carroll?

Voters' Leaflets:
1. Thy Bottle.
2. Christian Patriotism.
3. Gran'sir' Saxton's Vote.
4. Wanted.
5. Gospel Temperance.
6. The Financial Backing of the Rum Power.
7. Christianity and the Great Cities.
8. The Silent Partner.

National Leaflets:
3. Political Economy vs. Commercial Economy.
34. Liquor's War on Labor.
39. Relation of Temperance Reform to the Labor Movement.
51. Farm Mortgages.
69. The Inventor of Dimensions in Political Righteousness.
70. Copartnership of Piety and Piracy.

Total Abstinence Leaflets:
4. In the Bushel or in the Jug.
9. Turn on the Light.
15. What it Costs.

PRICE, TIMELY TALKS.

Per 100 ..... $ .30
" 1,000 ..... 2.50

SIGNAL LIGHTS AND TOTAL ABSTINENCE LEAFLETS.

Per 100 ..... $ .15
" 1,000 ..... 1.25

VOTERS' AND NATIONAL LEAFLETS.

Per 100 ..... $ .90
" 1,000 ..... 7.50

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ASK Your Grocer for

NONE SUCH MINCE MEAT

Two Mince Pies, equal to our Grandmother's, from each package of None-Such Mince Meat, without the worry and work. For sale by all Grocers.

MERRELL-SOULE CO.,
Syracuse, N. Y.

Publisher's Notes.

BIBLE READINGS

FEBRUARY—"Power from on High."
Mrs. Anna M. Palmer
MARCH—"Going Forward,"
Mrs. Mary Sparkes Wheeler

Responsive Readings.

FEBRUARY—"The Children's Paper."
Ada M. Melville
MARCH—"Schools of Methods and Parliamentary Usage."
Mrs. A. S. Benjamin

Price: Bible Readings:
Single copies, per year.....$ 12
10 copies, per year, to one address... 1 00
Price: Responsive Readings:
Single copies per year .....$ 10
13 copies, per year, to one address.... 1.00
Price of all Readings published prior to January, 1895, per 100..... 25

If we would build wisely and well; if we would mould public sentiment along the line of the least resistance, we must secure a "preëmption claim" upon childhood for our structure; we must lay the foundations for Christian temperance in the impressible and retentive heart of the child. The Responsive Reading for February,

The Children's Paper,

by Ada M. Melville, the efficient editor of The Young Crusader, is one of the "tools" which will aid in the accomplishment of this important work. Local superintendents of L. T. L. work should see to it that their unions are provided with a supply, and that with this Reading as a starting point they devote one or more of their meetings to the discussion of work among the children, and the relation our children's paper sustains to "bringing them into the fold." The Reading itself is very suggestive, and will be found by L. T. L. superintendents to stimulate thought and arouse such action as shall tend vastly to increase the interest and power of their department.

We advise unions to order soon, before the stock is exhausted.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ARE YOU READY

FOR

TEMPERANCE SUNDAY,

March 24?

Remember our Quarterly Temperance Lesson Supplement.

You Cannot Get Along Without It...

TERMS.

100 .....$ .65
500..... 2.75
1,000 ..... 5.00

This is issued as a Supplement to the March

Young Crusader.

TERMS FOR YOUNG CRUSADER AND SUPPLEMENT.

100 .....$1.00
500..... 4.75
1,000..... 9.00

Address
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
HE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Our Library Table.

Under the title, "First Attacks on the Mother Tongue," Prof. James Sully describes in the February POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY the manner in which children learn to imitate speech and then to apply correctly the words that they use. Some of the amusing mistakes that they make in both processes are accounted for in Professor Sully's article.

---

DEMOREST'S for this month has quite a valentine touch. Mrs. Sydney Rosenfeld, of the Professional Women's League, sends a "Valentine of Good Will to Woman," in which she says:

"I have a little word for women. It doesn't connect in any way with the subject in hand, but it is in my heart and I'll out with it. It is that the humiliating defeat which womankind suffered in Albany this year was perhaps one of the most beneficent things that ever happened to our most fortunate sex. Had we acquired the right to vote it would have been but a very short step to our acquiring the right to hold office. Now we were all ready to vote, but how many of us are ready to hold office? When we women do take a hand in politics we must be careful to make no mistakes; every woman who takes part in the public administration of offices must remember that ten millions of critical eyes will be examining her work. She must be armed cap-a-pie ready to meet, fight and welcome every foe; and I say that, for the sake of the permanence of woman, we must speak and think before we speak, and perhaps 1900 will see us at the polls. Then God guide us aright, and help us to

"'Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring out the false, ring in the true.'"

---

AT LAST. By Mrs. Maria Elsie Lauder. A quaint story of high life in poverty, romance amid grinding circumstances. The hero of the story is a beautiful boy, the son of a beautiful mother. Her holy teachings bear exquisite fruit in him and he is a missionary among the newsboys and the poor of Toronto. The story has a rich coloring of foreign travel, music and art, and the plot is well sustained.

Charles Wells Moulton, Buffalo, N. Y.

---

MADELEINE'S RESCUE. By Jeanne Schultz. A bright story for girls and boys. The characters are Madeleine, a sweet-natured, fun-loving girl, an orphan, her nearest relatives being two uncles and a maiden aunt, these three being divided by an unfortunate "family quarrel." Little Madeleine goes from one to the other, spending four months with each, subjected for that period of time to the whims of her temporary guardian. While visiting Aunt Estelle, the lonely child finds four boy comrades, aged respectively ten, eleven, twelve and fourteen. Their rollicking plays, their loyalty to the girl friend, their banishment by the maiden aunt, and the denouement which far exceeded their brightest hopes, combine to form a most amusing story for young people.

D. Appleton & Company, New York.

---

CHRISTIANITY AND THE CHRIST. A study of Christian Evidences. By Bradford Paul Raymond, D. D. Hunt & Eaton, New York; Cranston & Curts, Cincinnati, publishers. Price 85 cts.

The author handles this well-nigh limitless subject with a charm of style and clearness of expression that might warrant its being called a story of Christian evidences. He does not use much ammunition in meeting those who would dethrone Christ, but whenever he does meet their charges his aim is quietly unerring. He exerts his power in showing Christ as the central figure of the world's history, all the events before His advent pointing to His coming and that the world's movements since His birth have centered about Him. Dr. Raymond presents his subject under general heads as follows: Christ and the Christian Life; Christ and the Revised Version; Christ and the Prophets; Christ and the Supernatural; Christ's Self-Consciousness; Christ and the Resurrection; Christ and the Apostle Paul; Christ and the Sinner; Christ and the Believer; Christ and History; Christ and Humanity; Christ and Immortality.

"The promise made to Abraham, the hope proclaimed by Isaiah, the victory prophesied by Paul, and the consummation seen by John, all match well the claim made by Jesus, while the progress of the centuries and the signs of our times, now well above the horizon in all the world's vast heathenism, confirm us in the faith and assure us of its final victory."

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are unrivalled for relieving Coughs, Hoarseness and all Throat Troubles. Sold only in boxes.

HERE IS Something IN Flowers,

Both new and distinct.

NEW SWEET SCENTED PANSIES.

New Hybrids in which are blended the perfume of the Violet, with the beauty of the Pansy.

This new class is the result of crossing the pansy with the sweet alpine violet; the resulting hybrids, in addition to retaining the delightful violet perfume, produce the most beautiful pansy-like blossoms, 2 to 2½ inches across. The solid or selfs include white, lemon, orange, claret, crimson, maroon, lavender, purple, rose, black, blue, etc., etc. The fancy varieties are exquisitely tinted, striped and blotched. Many critics consider the combinations and blendings of color in the NEW SWEET-SCENTED PANSIES to be more beautiful than the ordinary strains of Pansy.

The NEW SWEET-SCENTED PANSIES are hardy, of easy culture, and, planted in masses or lines, they form perfect mats covered with myriads of flowers. They begin to make the garden gay in early spring and continue to bloom with marvelous freedom until autumn. The flowers are borne on long stems which shoot up like the violet directly from the roots, rendering the flowers of special value for cutting purposes.

PRICE PER PACKET (MIXED COLORS) 25 CENTS.

A complete description of this new floral beauty will be found in our 1895 Catalogue of "EVERYTHING for the GARDEN," which we will send FREE with every order from this advertisement, when this paper is mentioned. If Catalogue alone is wanted, it will be mailed on receipt of 20 cents. As every copy, however, with postage, costs us 25 cents, you will find it more advantageous to order the NEW SWEET-SCENTED PANSY and get for nothing a Catalogue of 160 pages, containing nearly 500 engravings and 8 beautiful colored plates—in fact, the most superb publication of its kind ever issued. Postage stamps accepted as cash.

PETER HENDERSON & CO.,

35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST., NEW YORK.

THE ...World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union... CONVENTION

LONDON, ENGLAND, JUNE, 1895

I. A $200 Tour to London, Grindelwald, Lucerne and Paris
II. A $250 Tour to London through Switzerland and Paris
III. A $300 Tour to London through Switzerland to Rome

Organized by Rev. Dr. HENRY S. LUNN

EDITOR OF "REVIEW OF THE CHURCHES," LONDON

In concert with LADY HENRY SOMERSET and MISS WILLARD, DR. LUNN has arranged a special tour to England at the beginning of June for members of the W. C. T. U. and their friends, ladies and gentlemen. The arrangements are of the most complete character, and combine the greatest freedom of action with perfect arrangements for the comfort of all. The sums named above include first cabin, return passage, hotel accommodation and railway travel. The tours may be prolonged by special arrangement to any extent.

Full particulars from

The Pilgrimage Secretary
The Review of Reviews
Astor Place, New York

QUITE THE BEST WOMAN'S PAPER IN GREAT BRITAIN.

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL

EDITED BY

LADY HENRY SOMERSET

AND

ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH

Is a weekly review of woman's work in philanthropy and reform, and the OFFICIAL ORGAN of

The British Women's Temperance Association

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL is thoroughly abreast of the times, and an authority on the advanced movement now everywhere occupying the mind of thinking women. It contains interviews with prominent women; serial stories by well-known authors; Books Worth Reading, by Lady Henry Somerset; social sketches contributions from Miss Frances E. Willard, and, in all, comprises a timely up-to-date journal for thoughtful women.

Subscription $1.58, postpaid, per annum, to any address within postal union.

Foreign and Colonial Subscribers will please remit by Money Order, payable to ALLIE ROSSETER WILLARD, Business Manager, 33-34 Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, London, E. C., England.

EASTER GREETINGS

LIST OF BOOKLETS

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Hail to the Lord's Anointed | .60¢ | The Lord's Day | .20¢ | An Easter Key | .10¢ |
| The Voice of Him that Liveth | .50 „ | Alleluia | 20 „ | An Easter Spray | .10 „ |
| Risen Indeed | .40 „ | An Easter Voice | .15 „ | An Easter Tone | .10 „ |
| Jesus is God | .40 „ | The Voice of the Beloved | .15 „ | An Easter Blessing | .10 „ |
| Work and Work | .20 „ | The Rising of the Sun | 15 „ | Easter Morn | .10 „ |
| Easter Glory | .20 „ | The Lamb that was Slain | .15 „ | Chimes for Easter-tide | 10 „ |
| Simply to thy Cross I Cling | .20 „ | Pathway to Easter | .15 „ | | |
| | | Easter Joys | 15 „ | | |
| | | In His Footsteps | .10 „ | | |

An assortment of beautiful Easter Cards ranging in price from two to twelve cents. Assorted Packages of { 6 Cards 25 cents; 8 „ 25 „; 10 „ 25 „; 15 „ 25 „ }

To insure choice in selection, we would ask our friends to order early.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASSO., CHICAGO.

Signal Notes.

An English woman writer suggests that in the line of new employment for women, some may become letter carriers. If postmistress why not post-woman?

Hamar, Norway, (under the Gothenburg system) has decided that it wants its beerhouses, as well as those for the sale of distilled spirits, closed between the hours prohibited for the latter.

The English system of scientific temperance instruction is different from that of America in that the teacher is not compelled to give the instruction, but it is done by a system of lectures by visiting agents.

Germany has a new woman's paper, the Frauenbewegung. (Woman's Movement), edited by Frauen Minna Cauer and Lily Von Gizychi. The paper is published every fortnight, is the organ of several societies, and is devoted to the progress of women both at home and abroad.

The Danish Temperance Society, with the consent of the education department of the government has sent copies of an admirable book on alcoholics designed to assist the work of the school in promoting temperance to all teachers. This work clearly shows the danger of the weaker fermented liquors as well as the distilled spirits and the fallacy of alcohol as a remedial agency.

Two pamphlets recently issued by the "Dutch Teachers' Propaganda Club for Combating Drink," deal with the effect of alcohol on children medicinally and as an article of diet. In the summing up under the title, "It's poison, after all" the advice is tendered: "Never give your children spirituous liquors, not even wine or beer, except on the advice of a doctor." Even with the last phrase this is advance ground for the teachers in gin drinking Holland.

In a decided way the Czar is attempting to mitigate the gambling evil in his domain. The Minister of Finance has notified managers of banks that they must cease gambling and give their clients three months' time for liquidation. Heavy penalties are prescribed for the proprietors of money changing establishments unless they cease drawing the uninitiated into ruinous speculation. By these steps the Czar is determined to put an end to gambling and speculation.

The Rescue Home of the King's Daughters and Sons, Lumbermen and Miners' Mission, at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., was the target at which vice aimed its deadly blow recently in a spirit of retaliation, since through the cause represented by the Rescue Home resorts of ill-repute have been closed up. While the Home was not demolished by dynamite as evidently intended, it was badly shaken and injured and stores of papers and clothing for the camps were completely destroyed. Mrs. Emma C. Nason, chairman of the mission committee, writes that this assault threatens to cripple the work for purity unless help comes. Her pathetic appeal should win willing response for the support of these brave and fearless workers.

Rev. Duncan C. Milner, a resident for eighteen years in the prohibition state of Kansas, and a close observer of the temperance movement, thus states the case in a nutshell: "In all social experiments to put down the curse of intemperance we can put the gains of prohibition safely in comparison with the failures of any system of license to reduce the evils of the traffic. Prohibition wherever it has had anything like a fair trial more nearly prohibits than any form of license regulates. Some of the gains obtained by Kansas by this experience are as follows: An unholy partnership was dissolved. In licensing the saloon the community shares in the responsibility of the traffic. The saloons were closed. The open saloon is the open sore of our civilization. It is always the headquarters of vice and crime. Now in Kansas the traffic is outlawed, and there has been a decrease of drunkenness. This is supported by the testimony of the liquor men. Kansas had the greatest era in its history during the eight years after prohibition was enacted. This was a proof that prosperity was necessarily connected with the sale of liquors. Prohibition is no longer an open question. There has been a gain in courage and confidence by experience and by decisions of courts. Cases have gone through all the courts to the supreme court of the United States, and nearly all favored the principle of prohibition. The liquor dealers fight all restrictions, and prohibition is the only successful weapon to fight them with."

A Late Breakfast

is often caused by a late milkman. No cream for the coffee or oatmeal has delayed many a morning meal. Keep a supply of Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream in the house, and avoid such annoyances.

IVORY SOAP
IT FLOATS

At all grocery stores east of the Rocky Mountains two sizes of Ivory Soap are sold; one that costs five cents a cake, and a larger size. The larger cake is the more convenient and economical for laundry and general household use. If your Grocer is out of it, insist on his getting it for you.

The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

RHEUMATISM

Is often caused by a bad Liver. How is your Liver? Are your Kidneys all right? Does your sleep rest you? Does your back ache? Are you weak and thin? Are you dull and bilious? Marvelous success has attended the use of

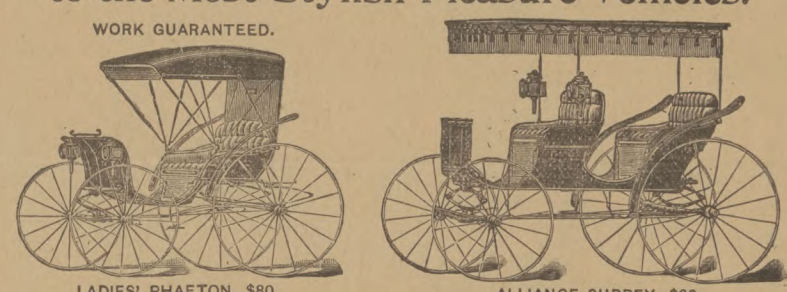
Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm.

All who use it say it is the "PEERLESS REMEDY" for curing ailments of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, Female troubles, Rheumatism and Bright's Disease. For sale everywhere at $1.00 per bottle.

THE DR. J. H. McLEAN MEDICINE CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

Anything You Want, from a $10 Road Cart up to the Most Stylish Pleasure Vehicles.

WORK GUARANTEED.



LADIES' PHAETON, $80. ALLIANCE SURREY, $90.

Can't tell you all about the new styles, handsome designs, beautiful finish, endless variety, low prices, superior quality and fine workmanship of our goods in this limited space, but we want you to write us today for our brand new 1895 Illustrated Catalogue. This is the largest and best catalogue we ever published. Ask for Cat. K. It contains about 200 pages and cost us lots of money and time; but you can have one for nothing. We have added a fine line of BICYCLES for our customers. Don't buy anywhere till you see our catalogue and prices.

ALLIANCE CARRIAGE CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Good Wives

grow fair in the light of their works, especially if they use SAPOLIO: It is a solid cake of scouring soap used for all cleaning purposes. All grocers keep it.

LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST by many a woman who strives to please her household and works herself to death in the effort. If the house does not look as bright as a pin, she gets the blame—if things are upturned while house-cleaning goes on—why blame her again. One remedy is within her reach. If she uses SAPOLIO everything will look clean, and the reign of house-cleaning disorder will be quickly over.

SCOTT'S ROSES with a record of forty-six years, will give better satisfaction than cheap, forced plants from unknown houses. Our Catalogue this year, though handsomer than ever, is an exponent of the times. Gardens fairer than ever, at less cost, are made possible by its Special Features of Premiums, Discounts, Club Offers, and Low Prices on the BEST PLANTS, SEEDS, and BULBS. Write for it to-day—it is free.

ROBERT SCOTT & SON, 19th and Catharine Sts., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1895

"The Leading American Seed Catalogue."

A handsome book of 174 pages with many new features for 1895—hundreds of illustrations, pictures painted from nature—it tells all about the BEST SEEDS that grow, including rare novelties that cannot be had elsewhere. Any seed planter is welcome to a copy FREE. Send your address to-day on a postal.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Seed Growers, PHILADELPHIA.

FRANKLIN COLLEGE, New Athens, O.; largest attendance yet. Start at any time. Board, tuition, furnished room and books, $3 a week; total cost $140 a year; 8 courses; no saloons. cheapest, safest, best. Cat. free. W. A. Williams, D.D. Pres.

You will find the "White Ribbon Hymnal" a great help in temperance meetings and song services. Price 35c.

Testing Apparatus for Alcohol.

Simple, durable, compact, reliable and prompt in action, for lectures, conventions, parlor meetings and juvenile work. Certified by Boston chemists. Delivered to express for $2. Handbook with ten illustrated lectures; paper, 50c.; cloth, $1.
Circular free. Address

JULIA COLMAN,
47 Bible House, - New York.

A Quality Seed Offer. Send for Catalogue.
NORTHRUP, BRADAN & GOODWIN, Minneapolis, Minn.

Publisher's Notes.

DON'T YOU WANT IT?
YOU CAN HAVE IT!
WHAT IS IT?

A BIG BEAUTIFUL BOOK

WHO GETS IT?

The boy or girl sending us before April 1, the greatest number of new subscribers to the Young Crusader.

Address

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
The Temple,
Chicago, Ill.

Young Women.

New Series Oak and Ivy Leaf...

Official Organ Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

12 Pages. - Published Monthly. - 50c. a Year.

JENNIE A. STEWART, Editor.

★

A welcome change has taken place in our Y paper during the year. Enlarged and improved it is an attractive paper for the general reader as well as the young folks within the white-ribbon fold. The new list of departments includes:

News of the Month (in temperance, religious, political and educational circles); Special Articles (biography, travel, interviews, etc.); Queen's Gardens (poems, stories and sermonettes); Worth Repeating; Editorial; Official (messages and hints from the leaders in Y work); College Corner; Kindred Societies; Have You Read——? Brothers of Girls; Good Times; Girls at Home; By Mail; Silhouettes; Y Round Table and Pearls and Feathers.

TERMS TO UNIONS.

★

Single copies, one year, each .....50c
Five copies on one order, one year, each, 40c
Any number of copies, for distribution, each..... 4c

★

TERMS TO SOLICITORS.

One copy, one year.....50c

For clubs of five or more, the solicitor may retain 10 cents of each cash subscription. After the first club is sent the solicitor's name will be entered, and ten cents may be retained for each subsequent cash subscription.

The Union Signal and Young Women to one address, one year, $1.40.

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
The Temple,
Chicago, Ill.

The Young Crusader
OFFERS A PRIZE BANNER
TO THE
STATE MAKING GREATEST PRO RATA INCREASE...
IN NUMBER OF SUBSCRIBERS DURING 1895...

WHAT ARE YOU DOING ABOUT IT?

ALWAYS SOMETHING NEW.

The announcements of the great seed house of Peter Henderson & Co., of New York, which are published each year in our paper, attract always the widest attention. The offer contained in their advertisement in this week's issue is worthy of prompt acceptance. Besides sending the special packages of seeds—they offer to include—without extra charge—their wonderful catalogue with its many colored plates and 500 engravings — a perfect encyclopedia and library to any one who loves flowers.

UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE: THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XXI.—No. 9. CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 28, 1895. [Price $1.00 Per Year, in Advance.

Mrs Ursula D Hertick 1029 15th st 6E95

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

* * *

IF YOU WISH YOUR LETTERS TO REACH US, PLEASE SEE THAT THEY ARE PROPERLY ADDRESSED.

IT IS NOT SUFFICIENT TO WRITE ON YOUR ENVELOPE, "THE TEMPLE," PLEASE WRITE PLAINLY,

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE,
CHICAGO, ILL.

* * *

FOR ONE NEW SUBSCRIBER.

Regular price, 35 cents.

* * *

Frequent inquiries reach us as to the reliability of certain Chicago firms who are offering special inducements to investors. In every instance investigation reveals the unwelcome fact that the concerns are bogus or without financial responsibility, and are not to be found in the city directory nor rated in Bradstreet's or Dun's Commercial Agency. Firms of accredited standing in circularizing the public usually give to strangers some national bank or commercial agency as reference, and it is a sure indication of fraud if in these times marvelous inducements are offered to small investors.

CAROLINE F. GROW, Bus. Mgr.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE

Koutchat, a Persian town, has been destroyed by an earthquake.

Rhode Island's Prohibition convention has nominated Smith Quimby, of Warren, for governor.

Daughters of the American Revolution met in fourth annual congress at Washington last week.

The Congressional Temperance society held its sixty-first anniversary at Washington, February 24.

The Liberal government of England was sustained during a recent crisis by an overwhelming majority.

Leading educators met at Cleveland, O., during the sessions of the National Educational Association last week.

Senator Brands has presented a bill in the Illinois legislature to prohibit the manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

No display of foreign flags will be permitted on the public buildings of New York in future, a bill to that effect having become a law.

Washington's birthday was celebrated by the usual demonstrations and eulogies. The Union League of Chicago presented each pupil of the city public schools with a souvenir flag.

The senate of the state of Washington has granted woman's franchise. The question is still open in North Dakota, where a motion has been entered to reconsider the recent adverse decision.

A bill authorizing county judges to commit persons to drink cures at the county's expense, where the person is unable to pay for it, has been favored by the Wisconsin legislature's committee on charitable and penal institutions.

A "PERSONAL Word from Our Chieftain" will be found on page 16, and will be read with great interest by white-ribboners. In it Miss Willard states a change in plans, and announces her decision to sail for England, March 6. A consultation of National officers and friends resulted in this unanimous verdict. Miss Willard's continuous application to correspondence and official duties in Boston this winter and her recent illness have rendered a change and rest imperative, and Lady Somerset promises to hide her away from the world and her work a whole month in Eastnor Castle.

THE approaching month of March brings with it Temperance Sunday which falls on the twenty-fourth. The supplement to The Young Crusader for this month contains, as usual, the Quarterly Temperance Lesson as outlined by the International Series of Lessons. This supplement will aid those who wish to mark the day by special exercises in the Sunday-school. Aside from the exposition of the Scripture Lesson for the day, there is a Responsive Reading, practical suggestions for the observance of this quarterly temperance "feast," an outlined program of exercises and a number of valuable quotations from prominent thinkers suitable for memorizing by older scholars.

NEW HAMPSHIRE has rejoiced for forty years in a good prohibitory law, and has calmly withstood all the enticements of the liquor fraternity for the demolishment of its happy condition. The latest attempt to introduce favorable liquor legislation has been well termed unique. The bill just favorably reported by the house judiciary committee provides, on the notorious Iowa "mulct" plan, not for the legalizing of the sale of liquor but for its punishment. It is proposed that the fines regulated by the mayor and aldermen shall be collected by installments through the police court channels. The level-headed lawmakers of the Granite state will scarcely permit such a blot upon its escutcheon.

WE are glad to state that the rumor that Mrs. Mary A. Livermore "had determined to retire from public life" is a newspaper canard. That great woman was never more active or efficient as a speaker, and certainly never more beloved. She is not so strong as formerly in physique, but was never so radiant in faith and love in all her benignant career. The white-ribbon women everywhere will say in their hearts as they read these lines: "God bless the honorary president of Massachusetts W. C. T. U."

MRS. BARKER writes en route to South Carolina of the wonderful success of the Washington meetings and testifies, as does every one else, of the remarkable way in which every speaker measured up to the occasion in the absence of Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. In regard to the financial result of the meetings she says: "We had many fears lest there should be a draft upon our treasury that at this time of year is not over full, but all will be glad to learn that after paying all debts there was a generous surplus which was equally divided between World's, National and District treasuries." We congratulate our white ribbon sisters of the District for the skillful generalship which resulted in such a financial and moral success.

WOMAN suffrage bills have recently been before the legislatures of six states, viz, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Washington, Arizona and California. Also in addition to the above six states voting on woman suffrage bills during this month, two other states, Idaho and Oregon, have just passed bills through both houses calling for a popular vote on woman suffrage, making no less than eight states of the Union that have voted on woman suffrage during the past few weeks. Very recently a bill conferring suffrage on women was carried through the parliament of South Australia at Adelaide, a full account of which we will give next week by an eye-witness. "Why this general outbreak of woman suffrage all along the line?" writes our good brother-in-law, Salem Pratt, of North Dakota. "Surely the advocates of woman suffrage in Colorado and Wyoming do not need to feel 'lonesome' in their good work. The sight of three women now sitting as legislators in the lower house of the legislature at Denver, Colorado, is enough to make 'angels weep for joy.'"

NOT only Washington, D. C., but the entire country was startled to hear of the sudden death of Hon. Frederick Douglass, the noted freedman and statesman, on February 20. He had spent his last afternoon at the Women's Council, and at its close chatted with Miss Susan B. Anthony and Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens. To the latter he told of his great interest in the Polyglot Petition meeting, saying he "enjoyed it beyond expression." It is of especial interest to us to know that the last interview of Mr. Douglass was with Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. He went with Mrs. Douglass to their hotel, by their invitation, as Lady Henry especially desired to see him, and some misrepresentations of Miss Willard's attitude toward the colored people were to be talked over by mutual desire. Mr. Douglass sent each of our leaders a copy of his autobiography (the new edition) writing in that of Miss Willard's, 'To my Friend and the Friend of the Oppressed Everywhere." Toward the promised land of a fair field and no favor for all, independent of color, race or sex, Frederick Douglass early set his friendly face, and dying painlessly at seventy-eight, famous throughout the world, he saw its beatific mountains rising in vision sacred and sublime. It was well said by a Washington journalist (referring to his visit to the Women's Council a few hours before his death): "It may be that on the very last evening of his life—in the very last act of his sentient being—the venerable old man caught a glimpse of the promised land and of the suffrage for womanhood that remains to make of it a land of universal liberty."

CONSISTENCY.

BY BESSIE BAKER.

You "believe in prohibition"?
A most excellent position;
But, if anxious to promote it,
Why not straighten up and vote it?
But to show a tender feeling
For the victim who goes reeling
Through the street, unmanned by gin,
Which your ballot voted in.
What is it but sham and sin?

You've "no use for temperance cranks,
Never join fanatics' ranks";
And the W. C. T. U's,
Whom the whiskyites abuse,
Recognition you refuse;
Which intelligence construes,
(Should it not?) as opposition
To the cause of prohibition.

What is zeal or agitation,
Fervent prayer for men's salvation,
But a farce—a mere profession—
While you daily make concession
To the rum fiend in possession,
And, by ballot at the polls,
Set a price on human souls?

Stop and think! O Christian voter!
Can you stand as a promoter
Of a traffic so destructive,
Blighting everything productive,
And to every vice seductive,
Bearing only saddest sorrow
On its tide to-day, to-morrow,
While you pray, "Thy kingdom come,
And Thy will on earth be done"?

Vandalia, Ill.

MC CRACKEN'S BOY.

In Three Chapters.

BY HELEN RACHEL ROBB.

CHAPTER II.

In a few minutes the oxen turned in toward the gate, and drew their load up to a house built of rough logs, the openings between their surfaces filled in with mud. There were two rooms, separated by a passage way, open at either end. An attempt at decoration had been made by training morning-glory vines over the rough sides of the logs and around the openings of the hallway, and they had generously rewarded the hand that had cultivated them by clothing with their graceful tendrils the uncomely walls, whose every distorted projection was an excuse for some kindly arranged drapery of concealment.

A woman sat on the steps holding a sleeping baby in her lap. Her face seemed formed in the same mould as Ike's, having, like his, small, delicately formed features. But the character within will not permit faces to remain as they start out in life. Tints and general form are determined by laws we do not govern, but the real carving is in the soul's province and is controlled by the will, which is its supreme executive. His thin lips were set in a straight determined line with no childish curve, while her mouth drew down at the corners, with lines of weak petulance radiating from them. Her eyes, once as blue and clear as his, were now faded as the sky from which the sun had been gone for an hour, while her sunken cheeks were scarcely different in color from her thin, light hair and the dry sedge grass that grew up along the side of the house. Her calico dress, faded also to a neutral tint, took from her whatever trace of color she might have had; and as she sat thus in the twilight, with so little of expectancy in face or attitude, she seemed more like a picture in monochrome than a living creature.

She arose and came out to meet him. "Looked like ye'd never come," she said, with the whine of a weak protest at circumstances that had become habitual.

"The beasts was powerful slow this evenin', but I's brung ye rations, mammy," he answered cheerfully, carrying the small bundles into the house.

He hurriedly ran to the shelf where their few dishes were kept, got a plate and laid on it the piece of bread that had been in the sack since noon, set it on the table, and ran out to attend to putting away the oxen.

"He's come home," his mother remarked as he passed her at the door.

She need not have told him, for the next moment as he passed the door of the other room he heard the heavy breathing that he knew so well and that told how his father had come home.

That night after he had gone to bed in the common sleeping room he lay awake a long time; the machinery of thought had been running too rapidly all day to be stopped at will, and besides he clasped something in his hand that urged on thought the more. He listened eagerly for the time when his mother's regular breathing would tell that she was sleeping soundly; and at last, when quite sure of it, got up and crept softly to the other side of the room. He pressed his fingers gently along the wall till he felt a slight yielding of the clay between the logs, and removing a lump, took out a little box and placed in it the nickel that, since he came home, he had been carefully guarding, sometimes in the palm of his hand and sometimes in his mouth. He would have liked so much to see all the nickels in the box, and to count them over, but he feared their clink might waken some of the sleepers and his secret be discovered; and besides he knew just how many there were—nineteen now—and one more would make a dollar, and then the plan he had been forming and reforming for more than a year would be accomplished.

The gathering of this little store had been for months the chief object of his life. Each nickel represented careful planning, frequent self-denial and a thrill of exultation, when it was at last laid in the box. They had been saved, one at a time, from his sales in the village. Sometimes for weeks he was obliged to spend every cent for food, but slowly they had been gathering till now but one more was wanted to complete the dollar that seemed to him so great in its purchasing power.

When he began to save he thought he would buy his mother a bonnet, and for weeks had taken a lively interest in the headgear of the women he saw at the village. Sometimes, while seeking a purchaser for his load he would drift toward the one millinery store and feast his eyes on the gaudily trimmed wonders displayed in its little window selecting for the twentieth time which one he would buy when his dollar was complete. But at last winter had come and with it a little wailing baby, that was to Ike the sweetest and most wonderful of beings and his plan for expending the dollar was changed. The winter was cold, and he decided that warm clothing would be the most suitable present he could give his mother. What a lot of nice, warm flannel a dollar would buy! But the family expenses were greater than before the dear little baby came to live with them, so he was seldom able to lay anything aside, and now summer had come again and still his hope was not quite accomplished. But the flannel could be bought before another winter came; he was sure of this now.

He put the box into its hiding-place, carefully replaced the lump of clay and ran his hand over the wall to assure himself that there was no sign of its having been disturbed.

As he lay down in bed again through a chink in the roof he saw one star that seemed looking down at him like a kind loving eye, and assuring him, "I am with you." Even the presence of his drunken father could not take from him the peace that was within him that night, as he lay for hours looking up at the star and listening to the voice in his own heart.

That was a hard summer for Ike and those dependent on him. The weather was dry, and the corn and cotton required much cultivation to cause them to yield a crop. He toiled through the hot days, and was glad when the moonlight pieced out the day and made further labor possible. Sometimes his father worked for a day on the little farm, but much more frequently his time was spent at the village squandering the scanty pittance that the mother and son were able to gain by excessive toil. Not one nickel had been added to the little store hidden away in the wall, and often it seemed that he must use the money to buy food for the family; but it had been hoarded so long for a definite object, that even the thought of applying it to another use seemed like profanation.

It was all safe, for he had often crept to the place at night and carefully examined the spot. Once, when by a rare chance only he and the baby were in the house, he took the box out and counted the nineteen coins again and showed them to her, letting the little, soft, pink fingers play with the precious things for a few minutes. She could not tell any one about it, and so he whispered the secret to her, but above her little gurgling laugh of approval came the sound of his father's voice, just outside the vine-shaded window. The boy turned cold with terror, and hastily gathering up his wealth, thrust it into its hiding-place, and pale and trembling carried the baby out of the house that he might breathe the fresh air, just as his father passed in.

"I's goin' to put up that load o' corn, mammy," he said, putting the baby into her arms and hurrying off toward the cornfield. "What if his father had seen him with his treasure! Would he—?" He could not put the thought into words. He panted for breath as he measured out the yellow ears and emptied them into the wagon and determined that he would change the box to another place as soon as he could find an opportunity. His mother came out to him, slipping stealthily through the stalks of withered corn on the side of the field farthest from the house. She beckoned him to her, and whispered in his ear:

"Dad says he's goin' to take this heah corn to town tomorrer. What'll we do, Ike?" breaking into a weak kind of sobbing. "Ye know well 'nough what'll come on the money ef he gits his fingers on hit. Can't ye fix hit some way?"

Ike turned sick at the thought of his father's selling this load which was more than half of his entire corn crop, over which he had been laboring for months. Would Jesus, who had been with him in all the wearisome, hot days, as he worked this corn, allow his father to take the money, which was so much needed by his mother and the baby?

"Do the best ye can, honey," his mother sobbed, and sped silently through the corn toward the house, for fear she would be missed there.

The boy worked steadily till his wagon was ready for its trip to town. God would help him, he was sure, and his father should not have the money.

The next morning when the oxen were hitched to their load, the father took his seat in the wagon. Ike climbed up beside him, and was rather surprised that no objection was made to his presence. On reaching town his father got out, and, pitching the lines to the boy commanded, "Go and sell the load, an' mind ye take keer o' the money."

Ike was rejoiced at this, although he knew all too well where his father would spend the day. That he would be drunk anyhow before the day was done, there was no room for doubt, in the light of past experience; but at least he had yielded up possession of the corn for the time.

Patient search for purchasers, persistent resistance of plans to cheat him by men who would have taken advantage of his apparent inexperience, determination to get the exact amount that he knew his corn was worth, the gnawings of hunger put down, and at last an empty wagon and the hard earned silver in his pocket,—these things made up the sum of his day and brought the evening, the time he dreaded most, when he must find his father.

Even the oxen, stolid beasts as they were, knew the place, and stopped of their own accord at the saloon. Ike's hand trembled as it touched the green screen that obstructed the view of too curious passers-by, but he determinedly pushed his way in, and met the scene which, with more or less sickening variations, he had so often witnessed. It had been pay day at the brick yards, the one industry of the little town, and the men, to whom the possession of their small wages brought the impulse to rid themselves as quickly as possible of the burden of wealth, had come here in large numbers, as the place where this could most effectually be accomplished. They were staggering, sitting or lying about the room, as compelled by the different stages of their intoxication. Si McCracken, having been there longer than those who had been working during the day, lay in a corner, snoring loudly. Ike slipped through the crowd to his side and tried in vain to arouse him. The master spirit of the place, knowing that he had secured all that was possible from this customer, ordered two of the men still able to walk, to carry him out. Very ungently they pitched him into the wagon bed and the shock roused him to consciousness. Muttering curses, he climbed to the seat, and with a blow of his heavy hand, threw the child, already at his post, back into the wagon, and, gathering up the lines, started the oxen homeward.

Bruised by the fall, and knowing that unresisting silence was the wisest course, he sat still, hoping that his father would forget his existence. Sometimes screaming and lashing the oxen in drunken rage, sometimes half asleep swaying from side to side, and sometimes falling into a doze, from which an unusually rough jolt would again arouse him, his father had apparently forgotten him, and forgotten also that he had the money in his pocket.

Weary with the day's experiences the child lay down in the wagon and before many minutes was sleeping soundly. Suddenly he was wakened by a loud, shrill whistle and a rushing sound close upon them. Bewildered, he sat up and gazed through the dusk and instantly realized their position. The road crossed the railroad track and the evening express train was nearing the crossing. The frightened oxen would have turned around, but their driver was lashing them on and Ike heard his screams and curses above the roar of the train. The great black, iron monster was so close that he felt the glowing heat upon his face and was dazzled by the fierce glare of the headlight.

It was all in a moment, and yet there was time for the thought that he would jump—jump and possibly save the life that so often he felt he would gladly give up. How different life seemed to him now! And it would be so terrible to die under those fearful wheels that were coming—coming. But then his father—should he desert him in that horrible death without an effort to save him? He leaped to the seat, tore the lines from his father's hands, and threw all the weight of his little body upon them, calling to the brutes who knew the thin, treble voice so well, and had learned to obey it. But the voice was drowned, there was no sound except the mighty rush and roar of that great presence that was all but upon them. The terrified beasts plunged wildly forward—then all things ceased.

Steubenville, O.

"WHEELS WITHIN WHEELS."

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The wheel has always been an institution; whether attached to the market cart, the swift express train or the silently gliding bicycle, it is a "thing of beauty and a joy forever." But for real execution nothing succeeds like "wheels within wheels." This is just what has now come to the front in our white ribbon movement. Wheels are what move things and a "movement" cannot get along without wheels. When the wheeling is good the farmer rejoices, for his crops can roll to market. The same is true with us; we have a boundless crop of goodwill to convey back and forth from the Headquarters of the W. C. T. U. to every home that loves the white ribbon and what it represents.

Silver wheels are now in motion, symbols of our heart's devotion, and will roll fast and far without commotion to make our House Beautiful our very own forever and a day. We would far rather compass this colossal undertaking by many hands than few, for hands have hearts behind them as well as heads, and though we should not reject the offer of any millionaire who felt he really could not sleep o' nights unless he endowed us with the "wherewithal" to make the Temple ours "from turret to foundation-stone," still we strongly feel that the actual vitality of money is in proportion to the number of people back of it, in it and engaged in dispensing it for noble purposes.

We would a thousand times rather have one of the Temple wheels in the sacred hand of every little child that has taken the Loyal Temperance Legion pledge than to have a million dollars in the bank, because what we work for we love and what we love we work for. Hence we rejoice that the ingenuity of the Temple founder has given us a witty invention which can be passed from hand to hand with the greatest readiness and which need never come back empty-handed because so little is asked and so much given.

Every person who slips a dime under the little red cover, of which there are twelve on each wheel, will receive a handsome picture of the Woman's Temperance Temple, and every person who wins a dozen others thus to put in a dime receives any one of a variety of prizes that would simply have bewildered us when we were in our early teens. There were no prizes then, for we used to scan the papers, hoping to find some that we might strive to win. "Something for nothing" was what we gave to the enterprises that we helped, so far as prizes were concerned; but this age is more generous, more many-sided, and there is so much competition for the efforts of everybody that in order to win the attention and interest of anybody we must promise some return for the investment of time that has now become valuable even in the case of a child.

Probably we do not realize how much education is gained by the young people in thus learning to approach others with tact, winning their interest and sympathy, and inducing them to invest a dime for a good cause. But we take it that far and away beyond any material good to the child is the enlargement of the heart toward great movements that involve the weal of the human family and the recognition that it is a family to which we belong, as part and parcel of which we rise or fall, and with whose destiny ours is inseparably bound up. Every intelligent parent, teacher or friend who impreses this lesson on any young mind while it is like "wax to receive and marble to retain," has done not a little toward developing those workers for humanity who shall take up great reforms and bear them onward to potency and completeness. We especially appeal to the fathers and mothers, the elder brothers and sisters, the white-ribbon women, the Loyal Temperance Legioners, the teachers in Sunday-school and public school, and urge each one belonging to any one of these divisions of the human race who may read these lines to send a postal card just now while in the mood for it asking Mrs. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, Ill., to send a wheel like that pictured in Temple Items, that it may be filled up and returned at once to Headquarters, to gladden the hearts of the watchful ones who bear the burden of our great enterprise, and who are bound to "see it through." Remember that the prizes are as follows:

PREMIUM No. 1.—The Temple Medallion, made of that marvelous material, aluminum, which possesses far more silver sheen and beauty than silver, and, unlike it, never tarnishes. On one side is a most superb cut of the Temple; on the reverse the profile of the National president and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. It is inclosed in a dainty silk lined box.

PREMIUM No. 2.—The Temple Souvenir Book, telling all about the wonderful building, beautifully illustrated. This book is an art gem.

PREMIUM No. 3.—The Temple edition of the Ladies' Household Repository, with a bill-of-fare for each day in the year and all sorts of useful recipes. A book which all housekeepers should possess.

PREMIUM No. 4.—The game of Educational Checkers. This is a regular checker game, with historical facts printed on each checker and each square of the board.

PREMIUM No. 5.—The game of Pixies, a game of checkers, the checkers representing Brownies of all nations.

The two latter games are of especial interest to children and young people. They are not only a delightful pastime, but most instructive.

PREMIUM No. 6.—The Temple Silver Souvenir Teaspoon. Only persons who fill four wheels will receive this handsome premium.

We all remember the droll little chap in that bright book entitled "Helen's Babies," whose explanation of his wish to open a watch was, "Want to see zee wheels go wound." Well, we confess to a similar desire. It comes into our minds whenever we look at the wheel on our table or at its pictured semblance in the Temple Column of THE UNION SIGNAL. It comes to us when we think of the tens of thousands of wheels now swiftly flying through the postoffice into the homes we love and cherish, and we not only hope but pray that there may be uncounted myriads not of children only, but of "the children of a larger growth," who will not only say in their hearts but with their lips (and will "suit the action to the word" by putting their hands in their pocketbooks and hunting for a dime), "We want to see the wheels go round."

Boston, Mass.

RAILROAD TIES.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

I have an estate in Kentucky. A great, old-fashioned red brick house on a hill, in a delicious snarl of ampelopsis, clematis, and wild grape vines that race up the lattice, leap to the locust tree, swing across to the hackberry and the old oak, guying the mistletoe as they tumble into drifts of myrtle and scramble under the white thorn, emerging instantly to glide demurely past the tall persimmon to the typical southern garden, and around among the "quarters" past the black walnut giants to the orchard and the barns. It stands upon the verge of a cataract of meadowland, fifty acres of "blue grass," flowing down to the corporate limits of Lexington and threatening to inundate the city.

. . . . . .

"The Beauchamps" occupy the place—all THE UNION SIGNALERS know Frances E. Beauchamp, the Phil Sheridan of the National W. C. T. U., and everybody else will know her presently unless what, by courtesy, I call my judgment, has gone wrong again. They also own it.

. . . . . .

Mr. Beauchamp is a lawyer in Lexington—in the very front row of that aristocratic bar. A Christian man, who "works at it" and a Prohibitionist who votes that way, and although, as to his wife, he is not much better than an idolater, he gives her freely to Kentucky, "the National" and the public platform for which she is so greatly gifted. They are a perfect partnership—each is the other and both are one. In love, labor, property, home life, church work—everything, they join, upon exactly equal terms. He is a Presbyterian elder who stands by the apostle in his views about women. "Let your women as well as your men keep silence in the church if their lives are against them." Otherwise he believes in women "speaking up" when they have anything to say. Mercy! what if he should change his mind!

Everybody in Lexington knows that—although beyond any question devoted to her husband—in their domestic life she "holds the reins." She is a woman of strong will and prompt decision, and it is well known that she has often driven him from the farm with a buggy whip in her hand—in the rain—and he is a delicate man, for no other reason than that he wanted to go to his office, and she loves to sit beside him and drive with a Kentucky thoroughbred to the family carriage. Otherwise she is a good wife.

. . . . . .

They keep turkeys—and then again they don't keep them; individual birds come and go, but the flock goes on forever. I watched them going to roost; it was equivalent to a course in pastoral theology.

. . . . . .

Turkeys are encouraged to roost high in Kentucky—they make less "dark meat" by inhaling rarified air during the night; low roosting turkeys are rarely eaten by white people in the South. They are very particular.

. . . . . .

As I was saying, I watched them retire, and for the first time realized what the cynic meant when he said, "Man is a turkey without feathers"—or words to that effect.

. . . . . .

Straightway, when evening fell, they betook themselves to rest, but they went about it so differently. The hens, without a squeak, walked to the apple tree, flew straight into its topmost branches, and went to sleep. The cocks walked around the tree, ducking their heads and taking observations, coming closer, getting back farther, tumbling over one another. I could see them saying to themselves—in Turkish—"It is all very well for a hen when she is going to do anything just to do it; females are creatures of impulse, but A GOBBLER must think of methods and gradually overcome difficulties and get up a little at a time; there is danger of flying clear over the tree and that would be worse than remaining on the ground—possibly if I wait the tree will lie down and I can simply step aboard."

. . . . . .

And so they bobbed and dawdled and courtesied and got nowhere.

One old "swell" walked back to a good place, fixed his wings, inflated his red, white and blue wattles, erected a flabby Ebenezer on his nose, squatted low and gave it up, stuck his wing feathers down until they rasped the ground, strutted round to the other side of the tree and gobbled, and the other males joined in the chorus; he was as good a high-flyer as any of the hens but he didn't fly. He was not a flyer, but a gobbler. They were all alike in sentiment but different as to methods.

. . . . . .

I spoke to Mr. Beauchamp about it that night when he was carving one at dinner, and he said—without meaning any disrespect to the dead—"A turkey is an idiot!" But he was hasty in judgment, for before I went to bed that night I looked out at the window where the full moon had glorified the orchard into frostwork on the panes of the midnight sky and counted the turkeys; they were all there. Evidently they did fly at last.

. . . . . .

Men are very like turkeys. People often say to me, when a state like South Dakota is betrayed by Republicans, or like Iowa is sold to sin to start an "Allison boom," "What are you going to do now?" and I reply, "Exactly what God does, wait till the gobblers fly."

In a snowdrift in Pennsylvania, en route.

SUFFRAGE FOR WOMEN.

[Extracts from the address of Rev. H. M. Dean before the Woman Suffrage Committee of the General Assembly of Massachusetts at the State House in Boston, January 30, 1895.]

Much depends upon the attitude in which we approach the consideration of such a question as this. Much depends on what we regard as the reasonable presumption and on whom we conceive that the burden of proof should rest.

When a prisoner is arraigned in court, the presumption of law is that he is innocent until he is proven guilty, and the burden of proof is on those who accuse him. He does not, strictly speaking, need to prove his innocence at all, but simply to refute the charges against him. If he does this he must be set free. If he were accounted guilty till he had proven himself innocent, he might, though blameless, never be discharged. The difference between the presumption of his innocence and the presumption of his guilt may mean for him the difference between liberty and imprisonment for life.

Now I contend that the reasonable presumption is that woman has a right to vote, and that till it is proven otherwise, the government has no more right to withhold the suffrage from woman than the judge on the bench has to deny the accused his rights under the law.

The advocates of woman suffrage do not need in advance to prove that woman will use the ballot wisely, or even that she will use it at all, but simply to show that she has the same natural right to it that man has. The judge may not foreknow that John Doe will use his freedom wisely. He may waste his time, he may squander his money, he may not improve his intellect, he may never worship his God; but the government has primarily to deal with none of these considerations. If not convicted of crime he is entitled to his liberty, and that speedily. If it be afterward found necessary to restrict his liberty, that may for good cause be done.

It has been said that woman has no natural right to vote. That is at best but a question of adjectives. She has no natural disability for voting, and that is enough. Suffrage is granted under a Republican form of government to a man because he is a man and because he has no natural disability. It should also be granted to woman because she also is mankind, and she also has no natural disability. Every citizen of a Republic has a presumptive right to vote. If the good of the state require that the ballot should be denied to any citizen, the one who affirms this must prove it. The citizen whose right is denied does not need to prove that the good of the state requires that he be permitted to vote. He has maintained his right if he has simply refuted the charges of his accuser.

Woman then has the right to vote because she has no disability, for sex is no disability. Neither physically, intellectually nor morally does it disable her from her casting an intelligent and honest ballot. Is it alleged that she is illiterate? No, for she is the most numerous teacher of embryo voters in our public schools. Is she idiotic? Hardly, for as a "co-ed" she often takes the prize before the eyes of our sons. She is born frequently in this state, and like men she often attains "the age of twenty-one years." She can, under our laws, sue and be sued, be fined, imprisoned, hanged. She is no more insane, and no more immoral, to say the least, than men. And she can so mark an Australian ballot that it shall express her sentiments, and can drop it into a box in as seemly a way as can a man. Surely here are no disabilities which invalidate her presumptive right to vote.

Say I these things as a private citizen? Or saith not the majesty of Massachusetts the same? Article III. of the amendments to the Constitution does indeed limit to "male" citizens the right to vote for governor, lieutenant-governor, senators and representatives. But I submit that this is at the sacrifice of consistency with that earlier "Declaration of Rights" which is the foundation upon which our Constitution and our statutes rest. "All power residing originally in the people and being derived from them." "Declaration of Rights," Part I, Art. V. Are not women "people"?

"The people of this commonwealth have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves," Do. Art. IV. Do not women constitute an integral part of the "people of this commonwealth"?

"No man or association of men have any other title to obtain advantages or particular and exclusive privileges distinct from those of the community, than what arises from the consideration of services rendered to the public." Do. Art. VI. Are not women members of the "community"? Again: "The people alone have an incontestible, unalienable and indefeasible right to institute government and to reform, alter or totally change the same." Do. Art. VII. Thus intensive words are massed and synonyms piled upon each other to emphasize a right of the "people," which women as "people" surely share with men.

Yet again: "All inhabitants of this commonwealth having such qualifications as they shall establish by their frame of government, have an equal right to elect officers and to be elected for public employments." Do. Art. IX. Are not the women of Massachusetts numbered among all inhabitants of this commonwealth? And these inhabitants are here declared to have the right to "establish" the "qualifications" of voters. Women do not have the qualifications now required, but the reason is plain. They have been defrauded of their original right to share in establishing the qualifications of voters.

Thus the right of women to share with men in the institution or the reform of government does not depend on the meaning of any one word. If they are "people," if they are "inhabitants," if they belong to the "community," if in fine they are "citizens," (for the Acts of 1893, Chap. 417, Sec. 14, call them such) they have the right to vote.

I admit that the framers of this "Declaration of Rights" do not seem to have applied its principles to women, but this fact does not weaken the force of these magnificent utterances. Declarations of rights, like Scripture prophecies, are not of any "private interpretation." The signers of the Declaration of Independence did not, in their intention, include black men in their all men, but we do justly so include them. It is, in fact, not easy to formulate a comprehensive and emphatic declaration of our own rights and avoid the enunciation of great principles which must logically apply to the rights of others.

Boston, Mass.

LEGISLATIVE WORK IN NORTH DAKOTA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," has been the glad refrain in many a mansion and cot in our towns and cities and on our snow covered prairies since the word flashed over the wires, February 13, that resubmission was finally defeated in the lower house. It was a hard fought battle; the opposition contested every point but were finally beaten by a vote of thirty-five to twenty-six.

Early in the session I sent a request to every minister in the state to speak on resubmission, Sunday, January 27, and to hold a special prayer service for its defeat. On the same Sunday evening a mass-meeting was held here, addressed by Hon. Charles A. Pollock, "father of the prohibition law," and short addresses were given by the ministers of the city and the writer.

Special efforts were put forth in those districts whose representatives were considered doubtful. Petitions came pouring in and it was soon evident that the people were awake and working as well as praying.

Two years ago the resubmission resolution carried in the house and was barely defeated in the senate. In no previous legislature has there been shown so strong a sentiment against resubmission as in this, for which we thank God and take courage.

A bill providing for local option in towns and cities with more than seven hundred inhabitants, has already been introduced. There is a question as to its constitutionality and it is earnestly hoped it may go the way of the resubmission resolution.

A bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes within the state has passed both houses and will doubtless receive the governor's signature.

The age of consent has been raised from fourteen to sixteen years. We hope to make it eighteen in the next legislature.

The Senate has passed a gold cure bill, giving to boards of county commissioners power to send habitual drunkards to a reputable gold cure at the expense of the county, provided the patient is willing to go and is not able to incur the expense.

Mr. Colby's bill suppressing obscene literature and pictures and magazines, or papers devoted principally to the publication of criminal news, or pictures or stories of deeds of bloodshed and crime, is a strong and much needed measure. It has passed the house, but I fear for its fate in the senate.

A bill has been introduced defining intoxicating liquors, which, if passed, will be of great assistance in the enforcement of the law.

The "woman suffrage" bill, introduced by Major Edwards (whose wife is a prominent white-ribboner of Fargo), was the special order for the twentieth of this month. Leading politicians of both houses are advocates of the bill, and while it will be fought by many resubmissionists, we think it has a fair prospect of passing. Mrs. E. S. DeVoe, of Harvey, Ill., is sent here by the Equal Suffrage Association of Grand Forks to work for the bill. She is a bright, pleasing woman, and an earnest and able advocate of the measure. Our state superintendent of franchise was not able to come with me, as I had hoped, so I have been holding the fort alone, until last week Mrs. DeVoe appeared as a welcome reinforcement to the suffrage work.

All white-ribboners will be glad to know that North Dakota has a senator, James Dobie, of Pembina county, who wears the white ribbon with his G. A. R. button, and wore it all through the campaign. It is needless to say that the cause of home protection has a strong champion in this brother, who is an honor to our cause.

Although I find this legislative work arduous and oft-times trying, yet I have also found the promise true and precious, "My grace is sufficient for thee." Pray with us that no local option or license system may be fastened upon our young state. ELIZABETH PRESTON,

President W. C. T. U. of North Dakota.

Casselton, N. D.

NEW YORK NOTES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It is now about seven weeks since the reform government, elected last November, assumed control of the affairs of this city. In the court of general sessions, Recorder John W. Goff has corrected many abuses and will, no doubt, accomplish much more. Mayor Strong has made many excellent appointments and is fast introducing business-like methods into the various city departments. So far as the general administration of the municipal government is concerned, Mayor Strong is deservedly growing in favor.

There is, however, one subject agitating all classes much more than street cleaning, park improvement or civil service reform, and that is whether the saloon shall have absolute sway in this city and state or not. It is already clamoring for additional privileges and bringing much pressure to bear to secure them.

Last month, Mayor Strong held a conference with a committee of twenty-five saloon-men, representing the Central Liquor-Dealers' Association. Mr. Strong came out openly and boldly for the Sunday opening of saloons, and recommended that the liquor-dealers "get together" and arrange what hours they would be satisfied with for Sunday liquor-selling and "test the thing." He suggested that they should close in the forenoon and open at two in the afternoon. He told them they "were conducting a perfectly legitimate business," and said, "I have not had a better looking lot of men before me since I took office." He promised to do what he could to aid them. Mayor Strong has repeatedly declared that the law "cannot be enforced" and is doing all he can to create sentiment against its enforcement.

Since this meeting the saloon and anti-saloon forces have been quite active. The daily press of the city is a unit in favor of Sunday saloons and thoroughly unscrupulous in its arguments. The politicians of both old parties take the same side. What is particularly unfortunate is that men high in the Christian church are rendering substantial aid in this direction. Dr. Rainsford is an earnest advocate of grog-selling on the Lord's day. Mayor Strong says he has received more than thirty letters from clergymen approving a law permitting Sunday sales.

On the other hand delegation after delegation have called upon the mayor and expressed their disapproval of a change in regard to Sunday sales. The real battle, as all realize, will be at Albany. And here Mr. Fish, speaker of the assembly, has surrendered in advance to the saloons. His appointment of the committee on excise shows that he has carried out the pledge of the leading Republicans to the liquor interest in this regard.

A half score or more of bills have been introduced into the legislature. The liquor dealers and their sympathizers have been skillfully creating sentiment, but have not apparently begun massing their forces. Among the bills introduced are those to allow bar-rooms to have their side doors open for the sale of liquor on Sunday, to provide for a vote of the people in cities of over two hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants, whether they wish liquor sold on Sunday or not; to allow saloons to sell between midnight and morning; to exempt Coney Island from excise regulations, etc. A bill is being prepared by the editor of the Wine and Spirit Gazette and certain Republican leaders in favor of the "Ohio plan" of taxing saloons, with a local option attachment for Sunday selling.

Delegates from sixty-three of the public schools, represented by over three hundred delegates, recently gathered and organized a confederation of the Anti-Cigarette League of New York city. The Board of Education, and every principal in the city, have now given their hearty approval to the movement, and it is growing every day in influence among the boys. The school authorities are making special efforts to suppress the sale of cigarettes to children. Superintendent Jasper has had copies of the law prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to children printed for distribution, and will make it the duty of the truant officers to leave copies in every store situated near a public school. In the vicinity of every large school are several small stores that are supported chiefly by the trade of the school children. It is intended to deter these petty traders from continuing the practice.

MRS. C. B. HOPKINS.

New York City.

OUR YOUNG WOMEN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A most successful Y conference was held in St. Louis February 8 and 9. On Thursday evening, February 7, a very brilliant reception was tendered the young ladies from abroad who had come to help and speak in the conference. Three of our National lecturers and organizers were present, Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, Miss Clara Parrish, of Illinois, and Miss Ida Clothier, of Colorado.

In spite of the terrific blizzard that howled and shrieked through the city on Thursday night, the frozen and icy pavements and the excessive cold, nearly three hundred guests gathered in the parlors of the Lindell, and presented a rare assemblage of handsome, sensible young women and brave, clean-living young men. Some white-haired men and women sprinkled in with the dark-haired ones, gave color and dignity to the occasion. A band, somewhere out of sight, played the sweetest, softest music throughout the evening.

During the conference ten minute addresses were made by representatives from Young Woman's Christian Association, Young Woman's Auxiliary to the Training School, the King's Daughters, Queen's Daughters, Girls' Friendly Society, Business Woman's Club, Christian Endeavor, Epworth League, Baptist Young People's Union, Y. M. C. A., Sunday-School Union, Catholic Woman's Temperance Union and Loyal Temperance Legion.

It was very interesting to listen to these addresses from the many societies and hear from each the close, direct relation that temperance must have to their work, because the greatest hindrance to it is the liquor traffic. And yet, to a great extent, the church sleeps on in its cushioned pews.

The arrangements for the conference, under Mrs. E. B. Ingalls' direction, were absolutely faultless, and she, with her able and willing coadjutors, deserve the success that attended their efforts. Where all was so excellent it is hard to discriminate at all.

The young ladies simply captured St. Louis. On Sunday, following the conference, the young ladies spoke, morning, afternoon and evening in many churches of the city. It is impossible to estimate the good that such a conference will do in any city, great or small. I wish one could be held in every city of our land.

It was found in St. Louis that all these societies were willing and anxious to confer on the burning questions of the day. The oftener these societies can come together for mutual conference, the better for all reforms and all interests of humanity.

Very fine music, vocal and instrumental, with choice recitations, gave a pleasant variety to the exercises, but day and evening audiences gave unmistakable evidence that they were most interested in what our gifted, National young women had to say. And they said "their say" with wit, pathos and power to the charming of all who heard. CLARA C. HOFFMAN.

En route to Washington.

PROVINCIAL PLEBISCITES.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—Allow me, as a sympathetic reader of THE UNION SIGNAL, to correct an error in an editorial paragraph on the first page of your issue of January 31. The writer of the paragraph, respecting a decision of our supreme court re the liquor traffic, seems to be under the impression that the judges of the supreme court of Canada hold office by a precarious political tenure, and that their judicial term is a limited one. The constitution and functions of the supreme court of Canada are substantially similar to those of the supreme court of the United States, and the judges of the one court, as those of the other, are appointed for life. While the judges of both courts are appointed by the national administrations which happen to be in power when vacancies occur, there are few people in either country who think of the judges of the supreme court of either as "political judges," and who do not consider their decisions on constitutional questions to be the best contributions of which their minds are capable towards the interpretation and development of the constitutions of their respective countries.

As one who took part in the plebiscite agitation and voted for prohibition in Nova Scotia in March last, I may say that I do not think that more than one lawyer out of ten or one layman out of three in Nova Scotia or in all the Dominion of Canada, believed that the provincial legislatures had power to prohibit the liquor traffic. There are probably not one thousand people in Canada to-day who do not believe that the opinions delivered by the several judges of our supreme court on this question represent their honest understanding of our constitution, and there are probably not ten thousand who are satisfied that the interpretation of the majority of the court was constitutionally wrong. Many of us are perfectly satisfied that the sole power to prohibit the liquor traffic is held to lie with the Dominion legislature, corresponding to your federal congress, where everybody took for granted it was, until the point was recently raised that by a narrow, forced, textual constitution of certain clauses of our constitution, provincial legislatures might have power to prohibit the sale of liquor within their respective territorial jurisdictions.

We believe that a provincial prohibition of the sale of liquor, without power to restrict its importation into the province, would be but a partial and ineffective measure. What we want is a sweeping enactment by the Dominion parliament, forbidding the importation and manufacture, as well as the sale, in the northern half of North America, of all intoxicating liquors. We want an enactment that will be enforced at every custom house on our coasts and borders and throughout the whole interior of our country by the vast army of customs and inland revenue officials maintained out of our federal revenues.

Our provincial plebiscites have in effect informed our general government and legislators that the majority of the people in the majority of the provinces want such legislation, and all that is necessary to bring it about is that the same electors who voted for prohibition in the provincial plebiscites shall vote effectively for prohibition at the ensuing Dominion elections. S. A. CHESLEY.

Lunenburg, Nova Scotia.

EARLY PETITION WORK.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Since the presentation of the Polyglot Petition of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union to our government, I have been glancing backward to the early record of petition work. In my temperance scrap-book I find the following report which may interest our readers now. It is taken from a press report of the second National Convention of the W. C. T. U., held in Cincinnati, 1875.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON MEMORIAL.

Mrs. Wittenmeyer, of the committee appointed at the last convention to draft a memorial to Congress, reported that early in January a memorial had been circulated throughout the country with an appeal for signatures. The women entered upon the work of getting names with commendable promptness, and soon had forwarded to the main office numbered thousands. In fact, the work of counting was begun, but when forty thousand was reached the papers began to pour in more numerously than ever, and it had to be dropped. Having secured these names and pasted them to the memorial, which was a yard and a half wide, and made a roll as big as a sheep, tied up tastefully ("woman fashion," Mrs. Leavitt interjected) the committee took it to Washington. There was some doubt relating to the proper house to introduce it, so the ladies decided to take a look at both. They went to the gallery of the House of Representatives, but the fumes of whisky and tobacco that came up from the floor were so awful as to deter the ladies from presenting their memorial there. They then took it to the Senate. Mrs. Wittenmeyer said that although she knew many of the Senators and had often called on them, none of them seemed to be glad to see her this time. She sent her card to some that she knew to be shaky on the subject of temperance, but they were very busy. At last she sent her card to Senator Morton, who responded immediately. She had brought the petition in a carriage, it was so large she couldn't carry it. Mr. Senator Morton sent for a page and had it carried into the Senate chamber, where he stood beside it and smiled and patted the ponderous document, while the senators crowded around and evinced a great deal of curiosity. A speech on the Louisiana question was making at the time, but Senator Morton found time to introduce the memorial and the clerk read it in an unusually loud voice. It was referred to the committee on finance, where the ladies followed it on an invitation received at her suggestion. She was given permission and delivered an address to the committee, to which another lady added a postscript. The committee reported favorably, but the matter was not reached on the calendar before adjournment. In conclusion, she suggested that the women continue to use the right of petition and keep sending in memorials until the lawmakers say, "Because these people trouble us therefore will we give them relief."

In proportion to age and numbers, this was doubtless as great an achievement as the presentation of the World's W. C. T. U. Petition at Washington, February 15.

A glance backward to the first effort to enlist women of other nations in our work, compared with the records of our round-the-world missionaries, presents a contrast equally as striking, while it recalls the early leading and careful wisdom of our lamented Mary T. Lathrap.

The record is as follows:

Mrs. Lathrap suggested that in view of the fact that the women all over the world are moved upon the great subject of temperance, and are doing something at least in the mighty work, that the preparation of any letter should be one of encouragement to fellow-workmen, rather than an exhortation to duty; also, respectfully suggested that a proper committee be appointed early in the session of the convention, that they may prepare a suitable address of greeting and good cheer, to be submitted to the convention for its indorsement, and sent out with its authoritative and official sanction.

At the same convention (Cleveland, 1874) the following letter from Dr. Holland, the distinguished editor of Scribner's Magazine, was read:

To Miss Willard: NEW YORK, Sept. 26, 1875.

DEAR MADAM:—For the last twenty-five years I have watched with absorbing interest the various phases and stages of the temperance reform. I confess that I have not found much to encourage me, either in the results of personal reform or in the outcome of prohibitory legislation. Drunkards are made faster than they can be mended, and the laws are neither executed nor respected. The only way, therefore, to cure drunkenness is to cease producing it. The only way to get rid of drunkards is to stop raising them. Here is where woman's true field of labor lies with relation to this great work. The hope of the country is in its children, and the children are in the hands of women—women mainly in the home, women mainly in the school, women mainly in the Sunday-school. A child rationally educated in the principles of temperance, taught from the beginning concerning their relation to his physical, moral and social well-being; inspired with a wholesome dread of that insidious agent which is leading sixty thousand Americans to drunkards' graves every year, is as safe as human agency can make him.

I have no great hope of your success as a society in influencing legislation. I should have no great hope of the results of legislation, even should you aid in securing it. I have no expectation that you will succeed in reforming drunkards by any process in checking directly the sale of ardent spirits, but if you can do anything to impress upon the women of the nation their duty to every child coming in any way within the sphere of their influence, you will accomplish a great and good work, whose beneficial results can not be measured. We need to raise up a generation from the cradle of temperance men. Rum shops will close when they are not patronized, and legislation will not be needed when they are closed.

In this field you will find no opposition. Even drunkards do not want their children to follow in their footsteps. I think the tendency of all large organizations is to depend too much upon public efforts and public measures, and this tendency is one which, it seems to me, your society ought to avoid, if possible. Believe me, private efforts and private measures will tell most powerfully in the long run upon the best results. Stimulate these, and you will do most to secure the success which I heartily wish and pray may be yours.

Yours, very respectfully,
J. G. HOLLAND.

This view we may contrast with our established system for scientific temperance instruction in the public schools throughout the nation, and which has been made possible only through or by and of legislation.

The treasurer's report of that year was as follows:

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Receipts from various leagues, state auxiliaries and individual donations, $381.83; disbursements, $167.20; balance in treasury, $214.63.

Recapitulation of receipts by states:

| | |
|---|---|
| Ohio | $210.85 |
| Indiana | 54.00 |
| New York | 43.12 |
| Pennsylvania | 32.31 |
| Vermont | 18.45 |
| Michigan | 9.00 |
| District of Columbia | 5.00 |
| Illinois | 4.50 |
| Maine | 1.50 |
| Total | $378.73 |

Think of it! By aid of individual donations the National treasury reached the sum of $381.83. Disbursements, $167.20. Where did so much money go to? It must have been squandered by Mrs. Wittenmeyer and Miss Willard, possibly in gorgeous apparel or luxurious mode of travel!

To many who have been in the volunteer army of the Crusade, who have beheld her child, the W. C. T. U., creep, toddle, walk and subsequently go abroad; it has overreached faith and awakened surprise to see so complete and far-reaching an organization evolved from such independent and disorganized or unorganized beginnings. Still, many people ignorant of the work will ask, "What have you women been doing all these years?"

LUCY H. WASHINGTON.

Port Jervis, N. Y.

AN EXPLANATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Concerning part II of my paper, "When Doctors Disagree," a white ribbon friend writes: "You will be glad, I am sure, to have me call to your notice that the word used for 'spies' in Joshua 6 : 24, 25 is not aggelos but kataskopous. I do this because there are aggelos unfriendly enough, in this age at any rate, to like to catch us tripping." Lest my obscurity of language may cause others like this dear friend to miss the sense of the very heart of my argument, please allow me to explain that by the sentence, "And 'angels' or 'messengers' is translated 'spies' in the Septuagint translation of Joshua 6 : 25," I mean just this:

The Septuagint is a translation from the original Hebrew. In that original Hebrew the word is malak, messenger (the word used in Genesis 32 : 3, for instance, where it says, "Jacob sent messengers before him to Esau," and very many other places) as the reader can see for herself by reference to Young's Concordance. Now this word malak, messenger, is translated from the Hebrew into the Greek as kataskopous spy in the Septuagint version. And as this translation of the Hebrew Scriptures into the Greek was made about three hundred years before Christ, when ancient Greek was a living language and the Hebrew in much more familiar use, it is a point of considerable importance as showing the easy transition in the thought from "messenger" to that of "spy."

KATE C. BUSHNELL.

London, Feb. 8, 1895.

AGE OF CONSENT LAWS.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—May I suggest to the W. C. T. U. that some one be commissioned to do for "age of consent" laws what Mrs. Hunt has done for scientific temperance laws, that is, lead the W. C. T. U. hosts in whitening another map, on which only Wyoming and Kansas, where woman's vote is powerful, are now white, with laws protecting a maiden's purity equally with her property to her majority at eighteen. Missouri has passed such a law within a few days through the lower house. Let some one lead and organize a demand for such a law in the other states which range from sixteen down to seven in their present laws, that make these states black indeed with the infamy of such laws as would have been impossible but for woman's exclusion from legislation. It would be easier to whiten the map in this crusade as these laws will hardly be defended, but their friends will hide rather for very shame when challenged to conflict.

WILBUR F. CRAFTS,
Sup't Nat'l Bureau of Reform.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 17, 1895.

THE path on which to walk with God is just that plain, practical, prosaic, commonplace path on which you are walking every day. And walking there with purity, with truth, with honor, with high character, you are walking with God just as much as any apostle or prophet or martyr ever did, or any Scriptural hero, or any traditional saint. —David H. Greer, D. D., in "From Things to God."

DEAR SISTERS:—Through the letters that come to the LOCAL UNION I am convinced that the department of

MOTHERS' MEETINGS

is held a little nearer and dearer than others, by the majority, though we are all loyal to all, else disintegration would soon be apparent.

If you find your Mothers' Meeting dwindling down to a handful of good women whose children are grown-up and "safe"—which means "saved,"—and your weekly or monthly program reduced to a reiterated deploring of the needs and failures of other mothers, it is time for some wise reconstruction.

I have in mind a mother who needs just such ministrations as a live Mothers' Meeting alone can give. But how to get her within its doors or bring it within her doors is a problem.

This mother was left motherless very young and urged out of the home-nest to be married at eighteen. "I ought to have been whipped and put to bed," is her own statement. She, only a child in body and mind, beautiful to look at, attractive in her careless laugh, heedless judgment and childish petulance or gayety, became a mother, and to-day has a son and daughter who are upon the enticing threshold of maturity.

Here are some of the spectres that my wiser eyes see hovering about her home, never a happy one, save as she finds happiness in frivolous indifference and ignorance.

First, the tobacco fiend. Both father and son smoke and the mother's answer to an appeal made at a venture, was: "It's horrid, I know—but boys must do something, and I'd rather my boy would smoke than drink. You can't make a boy mind when he's twenty and I don't want to drive him away by nagging him all the time."

In point of fact, she does not know the real nature of the poison of tobacco. She never was enlightened by Scientific Temperance Instruction nor was her son. In her pitiable ignorance she thinks if she indulges her boy in this he will reward her leniency by foregoing worse things.

Another spectre has showed its ghastly head of late. One night, the unsuspecting little woman who had "never smelt anything worse than tobacco" on her boy's breath, smelt liquor. Where were her defences? She had none. No religious principle, no reason for hoping to "influence" him, nothing but the blaze of her uncontrolled temper which soon died out. Why should her boy heed her? She scorned his pipe but made him a smoking jacket. She has made an outcry against his first visit to a saloon, but there is nothing to attract him or hold him from it but his club. Her house is not a home.

And her daughter? She is a beautiful girl, but frail as a flower that opened its eyes too early in the spring breezes. Her delicately knit body is often full of pain yet she imprisons it in the most fashionable corset money can buy. "Child, they are killing you," I said one day. "Do you not understand how they help on the very weakness from which you suffer? Your figure is trim,"—appealing to her almost forgiveable vanity—"get an easy waist and give your weaker organs a chance."

She meant to yield and asked her mother to exchange the boned thing for something softer. But the outcome was that the elder child laughed to scorn the better resolve and the poor girl's "side" has kept her awake even more than usual at night and she is suffering daily under the stress of the "nice, new"—instrument of torture.

This boy and girl will probably both marry. The conditions are just right for broken hearts, unhappy homes, and children whose heritage will be selfishness, wilfulness, warped tempers, with bodies that will be imperfectly developed and tainted with the poison of tobacco, if not of liquor. And the children's children? God grant the chain be broken before then! Who can break these chains of impaired heredity that are hampering a free manhood and womanhood in our land? Plainly it lies at the door of the W. C. T. U.

Workers, do not minimize your work. Many are crying out, "Oh, for experience and tact and power!" Get experience; learn tact by doing prayerfully as you would be done by, for tact is but the Golden Rule in action; and power comes through prayer and practice.

Search out the mothers. Christ came to "seek and to save." Do not simply advertise your meetings and wait for numbers. Go out and "compel" them to come in. Lay siege to the situation. In small communities a righteous vigilance might be discreetly kept over every home. Your good white ribbon husband can give you many a hint touching the probable home-life of his companions in the business world. Get acquainted with the school-teachers and Sunday-school teachers, and through them obtain clues of "how to reach" this one and that.

Be dissatisfied until you have broken down every mother's excuse, for not attending your mothers' meetings, sending their children to your Loyal Temperance Legion or your Y meetings, or reading your recommended book.

Make ceaseless use of good literature. Keep posted. When you decry corsets be able to tell definitely how to dress without them; when you make war on pickles and pastry, have ready simple, toothsome, healthful recipes to take their place; when you point out the evils of the popular novel, have at your tongue's end a list of books to replace it. Study—study—study.

Mother Experience.

WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

BY B.

What has caused this great commotion,
Which is sweeping o'er the land;
While from hilltop to the ocean
Willing helpers join the band?

Can you not discern the women
Coming from the east and west;
Calling to the voting yeomen—
"Come in force and do your best"?

Tempted by a thousand devils,
Tried and beaten in the strife;
Till it seems the prince of evils
Touches all that's dear in life.

Undo the harm that has been done,
Until our homes shall all be free;
Until beneath the glowing sun
Useless drink no more shall be.

Waft ye winds this glowing story,
Crime and sorrow soon must cease;
Trusting in the Lord of Glory,
Under Him we'll find release.

Atlantic City, N. J.

A THIRTY-FIVE CENT CHRISTMAS.

A True Story.

BY M. C. G.

"Once upon a time," as the pitiless, snow laden, November winds began to sweep across the desolate prairies of Kansas, a Little Mother was beginning to realize that Christmas was coming. As she thought of her five children, the poor crops, the scarcity of money, the taxes—relentless as death—a great lump arose in her throat at the realization that it would be utterly impossible for Santa Claus, her own childhood's idol, to fill even the toes of all those little stockings.

But she soon found to her utter amazement that the five little hearts were set, not on stockings—oh, no!—but on "A be-yu-ti-ful, love-ly, shiny Trismas tree." Her heart went down, down, down at the mere thought, but as mother's hearts are made of something very like India rubber it soon rose again, and mother-like, she took stock of her resources. There was plenty of pop-corn, some red and blue yarn, a piece of old mosquito netting, some small pieces of gold and silver paper (not very bright, to be sure,) an old moth-eaten scarlet crocheted hood, a worn blue overskirt, a relic of other days, and part of an old black overcoat.

The first thing she did was to rip up an old cap for a pattern and cut from the coat remnant a cap for each of the boys. She fitted Karl's on Will and Will's on Karl, for they were very proud of being trusted with "mother's secrets." When the baby boy was asleep his cap was fitted on his own little head, and both boys were trusted with that secret.

By this time papa had become so much interested that the Little Mother determined he should have one also. Then the "relic" was fashioned into a pretty dress for little sister, which would have made Worth open his eyes. The red and blue yarn was knitted into mittens of wonderful combinations.

One sunny day papa took all the children on a pleasure excursion to the sorghum mill, and the Little Mother, in a fit of reckless extravagance, mixed some sorghum cake, emptied into it all the spices the house afforded, traded a few eggs to a neighbor for a cup of raisins, put them in, and baked seven little fruit cakes and frosted them. These she hid away very carefully. Poor Little Mother! she was so hungry she could have eaten every one of them herself.

A few days before Christmas the wealth of the whole family was poured into her lap, and thirty-five cents realized. After much anxious thought and many erasures the following list was prepared:

| | |
|---|---|
| 1 Small doll | .05 |
| 1 Rubber ball | .05 |
| 1 Harmonica | .05 |
| 10 Marbles | .05 |
| 1 Jumpingjack | .05 |
| ½ Pound candy | .10 |
| | .35 |

Then she went in a big wagon with a neighbor to town, seven long, prairie miles, to buy the precious gifts.

By this time the big lump was entirely gone from her throat, and even papa began to be excited. The mosquito netting was carefully laundried, and from it were cut candy bags in hearts, moons, shoes and mittens, one for each of the family. The children worked the edges with some of the red yarn, and when filled (?) with the fancy candy they looked so tempting that they had to be put away with the fruit cakes. "Fancy things," supposed to be stars, hearts and crescents were cut from stiff paper and covered with the gold and silver paper. Threads were run through them and they were laid away for ornamental purposes.

Papa began to wonder where the "tree" was to come from to hold all these wonderful things, for Christmas trees did not grow wild on the prairies of Kansas. He had a queer expression on his face when asked to cut a big limb from a peach tree and fasten it securely in a block of wood. The two little ornamental evergreens which stood like tired, discouraged sentinels between the house and front gate were made to contribute all the green twigs they could possibly spare and these were carefully tied on to the desolate looking peach limbs. The children had been busy all day and on Christmas eve popping and stringing corn, which was festooned over the tree until it looked as if a snow storm had settled on it. The wise Little Mother knew that the joy of Christmas was in the doing for others and not in the receiving, so she let the little folks do all they could.

When the tired, happy little family sat down to "tea" (consisting of corn-bread, sorghum and a small cup of milk for each) papa, catching the spirit of the babies, proposed to wash the dishes so that the Little Mother could arrange the presents.

As she went into the room alone and placed to the very best advantage all the poor, pitiful little gifts which had cost her so many hours of work and anxious thought; as she thought for an instant of the overloaded Christmas stockings of her own childhood, the big "lump" threatened to return. But when the door was opened and the little procession filed in and she saw the eager faces radiant with delight, the big brown eyes wide open with wonder and astonishment, the black eyes shining like stars, the baby speechless with surprise, she thanked God for her babies and for her "thirty-five cent Christmas."

Pasadena, Cal.

THE KNIGHTS OF KING ARTHUR.

BY REV. WILLIAM BYRON FORBUSH.

The opposition that is rising in many quarters to the Boys' Brigade on account of its military tendency brings into prominence a newer method of reaching and banding together boys, based upon the idea of chivalry, but not involving the military feature.

The plan is to gather the boys in churches and other religious institutions into "Castles" and to imitate by the use of titles, badges, ceremonials, etc., the stately court of the Round Table of King Arthur. The purpose is by the telling of the old poetic legends, the inculcation of principles of temperance, purity and reverence and incitement to personal deeds of honor, to cultivate a broad, chivalrous, Christian manhood. The Order is not a secret one, the attractive initiatory services being open to parents.

Among the incidental influences of the plan are, insisting upon order and honor, training in parliamentary and literary work, and obtaining help by correspondence with neighboring Castles. Frequent conventions are not encouraged, and as none of the model forms are obligatory upon any Castle, any boys' church club may become affiliated with the Order. Prize speaking, lyceum work, Bible or missionary study, athletics and outdoor games are features often added.

One or two of the original plans of the Order are worth mentioning. It is suggested that the boys be divided into three graded classes or "degrees." The pages who cannot vote, simply promise fidelity, the esquires take the triple pledge of purity, temperance and reverence, the Knights, who are the leaders, are acknowledged Christians. The tendency of the Order is thus directly upward, and the Castle becomes, under wise leadership, a fruitful means of Christian nurture. The offices are arranged to be held by each in turn, and rewards of honors and titles are offered for physical, mental and manly attainments.

Although only a year and a half old, the Order is found in fifteen states and the Dominion of Canada. In a number of cases moribund branches of the Loyal Legion and other kinds of clubs have added the King Arthur features without disturbing their own integrity, with good effect.

Yarmouth, Nova Scotia.

BOYS' BRIGADES.

One of the most painful features of our modern Christianity is its shallowness. We are too easily satisfied with shams. Few stop to examine principles and to seriously consider the true bearing of things; but too many are willing to follow the leader like sheep, and to do as others do. If a thin veneer of religion, such as opening a meeting with prayer, is put over a thing which in itself may be essentially worldly, forthwith it is adopted as a part of church work.

One of the latest of these fancies, which a certain class has taken up, is the Boys' Brigade. A great deal has been written and spoken in favor of it, but as yet little has been written or said on the other side. Good people have misgivings, but they hesitate to condemn what other good people see nothing wrong in.

A great deal of worldly wisdom has been brought to bear upon the organization of the Boys' Brigade, and it is not to be wondered at that this "playing at soldiers" should have become popular. It would be strange indeed if it were otherwise. Just look at the attractions: a semi-uniform, a toy gun, drilling, marching out, parades, inspections, summer camps, bands, musical drills, salutes, presentation of colors, signaling, ambulance displays, physical exercises, gymnastics, church parades with bands playing and leading the singing, military funerals, drumhead service, sports of all kinds, football, cricket, races, swimming, tugs of war, industrial exhibitions, medals, prizes, badges, certificates, concerts, social gatherings, games, books and periodicals, acting charades, etc. No one could doubt that such things would please boys and bring them together, and some of them are no doubt right enough in their own place. But the question is this: Is it the duty of the church of Christ to carry on such a work, and by such means?

It is said that all the officers must be men of undoubted Christian character. Unfortunately, that description, in the present day, covers a great variety of persons, and is interpreted in different ways by different people. Is it not the case that in many churches any smart, well-meaning, well-educated young man, against whom nothing bad can be said, will be accepted as an officer in the Boys' Brigade without any very searching investigation as to whether or not he is really a converted man, who has already been engaged in, or is capable of engaging in really spiritual work. Is it not the case, indeed, it is the case, that those have been asked to engage in the work who make no profession of a change of heart.

One of the great mistakes which is made by some of the churches in the present day is the initiation of young people and others into Christian work before they are Christians; in some cases even before they profess to be Christians, or are members of the church. It is quite a common thing nowadays to hear a general invitation extended to the young people who form our guilds and choirs, etc., to engage in Christian work, quite irrespective of whether they have the one great qualification or not. So it comes to pass that there are numbers of "workers" in our churches who have no real interest in spiritual things, although greatly taken up with the more worldly or frivolous concerns which are now so commonly included in our church agencies.

The speaking of the boys as if they were all Christian soldiers is most injurious. Even ministers, when called upon to address Boys' Brigades, look out their most military subjects and speak from texts such as "Quit you like men; be strong," which are for those who are already Christians.

How wrong it is to train the poor boys to think that, because they wear the semblance of a uniform and are organized after a military fashion, they are entitled to sing such hymns (intended for Christians only) as "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Soldiers of Christ, arise!"

"Stand up, stand up for Jesus,
Ye soldiers of the cross."

It is very easy for supporters of the Boys' Brigade to affirm that it does not foster a military spirit and to say that they have no ground for fear on that score. The probabilities are all the other way.

At a recent meeting of the Boys' Brigade in London Lord Wolseley went so far as to wish that the members of the brigade might be allowed by the government to carry real guns, that would go off, instead of the sham rifles they now possess.

A writer, in giving an account of the founding and the work of the English Peace Society, says: "The well-being, if not the very existence of society, depends upon the preservation of the Christian spirit; and the Golden Rule is as binding upon nations as it is upon individuals. Yet we have seen in the vestry of a Christian church two huge piles of rifles that were there stored for the use of the Boys' Brigade! The minister of the church assisted in the drill of these boys! Can you imagine His Master doing the same?"—J. Forbes Moncrieff in The Herald of Peace.

White sand means pure water, but the lilies and the wild rice will not grow in it. They must have a bottom of mire, and do not ask for a top of crystal, though they rise above both. Bread and beauty are divine transformations of materials and qualities that are the reverse of themselves. If you want a church that will work as if it were inspired, root it in ground which Satan calls his own.—Interior.

THE GREAT PETITION.

BY J. A. S.

The children plead, too, for the home,
With temperance flags unfurled,
Enlisted in the peaceful war—
The children round the world.

"A little child shall lead them,"
Are the words that Jesus said,
And God will surely guide the path
Their tiny feet shall tread.

Around the world they're echoing now
The call, "Saloons must go!"
O rulers great in every land,
'Tis yours to have it so!

Chicago, Ill.

A TEMPERANCE BIRD.

BY MRS. ALBERT L. PRITCHARD.

"You will soon see," said Miss Lann to the children who clustered about their beloved friend, "that Gondokoro, who was an African parrot, with soft lovely gray feathers, a resplendent red tail and strong white beak, really earned this name. He was visiting the Azores one winter—"

"Please, what's Azores?" Toddie asked.

"They are a group of nine islands in the Atlantic Ocean. You and Paul look them up on the map some day. It is said that these islands are all that is left of a big continent, that ages ago dropped suddenly out of sight into the ocean, through some great eruption. They are all of volcanic formation at any rate. The name Azore means hawk. The islands belong to Portugal and the Portuguese gave them the name."

"One autumn, a family party sailed for these islands intending to winter there. They took along with them a pet African parrot—this was Gondokoro. He settled down contentedly with the family at Ponta del Gada, the largest city of the islands, on San Miguel. It is said the loveliest gardens in the world are on this island. Horses are scarce in the Azores, but the children of the party did not mind that, for they had donkey rides along the coast and mules took them on long excursions. Three abreast they were carried over the mountains.

"There was a very beautiful garden attached to the hotel where the party had taken board; within it were delicious fruits, many rare flowers and roses of every variety, in greatest profusion. A small lemon grove was in one corner, with rustic seats in the shade. It was here that Gondokoro's cage was hung daily and he enjoyed it very much.

"One day there came to one of the rustic seats in the lemon grove, a gentleman, who looked pale and weak and sank down very slowly on the seat. He was a new-comer and Gondokoro perked his head on one side and eyed him curiously, but not with the alert briskness with which he always regarded children. Presently the gentleman began to doze. Now Gondokoro always went to sleep whenever anybody else did in close vicinity to him. I must say it was one of his most lovely traits, for you were always sure of a quiet nap without any disturbance from him if you would only place him near you at the time. The gentleman's nap did not last long. When he awakened Gondokoro did also and proceeded to bestow his closest attention upon the new-comer.

"From his coat-tail pocket the gentleman drew out a stoppered flask and unscrewing it put it to his lips and tipped his head backward.

"Gondokoro lowered his head yet more towards the gentleman and seemed very much interested in the proceedings. The gentleman put down his flask for a moment, and just as he was raising it again to his mouth Gondokoro called out, 'Stop it! stop it!'

"The stranger almost let the flask drop, and he stared around him bewildered.

"Gondokoro had often called out, 'Stop it, stop it,' to children who poked him in play with sticks, and at times he volunteered this injunction without reason, but at last a golden opportunity had come.

"The stranger quite recovered himself, finally attaching no meaning to the words he had heard as having no possible reference to himself. He was mistaken.

"Gondokoro was getting quite stirred up and excited; resolution was in his eye; he craned his head so far down that he came near falling from his swing perch.

"As the stranger again attempted to raise the flask, Gondokoro fairly shrieked, 'Stop it, stop it! you stop it!' with the same energy he used when battling with the children and their sticks.

"The stranger dropped his hand and turned quite pale, he was unconscious that the spirits in his flask gurgled rapidly out to the ground.

"'Oh! it's you, is it?' he said rising.

"'Good-morning,' Gondokoro said in prompt response, as if his intentions were of the best.

"'Well, good-morning to you! I thought it was some sort of edition of Poe's Raven by that shriek of yours! Temperance, are you? that's right!'

"'Good for you,' said Gondokoro. It was one of his frequent exclamations.

"'Thank you! I am afraid something has been bad for me for many a day, but under your admonitions, you wise old owl, things may change.'

"'Gondokoro comfortable!' said the parrot. He had learned that from a good-natured fat cook in the family.

"Ah! I have put you in a more comfortable frame of mind—you won't shriek at me any more. Good, very good! I will see that I do not give you cause again; under the convenient shade of these lemon trees, take your first lesson now out of the repertoire of that Raven of Poe's; come now, say it after me, nevermore!' The stranger significantly spurned with his foot the empty flask on the ground.

"'Beautiful Gondokoro! beautiful!' said the bright bird. His mistress had taught him that.

"'Oh, yes. You have done some beautiful work this morning, no doubt in the world about that! But don't stop there; keep it alive, come now, nevermore! Yes, you are listening—now then—nevermore!'

"'Gondokoro want seed!' Gondokoro said.

"'Ah! I see! Refreshments after effort; here come some children. I will give you your lesson later, meanwhile I think I have mine quite perfect. Thank you.'

"Well, children, from that time when no one was around, the stranger gentleman was often seen at Gondokoro's cage, but he always walked away whenever any one approached, and in two weeks the children were shouting, 'Do hear Gondokoro! do hear him! he says nevermore! nevermore! how plain he says it!'

"The things Gondokoro said to the gentleman, under the lemon trees," concluded Miss Lann, "were not astonishing at all, for it often occurred that his remarks were just suited to the thing happening. A tree branch knocked off the sunhat of his mistress one day, and Gondokoro called out, 'Good for you!' which was very funny. Another time some one asked him on an oppressively warm day if he was hot, and he said, 'Whew!' So you see how very apropos some of Gondokoro's sayings were."

New York City.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

395.

CHARADE.

First is a name both sweet and true,
That many women own,
It suits alike the lowly maid
Or queen upon the throne.

Second's a help to manual toil,
As round and round it goes,
It moulds both wood and metal parts,—
You've guessed it, I suppose.

And third you'll surely dodge in time,
For fear of heavy pain,
Or you may give it for yourself,
And thus admittance gain.

My whole's a name mourned everywhere
True temperance workers dwell,
A poet and orator was she
Whose fame redeemed lives tell.

396.

STATE PUZZLE.

One-fourth of Missouri, one-eighth of Carolina, one-ninth of Hampshire, one-fourth of Iowa, one-seventh of Georgia, one-seventh of Alabama and one-sixth of Nevada.

397.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of thirty letters, and am a great organization.

My 3, 2, 12, 8, 17, 21 is the name we all love.

My 8, 4, 15, 23, 14, 8 1 11, 18, 28, 12, 8 is the name of a noble Christian woman.

My 18, 21, 6 24, 14, 9, 6, 25 is the name of an enterprising woman.

My 16, 21, 26, 8 is what we should all practice.

My 7, 22, 27, 30, 29, 5 is an instrument of war.

My 19, 13 is mixed up type.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED FEBRUARY 7.

386. Abraham Lincoln, born February 12, 1809.

387. Snow—Now—No.

388. Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow, they toil not, neither do they spin, yet I say unto you that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.—Matthew 6: 28.

Correct answers: Marian Marsh; Effie Butterfield; I. P. Montfort; Agnes L. Fitch; Grace G. Capen; Alma L. Woodburn; Frederic C. DePuy; Helen Louise Colby; Grover Drummond; Mattie E. Hawk; Shelby H. Frazer; Eleanor M. Wylie.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Did you notice in the daily papers of February 16 words in big letters like these:

ALL THE WORLD SPEAKS.

MILLIONS OF SIGNATURES.

POLYGLOT PETITION PRESENTED TO THE GOVERNMENT.

WHITE-RIBBONERS IN WASHINGTON.

If you did, some of you knew at once what was meant. For you had read all about it in THE UNION SIGNAL ever since you were big enough to understand. To some of our later Cornerers, however, who have not been brought up in temperance families or have lived where there was no W. C. T. U., these important words may have had no meaning whatever.

Let us think about this great event and what it all means. "Polyglot Petition." A petition is asking for something, not in a thoughtless way, but prayerfully and earnestly. Polyglot means many languages. The two words are then very plain. Now turn to one of the recent back numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL, say on page 13 of January 24, and read the words of the Great Petition. Look up the big words in the dictionary. A big word generally means some simple thing, and I am glad there are not many unnecessary big words in this good Petition. Notice the sentence in the Petition:

We know that indulgence in alcohol and opium and in other vices which disgrace our social life makes misery for all the world, and MOST OF ALL FOR US AND FOR OUR CHILDREN.

Now you see why Cozy Cornerers are interested in this great roll of white cloth pasted with names which would make a line three miles long if written in a single row. These names represent eight million people, who want to put King Alcohol out of the kingdom he has occupied so long. It is for the children in the homes of all the world that we plead when we ask:

Protect our homes by the total prohibition of this curse of civilization throughout all the territory over which your government extends.

Some Cozy Cornerer may ask, "Do you think they will do it?" And I answer with faith and hope, "Yes, though it may not be very soon. This earnest plea will make the rulers and the lawmakers think, and some day it will be done, though perhaps not in the same way or as quickly as we would like to have it."

Yours for home protection,

Aunt Jamie

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

For the last ten years THE UNION SIGNAL has been sent to us by our cousin; we all enjoy reading it so much. In December we had a delightful surprise; twice it snowed for a few minutes, then, to our regret, stopped, and has not snowed since. I don't suppose it will again until next year. I was fifteen January 6.

Summerville, S. C. ROSA DOAR.

Don't you think you would enjoy the cold winter of the North, Rosa?

---

I am a temperance boy, nearly twelve years old. I have signed the pledge. I have a brother nine years old named Frank and a sister three years old named Ruth. I belong to the L. T. L. Frank and I have a kitten and five white rats, three small ones and two large ones. The small ones have just got their eyes open. My mother takes THE UNION SIGNAL, and she belongs to the W. C. T. U. We boys have very much fun playing in the snow and building snow forts. I would like to join the Cozy Corner. I would like to receive letters from some of the Cornerers.

Onekama, Mich. EARLE S. RICHMOND.

Write to one of our Southern Cornerers, Earle, and tell about your good times playing in the snow.

---

My mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. When I was a week old I joined a Baby Band. I would like to join your Cozy Corner. I have a sister five years old and a brother two years old. Mamma took us to the Temple. I am seven years old. CORINNE CORLISE WHITE.

Creighton, Neb.

Now you are big enough for the L. T. L., Corinne. I hope you'll keep on growing in temperance and good works until you are a full-fledged W. C. T. U. member.

---

We do not use tea, coffee, tobacco nor whisky at our house. We are all for temperance. I have a little sister and brother. My sister is two years old, and brother is six. My mother takes THE UNION SIGNAL, and belongs to the W. C. T. U. We go to school. We both signed the pledge two years ago. I would like to be one of your little nieces. LORA MARGARET COPELAND.

Eskridge, Kan.

An "all for temperance" niece gets the Cozy Corner salute and a warm welcome.

THE UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF—FRANCES E. WILLARD, LL.D.
CORRESPONDING EDITOR—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.
MANAGING EDITOR—MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR—JENNIE A. STEWART.
CONTRIBUTING EDITOR—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. CAROLINE F. GROW, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President. MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, London, Eng.
MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, Winthrop Center, Me.
MRS. LUCIE B. TYNG, Peoria, Ill.
MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Chicago.
MME. LOUISE DEMOREST, New York City.
MRS. L. H. PLUMB, Streator, Ill.
MRS. E. B. INGALLS, St. Louis, Mo.
MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Burlington, Ia.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON, The Temple, Chicago.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Kansas City, Mo.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. F. E. BEAUCHAMP, Lexington, Ky.
Treasurer.—MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK ..... 1
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Consistency. By Bessie Baker ..... 2
McCracken's Boy. By Helen Rachel Robb ..... 2
"Wheels Within Wheels." By Frances E. Willard ..... 3
Railroad Ties. By John G. Woolley ..... 3
Suffrage for Women. By Rev. H. M. Dean ..... 3
CORRESPONDENCE:
Legislative Work in South Dakota ..... 4
New York Notes ..... 4
Our Young Women ..... 4
Provincial Plebiscites ..... 4
Early Petition Work ..... 5
Age of Consent Laws ..... 5
LOCAL UNION ..... 5
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, Woman's Christian Temperance Union. By B. ..... 6
A Thirty-five Cent Christmas. By M. C. G. ..... 6
The Knights of King Arthur. By Rev. William Byron Forbush ..... 6
Boys' Brigades ..... 6
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, The Great Petition. By J. A. S ..... 7
A Temperance Bird. By Mrs. Albert L. Pritchard ..... 7
Soft-Shelled Nuts ..... 7
AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER ..... 7
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
In Washington With the Polyglot Petition ..... 8
Woman as a Citizen ..... 8
Our New English Friend ..... 8
THE WATCH TOWER ..... 9
State Reporters ..... 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Missouri—Connecticut—Oklahoma—New Mexico ..... 10, 11
News in a Nutshell ..... 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Important Notice—Sabbath Observance—Schools of Methods—Announcement ..... 11
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S NOTES ..... 12
ORGANIZERS' CORNER ..... 12
TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS ..... 13
TEMPLE RECEIPTS ..... 13
OUR LIBRARY TABLE ..... 14
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT ..... 15
SIGNAL NOTES ..... 16

For great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised: he also is to be feared above all gods.—I. Chron. 16:25.

IN WASHINGTON WITH THE POLYGLOT PETITION.

Washington is a city not easily taken by surprise. So many notable gatherings have been held within its precincts; so many movements of national and world-wide importance have centered there that it must be something indeed above the ordinary which shall cause a ripple upon the surface of its stately daily living. But Washington has not been proof against the Polyglot Petition. If the reception accorded to the monster Petition in the land where its thought had birth is, as we believe, typical of those which await it in its round-the-world touring, it will have from first to last a triumphal procession.

The meetings which began in the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal church on the morning of Friday, February 15, continuing there through that afternoon and all of Saturday, moving to the great convention hall for Friday evening only, and reaching their height, as public gatherings, in the great mass-meetings of Sunday when a score or more of Washington pulpits were occupied by white-ribboners, had their final completion and the attainment of their ultimate object in an interview with President Cleveland in the Red Room at the White House on Tuesday, February 19, at half-past two in the afternoon.

The District union had been wise in planning and indefatigable in effort, and from first to last the meetings were of marked interest, not to the W. C. T. U. alone, but to the great public as well, as was proven by the large attendance, by the patience with which disappointments have been borne, and the quiet but intense enthusiasm which has pervaded every gathering.

That our Chieftain and Lady Henry Somerset were unable to be present on Friday and Saturday was, at first, a shock from which it seemed as if there could be no rallying, but that wise head and strong right arm of the organization, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, vice-president-at-large, was at her post, and under her skillful generalship matters soon fell into line. The general officers, with the exception of Mrs. Beauchamp, were all present, as were most of the well-known names which appeared upon the program. Mrs. Mary E. Griffith's address of welcome was a specially inspiring note of cheer and prophecy of coming victory, while Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman's response was as piquant as herself. Miss Elizabeth Greenwood being unable to be present, the prayer and consecration service was led by Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, and the earnestness with which the women presented the Great Petition to the throne of Grace made of the hour a genuine Pentecost.

But there is not space to mention all the salient features of that wonderful three days' meetings. Each one seemed at her very best. Mrs. Emily McLaughlin's sweet persuasive voice and words were never more eloquently persuasive; Belle Kearney scintillated wit, wisdom and eloquence; Miss Yates was, as ever, forceful and graceful; Mrs. Hoffman and Mrs. Barker gave forth volleys of irrefutable logic and eloquence; Mrs. Carse presented the Temple and told of her call to W. C. T. U. work, to a most sympathetic audience, while the Loyal Temperance Legion hour with Mrs. Blair, and physical culture with Miss Leavens, all struck concordant notes in the great harmony. Nor can we forget our sisters of the District union. Mrs. Platt's paper, "The W. C. T. U. has Attained her Majority; Is she Worthy of Citizenship?" was one of the most thoughtful and inspiring we have heard, and should by all means become a part of our white ribbon literature. Miss Weightman and Mrs. La Fetra gave earnest, practical suggestions as to the especial needs of the work in the District which led to a genuine love-feast of testimony from sisters all over the house.

The presence of Dr. Henry S. Lunn, of London, was one of the pleasant features of the gathering, and his genial, hearty camaraderie and helpful, encouraging words were greatly appreciated by all. Miss Willard and Lady Henry arrived Saturday night, and though greatly worn by illness, were yet able to speak briefly at the meetings of Sunday night.

Of course the two most prominent events were the meeting in Convention Hall, of which a brief account was given in last week's issue, and the interview with President Cleveland. It was wonderful to look out upon that sea of faces in that mammoth hall and to realize that the gathering was but the concrete expression of the mighty public sentiment which had been steadily rising through the past decade and which found other and more complete expression in the innumerable company of witnesses, which from every hand were mutely but eloquently protesting against the existence of the liquor system. Nothing that was said, nothing that could have been said that night approached in eloquence the silent presence of the Petition itself. The audience proved their keen appreciation of this by the quietness and calmness with which they adjusted themselves to the absence of Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. The speakers proved it by the quickness with which they rallied to the demands of the hour and the way in which they outshone themselves. Many distinguished men and women have said that in one sense the meeting was a greater success than if those whom all went to hear had been present, because it showed the people the strength of the organization and its wealth of magnetic leaders.

The interview with President Cleveland was all that could be desired. He received Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, the General Officers of the National Union, and Mrs. Griffith, president of the District. Miss Willard addressed the President as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT:—The Polyglot Petition addressed to the governments of the world and calling for the prohibition of the traffic in alcoholic liquors as a drink, the prohibition of the opium traffic and all forms of legalized social vice, has been signed by half a million citizens of this republic, and by means of signatures, indorsements and attestations includes seven and a half million adherents in fifty different nationalities. This Petition has been circulated by the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union and will be presented to all the leading governments. Inasmuch as the Petition originated and has been most largely signed in the United States, it is hereby respectfully brought to your attention, not on any legal ground, but because it is addressed to the governments of the world and you are the executive chief of this government. I will ask Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, recording secretary of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the United States, which has secured the largest number of signatures, to read the Petition.

(After placing a copy of the Petition in the President's hands, Mrs. Hoffman read the document with remarkable impressiveness.)

Mr. President:—We are aware that the Petition just read in your hearing cannot come before you as a legal document, but rather as an expression of the opinion and sentiment of a great multitude of your countrywomen who believe that if its prayer were granted, the better protection of the home would be secured. Knowing how difficult it was for you to grant us this hearing at a time when you are even more than usually weighted with great responsibilities, we have forborne to bring the Great Petition to the White House. Permit me to hand you this attested copy and to thank you on behalf of this delegation representing the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in this and other lands, for the kind reception you have given to our delegation.

The President greeted the delegation cordially, shaking hands with each one, and when Miss Willard had read her brief address, he replied that he had desired very much to see the ladies whose energy had got together such a great petition; he believed that every one should hold them in high honor for the good intentions with which the women's temperance society had set about and carried forward its great crusade. In our varying points of view we could not all see alike as to the best methods of temperance reform, but in the nature of the case we must each and every one desire to help forward that reform according to our best knowledge. In the spheres of life in which we are placed, it was for each of us to do that which would help forward the interests of humanity according to the best of our ability, and though our outlooks might differ our hearts should be sympathetic with every good word and work. He was glad to welcome the delegation and to hope for the movement which these ladies represented such a result as would be for the highest interests of the nation and people and of all humanity. The speech was altogether friendly and eminently safe.

Again shaking hands with the delegation, the President left the room, and a messenger asked Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset to meet Mrs. Cleveland in one of the parlors, where they had with that charming and most womanly of women a delightful interview of half an hour. They assured Mrs. Cleveland of the esteem and affection in which she was held by all white-ribboners and expressed their earnest appreciation of her teetotal habits. Mrs. Cleveland responded that she had found no difficulty in carrying out her principles, but that on the contrary she had been frequently spoken to on the subject in the most cordial terms, and that it was now considered good form in any one whose sense of duty might lead him or her to practice total abstinence from the use of intoxicants in social life. She said that she could claim no merit for having been always a total abstainer, as she had never liked liquors, and could not see what pleasure any one could find in their use.

Clearly upon its native heath victory has been scored for the Polyglot Petition and we need not arrogate a prophet's function to assert that the day is not far distant when it will be counted as one of the wonders of the world and one of the chief instruments, under God, in working out the deliverance the future surely holds.

WOMAN AS A CITIZEN.

On page 3 of this issue will be found a presentation of the suffrage question, which for sound logic and unassailable argument will commend itself to every just and reasonable mind, especially to the mind accustomed to approach all such questions in a logical way. It is these "trained minds," says Mr. Dean in the letter accompanying this synopsis of his address, "many of them lawyers, which constitute the present barrier between woman and the ballot. It is these we need to convince, and for these I wrote and for these I spoke."

This address cannot fail to be a valuable contribution to the cause of equal rights—to the upbuilding and expression of a whole humanity—and we hope that our women will give it wide circulation among the "legal male minds" which it is designed to reach. For the fundamental truths here applied to the commonwealth of Massachusetts apply with equal force to the entire Republic.

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States." Thus reads the fourteenth amendment to the National Constitution.

In the light of this authoritative definition of citizenship, and this constitutional prohibition of any abridgment of its privileges, the process of "submitting" to a vote of the people, and especially of the male people, the question of woman's enfranchisement, becomes apparent in all its glaring inconsistency. In fact it is only by courtesy that this matter can be referred to as a "question" at all. Once admit that woman is a "person"—and we think no one will refuse to do that—and it is manifestly absurd to talk of "conferring" upon her the right of suffrage, of "extending" to her that which is already hers—the privileges, together with the burdens of citizenship. It is obvious that when a state, or when the United States, inserts the word "male" in laws pertaining to the qualifications of voters, it does so at the "sacrifice of consistency." The word "male" thus used is an interpolation which clearly abridges the privileges of citizens of this Republic, and is therefore unconstitutional.

The point made by Mr. Dean that the question of whether woman will make good use of the ballot or whether she will use it at all is one with which government has nothing whatever to do, has been recognized by leading woman suffragists from the beginning. Indeed, many of them have held to the opinion that the demand for representation should be based solely upon the constitution—upon their rights as "persons"—and not upon any supposed benefits which would accrue to themselves or to society at large from the use of the ballot.

But evolution in this direction as in many others, seems to be along the line of influences, which not only appeal to the trained mind, but which educate the masses. The attempts to secure partial suffrage in state or municipality involves an agitation highly conducive to the development of the popular mind, and especially—as is all important—to the arousement of the "emotional female mind."

While it is true that as far as the governing power is concerned the framers of the Declaration of Independence regarded woman as the submerged half of mankind, still we can hardly imagine them considering the propriety of declaring that government derives its "just powers from the consent of the male governed." Thus the more we enter into the spirit of the principles upon which this republic was founded, the more the incongruity of the methods of their application is manifest.

Our forefathers builded better than they knew. For now that the day has come when woman is appearing as the emerged half of humanity, on the civic as well as on the moral and physical plane, she may, without violating either the spirit or letter of the fundamental principles enunciated by them, claim the rights, privileges and immunities of citizenship upon the same terms as the male half.

It is a natural and inevitable step in the orderly sequence of things that in the materialization of the higher forces, as in the formation of the material, woman should appear as a distinct personality; that from being a latent or passive influence, she should become an active and positive factor in human affairs. The Adamic period in citizenship is rapidly passing away; the era of the new eve is close upon us. The process of arousing man from his "deep sleep" has been going on for some time and it will not be long before awakened man will hail with joy the woman at his side and will recognize in her a help meet to share in all his councils.

Only one remonstrant, says Mr. Dean, appeared at the hearing given by the suffrage committee—an attorney who said he represented women who did not want the ballot. In answer to the question whether he was to receive a fee for his services as remonstrant, he stated that it was not his intention to receive compensation "from the women." It was later stated publicly that the attorney who appeared last year as the sole remonstrant was the "paid agent of the liquor sellers."

It makes no difference what the attitude of women themselves, the duty of government is clear. If it could be proven that not a single woman in all this land wanted the ballot, the fact remains that, according to that which constitutes citizenship as determined by the constitution, the right of suffrage is nevertheless hers, and that all that is left for government to do is to recognize this right and to remove whatever obstacles may be in the way of her exercising it to the same extent as does her co-citizen, man.

And as at present "government" means the male vote it is more necessary to convince men than it is to convince women, and that too, men who are at the center of power—men who by reason of their strong mentality, exert a potent influence upon the thought of the nation. That such men are rapidly arraying themselves upon the side of reason and justice—upon the side of the women and the human question—indicates more than anything else the growing strength and near victory of the woman suffrage cause.

OUR NEW ENGLISH FRIEND.

In pleasant contradiction to the attitude and action of certain foreign visitors to our country, who have criticised our methods and reviled our institutions, are the sentiments expressed by Dr. Henry S. Lunn, of London, in the Zion's Herald of February 13. Responding to the editor's invitation, he writes some of his "first impressions" of the United States, which may be summed up in the following paragraphs:

Ever since the day that I landed in America I have been debating in my own mind whether it was due to my own lack of insight, or to my superior insight, that your great country presented itself to me in so completely different a light from that in which it has presented itself to two prominent countrymen of mine who have recently visited the States. I may be accused by your English critics of looking at everything through the rose-colored spectacles afforded by the hearty, enthusiastic and hospitable reception with which I have everywhere been greeted. At the same time I must confess that whilst there undoubtedly is room in every direction for the most ardent reformer to throw himself with all earnestness into the constructive work of developing the resources of this great nation on wise lines, I have failed entirely to see any just ground for asserting that the social evils of American life are greater than those with which workers in England find themselves confronted. On the other hand, I have been much impressed with the splendid possibilities which lie before this young nation, with the energy and hopefulness which seem to vibrate through every fibre of their national life, and with the many features of your church life which contrast favorably with the corresponding institutions of the old country.

I had expected to find the historic sense of your nation very imperfectly developed. To my surprise I see in every direction indications that the two great struggles through which you have passed—the War of Independence and the War of the Union—have supplied you as a nation with those historic traditions and those inspiring memories of great lives, noble effort pro patria, which seem to me to be the first essentials for creating and developing that spirit of true patriotism which is so necessary to the well-being of any great nation.

Dr. Lunn arouses in us a deeper sense of self-respect as a nation by courteously chiding our lack of patriotism in accepting, unchallenged, the impetuous criticisms of superficial observers. He says:

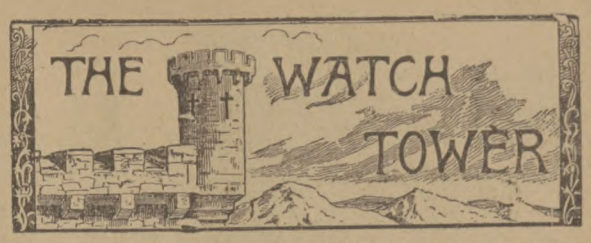
The irrepressible tendency of the English to criticism has in my case found its opportunity in the over-sensitiveness which is manifested to the opinions of your visitors. This over-sensitiveness is probably to be accounted for partly by the large admixture of Celtic blood due to the great immigration from Ireland which has taken place during the last hundred years. If this great country had been colonized by Englishmen alone, their intense self-satisfaction would have been exaggerated, and they would have regarded the rest of mankind from a pedestal of complacency to which you as yet, fortunately, have not attained. The Englishman at home never expects to be criticised, and if any foreign visitor does thus presume, his criticisms—as, for instance, in the case of Max O'Rell—never for one moment disturb the complacent self-satisfaction of the true Briton. To take a single illustration of the opposite characteristic in the life of your nation: I was addressing a New England audience the other day, and at the close of my address my hostess came to me with a sigh of relief and remarked that she had been awaiting my address in an attitude of self-defence, quite prepared for what she assumed would be an attack upon American institutions. While national self-conceit is not a virtue, it seems to me that a further development of what I would term national self-confidence might make you better prepared to disregard the superficial remarks of those who spend a few days in this country and then proceed to describe one of your greatest cities as a "pocket edition" of a place that shall be nameless.

After reading such kindly considerate impressions from a visitor of the Old World, white-ribboners of the New World will have no hesitancy in placing themselves in Dr. Lunn's charge for the journey to London and Switzerland this summer. They may be assured of courteous treatment and a fulfillment of all pledges for comfort and convenience during the tour. It is important that all intending to go should "book" for the trip (13 Astor Place, New York City) as soon as possible, as it will be necessary for Dr. Lunn to charter another steamer if the party bids fair to be a large one. The steamer Berlin, which is now chartered for the journey, will hold two hundred and ten first-class cabin passengers, and will be under the charge of Dr. Lunn, so that the party for the time being will be as one large family. There is the greatest possible independence on this white-ribbon tour (to which "outsiders" are welcome), as no traveler is obliged to take either one of the three trips just as laid down, but can make such detours or extensions of each trip as is desired.

A POINTED illustration of the fact that knowledge is the entering wedge of all salutary reform is found in the following incident. When Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset went to Haverhill, Mass., to speak to the women strikers, very many of their friends took them to task, feeling that it was a great misfortune. One of these was the wife of a prominent capitalist in Boston, and this is what she recently said to our two leaders:

You don't know how hurt I was with you because I went by what the newspapers said, as they were my only source of information. But I heard that Miss Nason, the leader of the women who had struck, was to speak in Boston, giving a full account of their reasons, and as I had a willingness at least in my heart to hear both sides, I went to her meeting. She impressed me at once as she did you, as a woman not only intending to do right, but a woman with a clear head and a true heart for her guides. I could not help believing every word she said, and as she related the wrongs of the working people in Haverhill and explained what the contract was that bound them and what it would mean to the workers in this country if these contracts should spread throughout other industries, I thanked God that you two women had the courage to speak for them, no matter what it might cost you, and from this hour my sympathies are with you and with the strikers at Haverhill. As a matter of course I am opposed to strikes and so are you, but there are times when they become the last desperate resource of people desperately wronged.

Miss Nason is a woman of whom our white-ribboners are likely to hear more. She is one of them in nature and spirit, and we should not wonder if she would lift up her voice in a National W. C. T. U. Convention.



Miss Cassie L. Smith writes: "The epitaph on the gray granite headstone that marks the resting place of the body of my precious friend, Lois Smith, is "'A faithful gospel evangelist,

A brave white-ribbon soldier,
A burning and a shining light,
An overcomer.'"

Lois Smith was for many years one of our National evangelists, wonderfully effective in the Lord's service. Blessed be the overcomers!

***

One of the strongest arguments that has ever been urged in favor of woman's suffrage was the action of the Wyoming men, who, after having had woman's suffrage in the territory for twenty-five years, were determined to have it also in the state. But Congress was unwilling to admit Wyoming with woman's suffrage, and the representatives of Wyoming telegraphed their constituents that the territory could never come in until that clause had been removed. The mass-meeting of women knowing the necessity of statehood to their territory and confident that the men would give them the ballot as soon as the state was admitted, decided to consent to the withdrawal of that provision, and so informed the men's mass-meeting, but those grand men sent this word to their representatives: "You tell those men that Wyoming needs statehood; we can never have the irrigation necessary until we are a state, but our wives, mothers and sisters have wrought with us since the territory was organized, and we will stay out of the Union a hundred years before we will enter without woman's suffrage." And without further ado, Wyoming was admitted.

***

It is not generally known how "a glass too much" overthrew the Orleans dynasty and sent the family into exile. The oldest son and heir of Louis Philippe was the Duke of Orleans, a generous, noble and gifted youth, and universally popular. One morning, on leaving Paris to join his regiment, he invited a few friends to breakfast. Although not given to dissipation, in the gayety of the occasion he drank "a glass too much." On arriving at his destination, dizzy from the drink, he leaped from his carriage, his head struck the pavement, immediately causing his death. The succession of a noble scion was thus destroyed, and the family was afterward exiled.

***

In a striking passage Madame Severine describes the spiritual side of the miner's existence. "For the most part, these poor creatures have faith in God. But He is so high above and they so far down; their voice so weak and the distance so great, that while they keep unbroken the sweet faith in which they were cradled in childhood, they seek for salvation nearer at hand. They are mystics; their life is full of traditions, as their minds are crammed with legends. There are haunted corners of the mine, they tell you, where even the boldest and the most combative would not venture for the world, for fear that he might see rising from among the rocks the shades of departed friends, or the white lady, whose mere glance is a forewarning of death within a year. The miners who have taken the place in our modern mythology of the gnomes who searched for treasure in the subterranean depths still cherish the reverence and fear of spirits which their ancestors held. The fire-damp is not a thing; it is a some one, an evil being, lurking in the hollow of the wall and watching the miner to do him mischief. They have all the ideas, all the superstitions, all the hopes and all the terrors which are felt by those whose living comes from the three sacred elements—fire, earth and water. In the plowman, in the sailor, in the miner, in all those who have cleft the furrow, on the wave, on the crust of the earth, or deep down in its sides, there is always some trace of the august toil by which they live. Their eyes which have watched the sun sinking on the horizon of the plain; which have seen the sky flash out under the lightning like a ceiling of lapis strewn with gold; which have pierced into the dark so full of visions—these eyes have still a gleam of star, of light, of shadow. They have seen the Invisible, the Beyond, that which is forever veiled from our unbelieving gaze. Their communion with nature is close and intimate, and their simple smile, when you try to shake their beliefs, has something of a pitying scorn. 'I am only a poor man,' they will tell you. But in their whole being, from their nailed clogs to their well-darned caps, there shines through all their sincere humility the unconscious superiority of their ignorance over our knowledge. We know—they have seen."

On Duty.

STATE REPORTERS.

Alabama—Mrs. Mary Jolly Van Hook, Birmingham.
Arizona—Mrs. L. C. Hughes, Tucson.
Arkansas—Mrs. H. P. Edmonson, Little Rock.
California—Mrs. Dorcas J. Spencer, 826 Waller St., San Francisco.
California (S.)—Miss G. T. Stickney, Temperance Temple, Los Angeles.
Carolina (N.)—Mrs. S. V. Tomlinson, Greensboro.
Carolina (S.)—Miss N. P. Farrow, Spartanburg.
Colorado—Mrs. Martha J. Baker, 2242 Ogden St., Denver.
Connecticut—Miss M. Belle Smith, Rockfall.
Dakota (North)—Mrs. D. W. Shinn, Casselton.
Dakota (South)—Mrs. Chestina S. Thorp, Britton.
Delaware—Mrs. Mary L. Cox, Middletown.
District of Columbia—Mrs. Clinton Smith, 720 19th street, N. W. Washington.
Florida—Sallie J. Glenn, Tampa.
Georgia—Mrs. Isabella Webb Parks, South Atlanta.
Idaho—Mrs. Mary E. McGee, Nampa.
Illinois—Mrs. G. H. Read, 412 E. North street, Bloomington.
Indiana—Mrs. Cornelia Meadows, 114 Line St., Evansville.
Indian Territory—Mrs. Sarah Ford Crosby, Muscogee.
Iowa—Mrs. Clara P. White, Volga.
Kansas—Mrs. S. S. Weatherby, Le Roy.
Kentucky—Miss Mary Rogers, 128 E. Maxwell street, Lexington.
Louisiana—Mrs. S. A. Knapp, Lake Charles.
Maine—Miss Mary French, Auburn.
Maryland—Mrs. Margaret A. Lake, 2231 St. Paul St., Baltimore.
Massachusetts—Dr. Louise Purington, 23 Allston St., Dorchester.
Michigan—Mrs. C. H. Johnson, Flint.
Minnesota—Mrs. Amy A. Green, 2208 Oakland avenue, Minneapolis
Mississippi—Mrs. Annie E. Harper, Fayette.
Missouri—Miss Lilian Wood, Maryville.
Montana—Maggie E. Templeton, Helena.
Nebraska—Mrs. Dora V. Wheelock, Beatrice.
Nevada—Mrs. Lucy M. Vandeventer, Reno.
New Hampshire—Mrs. Mary E. Partridge, Claremont.
New Jersey—Mrs. N. L. Caminade, Trenton.
New Mexico—Mrs. Eva May Tucker, East Las Vegas.
New York—Mrs. Frances Graham, Lockport.
Ohio—Mrs. Antoinette Clevenger, Wilmington.
Oklahoma—Mrs. Sue Brown, Oklahoma City.
Oregon—Mrs. L. A. Nash, Corvallis.
Pennsylvania—Miss Adda Burch, Smethport.
Rhode Island—Miss Miriam Earle, Valley Falls.
Tennessee—Mrs. T. P. Holman, Fayetteville.
Texas—Mrs. Cornelia Keith Carter, West End, San Antonio.
Utah—Miss E. E. Shepard, 826 E. 7th East St., So. Salt Lake City.
Vermont—Mrs. E. S. Farr, Bristol.
Virginia—Mrs. Howard M. Hoge, Lincoln.
Virginia (W.)—Miss Kate Ebert, Fairmont.
Washington (East)
Washington (West)—Mrs. Etta Jones, Kent.
Wisconsin—Miss Lois Russell, Eau Claire.
Wyoming—Mrs. F. A. Jones, Green River.

Canadian Reporter—Mrs. Margaret G. Ure, 772 Palace St., Montreal.

MISSOURI.

LIKE DOVES TO THEIR WINDOWS.

For several weeks our petitions have been finding their way to the state capital. Our legislature is certainly entitled to be called a reform legislature. The house has passed a number of bills in which "our folks" are interested. The anti-cigarette bill, forbidding the sale or gift of cigars, cigarettes, cigarette paper, or tobacco in any form, to any child under the age of eighteen years, has been ordered to engrossment, and the age of consent raised to eighteen years by a vote of 101 to 11. Sunday baseball games are prohibited, and equal suffrage is favorably recommended.

Quite an amusing incident occurred when our petitions, asking that at the next general election an amendment to the constitution be submitted striking the word "male" from the constitution, were presented. They were offered by Mr. Sartin, of Benton county, who under the head of presentation of petitions, held the floor for fully thirty minutes. Some of the members demanded recognition; others begged him to send all in at once, but one by one he slowly sent them to the clerk. There were fifty-one petitions from fifty-one counties, the total number of petitioners being 7,385, and of this number 5,000 were women. And yet if men were only certain that women wanted the ballot they would hasten to confer the franchise! Bates county sent in the largest number of petitioners for equal suffrage.

Our state president and secretary spent three days last week in Jefferson City. Mrs. Hoffman spoke to fine audiences in the Hall of Representatives, and in the M. E. Church South. They were most courteously treated by all members of the assembly and attended a reception at the governor's mansion, where he paid them the compliment of inviting them, through Mrs. Stevens, to the dining room to partake of coffee and cake, and assured them that he served nothing stronger. No liquors are sold in the capitol building. Mrs. Hoffman recently organized unions at Otterville and Tipton, and is now in Washington, D. C.

Maitland union recently held a very successful married women's contest, and has sent a carload of supplies to the destitute in Nebraska; at present they are endeavoring to suppress the dives in town.

One of the most delightful receptions of the season was given by the ladies of Maryville W. C. T. U., a few weeks ago, at the home of Mrs. J. M. P. Martin. Each member had invited two friends, and the spacious parlors were filled, for the union has quite a reputation for successful entertainments. An amusing feature was a contest in Biblical history, and it is still a question whether the failure to answer correctly was caused by lack of familiarity with the Scriptures or the fact that as soon as they failed they were permitted to repair to the dining room where dainty refreshments were served.

The Polyglot Petition has been presented to a number of churches and societies by our unions in the past two months. In Louisiana between 900 and 1000 names were secured. This union reports much interest in the franchise department among a very conservative people.

Our Miss Collins of that city, and vice-president of the Missouri Y. P. S. C. E. is doing a noble work through this organization for good citizenship; and just here a word to white-ribboners elsewhere: Endeavor to secure the election of an intelligent, enthusiastic W. C. T. U. woman as one of the officers or vice-presidents of the state C. E. society, and observe what an impetus will be given to the temperance and good citizenship departments.

Austin union reports successful contest work, eleven silver and one gold medal having been won. They have found a plan to make the regular meetings interesting—the writing of essays to be first read before the union and afterward at a public gathering. Not long since, in the midst of a revival meeting they received notice that the state president would in a few days deliver a long promised lecture. The ministers were consulted; it was decided that it would never do to break into the meeting, so a telegram was sent to the temperance lecturer not to come, and a dispatch was also sent at the same time to Kansas City, protesting against the licensing of a saloon. Consistency, thou art a jewel!

Clarksville workers are circulating suffrage and Polyglot Petitions, and hope to make a good showing. While prospects often seem discouraging, they are comforted with the thought that "slow and steady wins the race."

Kirkwood L. T. L. gave a delightful entertainment at the Christmas-tide. The exercises consisted of the operetta, "Mother Goose and Her Temperance Family," recitations, singing and a Christmas masque entitled, "The False Santa Claus." In the final tableaux colored lights thrown over the beautiful tree added greatly to the effect. The children had worked faithfully, and rejoiced to clear all their expenses, besides paying for their Christmas gifts.

Seventy-five gifts were presented to the members of the Loyal Temperance Legion.

A program of the Y. W. C. T. U. conference held in St. Louis February 8 and 9 has been received, and the names of the speakers, with the skillful leadership of Mrs. Ingalls, is a sufficient guaranty of a delightful and profitable session.

Mrs. Millie Lewis, one of the state organizers, reports good audiences at Foristell and Paynesville. Her future address will be Cuba, Mo., where she expects to make her home.

Contest work is being successfully prosecuted. Rev. Pimlott, of Richland, has introduced this work into Camden and Miller counties besides doing a fine work in Pulaski.

Atchison county bids fair to be the banner county this year, while Knox and McDonald are but little behind in the race. We have found co-workers in Rev. Campbell, of Vandalia, and Rev. Zeigler, of Trenton.

Pineville W. C. T. U. recently held a public meeting which was one of the most interesting ever held in the town.

Neosho union has put out printed bills announcing the devious ways of local saloon-keepers in securing license. and Granby and Seneca are prosecuting a similar campaign, greatly to the disgust of the signers of saloon petitions. Neosho union keeps its work before the people through the weekly papers, and is also circulating petitions requesting scientific temperance instruction in the public schools.

The quarterly conference of the twelfth district W. C. T. U. was held in the First Baptist church of Kansas City. The six city unions were present and each one was represented on the program. Lunch was brought by the members and spread in the basement of the church. Papers and discussions on purity, living pictures, Christmas at the poor farm, work among colored people and a suffrage catechism interested the large audience until three o'clock when the boys of the Anti-Cigarette League, and the girls of the Anti-Gum Chewing Society marched in three hundred strong. They were accompanied by two of their teachers, and created quite a sensation as they marched through the streets of the city twenty blocks to the church, where they were addressed by Mrs. Hoffman. These leagues are the first work of the Willard union recently organized, which also presented Mrs. Hoffman with the book, "The Women's Congress of the World's Fair." The Hoffman union presented a bouquet of roses, a rose for every member. These new unions have been organized since state convention by the district president, Mrs. Emma Longan.

Hawley union have paid their state pledge from the proceeds of an entertainment, and Willard union realized about forty dollars from serving meals at the Inter-State Poultry Show. The unions in this district are all alive and working hard.

An Anti-Cigarette League of two hundred members has been organized by your correspondent in the Maryville public schools. The boys manifest great enthusiasm in the work, and a number of them have ordered the badge of the League.

Lillian Wood,
State Reporter, Maryville.

CONNECTICUT.

CHEERING WORDS.

From all over the state come cheering words of the work and the workers. Madame Layah Barakat has been in the state winning a welcome everywhere.

NEW HAVEN COUNTY ELEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

was held in White Ribbon Hall, Meriden, a most enthusiastic and helpful meeting. Many visitors were present and added to the interest by their words. The great feature of the day was the locating of the public drinking fountain which the local union has donated to the city. At 1:30 the delegates and visiting white-ribboners, with the members of the Meriden union marched in a body from the hall to Crown Street Square where the fountain is to be erected.

The program consisted of one verse of "All 'round the world the ribbon white is twined," followed by the repeating of Prov. 5: 15, 16, 18 in unison. Mr. Welcome E. Burham then offered prayer, after which ground was broken by Architect Bloomfield. A verse was then sung of "Rock of Ages" and the W. C. T. U. benediction finished the exercise.

The other services of the day were varied and equally interesting. Everything was done that could be done to make a pleasant day and the visitors so voted it. Many incidents that added much to the enjoyment, were the songs, recitations and short addresses.

The Lucy Webb Hayes W. C. T. U., of New Haven, gave a very pleasant entertainment New Year's day at Lincoln Hall. Not less than two hundred and fifty deserving persons, mostly mothers and children, were freely given clothing and food. A bountiful collation was given and an entertainment. Addresses were made and the L. T. L. children furnished music.

Ansonia is alive and active.

Pawcatuck flourishes and is a power in the place. The L. T. L. is the most active in the state. Interest in the organization and members are added at nearly every meeting. The weekly meetings are never omitted, wherein lies one secret of the growth of the union.

Middleton union still continues its work among the poor and unfortunate, cheering many sad hearts with its spiritual and material help.

New Year receptions seemed to rage this year, so many unions held them, and while some were simply social gatherings more were in the line of a charity-dispensing character. Those who prepared and enjoyed the feast of good things themselves did well; those who gave of their ability to help and cheer others had the satisfaction of that act.

The state superintendent of juvenile work reports several gifts from the children of the Loyal Temperance Legion and has been able to make some less fortunate children happy by means of them.

Mrs. Charles Abbott, an earnest W. C. T. U. worker in the state, has passed over, and many rise up and call her "blessed."

Mrs. Lucy Augur, a loved member of the Middlefield union, also is mourned by her friends. A quiet, womanly woman, always on the side of right, she will be missed in the town where for so many years she was identified with all its best interests.

Meriden held a memorial service in memory of Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge and Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap. Appropriate Scripture selections and hymns, sketches of their lives, accounts of their funerals, and a poem of Mrs. Lathrap's were read; prayer and addresses completed the program.

M. Belle Smith,
State Reporter, Rockfall.

OKLAHOMA.

W. C. T. U. MOVEMENTS.

Since the territorial convention, our president, Mrs. M. H. Switzer, has delivered her annual address twice before large audiences, Kingfisher and Enid unions having invited her to give it at their gospel temperance meetings.

The Y's of Enid held a successful public meeting at which Mrs. Switzer gave a talk.

The Okarche union is holding gospel meetings regularly.

The Cherokee union reports a temperance meeting of the Christian Endeavorers with a crowded house. Miss Willard's address to the Cleveland Christian Endeavor International convention was read. Another feature of the meeting was short temperance quotations. Small slips, containing telling points, were passed through the audience promiscuously, each numbered, and as the numbers were called persons rose and read the quotation, giving name of author. This method added greatly to the interest of the meeting.

The Cherokee union has also held a public meeting in the interest of the peace and arbitration department with good effect. There is no saloon in the neighborhood of Cherokee union.

The Guthrie union have busied themselves sewing for the destitute, and the generous donations from the scholars of the public schools at Thanksgiving were placed in their hands for distribution. The school board of Guthrie has passed a resolution that no smoking or chewing be allowed during its session and are trying to enforce stringent rules against tobacco among the scholars.

The Polyglot Petition has been presented to public assemblies in Guthrie, as suggested by Mrs. Hoffman.

The territorial legislature is now in session at the capitol city. A saloonkeeper made a banquet and invited the lawmakers. Many of them accepted the invitation. One minister bravely scored them in his sermon the following Sabbath, for being so much under the rum power. One of the city papers published the sermon.

The Oklahoma city union has been called upon to face a very practicable proposition. A young negro was sentenced to be hung for the murder of two old people, and an attempt at murder upon the life of their little daughter; his guilt was proven beyond a doubt, but philanthropic persons circulated a petition for commutation of his sentence to life imprisonment; this petition was presented to the union while in session; a majority voted for commuting the sentence, a respectable minority voted no.

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

The Sunlight is one thing for which the territorial union is praising the Lord; the various Christian organizations are unable to maintain papers of their own and have united in publishing a Christian monthly. The W. C. T. U. are allotted one page—Mrs. M. H. Switzer, editor, and Mrs. Jennie Platt, associate editor. It is the policy of The Sunlight to further the interest of the Master, and to lend a helping hand to each religious society. On its editorial corps are the names of many leaders of organized Christianity in the territory.

The white-ribboners hereabouts threw up their hats (metaphorically speaking) with a loud hurrah, when they learned that the National treasurer announced in her annual report at Cleveland that Oklahoma W. C. T. U. had quadrupled their dues in the past year. Has any other state or territory done as well?

The Polyglot Petition was circulated in a small country Sunday-school securing twenty-seven signatures, the "brethren" wanted to sign it, one wife asking that the Petition be not mailed until she brought her husband the following Sabbath to sign it. Another wife asked to take it home that her husband might put his name to it. And why shouldn't the men sign? The W. C. T. U. is battling for the principle that under the constitution, "We the people" eliminates sex.

In sorrow we learned of the recent translation of the two leaders. Mrs. Woodbridge's loving letter to our annual convention brought her very near to us, and gave us the feeling that "we belong." Mrs. Lathrap we had loved and trusted; we feel that they waft to us the beautiful words of Tennyson:

"Sunset and evening star,
And one sweet call for me,
And let there be no moaning at the bar
When I put out to sea."

MRS. SUE UHL BROWN,
Territorial Reporter, Oklahoma City.

NEW MEXICO.

WORKERS IN ACTION.

The territorial teachers' association met in Albuquerque Christmas week. Scientific temperance was presented by Mrs. M. J. Borden. The teachers showed their appreciation by giving our state president and her subject a cordial greeting, and were interested in the general discussion. A committee was appointed to prepare resolutions of commendation and coöperation in this fundamental work of our organization. The W. C. T. U. has some strong friends among the teachers. One gentleman closed his talk on the subject by repeating the thought so many thinking people are realizing: "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is now the most powerful and influential organization throughout this country outside of the church Universal."

Mrs. Harwood, a successful teacher for many years, and territorial superintendent of Spanish work, holds occasional public meetings for the native people. She has translated several temperance tracts which have been printed in Spanish by pupils in the Evangelical Spanish school conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Harwood.

The last Sunday night of the old year a union meeting was held in the opera house, under the auspices of the Albuquerque W. C. T. U. A large audience greeted the speakers of the occasion—Reverends Beattie, Worth, Adkinson, Mrs. Borden and Professor Hodgin, who made the meeting a profitable one. Two vocal solos and music by a union choir from the city churches were among the pleasant features of the program.

Mrs. Teats on her return from Cleveland, lectured in the Albuquerque M. E. church, on social purity, and held an afternoon mothers' meeting at the W. C. T. U. hall. The department of mothers' meetings has been reorganized and is under the efficient management of Mrs. L. E. Parshall, territorial superintendent of social purity.

The present legislature readily and almost unanimously passed a law prohibiting the selling of cigarettes, tobacco, cigars and cheroots to minors.

Professor Hodgin, our W. C. T. U. brother-in-law and superintendent of the Albuquerque city schools, is doing all in his power to make pupils intelligent in regard to the effects of the narcotics in the body, the home and community. He says: "Physiology, or health lessons, are given in all the grades, having a place in the daily program. All helps at hand are used. We have Yaggy's Anatomical chart which adds much interest to the work.

To reach out broadly and directly in the cigarette fight I have organized an Anti-Cigarette League, having now more than three hundred members from among the school boys. This is managed very much after the New York city plan. The boys promise not to smoke cigarettes, and in the older grades sign a pledge to that effect. Each member is then given a badge or pin, the first installment of which is furnished us by the local W. C. T. U.

The league holds meetings, usually one a month, and enjoys a short program consisting of music, readings and a talk on the effects of tobacco. It elects a council of ten boys whose duty it is to try all who break their pledge. The offending party is deprived of his badge, but after probation for a second trial, if the council find him to be faithful, the pin is restored to him.

EVA MAY TUCKER,
Territorial Reporter, E. Las Vegas.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE importance of getting equal suffrage measures before the state legislatures is urged by a correspondent who rightly thinks there is no time like the present.

AMONG the many memorial services held for Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, was one by the newly organized union in New York city, called the Lathrap W. C. T. U. An excellent program was carried out.

SOUTH DAKOTA workers should note the change of name and address of the editor of the White Ribbon Journal, their state paper. It is now edited by Floy L. Cochrane, Brookings, to whom all communications should be sent.

THE Frances Willard Reading Circle is an organization formed among the convalescent women patients of the insane asylum at Osawatomie, Kan. About thirty members attend the meetings and the circle has just completed Miss Willard's "Glimpses."

GRAPE food sandwiches were the refreshments served at a recent parlor meeting of the Cleveland East End W. C. T. U. These were made from grape food sent from California to Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, who proudly showed her fellow-workers what can be done with grapes besides making wine.

MISS VANDELIA VARNUM writes: "I heartily commend the proposition to build a memorial chapel at the American University in Harriman to the honor of America's most gifted speaker, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap. I addressed the Y. W. C. T. U. at Asntabula, Ohio, last Sunday evening, and the collection is donated to the Lathrap Memorial Fund."

THE Cherokee W. C. T. U. leader in the Indian Territory, Mrs. Jane Stapler, was recently empowered by the corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U. in that territory, Mrs. Fuller, to name her newborn little boy "Willard Somerset," adding, "I told them I prayed he might walk the white path of the two whose names he bore."

THE Ritchey W. C. T. Union met on February 3 to hold memorial services for Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap and Mrs. Mary E. Ritchey. The latter was a beloved member and officer of the union who passed away January 10 at the ripe age of seventy-five. Many words of praise were uttered for the departed workers and resolutions in memoriam.

THE National W. C. T. U. superintendent of franchise has issued in leaflet form, the beautiful poem of Mrs. Ella Gilbert Ives, entitled "The Reason Why," and read at the welcome reception breakfast in Boston last year. This leaflet with a literature list and plan of work for 1895 will be received (10 for 10 cents) by addressing Mrs. Louise C. Purington, M. D., 3 Park street, Boston.

A LARGE temperance mass-meeting was held in the Hall of Representatives at Pierre, S. D., just before the final vote on resubmission was taken. Mrs. Anna R. Simmons, vice-president of the state W. C. T. U., presided, and Mrs. Emma A. Cranmer, state president, gave the address of the evening, which was a brilliant plea for the support of the prohibitory law.

A CORRESPONDENT gives an account of a ludicrous occurrence if it had not been so stupid and contemptible, which happened in an eastern town not long since. The trustees of a congregation which had just built a new church were asked for the use of the church for a lecture. The speaker was to be a well known and accredited minister, his subject, "Christian Citizenship." The request came, of course, from the W. C. T. U's. It was made by the president of the union. She was the wife of the pastor of the church. In behalf of the union she asked for the use of the church, her own church, for the address. The trustees had a sitting and gravely decided that "We did not build the church for that purpose." The unjust feature of this decision is that the pastor's wife, alone and unaided, though less well off than any of them, contributed seven times as much as the three trustees put together, for the building of the church which she was refused.

FROM twenty-four to forty is the increase of the Aspen, Col., W. C. T. U., organized last May by Mrs. Telford. Their rescue work has included the saving of two unfortunate women, and the ridding of the town of a most disgraceful dance hall. In accomplishing the latter they worked with each member of the city council and the mayor individually. Some of the preachers were enlisted. Circulars were printed showing it was a violation of the law to allow dance halls to run in the city. Women cannot be employed as an attraction where liquor is sold. They got up a petition of about eight hundred names, among them many of the best business men and people of high standing in the town, and this they presented to the council. The latter "did the rest." The town papers gave "thanks to the women" for their good work, and the variety show people departed for other fields, hoping to find one where Woman's Christian Temperance Unions are unknown.

MRS. ISABELLA W. LAKE, state superintendent of the department of purity for Illinois W. C. T. U. is anxious to forward a movement by which a home shall be established in America for women who need a helping hand toward lives of purity. This home is to contain a number of establishments so that all degrees of need may be met. For instance, one home within the home proper would be for tired wage-earners needing a safe resting place, for girls thown upon the world without resources or experience who need a helping hand at this critical juncture; another department would be for those who have been betrayed through their over-trustful ignorance and who would speedily drift beyond reclaim in their early despair; yet another for adults in the schools of sin; other departments would be a "maternity home" or resting place for mother and child, a home for inebriates, a hospital and a chapel and home for workers where various industries will be taught to the inmates of the different departments. If such a plan could be perfected it would be a fitting monument to the sentiment of reform and rescue that is gaining such momentum among all classes of good people. Five states have not reported as to their homes for erring women. These are Ohio, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mexico and Wyoming. Mrs. Lake would be glad to hear from purity workers in these states. Her address is the Temple, Chicago.

Official Communications.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

To All Members of the Y. W. C. T. U.:

A prize of ten dollars in gold will be given this year by the National department of mercy for the best essay on "Cruelty in its Relation to Dress and to Food."

Essays are limited to not less than two thousand, and not more than three thousand words. The age of those who compete is to be from eighteen to twenty-eight years inclusive. Essays must not be signed; but name and address and age of writer written on a separate sheet, must be sent with the essay in a sealed envelope. Enclose stamp if you wish your essay returned.

All essays must be sent by August 15, 1895, to Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 146 W. 103rd street, New York city, to be examined by a committee appointed for the purpose. No essays will be accepted after August 15.

It is to be hoped that all our young women will feel interested enough in this subject to compete for the prize. Much cruelty goes on because so many people are, through ignorance, encouraging its continuance. When we make a market for certain things which are obtained cruelly, we are committing cruelty though indirectly, and it is a question how far our ignorance excuses us when there are opportunities for enlightenment. The time has come when none of us would like to be thought destitute of humane and tender feeling, but the mere possession of such feeling is of little use. We must be consistent in our own conduct, and we have no real claim to the possession of merciful sentiment if we will not take a little trouble to investigate the sources of our food and dress supply, and be guided by our consciences afterward.

Another matter of importance is the example we set. Miss Willard has said, "The white ribbon stands for all phases of reform," and it is growing to be more and more a fact that the general conduct of members of the W. C. T. U. is subject to a searching criticism from those outside of the organization. So, dear young women, does it not behoove you as well as those of us who are older in the work, to be very circumspect in all things, and in order to be so to be well informed?

Any assistance that I can give by sending specimens of literature will be very cheerfully rendered to any young woman who will send me her name and address.

MARY F. LOVELL, Sup't Dep't of Mercy.
Box 163 Bryn Mawr, Penn.

Cuticura

THE GREAT

SKIN CURE

Works wonders in curing torturing, disfiguring diseases of the skin and scalp, and especially baby humors.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are of the utmost purity and delicacy, and especially appeal to the refined in every community. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

ASK FOR THE
NEW JAPANESE PERFUME
MAT-SU-KI-TA

THE CROWN PERFUMERY CO.,
of 177 New Bond Street, London,
Have much pleasure in introducing to their American clientele their latest perfume MAT-SU-KI-TA.

This delightful scent differs in odor from anything heretofore produced. It has been called "an incomparably delicious perfume." We heartily commend it to all lovers of the celebrated Crab-Apple Blossoms AND Crown Lavender Salts, so popular all over the world.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Gold and Silver Plate marked

1847 ROGERS BROS.

On Spoons, Knives and Forks.

This Trade Mark On all other articles.

MERIDEN BRITANNIA COMPANY

May be relied on as highest quality.

For sale by dealers everywhere. Made by the Meriden Britannia Co., Meriden, Conn.

CHURCH ORGANS—The Lyon & Healy Church Organs present remarkable value. Prices from $300 for a good instrument of fine tone, suitable for a small church, upward. For $975 an instrument of great power, containing 609 speaking notes, two manuals and pedals. Only church organ of the size having pneumatic pistons, pneumatic stop-action, and made of standard measurements adopted by the College of Organists, London, Eng. Indorsed by leading organists everywhere. Fully guaranteed for five years. Sketches, specifications and prices promptly furnished on application. Time payments may be arranged.
LYON & HEALY, 44 E. Adams St., CHICAGO

A New Coffee Pot

Always sells well; the best ever made is now on the market—no toy at fancy prices, but a practical Pot for the million, that makes poor coffee impossible. Once used always used. Terms extremely liberal. Exclusive terr'y. A grand chance for agents—ladies or gentlemen. Write for terms.
Wilmot Castle & Co., 59 Elm St., Rochester, N. Y.

AMERICAN DESK CO.

4 FOOT DESK, $16
4½ " " 18
5 " " 20

18-20 E. Van Buren St., Athenæum Bldg., CHICAGO.

MARSHALL'S CATARRH SNUFF has been on the market 60 years. F. C. Keith, Mfr., Cleveland, O.

The Best Dressmakers are using this Bias Velveteen Skirt Binding

The Redfern a brand of the famous "S.H.&M."

Samples and Booklet on "How to Bind the Dress Skirt," for 2c. stamp. Address

The S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, New York.

"S.H.& M." Dress Stays are the Best.

Mrs. R. Howard Kelly

1018 Chamber Commerce Bldg., CHICAGO

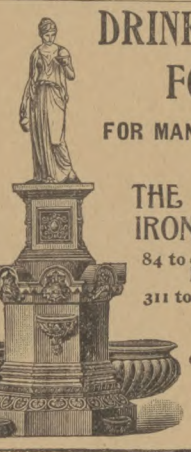
by reason of her fifteen years' training in the difficult work of

GONVENTION REPORTING

is claimed by those who have made use of her services, to be specially fitted for intelligent reporting, editing, condensing and preparing for publication the proceedings of all associations, and particularly those engaged in reformatory, literary, religious and women's work.

Overburdened or inexperienced secretaries find her services of special value.

She has been for several years official stenographer for the National W. C. T. U., and by permission refers to its officers and to those of the National Council of Women, the Federation of Women's Clubs, the Wisconsin Farmers' Institute, to C. C. Bonney, President World's Congresses of 1893, to Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Secretary Religious Congresses, 1893; to Judges of Cook County, Illinois, and many others well acquainted with her work.



DRINKING FOUNTAINS

FOR MAN AND BEAST

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS...

84 to 90 Beekman Street NEW YORK.....

311 to 313 Wabash Ave, .....CHICAGO

Catalogue with price may be obtained upon application.

DEAFNESS

and head noises relieved by using WILSON'S COMMON SENSE EAR DRUMS. Entirely new, scientific invention; different from all other devices; the only safe, simple, comfortable, and invisible ear drum in the world. Hundreds are being benefitted where medical skill has failed. No string or wire attachment to irritate the ear. Write for pamphlet.

THE DRUM IN POSITION

WILSON EAR DRUM CO. 132 Trust Bldg. LOUISVILLE, KY.

DENT'S CORN GUM

Cures Corns, Warts, Bunions, etc. So easy to apply—it sticks fast. Ask for Dent's; take no other. Sold everywhere, or by mail 10 cents. C. S. DENT & CO. DETROIT, MICH.

Try Dent's Toothache Gum.

High Arm

MY HUSBAND Cant see how you do it.

$60 Kenwood Machine for - @ $23.00
$50 Arlington Machine for - $19.50
Standard Singers - $8.00, $11.00
$15.00, and 27 other styles. All attachments FREE. We pay freight ship anywhere on 30 days free trial, in any home without asking one cent in advance. Buy from factory. Save agents' large profits. Over 100,000 in use. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write at once. Address (in full), CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-164 West Van Buren St., B 30, Chicago, Ill.

Warranted Ten Years

BABY CARRIAGES for $1.35

If you don't want this kind we can give you one at any price you want up to $31.55. Every Carriage Guaranteed to be as represented or money refunded. Illustrated Catalogue H of 55 different styles—sent free.

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO., 111 to 118 Michigan Ave., Chicago.

YOUNG LADIES SHOULD WEAR GOOD SENSE CORSET WAISTS. Permit full breathing.

FRANKLIN COLLEGE, New Athens, O.; largest attendance yet. Start at any time. Board, tuition, furnished room and books, $3 a week; total cost $140 a year; 8 courses; no saloons, cheapest, safest, best. Cat. free. W. A. Williams, D.D. Pres.

A Quality Seed Offer. Send for Catalogue. NORTHRUP, BRADAN & GOODWIN, Minneapolis, Minn.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

In a recent UNION SIGNAL I had the pleasure of introducing an associate superintendent, Mrs. V. F. Cox, of Tabor, N. J., who was ultimately to have charge of the leaflets of the Sabbath department. To-day it gives me equal pleasure to introduce the remaining officer of the staff, Mrs. Rosamond R. Johnston, of Oakland, Cal. (1024 E. 30th street), who has accepted the position of associate superintendent and lecturer for the Pacific coast. Since the demise of the coast branch of the American Sabbath Union, that specially needy field has no other general Sabbath organization than ours, and we rejoice in reinforcing our state superintendents of that section with help so signally competent. Mrs. Johnston is very dear to the California sisters whom she served as state president for years, till her husband's business took them East. His health requiring their return she is ready for this important work and is already working up Alameda county. We ask for her cordial coöperation from state and department officers.

J. C. BATEHAM,
National Sup't.

Williamsburg, Ky.

SCHOOLS OF METHODS AND PARLIAMENTARY USAGE.

It gives me great pleasure to be able to say that notwithstanding the hard times a greater number of schools of methods are being planned than in any previous year. So numerous are the letters of inquiry that it seems quite impossible to longer reply fully to each. It requires much more thought and time and space to answer than to ask questions. I hope I may be pardoned for saying once more that there is no royal road to learning, nor is it possible by any sort of legerdemain to impart experience. I believe it was Coleridge who so aptly said, "experience is like the stern lights of a ship which illumine only the track it has passed." Some of our women seem to think that a National superintendent should be able to illumine all the tracks that are to be passed.

Why will not all interested in schools of methods read the reports made in National Convention? They are printed for that purpose. Very many of the inquiries that are made in almost every letter were answered by some one of the several superintendents in their last reports. Our National reports are sold at the nominal price of fifteen cents each, and every woman who wishes to do intelligent department work should own a copy. How many do? I am sorry to say a very small fraction of our number. All the departments are reported clearly and concisely with recommendations. There ought to be printed every year, at least fifty thousand, and the entire supply exhausted by January 1. These, with the Annual Leaflet, THE UNION SIGNAL and her own state paper, with careful study of the same, would pretty well equip any intelligent woman for practical work. And such work would in time bring her the experience that cannot be begged, borrowed nor bought.

I am sure all this will be received in the same kindly spirit in which it is written. We are commanded to do good as we have opportunity, and this is my opportunity to help all our National superintendents. They cannot "give the best methods to raise money" in the different localities; they cannot in one or a dozen long letters "tell just how to do things"; they cannot "write out how to conduct a drill" so it will be a "perfect success"; they cannot make a woman "just elected superintendent who knows nothing about the department so intelligent that she may fitly carry forward the work in the state," district or county. They cannot decide "which departments should be given the preference in our school."

Of course the present writer would say parliamentary usage should be taught in every school, in every locality, for parliamentary knowledge is needed in any organization, and such teaching must be absolutely correct, therefore secure for every school a competent parliamentarian, also a first-class secretary, one who will give not only the letter but the spirit. A school secretary should note the leading thoughts presented on every topic, else the journal will not be the practical help that all school "minutes" should be. The recommendations given in THE UNION SIGNAL last year along this line will hold good for all the years to come. I cannot ask for space to repeat them. Every woman should put her UNION SIGNALS on file.

Will each school please give heed to the following, and report to me as soon as possible after the school closes:

1. Whether local, county, district or state?
2. Whether in connection with Chautauqua or other Assembly? If the latter, whether supported financially, wholly or in part, by the Assembly management? If not, how the necessary money was raised.
3. The length of the school?
4. The number of instructors?
5. Number of enrolled members?
6. Number of visitors?
7. The departments taught?
8. A consensus of opinion as to the department of greatest interest? This question to be voted upon by all in attendance.

I need hardly say the committee on enrollment should be a standing committee of alert women.

Yours for full and correct reports.

A. S. BENJAMIN.

Portland, Mich.

Quaker OATS

Shipped in Train Loads.

Has the largest sale of any Cereal Food in the world. The reason for it is in every spoonful!

Sold only in 2 lb. Packages.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

FLORIDA STATE CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. Unions of Florida are called to their annual meeting on February 26 to March 1, to convene in the city of Ocala, as pursuant to notice given last year.

E. A. HILL, Pres.
S. J. GLENN, Rec. Sec.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

My notes must be of the briefest this week, for the Polyglot admits no rival, and time taken for correspondence must be caught "upon the wing." I must, however, say to the dear sisterhood that if letters are not answered as promptly as usual for the next fortnight it must be attributed to the fact that I am "upon the wing." I go from Washington to Baltimore for Sunday, the 24th, to Massachusetts for a day or two where I have a few engagements, then to Albany. All important letters which the office secretary cannot answer will be forwarded to me, but the necessary time taken in transmission will make some delay.

Please do not think Headquarters is being left "at loose ends," though the treasurer and corresponding secretary are each absent for a short time. A more thoroughly equipped white-ribboner than Mrs. Horning, the office secretary, it would be difficult to find, and she is thoroughly conversant with the work. I am extremely anxious to meet the Baltimore union in view of the coming convention, and I am sure you will believe that I am working for the interests of the organization quite as much when in the field as when at the Temple.

How about the five hundred in your state? The inspiration is spreading and state after state is falling into line. Yours must not be left.

Katharine L. Stevenson.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, bilious headache, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, loss of appetite, sallow skin, etc., when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

Go by the book. Pills 10¢ and 25¢ a box. Book free at your druggist's or write B. F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

Annual sales more than 6,000,000 boxes.

D AND C ROSES

Just the kind of Roses you have often wished for. Sturdy, fragrant and beautiful. On their own roots, ready to grow. Our new Guide to Rose Culture accurately describes and pictures them, together with every other flower of worth. If you so request, we will send free this book and a sample copy of our floral magazine, "Success with Flowers."

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO. West Grove, Pa.

Old Mother Earth

Her products; useful and beautiful, new and old, in Seeds and Plants, are illustrated and described in our Catalogue for 1895 of

Everything FOR THE Garden

This Catalogue is really a book of 160 pages, 9 x 11 inches, containing over 500 engravings and 8 colored plates of Seeds and Plants. And as all are drawn from nature, we show, as in a looking-glass, the best of the old and the latest of the new.

To trace advertising, and give our Catalogue the largest possible distribution, we make the following unusually liberal offer:

Every Empty Envelope Counts as Cash.

To every one who will state where this advertisement was seen, and who encloses us 20 cents (in stamps), we will mail the Catalogue, and also send, free of charge, our famous 50-cent Newport Collection of Seeds, containing one packet each of New White Sweet Pea "Emily Henderson," New Butterfly Pansy, New Crested Zinnia, Succession Cabbage, New York Lettuce, and Ponderosa Tomato, in a red envelope, which, when emptied and returned, will be accepted as a 25-cent cash payment on any order of goods selected from Catalogue to the amount of $1.00 and upward.

PETER HENDERSON & CO. 35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST., NEW YORK.

ACRE APPLES, $1,493. Write Nurseries and Orchards, Louisiana, Mo., for free sample copy telling about it. A practical Fruit and Farm paper published by Stark Bros., 40c. a year; circulation, 460,000 copies. The "Cream of the Cream"—gives the busy Fruit Grower or Farmer, who hasn't the time or the money to buy and read a great mass of papers what is best from them all what he wants to know.

SONG JEWELS For S. S. revivals, etc., by HOFFMAN & WILLIAMS. 7c.
SILVER TONES Latest and best temperance song book. By S. L. Quartet & Williams, 30c; $3 per doz. W. A. Williams, Warnock, O

YOU You can now grasp a fortune. A new guide to rapid wealth, with 240 fine engravings, sent free to any person. This is a chance of a lifetime. Write at once. Lynn & Co. 48 Bond St. New York

At ¼ Price Watches, Guns, Buggies, Harness, Sewing Machines, Organs, Bicycles, Farm Tools, Safes, etc, List FREE. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

PILES Instant relief, final cure in a few days, and never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. Remedy mailed free. Address, O. J. MASON, Box, 519, New York City, N. Y.

SALESMEN WANTED to sell our goods by samples to the on sight to every business man: firm; liberal salary, money advanced for advertising and expenses. Permanent position. Address with stamp, KING MFG. CO., A 55 Chicago, Ill.

LADY AGENTS, Rubber Undergarment Quick sales, big profits. Catalog free, Mrs. N. B. LITTLE, Chicago

RUBIFOAM
A PERFECT LIQUID DENTIFRICE
DELICIOUSLY FLAVORED.
ITS USE INSURES BEAUTIFUL CLEAN TEETH

Price 25 cents
E. W. HOYT & CO.,
LOWELL, MASS.

Publisher's Notes.

Now is the time when wise and zealous white-ribboners throughout the country are beginning to plan

For the Spring Campaign.

From now until the April elections local unions should make it their special business to bring before the voters the saloon question. There should be concerted action on the part of our women in these coming weeks which should be in the nature of an appeal to the voter as

Protector of the Home.

In this work of the hour the local superintendent of literature has an important part to perform, for in the circulation of the right kind of literature at the right time, telling blows may be struck against the drink traffic.

Agitate, Agitate, Agitate,

and if this means, as some one says, "irritate," it is an irritation that is productive of good.

The following leaflets we recommend as specially adapted for the arousement of popular thought along the line of the Relation of the Saloon to Home and Municipal Affairs.

Timely Talks:
1. Shall we License the Dram-Shops?
2. How Dram-Shops Pay the Taxes.
3. How the Dram-Shop Helps Business.
11. The National Ox; What Shall be Done With It?
18. The Distillery vs. The Farmer.
32. Why William Dustin Became a Prohibitionist.

Signal Lights:
1. Individuality of Conscience in the Voter.
6. Our National Dilemma.
8. Words for Wage-Workers.
25. Who Killed Carroll?

Voters' Leaflets:
1. Thy Bottle.
2. Christian Patriotism.
3. Gran'sir' Saxton's Vote.
4. Wanted.
5. Gospel Temperance.
6. The Financial Backing of the Rum Power.
7. Christianity and the Great Cities.
8. The Silent Partner.

National Leaflets:
3. Political Economy vs. Commercial Economy.
34. Liquor's War on Labor.
39. Relation of Temperance Reform to the Labor Movement.
51. Farm Mortgages.
69. The Inventor of Dimensions in Political Righteousness.
70. Copartnership of Piety and Piracy.

Total Abstinence Leaflets:
4. In the Bushel or in the Jug.
9. Turn on the Light.
15. What it Costs.

PRICE, TIMELY TALKS.

| | |
|---|---|
| Per 100 | $ .30 |
| " 1,000 | 2.50 |

SIGNAL LIGHTS AND TOTAL ABSTINENCE LEAFLETS.

| | |
|---|---|
| Per 100 | $ .15 |
| " 1,000 | 1.25 |

VOTERS' AND NATIONAL LEAFLETS.

| | |
|---|---|
| Per 100 | $ .90 |
| " 1,000 | 7.50 |

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

The Young Crusader
OFFERS A PRIZE BANNER
TO THE
STATE MAKING GREATEST PRO RATA INCREASE...
IN NUMBER OF SUBSCRIBERS
DURING 1895...
WHAT ARE YOU DOING ABOUT IT?

Organizers' Corner.

ORGANIZERS.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, 1105 Davis street, Elmira, N. Y.
Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, Port Jervis, N.Y.
Miss Frances E. Griffin, The De Soto, Chicago.
Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, Chautauqua, Wash.
Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, 1907 Bush street, San Francisco, Cal.
Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair, Clinton, N. Y.
Mrs. Maude L. Greene, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Baraga, Mich.
Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.
Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Ellensburg, E. Wash.
Miss Ida Clothier, Manitou Springs, Col.
Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, Pacific Grove, Cal.
Mrs. S. C. Harris, Franklin, Va.
Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, 1006 Bainbridge street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.
Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.
Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.
Mrs. E. A. Kenyon, Townshend, Vt.
Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown, LL.D., Cincinnati, O., Lecturer.
Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, Vincennes, Ind.
Mrs. Sue V. Tomlinson, Charlotte, N. C.
Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, Roslindale, Mass., Lecturer.
Mrs. E. L. Calkins, 922 S. Rose st,reet Kalamazoo, Mich.
Miss Lilian Wood, Maryville, Mo., Lecturer.
Mrs. Ella A. Boole, A. M., West New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y., Lecturer.
Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, 27 Everett street, Cambridge, Mass., Lecturer.
Mrs. Addie Northam Field, Bedford, N. H.
Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, McMinnville, Ore.
For terms and date address as above.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, writing from Cleveland, in February, announces the end of her tour in the country thereabout with the words: "Three more unions added to the list, making five in January."

After the Convention at Cleveland I went into fifth district, Illinois, where I spoke several times and organized one new union. I visited my birthplace, Marengo, Ill., for the first time since childhood. Coming on into the eleventh district, I visited and lectured until late in December, arriving at my old home in Kansas in time to spend Christmas with my father, William C. Huntington, who, although eighty-seven years of age, is bright and active, keeping abreast of the time. He is as ardent a Prohibitionist as he used to be an Abolitionist.

I spoke six times while in Kansas, then came on to Denver where I remained for ten days, but found no work arranged for me there. I was there during the discussion and passage of the bill raising the age of consent from fourteen to twenty-one years. I understand this to be the first bill drawn and presented by a woman that ever passed a state legislature, Hon. Mrs. Holly being the author of the bill.

Remembering gladly that especial stress was given to organization at our late National Convention, let me urge our local workers everywhere to be loyal to the women who at great sacrifice of ease, comfort and money are making heroic efforts to get our work more thoroughly organized throughout the states and nation, and when a National organizer finds it possible to visit you, let no little thing, no ordinary circumstance, prevent you from making all possible arrangements for successful meetings for her. The organizer's discouragements do not come from the opposition of those who favor the liquor traffic nor even from the sneers and cool suspicion of persons who think woman's place is at home, although these may be hard to bear, but that which disheartens an earnest, conscientious worker who knows and feels the needs of the work as none other is able, is the placid indifference and inaction of women who never dream of the sacrifice made by the one coming to them, but let everything take precedence of W. C. T. U. effort, and if arrangements are made at all, the manner in which it is done implies more strongly than words, "you should be grateful indeed that we permit you to speak for us." This cannot be intentional but it is too often true.

Let all our local workers learn that to arouse others we ourselves must be enthusiastic, making our interest felt by showing to the public our faith in our work and in our workers and so far as we manifest our belief in them and the work we profess to love we will meet with success. If we really believe that God is our leader in this grand movement of ours let us never apologize for it in word or spirit, never say by an action, "it is only the W. C. T. U.," or "she's only a woman."

DELLE C. H. COX.
Nat'l Organizer, State Pres. E. Wash.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

PRAYER.—Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness, make thy way straight before my face.—Psalms 5: 8.

PROMISE.—I will lead them in paths that they have not known; I will make crooked things straight.—Isa. 42: 16.

We write the Temple Items this week from the Nation's capital. The last few days here have been red-letter days in the W. C. T. U. calendar. Long accounts of the Polyglot Petition have filled the papers, and the doings of the white-ribboners have been faithfully chronicled. At the Friday meeting in Metropolitan M. E. Church, the writer was down on the program for an address. As she was allowed to choose her subject, she felt that she could not select a theme more fitting than the Temple, and as the Wheel still continues in her head she felt it her duty to get it both into the heads and hands of her audience. She took a large number of Wheels with her to the meeting, but the demand for them was so great after she got through speaking that one or two hundred more than she had with her could have been disposed of; besides orders for 825 were taken. To-day papers were presented at the patent office, and duly sworn to, applying for a patent on the Temple Wheel. This is necessary in order that others may not infringe on our device.

***

The beauty of the Temple Wheel is that any one can fill it in a day if they so desire, and thus get twelve others interested in the "House Beautiful." Then we send them each a Wheel and so increase our circle. The Wheels, freighted with silver coins are circling back to us bearing kind messages. Mrs. Emma Stokes, Terehaute, Ill., says: "I think it a good scheme to raise money. I had no trouble filling mine. Please send me another Wheel." Mrs. C. A. Bailey, Butler, Pa., sent for a number of Wheels for her L. T. L. children. She sends one filled and says: "The Wheel was filled by one of our L. T. L. boys to-day. He wishes the Pixies game. I hope to have more filled for you soon, as I want to see the Wheels go round fast to take the Temple soon out of debt." Maria Hughes, Richmond, Mo., sends her Wheel filled and is going to fill three others so as to secure a silver Temple souvenir spoon. Mrs. E. McConaughy, Washington, Ia., writes: "We received the Wheel last Saturday and the children got it half filled that day; now it is full and ready to be sent. Send premium number five and another Wheel." Miss Myrtle Simmons, Shenandoah, Ia., sends her Wheel filled. She writes: "I think the Wheel is just a splendid way to raise money for the Temple. I want two more Wheels for neighbor girls I have just got interested." Mrs. L. A. Sewell, Farnham, Canada, sends a Wheel filled, and writes: "I think this is a good way to raise money. The novelty of it takes with most people, and the sum is so small not many will refuse their names. I was only a few hours in getting mine filled. I have had no refusals. All are very much pleased with the fine lithographs of the Temple. Send me six more Wheels and premium number one."

***

Mellie I. Eames sends $35 from the Aledo, Ill., W. C. T. U., completing its $100 pledge. Carthage, Ill., union sends $15 to apply on its pledge of $100. Nashua and Taylor, Ill., Band of Hope sends $15; this makes $77 paid on its $100 pledge. They write that they will try and complete their pledge this year. The W. C. T. U. of Chelsea, Mass., sends $75, first instalment on its $100 pledge. Buckeystown, Md., W. C. T. U. sends $27.05, completing its $100 pledge; Mrs. Sarah Thomas, its president, writes that as a union they feel great interest in the Temple, and they propose to continue each year to send $1 per member until the building is paid for. The New London, Conn., W. C. T. U. sends $26, to be applied on the $100 to place the name of Frances Mary Payn on the Connecticut tablet. Our good friend, Mrs. Sarah M. Perkins, of Cleveland, O., writes us, enclosing a check for $100, from the Federation of Unions of Cleveland, O.; she says this is a part of the surplus left after paying the expenses of the National Convention. Later the unions will decide whose name shall be inscribed for the hundred dollars. Summit, N. J., W. C. T. U. sends $50, completing its $100 pledge.

***

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

SUFFERERS FROM COUGHS, SORE THROAT, etc., should be constantly supplied with "Brown's Bronchial Troches."

ASK Your Grocer for

NONE SUCH MINCE MEAT
Two Mince Pies, equal to our Grandmother's, from each package of None-Such Mince Meat, without the worry and work. For sale by all Grocers.
MERRELL-SOULE CO.,
Syracuse, N. Y.

TEMPLE RECEIPTS.

Indiana—Brazil: Mrs. Helen A. Sherfey, $3; Frankfort: W. C. T. U., $2; Franklin: Miss R. I. Thompson, $3.75; Fairmount: Y. W. C. T. U., $1; Nappanee: W. C. T. U., $10; Warsaw: Sarah Kiplinger, $5; Rensselaer: Nellie M. Harris, $3.27: Greensburg: Mrs. Laura M. Thompson, $10; Goshen: Mrs. E. L. Garvin, $1; Kendallville: Edith S. Baker, $1; Mt. Vernon: Lillian Eves, $3.65; Myersville: Jennie Eyler, $6; Plymouth: W. C. T. U., 41 cts.; Brownsburg: J. P. Catterson, $1.50; LaPorte: Frederick Baumgardner: Per John W. Crumpacker, $100; Wabash: W. C. T. U., per Lydia C. Malott, $1.

Iowa—Blairstown: Mrs. I. B. Clearwater, $1; Mrs. L. M. Bassett, $1; Washington: W. C. T. U. No. 1, $15; Howard McConaughy, $1; Waterloo: Mrs. H. A. Cobb, $2.50; Volga: Mrs. Ingle Chapman, $1; Sibley: Estella V. Armin, $3.65; Delaware county: W. C. T. U., $15; Sioux City: Mrs. S. F. Hopkins, $2; Shell Rock: Miss Eva Hampton, per Mrs. Cynthia Sweitzer, 50 cts.; Redfield W. C. T. U., $1; Radcliffe: Mrs. Anna Bateson, $1; Bessie and Bernard Beem, 52 cts.; Maggie Cable, 25 cts.; Mrs. O. P. Crawford, $1.70; Primghar: W. J. Bruce, $1; Oskaloosa: Mrs. C. E. Barnard, $35; New Providence; Julia A. McCool Martin, $50; New Sharon; W. C. T. U., $1; Winthrop: W. C. T. U., $1; Mt. Vernon: Mrs. G. E. Whittemore, 50 cts.; Eliza J. Hyndman, $1; A friend, $1; Mapleton: W. C. T. U., $2; Marion: L. D. Carhart, $21.60; Marshalltown: Mary A. Davis, 25 cts.; C. E. Boardman, 25 cts.; Keosauqua: E. G. Eno, $2; Keokuk: Mrs. Eva Hubert, $2.50; Grundy Center: Mrs. John McClung, $1; Fort Madison: Mrs. E. A. Gibbs: $2; Fayette: W. C. T. U., $10; Dyersville: Mrs. M. C. Davis, 15 cts.; Des Moines: Mrs. H. M. Woodward: $3.65; Clarence: Mrs. M. Springstead, $1; College Springs: W. C. T. U., $5; Mrs. F. Nelson, $1; Cherokee: Mrs. N. L. Mc Kenzie, $1; Cedar Rapids, W. C. T. U., $3; Scotch Grove, W. C. T. U., $1.10; Coin: Mrs. W. P. Love, $4.35: Blairstown: Miss Nellie Bowers: $1; Belmond: M. J. O. Whiting, $3; Burt: Mrs. L. M. Stow, $5; Albion: Mrs. Emily A. Faucett for W. C. T. U., $1.21; Danville: Miss Ida Mix, $5; H. H. Higby, $5; Washta: E. Watkins, 10 cts.

Kansas—Crestlin: Mary E. Janney, 50 cts; Oneida: Orpha L. Coleman, $2; Mrs. C. S. Freark, $1.85; Ezbow, Ray and Dean Porter, $3.65; Tyro: Mrs. J. C. Fields, $1; Rose: Mrs. A. P. Everson, $4; Fort Scott: South Side W. C. T. U., 40 cts., and 60 cts.; Douglas: Rebecca Blakey, $1; Wichita: Central W. C. T. U., $5; Wamego: Mrs. E. E. Hackford, $1; Centerville: Mrs. M. E. Shoemaker, $1; Burlingame: Miss Lydia S. Jennings, $1; El Dorado: Mrs. H. H. Grover, $1; Le Roy: Mrs. S. S. Weatherby, $1.50; Emporia: R. A. Irvine, $1; Sedan: W. C. T. U., 70 cts.; Cawker City: Mrs. Delia H. Bowers, $1; Effingham: W. C. T. U., $6; Lebanon: Miss Bessie J. Heyde, $3.70; Norton: L. T. L., $2.50; Lawrence: Mrs. N. A. Peers, $2; Strawn: Mrs. Harriet Sanford, $1; Humboldt: Mrs. M. A. Garrett, $2.50; La Crosse: Barbara E. Murray, 50 cts.

Kentucky—Bowling Green: Miss Bessie V. Fitzhugh, 20 cts.; Carlisle: Mrs. R. C. King, 30 cts.; Louisville: Mrs. Jas. Buchanan, $1.75; Epworth League of Port Fulton M. E. church, $1.25: Greenville: Mrs. A. M. Trowbridge, $2; Lancaster: Mrs. Stella O'Neal Hubble, $1; W. C. T. U., $1.

SARA G. JOHNSON,
To June 1, 1894. Financial Sec'y.

The Rialto

is the favorite with the daintiest of housekeepers. This Pattern is furnished in the now so popular brand

Sterling Silver Inlaid.

Silver is inlaid in the back of the bowl and handle, giving the service of solid silver. Guaranteed 25 years. Ask your Jeweler for these goods, or send to us for a sample set of six Tea Spoons. Price $2.75

Each article is stamped on the back

E. STERLING INLAID HE.

THE HOLMES & EDWARDS SILVER CO.,
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

New York Salesroom, 2 Maiden Lane (second door from Broadway). A complete line of Solid Silver Plated Ware and Novelties.

Kernels.

"I wish we had more literary people like Blank." "Great Scott! he's never had anything published." "That's just why."

As a pillow, a clear conscience will beat goose feathers.

She (a woman's rights woman)—"Do you believe that woman should have the right of being the equal of man?" He—"Well, if she wants to let herself down so far, I don't see any reason why she should be prevented."

Between two evils, choose neither.

"Willie, do you and your brother ever fight?" "Yes, sir." "Who whips?" "Pa."

The people who always practice what they preach seem somehow not to preach such disagreeable things as others do.

How's This!

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions, and financially able to carry out any obligation made by their firm.
West & Truax, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.
Walding, Kinnan & Marvin, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, Ohio.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price, 75c. per bottle. Sold by all Druggists. Testimonials free. Address 1212, 1214, 1216, 1218, 1220. Adams St.

A gentleman in Ireland having built a large house, was at a loss what to do with the rubbish. His steward advised him to have a pit dug large enough to contain it. "And what," said the gentleman, "shall I do with the earth which is dug out of the pit?" To which the steward replied, "Have the pit made large enough to hold it all."

Other people sometimes get tired of the man who never gets tired of himself.

Sime: "Your father was an old whaler, wasn't he, Jimmie?" Jimmie—"Yes; but near as I can remember ma did her share of it."

He: "My income is small, and it is cruel of me to take you from your father's roof." She (anxiously)—"I don't live on the roof."

AN ASTHMA CURE AT LAST.

European physicians and medical journals report a positive cure for Asthma, in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending free trial cases of the Kola Compound by mail to all sufferers from Asthma, who send name and address on a postal card. A trial costs you nothing.

Schoolmaster (entering boys' dormitory) "What are you doing out of bed this time of night, Murphy?" Murphy;—"Oh, sorr, I got out of bed to tuck myself in,"

It's a poor mule that doesn't work both ways.

Barber: "How do you want your hair cut?"
Customer—"Off."

"The trouble wid the sympathetic sthroike," said Mr. Dolan, "is thot the sthroike 'most always lashts longer than the sympathy."

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Our Library Table.

Beholding as in a Glass, a novel by Mrs. Virginia D. Young. Arena Publishing Company, Boston.

This is an interesting story of Southern life, full of side-lights upon old customs and unique characters. The plot is attractive and well sustained.

Jean Belin: The French Robinson Crusoe. From the French of Alfred de Bréhat. Lee & Shepard, publishers, 10 Milk street, Boston. Price $1.50.

This book is mentioned by the publishers as the companion to the "Swiss Family Robinson." Jean, the hero, a French boy and his companions, are thrown upon an uninhabited part of the coast of Africa and show the same fertility of resources in adapting themselves to their surroundings, and causing the wilderness to yield up its treasures for their comfort as did the heroes of the former story. Jean and Landry's adventures among the savages by whom they are taken prisoners, while attempting to reach the English settlements, and the treachery of Landry toward Jean after his arrival at Port Natal, from whence succor was sent to the shipwrecked family, are graphically told.

Christian Creeds and Confessions. Translated from the German of G. A. Gumlich, Ph. D., by I. A. Wheatley. Published by Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York. Price $1.

The salient feature of this book is that it aims to give a fuller account of the Libri Symbolici, and a clearer explanation of the doctrines which divide the hosts of Christendom, than does any other work. Its sections treat of "Church Creeds," "Doctrines of the Creeds," and "Doctrines of the Most Important Sects." It embraces the Greek or Oriental Church, the Roman Catholic Church, the Evangelical or Lutheran Church, the Reformed Church, and the Churches of England and Scotland, also the sects appertaining to each. Irrespective of any possible bias on the part of its author, this volume is of especial value for the student by reason of its concise and accurate statement of facts. It furnishes a scholarly compendium of the Creeds and Confessions, and having already found friendly acceptance among students of church history in Germany, it is apt to find progressive place as a practical text-book of value in the theological schools and seminaries of the United States. It is supplied with a good index.

A book that will be warmly welcomed by thoughtful readers is entitled The Kindergarten of the Church, by Mary J. Chisholm Foster. The foundation of the subject matter presented so ably by the author lies in the fact of the church's too small share in the education of the children. An hour a week for the little ones is about the average provision made by this organization which ought to be in position to hold the balance of influence and power over the lambs of the flock. Even for that hour how slack the arrangements! The "primary teacher" may or may not be great of heart and soul and wise of mind. Often her willingness to teach is her only qualification. Yet upon the children depends the purity and sweetness of future homes, the administration of the business of life, the welfare of the church and of the world!—Miss Foster handles her large subject in a leisurely but strong way, taking time to lay a good foundation of preliminaries. She defines the kindergarten, gives a brief history of its founding by Froebel, its wide adoption and rapid growth among educators. Chapter three discusses the "Relation of the Church to the Kindergarten," and in the following chapter, the "Kindergarten of the Church." "Whether the child is in the day school or the Sunday-school his mind is the same, and may be reached and cultivated by the same universal methods," says this author. "If he be favored by having contact with a well-trained teacher during five days, that little one is wronged if on the Sabbath day he be placed in charge of a teacher unfitted for the privilege she has of leading him to think of God, and truth in another form. . . . In our day schools teachers pass examinations given to test their ability for their work, and if incompetent or unfaithful they are excused from service. . . . Shall the church, with her millions of children, be less careful than the city authorities and school committees? Can she be too vigilant in her oversight of the kindergarten, the nursery of the church, where the tender twigs are bent and shaped for life? Can a pastor think it unnecessary to provide for the mental and physical care of the children?" Through a series of terse, pertinent chapters the writer enlarges upon this thought, giving clear, simple, yet full outlines for this most desirable work.

Hunt & Eaton, New York; Cranston & Curts, Cincinnati. Price $1.

Consumption

was formerly pronounced incurable. Now it is not. In all of the early stages of the disease

Scott's Emulsion

TRADE MARK.

will effect a cure quicker than any other known specific. Scott's Emulsion promotes the making of healthy lung-tissue, relieves inflammation, overcomes the excessive waste of the disease and gives vital strength.

For Coughs, Colds, Weak Lungs, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Consumption, Scrofula, Anæmia, Loss of Flesh and Wasting Diseases of Children.

Buy only the genuine with our trade-mark on salmon-colored wrapper.

Send for pamphlet on Scott's Emulsion. FREE.

Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All Druggists. 50 cents and $1.

THE
...World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union...
CONVENTION
LONDON, ENGLAND, JUNE, 1895

I. A $200 Tour to London, Grindelwald, Lucerne and Paris
II. A $250 Tour to London through Switzerland and Paris
III. A $300 Tour to London through Switzerland to Rome

Organized by Rev. Dr. HENRY S. LUNN

Editor of "Review of the Churches," London

In concert with LADY HENRY SOMERSET and MISS WILLARD, DR. LUNN has arranged a special tour to England at the beginning of June for members of the W. C. T. U. and their friends, ladies and gentlemen. The arrangements are of the most complete character, and combine the greatest freedom of action with perfect arrangements for the comfort of all. The sums named above include first cabin, return passage, hotel accommodation and railway travel. The tours may be prolonged by special arrangement to any extent.

Full particulars from

The Pilgrimage Secretary
The Review of Reviews
Astor Place, New York

A FLOWER GARDEN FOR 25cts.

To prove by results the superior quality of our Seeds we will mail ten full-sized packets of Flower Seeds for 25c. These packets contain hundreds of choice varieties, and with the simple culture a child of ten years can give, will produce a brilliant display of beautiful Flowers all Summer and Autumn. Also ten full-sized packets of choice Vegetable Seeds, selected especially for boys, for 25c. All are fully described in our grand Illustrated Catalogue of 150 large pages, with a host of valuable novelties and all the good old varieties of Fruits, Flowers and Vegetables, and full instructions given for culture. Sent FREE to all who order either collection. To those who send TEN CENTS and name this paper, we mail a bulb of the lovely Variegated-leaved Tuberose, three Gladiolus, and the Catalogue.

250 ACRES OF NURSERY. 43d YEAR. 25,000 FT. GREENHOUSES.

THE LOVETT CO. LITTLE SILVER, N.J.

RELIABLE SEEDS

Awarded World's Columbian Grand Prize Medal for Purity. Always Fresh and Reliable.
SPECIAL OFFER: For only 10c, I will send a liberal package each of New Holland Cabbage and New Dixie Water Melon. Beautiful Seed and Plant Catalogue FREE. Address at once H. W. BUCKBEE, Rockford, Ills.
P. O. Box 686 Rockford Seed Farms.

ARE YOU READY
FOR TEMPERANCE SUNDAY,
March 24?

Remember our Quarterly Temperance Lesson Supplement.

You Cannot Get Along Without It...

TERMS.

| | |
|---|---|
| 100 | $ .65 |
| 500 | 2.75 |
| 1,000 | 5.00 |

This is issued as a Supplement to the March

Young Crusader.

TERMS FOR YOUNG CRUSADER AND SUPPLEMENT.

| | |
|---|---|
| 100 | $1.00 |
| 500 | 4.75 |
| 1,000 | 9.00 |

Address
Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
The Temple,
Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my Invisible Tubular Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Warranted to help more cases than all similar devices combined. Help ears as glasses do eyes. Sold by F. Hiscox only, 853 Br'dway, N. Y. Send for book of proofs FREE should know that TOKOLOGY is a complete guide in health or disease. The whole family will be benefited by its teachings. A purchaser writes: "I feel as though Tokology was saying: 'Make haste, for I have come to save your people much suffering!'" Sample pages free. Price $2.75. Best terms to agents. Address ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO, 277 Madison St., Chicago.

WOMEN

$2.75 SPECIAL GENTS OR LADIES SIZE 14 KARAT Gold Plate.

CUT THIS OUT and send it to us with your name and address and we will send you this beautiful gold finished watch by express for examination. You examine it at the express office, and if you think it a bargain pay our sample price $2.75, and it is yours. It is magnificently engraved and equal in appearance to a genuine Solid Gold watch. A guarantee for 5 years and beautiful gold plate chain and charm sent FREE with every watch, write to-day, this may not appear again; mention whether you want gents' or ladies' size. Address

THE NATIONAL MFG. & IMPORTING CO.,
334 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

EASTER GREETINGS

List of Booklets

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Hail to the Lord's Anointed | .60¢ | The Lord's Day | .20¢ | An Easter Key | .10¢ |
| The Voice of Him that Liveth | .50 „ | Alleluia | 20 „ | An Easter Spray | .10 „ |
| Risen Indeed | .40 „ | An Easter Voice | .15 „ | An Easter Tone | .10 „ |
| Jesus is God | .40 „ | The Voice of the Beloved | .15 „ | An Easter Blessing | .10 „ |
| Work and Work | .20 „ | The Rising of the Sun | 15 „ | Easter Morn | .10 „ |
| Easter Glory | .20 „ | The Lamb that was Slain | .15 „ | Chimes for Easter-tide | 10 „ |
| Simply to thy Cross I Cling | .20 „ | Pathway to Easter | .15 „ | | |
| | | Easter Joys | 15 „ | | |
| | | In His Footsteps | .10 „ | | |

•An assortment of beautiful Easter Cards ranging in price from two to twelve cents. Assorted Packages of { 6 Cards 25 cents; 8 „ 25 „; 10 „ 25 „; 15 „ 25 „ }

•To insure choice in selection, we would ask our friends to order early.

Woman's Temp. Pub. Asso., Chicago.

A PERSONAL WORD FROM OUR CHIEFTAIN.

En route Washington to Boston.
Washington's Birthday, 1895.

To my Beloved Comrades:—We have succeeded admirably with the Polyglot Petition. The great meeting where its first presentation to the people took place; the reception of our delegation by President Cleveland, the pleasant interview with Mrs. Cleveland; the offering of a joint resolution for national constitutional prohibition by Hon. Henry W. Blair, for twenty years our standard-bearer in Congress, with the statement that he did this to represent the Great Petition—all these were tokens of good.

Lady Henry Somerset and I feel that our detention by reason of an attack of grippe (from which Anna Gordon had also been suffering) was the providential occasion of bringing out in full relief the reserve power of our blessed W. C. T. U., for a meeting so large and successful was never before held by women in the national capitol.

We spoke before the Women's Council, the loyal write-ribboners of Baltimore, who are preparing for our next National Convention (to be held the last week in October); we spoke for the "First Y," that heroic band in Philadelphia, and Lady Henry Somerset is to-day addressing the students of Bryn Mawr on "The Franchise for Women," in compliance with the request of President Carey Thomas—the scholarly daughter of our Mary Whitall Thomas of sacred memory.

But we are tired and worn beyond telling, all three of us, and as, in any case, Anna Gordon and I must have crossed to England in April to help prepare the World's W. C. T. U. Convention, we have decided to sail with Lady Henry Somerset on March 6, and to go to Eastnor Castle for a few weeks of quiet and recuperation.

We did not make this decision until we had taken counsel with the general officers of the National W. C. T. U. at our meeting in Washington. They were unanimous in favor, especially after learning the opinion of Dr. Helen Morton, the well-known physician in Boston, under whose care we have all been for some weeks past.

So I have here frankly written out the situation in full for each and all to know. Anna and I expect to return in time to take in several autumn conventions, and we hope Lady Henry Somerset may come over to the National. I shall write often, and keep in touch with the army here in my own beloved land and in dear "old England" and "all along shore."

"God be with you till we meet again."

Always, and as always and for always, yours,

Frances E. Willard.

Signal Notes.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M. P., estimates the number of total abstainers in Great Britain at seven millions.

Since the Salvation Army's "Life boat" was started in San Francisco, three whisky saloons in the same block have been closed.

The new Farm Home at Rondebosch, South Africa, has reclaimed 355 of the 548 homeless and destitute men who have been admitted.

The English bookstores are often called "book saloons." "When," comments the Golden Rule, "will we give to such 'saloons' a monopoly of the field?"

Chicago's famous music leader, Mr. W. L. Tomlins, has organized a number of musical classes or schools for poor children. In these he teaches not only the art of singing but that of willing obedience, self-mastery, self-control and adjustment to others; valuable lessons for all life.

The United States Senate committee on education and labor, February 15, reported a bill for the creation of an industrial commission of twenty-one persons to arbitrate labor questions. In its report the aggregate loss to all concerned on account of strikes during the last six years is estimated at $98,556,859.

Little children smoking cigarettes in the streets of Calcutta is a spectacle which shocks the Christian observer. The Banner of Asia cites an incident in a shop where a child not over seven years was begging the shop-keeper for a cigarette, without which he assured the man he would die. What abundant opportunity here for the kindergartner with her helpful training!

Certified Milk.

Every dairy supplying our condenseries is under supervision. Milk is produced under rigid hygienic rules. The company's reputation is therefore a certificate of the absolute purity of the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk.

IVORY SOAP
99 44/100 PURE
Wash doilies and other silk embroideries in a strong suds of Ivory Soap, press with a hot iron on the wrong side while they are quite wet. Use no starch.
The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

Dull and Bilious.

Sleepless nights, backache, weakness—all result from a disordered condition of the Liver or Kidneys. To be strong and vigorous your Liver must be healthy. Wonderful success has always attended the use of

Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm.

It cures thoroughly all ailments of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, Female troubles, Rheumatism and Bright's Disease. For sale by Druggists at $1.00 per bottle.

THE DR. J. H. McLEAN MEDICINE CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

CHOICE ROSES AT 5 Cents

OUR RAINBOW COLLECTION OF 20 ROSES FOR $1. PREPAID BY MAIL

The Roses we send are on their own roots, from 10 to 15 inches high, and will bloom freely this Summer, either in pots or planted in yard. They are hardy ever bloomers. Please examine the below list of 20 choice fragrant monthly Roses, and see if you can duplicate them anywhere for an amount so small as $1. They are nearly all new kinds. We guarantee them to reach you in good condition, AND WE ALSO GUARANTEE THEM TO BE THE BEST DOLLAR'S WORTH OF ROSES YOU EVER PURCHASED.

LIST:—Champion of the World, brightest pink, the best rose ever introduced. Henry M. Stanley, apricot yellow, very fragrant. Pearl of the Gardens, deep golden yellow. Bridesmaid, rich pink, none better. The Queen, pure white, always in bloom. Christine de Noue, rich maroon and deliciously sweet. Princess of Wales, amber yellow, deepening to orange. Rheingold, beautiful shades of saffron and tan. Star of Gold, the queen of all yellow roses. Waban, a great rose, in bloom all the time. Golden Gate, creamy white and old gold. Francisca Kruger, coppery yellow and peach. The Bride, the loviest of all white roses. Queen's Scarlet, richest dark velvety rose. Princess Beatrice, canary yellow, edged bright rose. Etoile de Lyon, richest deep sulphur yellow. Souvenir of Wooton, richest crimson in clusters. Catherine Mermet, everybody's favorite. Md. Camille, beautiful salmon and rosy flesh. Md. Caroline Testout, large handsome flowers of glowing pink.

We will also send our Iron Clad Collection of 14 Hardy Roses, all different colors, $1. Try a set. 20 Chrysanthemums, all prize winners, $1. 16 Geraniums, double and single, flowered and scented, $1. 15 choice Begonias, different kinds, $1. 40 packets choice Flower Seeds, all different kinds, $1. Our handsome, illustrated Catalogue, describing above Roses, Plants and all Seeds, mailed for 10 cts. stamps. Don't place your order before seeing our prices. WE CAN SAVE YOU MONEY. We have large two year old roses for immediate effect. Liberal premiums to club raisers, or how to get your seeds and plants free. We are the LARGEST ROSE GROWERS IN THE WORLD. Our sales of Rose Plants alone last season exceeded a million and a half. When you order Roses, Plants and Seeds, you want the very best. Try us. Address, GOOD & REESE CO., Box D Champion City Greenhouses, Springfield, Ohio.

Please mention this paper.

Over half a million one and two year old roses now in stock. SAFE ARRIVAL OF ALL GOODS GUARANTEED.

We Want You to Know

That 50 CENTS will Buy

12 Very Choice Everblooming Roses

as follows: The Bride, white; Bon Silene, carmine; Bridesmaid, pink; H. M. Stanley, amber rose; Souv. de F. Gaulaine, dark crimson; Md. A. Nabonnand, rosy flesh; Queen's Scarlet, scarlet; Mlle Franceska Kruger, rich yellow; Arch Duchess Immaculata, citron red; Countess Eva Stahremberg, cream yellow; Ball of Snow, pure white (hardy); Gen'l de Tartas, brilliant carmine.

10 Fine Begonias, 10 Splendid New Carnations, 12 Selected New Chrysanthemums, 12 Flowering Geranums, 25 pkts Choice Selected Flower Seeds.

Any one of the above liberal collections sent postpaid for only 50 cents. Our 32 large greenhouses are stocked with the best and newest varieties of plants, bulbs, flower and vegetable seeds. Send for our large handsomely illustrated Catalogue, mailed Free to any address.

The Geo. H. Mellen Co., Box K Proprietors the old established INNISFALLEN GREENHOUSES Springfield, O.

"Who wins the eyes, wins all."

If you regard APPEARANCES you will certainly use SAPOLIO in house-cleaning. Sapolio is a solid cake of scouring soap. Try it in house-cleaning.

COPYRIGHT.

YOU ARE JUDGED

by your house just as much as by your dress. Keep it neat and clean and your reputation will shine. Neglect it and your good name will suffer. Do not think that house-cleaning is too troublesome; it is worth all it costs, especially if you reduce the outlay of time and strength by using SAPOLIO.

WALTER BAKER & CO.

